I say—and I emphasize again—that the distortion which the Treasurer conveyed in his budget speech to this House is an imbalance in the way in which the government must play its role in the economic life of the province and in the urgent need to maintain an egalitarian society in the province through real income redistribution.

There is little, if any, recognition by the Treasurer that apart altogether from the transfer payments made to assist people who are in difficult economic circumstances in the province, the lower 20 per cent of the population in income terms, and the lower 40 per cent, have a decreasing—perhaps marginal, but a decreasing—share in the overall participation in the wealth of the province; while those in the upper quintile, the top 20 per cent, have an increasing share.

We have made little, if any, progress with respect to income redistribution; the ability to provide people with the kinds of economic security which will lead to them having an enhanced sense of their own dignity in the society in which we live.

Why is that so? Because of a misconceived notion about the role of government expenditure in maintaining the kind of balance we all believe is necessary for the continuing growth and development, in all its aspects, of this society.

Everyone recognizes—and it is no particular sinecure or area where one party can claim any more right to its possession than any other party—that there has been an expectation on the part of the public for services provided, which is beyond the willingness of the public to pay by way of taxes. That's the problem, not that government expenditure is wrong. Not that government expenditure in some way is profligate. Not that government expenditure is in some way ill-advised, or that it is luxurious, or that it is a waste of taxpayers' money. But a simple recognition that there has been a failure of government to explain that the level of services and the quality of services which the electorate of this province expects, has to be paid substantially and significantly through the tax system and not by way of budgetary response through a deficit.

Of course, there's a reasonable deficit that can and must be carried by a province such as this on an ongoing basis. But the difficulty arose because people do expect a high quality of government performance in the area of provision of those services, which can only be performed by government, and which eat up the large part of the government's expenditures.

The government has failed because it hasn't had the determination to face up to the problem that it must raise those funds by way of taxes and it must take the political hazard and assume the risk of increasing taxes without adequate explanation of the reasons for it. But to suggest, in reverse, that there is something wrong with government expenditures, that in some way one can reduce government expenditures without affecting the quality of the services which government and government alone can provide, is to produce a situation we are facing day-in and day-out throughout this province in every field in which government service is provided.

When the government reduces the amount of expenditure available for those areas, it has to spend what remains on the general level of the supply of those services and has little if anything left for those very sensitive, quality areas in which expenditure must be made in order to provide for people in various walks of life and from various economic strata their opportunity to participate in an equal way in this society. So we get special programs cut back. We get special needs of the society affected. We get special health concerns affected. We get special environmental problems affected. We get the educational system affected in the quality areas.

The problem is that it is only a small portion of the population in any one of these areas which is able to articulate to the public its needs and they seem always to be speaking for some limited special purpose. When one adds them all together the sum of it means that there is a significant disenchantment in the province with the restraint programs which are now cutting into the quality of the performance of government services throughout the province.

I want to leave the budget for a moment and go on to some matters which are of interest to me specifically as the member sitting in the assembly for Riverdale. I'm sure I share with every member of the assembly the immense difficulty about the role of the representative in this assembly of a riding in the province. We all have this problem of exercising our judgement. On occasion, we have the problem of exercising our conscience in relation to the judgements we bring to bear on topics. We all pay our respects that we represent a particular riding and that we are here to reflect the views of our constituents.

We all take refuge in Edmund Burke's letter to the electors of Bristol as to our role, so that we cannot be seen merely to be a sort of mouthpiece or an advocate solely of those views of one's constituents, but we have an obligation to exercise our judgement. All of us meet together in our caucuses in order to find a common basis on which to provoke the policies, the principles and the actions of the particular political party to which we owe allegiance. In a funny way, bringing our own particular skills to bear, we all try to resolve that kind of problem.

I can say frankly to the assembly—and I don't believe for one moment I'm different from any other member of the assembly—that I do not know I have no means of finding out as I have no resources, and even if I had the resources I wouldn't know how to use them, what the people of Riverdale feel about the quality of education in the schools located in Riverdale.

I have no general way of knowing though I can sense things. We all pretend as politicians that we have some instant mechanism which provides us with the intuitions to assess what the people in the area wish their representative to do. I think that if our democracy as such is going to work, then at that very fundamental constituency basis I would welcome an opportunity in some kind of adequate forum, perhaps during the course of a summer—maybe not this summer but some summer—to sit down with some of my colleagues to find out how does one really represent the area which elects one to come to this assembly?

Is it because we simply call on people and talk to them? Do we come here and participate in discussions and debates about matters on which we rely entirely upon this so-called instinct, or in some arrogant way superarrogate to ourselves the right to say how we will deal with this particular issue or that particular issue? Do we then simply, whenever there is a general election, trust that somehow or other what we have done, mostly unknown, will be approved by the electorate and we will be returned?

I think that is a very essential part of any system of government which says that we govern by the consent of the people and that the ultimate sovereignty resides with the people. I just don't know the answer to that.

I suppose I participate on an average the same as other members do in activities in one's riding, in associations in one's riding. One receives correspondence and telephone calls and we circulate in our ridings from time to time and we give out reports with questions and hope we will get a response. I do not know the answer, and I believe it to be a very significant problem, in an urban society particularly. In the kind of society that is an industrialized urban society we have to, in some way, decide how we represent the areas which traditionally have been represented by members in this assembly.

I want to turn, if I may, to three matters of immense concern to me in my riding. I have to say that Ontario Housing Corporation, reflected in the OHC development in my riding, is a disaster. It's a disaster for the community surrounding it, it's a disaster for the people who live in it, and it's a disaster for what started out years ago to be a positive involvement of government in the provision of low-income housing for persons on low incomes in the province. What was a significant initiative by government in a field which has been neglected and is now being neglected, the development of housing for people, has turned out to be a disaster.

If any member of the assembly would come with me to the Blake Street development and inspect those buildings without knowing it was OHC that owned them, he would say that absentee landlord—and OHC is an absentee landlord in my riding—should not be allowed to carry on its business in Ontario. It is just that bad. I'm not given to gross exaggeration or, indeed, in this instance, to any exaggeration.

The management of that operation has been delegated by OHC to Greenwin Property Management. There is no connection of any real significance to that development as a community of its own with special needs and special requirements. OHC built that development in my riding in the period just prior to the 1967 election. I remember it well, because at the time Mr. Stanley Randall was the Minister of Housing. I was the member for Riverdale.

It was opened during the course of the election campaign. My then opponent is now an alderman sitting for the city of Toronto, Mr. Ying Hope. In those days, politics was played rough in Riverdale, because Mr. Ying Hope was invited to participate in the opening ceremonies but the sitting member for Riverdale was not invited to attend on that occasion.

I would certainly welcome Mr. Stanley Randall and Mr. Ying Hope to come back and inspect the buildings they opened with such fanfare on that day. Since that time Ontario Housing, having built a facility with absolutely no community facilities of any kind within the development—none whatsoever—has consistently opposed every attempt, by denial of resources and supportive services, to form a tenants' association in that complex. There have been a number of attempts to do that. I have tried to participate in a small way in providing support to them. I have met with Ontario Housing about it, and they have attended meeting after meeting. I can only say in my judgment, their role was so passive as to have been subversive of any opportunity for the tenants in that community to have participated in a meaningful way in the maintenance of that community in the way in which it was necessary for it to be maintained.

The property to the north of the Blake Street development was a wasteland. There was a derelict Dominion store. It was one of those stores which Dominion Stores vacated early, as it often does. It left the area with this derelict shell, which at some point in history will be rediscovered as the archaeological ruins of Riverdale. Further to the north, there was a wasteland of mud leading on to Strathcona Avenue and to Earl Haig School.

The people in the area, some of them from the Ontario Housing Corporation development, particularly a person by the name of Nellie Williams, persistently and consistently worked with the city over a period of time. Fortunately, the council of the city was empathetic so before the 1975 election we were able to see developed a community centre. Her Honour came and opened it. It was an accident of course, it opened during the course of the 1977 election campaign in Riverdale. I was able to be there that day to welcome her to the opening of that centre.

Ontario Housing Corporation did not contribute one cent to that community centre. Having defaulted in providing any community facilities for their development, they did not contribute services or support facilities of any kind to that community centre, although asked to do so. They say there is a community room in the development. Well, I would take you to it, Mr. Speaker. It is so sparsely and inadequately furnished and so inadequate for all purposes, there is no way anyone would meet there.

The city of Toronto has a very fine way of taking buildings and renovating them and taking property and fixing it up. The property to the north is now a picture to see and a very valuable and important addition to the area surrounding that building, but in the centre stands this ruin.

I say the sooner Ontario Housing Corporation gets out of the housing business and transfers it to the city of Toronto non-profit housing with proper support so they can take over the running of it the better. I am sure they won't thank me for asking them to do that. If not to them, they should turn it over to some co-operative organization that knows how, in co-operation with people, to make a community where the great bulk of the tenants, of necessity, through economic hardships and other disabilities, have to live in that kind of situation.

Perhaps the members who happen to be sitting in the House at this time, who sit with me under the chairmanship of the member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey) on the standing general government committee, will get some idea of why I am terribly concerned about the provisions of that bill relating to something called subsidized public housing; the kind of subversive tyranny which is exercised by Ontario Housing with respect to the demands for details of income which are an insult to the people who have to supply them; and at the harassment which Ontario Housing Corporation permits because the people live in fear in that housing development about whether or not they are going to be allowed to stay there under difficult circumstances so the landlord doesn't have to perform its obligations to maintain those buildings properly and in good repair.

I haven't had the time—and I'm not an expert—to be able to look into it, but the riding of Riverdale sits in 55 division of the Metropolitan Toronto police. In the particular area that comprises four or five other divisions, mainly in the central part of the city, if one looks at the record of juvenile arrests—I'm not talking about convictions—and plots them on a chart, it just goes like that in 55 division. I don't know the reason for it. Some day I'm going to have the time to find out in co-operation with the police and in co-operation with some of the men and women in Riverdale who are spending their time trying to assist people in their adolescent years in that area.

I would hazard a guess that there is something which I could call police harassment in that area. I'm not saying that in an invidious way about the police, but the situation is such that it attracts that kind of problem. It attracts that kind of response. I would guess that a significant part of that immense jump in 55 division as compared with other areas under the control of that division of the police force relates to the disaster which is Blake Street, which is owned by Ontario Housing and which is a disgrace to this government and to this Legislature.

Enough of that. I feel very deeply about that matter and I am so concerned about it that I would welcome an initiative by the government to open up negotiations immediately with the city of Toronto non-profit housing organization for the speedy and immediate transfer, with proper financial support, of that development to the non-profit organization of the city of Toronto, which with restricted resources is undertaking an empathetic, understanding role with respect to the needs of proper housing for people in the area.

Let me speak briefly about Canada Metal and the lead problem. This goes back to the restraint program. After what we had gone through in the Riverdale area about Canada Metal for at least two years, I could not believe that the problem is now back with us. It is back with us in dimensions which are as yet unknown because the information is not public and when we do get the information it is of historic value only because it is so old.

I can't conceive that a corporation can be allowed to so harass the Ministry of the Environment over the period of time when the cleanup was taking place that somehow or other the ministry is unable to maintain even the standards which it has put out as the kinds of standards which will not affect people in the area.

If one will notice, the only thing which has saved the ministry on this occasion is that the prevailing winds are east and west. It's the only thing. How does the ministry seize upon that in my riding? They refer to the high levels as being in the industrial park and not in the community where people live. The community where people live is one street width, Eastern Avenue, north of the plant. They purport to say that the community is not affected because it is to the east or to the west and the winds were blowing in that direction. I do not think one has to be a genius in Toronto to know that the prevailing wind is either the east wind or the west wind. That's the kind of disguise which the ministry, in trying to justify its position, unconsciously falls into in putting forward to the people in my area what is wrong there.

Then by inadvertence—fortunately because of the vigilance of the Globe and Mail, with whom, by the way, I do not always necessarily agree; nor they with me—we find that some of the soil is contaminated. Just before the 1977 election, I got from the then Minister of the Environment (Mr. Kerr) a list of the various houses where the soil was changed. Now I am told, but not in specific terms, that there is either a recontamination or that there are new areas of contamination where the soil will have to be replaced.

In any event, when I say "we", I mean the South Riverdale Community Health Centre—have invited the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) to a public meeting towards the end of May, a date which can be adjusted to meet the minister's convenience, along with the president of Canada Metal, the chairman of the Toronto board of health and, I would hope, the Minister of Health, to come to that meeting to try to tell us, and to level with us, what is the situation.

I want to maintain that plant as a place where people work in conditions that are acceptable and nonhazardous both within the plant and outside the plant. I believe that can be done with proper and adequate resources which I think have been denied to that ministry. The restraint program has inhibited the Ministry of the Environment from maintaining the quality of air and soil around that plant and the quality of conditions within that plant which place in jeopardy jobs that we cannot afford to place in jeopardy at this time.

There is no movement in Riverdale to turn it into some kind of residential lakeshore appendage of the city of Toronto. We, in Riverdale, enjoy the mixture of industry, the stores, the retail merchants, the society, the residential communities and the other communities; it is a good mix. It's a very vital area.

I must pay tribute to the government, because in one way or another—through the Neighbourhood Improvements Program, through the clinic funding committee for legal services, through the Ministry of Health for the South Riverdale Community Health Centre—we at least have a network of inter-related organizations that are very self-supportive, and very few people in Riverdale now fall through the safety net and are not without access to services of one kind or another. In all fairness, I think I should make that point.

It's because of the vitality of the area, and because of funds in support that have been available, that we do have things such as the Riverdale Socio-Legal Services. We have a new centre called the South Riverdale Community Centre. We have a renovation going on at WoodGreen Community Centre. We have a ward eight newspaper and a ward seven newspaper. We do have an inter-cultural, interracial committee. We do have a South Riverdale Community Health Centre. We do have an Eastview Neighbourhood Community Centre. I have a constituency office. My colleague the federal member for Broadview, soon to be the member for Broadview-Greenwood, has a constituency office.

One way or another, with the various facilities of the government, we have a mutually supportive set of institutions in the riding which are a far cry from just a few years ago when there were few, if any, services available of a community nature.

Mr. Speaker, I had thought I would be finished by one o'clock, but I haven't got to some other remarks I want to make, so at the appropriate time I will move the adjournment of the debate and I am almost at the point where it would be convenient for me to do so, Mr. Speaker.

There is one other matter I don't know the answer to—I have been in communication with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) about it—and that is the whole question of the waterfront. The waterfront is a most important area of access and enjoyment for the people in my riding and in the ridings which abut the lake across the city, as well as for those who don't live right in those areas but who want to come to it. In a funny way we have created barriers to access so that, while there are more and more people who recognize that we have the facility of a lakeshore and the enjoyment which comes from that, there are many barriers to reaching that waterfront, particularly in the area of Riverdale.

We do have, of course, the spit which, by natural development, I believe, is going to become a most important beauty adjunct for the city and a recreational spot. But I am talking about the shoreline itself. There are five governmental authorities involved in that property and when one considers how difficult it is for two or three governmental authorities to find any resolution or understand what their respective jurisdictions are, let alone give the elected representatives a clearer view as to what they can do to be of assistance, one may comprehend the difficulties involved here.

That waterfront is not being planned in a way of which I have any comprehension, so that it can be an area which is available, with ready access, to people. I'm not speaking about barring other activity in that area; I am talking about the kind of imaginative planning of the waterfront from the islands through to the riding of my colleague, the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston) and perhaps further on through the outskirts of Metropolitan Toronto, but principally in that area which abuts my riding, the riding of St. David, the riding of Beaches-Woodbine and the riding of Scarborough West.

I am hopeful that somehow or other that maze of overlapping jurisdictions will permit an intelligent appreciation by the elected members—municipally, provincially and federally—of what we can do to provide some kind of cohesion to the development of the waterfront for the use and enjoyment of our immediate constituents and naturally, of course, for those living elsewhere in the city of Toronto and in the metropolitan area.

On motion by Mr. Renwick, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, MAY 7, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

BELL CANADA RATES

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply to a question posed in the House on Friday by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) concerning the position of the government regarding Bell Canada's Saudi Arabian contract.

At the outset I would like to clear up some confusion in the question. We have not changed our mind about how the revenues from this contract should be treated by the regulator. At the original hearing in 1978, Ontario intervened on behalf of telecommunications users in this province, requesting that Bell show cause why rates in particular should be increased. During the hearing, a range of issues arising out of Bell's request for higher rates was dealt with. One of the issues was the Saudi contract.

On the general question of Bell's request for increased rates, Ontario took the position that what Bell was asking for was not justified and would be unfair to the subscribers. We told the commission that Bell's request should be reduced significantly.

On the specific issue of the treatment of the Saudi revenues for regulatory purposes, we found the confidential procedures used to review the contract during the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission hearings to be unacceptable. We could not, therefore, take any position on the matter during our final argument.

Following the hearings and CRTC's decision to include the Saudi revenues as normal Bell revenues, we reviewed the situation carefully. We concluded that a central issue was whether a regulatory principle was being established that could dissuade regulated telecommunications carriers from operating in foreign markets.

In view of the fact that the international market for telecommunications equipment and services is expanding rapidly, we did not want to see Canada cut out of potential business because of negative internal policies.

There are many great benefits to be gained in terms of jobs and revenues for Canada.

The government of Ontario strongly believes that domestic industry should be encouraged to compete in world markets and to export Canadian technology and expertise. We have a great deal of both in our telecommunications companies; in fact, we are world leaders in many areas. For this reason we asked the CRTC and the federal government to resolve Bell's appeal in a way that would encourage Bell and other high-technology companies to export.

The Leader of the Opposition has been talking a lot lately about the need for an industrial strategy, and on April 9 released a rather lengthy document entitled An Industrial Strategy for Ontario. I note on page 58 that he singles out telecommunications as one of the sectors that should be actively supported.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition. In fact, for several years now I have maintained that the telecommunications sector is a key part of Ontario's industrial base and one in which we can be internationally competitive. We are making sure, through our actions in policies, regulatory hearings and wherever possible, that we keep it that way.

In acting on the question of Bell Canada's revenues, we believe we are away ahead of the opposition in attempting to get a policy and regulatory framework that provides incentives and the positive features required for a successful industrial strategy.

In conclusion, there are two issues here. We believe strongly that consumers should not be paying too much for the telecommunications services they receive. In our interventions on Bell and other rate hearings, we have addressed this issue in the consumers' interest.

On the other hand, we must also look at the potential benefits in terms of jobs and the balance of payments that can come from our telecommunications firms' securing contracts in foreign markets. We should not be putting unnecessary obstacles in the way of firms operating offshore. I think we have been dealing with both issues in a balanced and responsible manner.

INCO DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as members know, a memorandum of settlement was signed yesterday by Inco Metals Limited and local 6500 of the United Steelworkers of America. The memorandum, of course, is subject to ratification, and I understand that membership ratification votes will be held in Sudbury later this week. Because ratification has not occurred, I do not wish to say anything that might at this time be construed as interfering with procedures yet to be concluded.

However, in rising today, I do wish to express my gratitude to and admiration for the bargaining committees on both sides who through difficult times have laboured long and earnestly in search of an acceptable basis for settlement.

If I may be permitted to do so, I think I should also give credit to two mediators from my ministry, Vic Pathe, executive director, industrial relations, and Ray Illing, a senior mediator with the ministry. Their patience and wisdom, already publicly acknowledged, contributed greatly to yesterday's achievement. From the earliest stages, and indeed throughout the long and arduous process, the Premier (Mr. Davis) and I maintained an active interest and, when appropriate, involvement in the discussions. In the final analysis, however, full credit must be given to the bargaining parties, who have been able to fashion their own voluntary solution.

I am sure that all members will share my hope and expectation that this long dispute is near an end. Judging from media reports, this sentiment is shared as well by all the citizens of the Sudbury basin who have as well been hoping and praying for an early resolution.

FOREST REGENERATION

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the House today of some recent developments regarding my ministry's forest management program. While an article in the Toronto Star on Saturday was by and large accurate and fair, I feel it nevertheless may have left the impression with many readers that we have reached a crisis situation in our forest industry.

In offering my assessment of that story, I would hasten to add that I do not necessarily agree with the statements made in that story by two of the members opposite. I believe that for financial reasons we have not progressed as quickly as we would like. We do believe, however—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You have gone backwards.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —that we have dealt with the situation openly and constructively and that we are far from a crisis situation.

Mr. Wildman: Only 50 per cent regeneration.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As some honourable members of this House are aware, we are taking steps to overcome the separation of harvesting and silviculture, and to privatize much of the forest management work through forest management agreements with the forest industry.

Mr. S. Smith: It used to be private, and it didn't work either.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I want to advise the House today that the Treasurer has recently given his support to a $4.3 million expenditure for the forest management agreement initiative. This will cover three agreements with private companies in 1979 at the same cost as my ministry would incur in carrying out the work itself. We believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is another example of the government's commitment to privatization and to our commitment to forest replacement and management. The proposed $4.3 million expenditure this year is part of my ministry's proposal to spend $50 million and close the current regeneration gap by 1985.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It will never happen.

Hon. Mr. Auld: This proposal is now before Management Board.

While, as I have stated, we have not been able to move as quickly as we would like, I want to emphasize that Ontario is the front-runner in Canada as far as overall forest management is concerned.

Mr. Bradley: You need a third hand to pat yourself on the back.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The regeneration gap and the continuity of funding are problems faced by every province in Canada. Ontario has led all of Canada in forest policy and programs since the end of the Second World War.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It must be pretty bad in other jurisdictions.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As members of this House will appreciate, I'm sure, it is difficult to make long-term funding commitments at this time. As a result, we are looking at several options in addition to outright government funding.

As members know, British Columbia and Alberta do not fund their forestry programs from general revenues. We are currently taking a look at stumpage offset and nominal stumpage methods our colleagues in those provinces now use. In addition, I will be seeking a meeting soon with my counterpart in Ottawa to explore the possibility of tax options whereby moneys spent by a forest company for forest management work would be offset through tax credits.

While I have acknowledged some difficulties, I want to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to remind the House that since the government took over forest management responsibilities in 1962, the regeneration has increased from a few thousand acres to 198,000 acres in 1978 alone.

Mr. T. P. Reid: And we cut 400,000.

Mr. Wildman: How many were cut?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I also want to emphasize today that this government remains committed to a forest management program that is now second to none in this country.

DECLINING ENROLMENT

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, on Friday morning, in response to a question I used the figure 15,000 as the figure of declining enrolment in the elementary school system in the city of Toronto. That figure is incorrect, because that is the figure for the North York school enrolment decline. The figure for Toronto between the year 1974 and September 1979 is 12,000.

ORAL QUESTIONS

BELL CANADA RATES

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to question the Minister of Transportation and Communications to find out if he really believes what he has said in the statement he has made today. In the first place, can the minister tell us why he said his department did not change its mind during the course of the hearing, when the lawyer for the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, in front of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, has said, and I quote:

“A word with regard to the discussion that Mr. Saunders”—that is the Bell person—“had with the panel this morning with regard to the Saudi Arabian matter is simply this. Having heard Mr. Saunders, having heard his comments, we still don't understand how Bell Canada's subscribers in the long run can possibly be insulated from the outcome of the Saudi Arabian undertaking, whether it turns out to be good or whether it turns out to be bad. We do not believe that the subscribers can be insulated from the effects of this contract.”

That's the lawyer for the ministry. Why does the minister say to this House that there is no change in position when the change is perfectly obvious?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there is anything in that statement that the honourable member has read that indicates there is any change whatsoever in the position of this government on this matter.

Mr. S. Smith: Did the minister not hear that I said the lawyer representing the case for the government said that one cannot insulate the subscribers, and that the government then went before the cabinet to say the subscribers should be insulated from the profits and the profits should go directly to the shareholders without having effect on the revenues? If, in fact, his case is that it will allow more telecommunications equipment to be sold from Canada, may I quote to the minister from Bell's annual report on this matter, in which it says that the major role of Bell Canada and its more than 600 employees in Saudi Arabia is to establish and manage the organization that will operate the system? Switching, outside plant and station equipment are being provided by Philips and L. M. Ericsson, two Scandinavian or Dutch companies.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Certainly I am well aware of that fact. There is still a considerable benefit to Canada from the tremendous payments that are being received by Bell for their expertise, for their technology and for a certain amount of infrastructure that is being supplied from Canada, although we realize that Saudi Arabia awarded the contracts for the major equipment to the companies the Leader of the Opposition mentioned.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a supplementary, again since the minister seems so unaware of these matters, does the minister not recognize that what Saudi Arabia wanted from Bell Canada was access to the AT and T training manuals which they could get through the Canadian company and that Saudi Arabia was not willing to deal with a separate subsidiary of Bell but wanted Bell Canada to do the job because it is in a monopoly service situation in Canada?

Does the minister not recognize that if Bell is going to get those benefits then the subscribers ought to have some of the benefits as well and that they shouldn't simply go to the shareholders, leaving the rest of us with higher bills to pay? The government lawyer was right the first time.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't doubt very much that the lawyer was right. The lawyer made a statement that I have no trouble agreeing with, that there cannot be a total separation or insulation of outside contracts from the subscriber. But at no time did he say that the total revenues from any outside contract should be used to offset local expenditures, which is actually what we're talking about. I don't think there's any conflict whatsoever. I think the Leader of the Opposition is talking out of both sides of his face at the same time.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: As usual.

Mr. Kerrio: We have to get some benefit or what good is it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: He says he wants to export technology and bring a great deal of money to the Canadian economy and employ a great number of Canadians.

Mr. S. Smith: We're not exporting anything, Sweden is.

Hon. Mr. Snow: But he doesn't want that, it seems. At one minute he is saying that is what he does want, and at the next minute he's opposing it.

Mr. S. Smith: There is not an ounce of Canadian technology going there and the minister knows it.

For the benefit of the Minister of Education, who isn't aware of the location of Philips and Ericsson, they're in Holland and Sweden.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Of course I know. Don't be so silly and don't be so condescending.

Mr. McClellan: Arrogance meets condescension.

REED PAPER COMPANY: FOREST REGENERATION

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources with regard to his forest policy. First of all, can the minister tell me when we are going to get the figures and the agreement he promised me some three weeks ago regarding the allowable cut and the actual cut for various species on the various timber limits that Reed Limited has? I asked for that information on April 19 and the minister said he would be delighted to supply it.

Mrs. Campbell: When he can find them.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It has taken a little time to get them in the form that was requested. In fact, one of the breakdowns in part of the question is just unanswerable in a short length of time, but I would assume that the answers that we have been able to put together would be tabled this week.

Mr. S. Smith: When am I going to be able to get it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would expect that they would be tabled towards the end of this week.

Mr. S. Smith: Can the minister explain the priorities that have moved his government over the years to end up in a situation where, despite years of warning from every aspect of the forest industry, we find ourselves still allowing hundreds of square miles to go without being reforested, even though they have been cut? What are the priorities that allow the government to offer $100 million to protect the companies when it can't find $5.6 million extra to protect the resource that belongs to the people and to our children's future? What kind of priorities are those?

Mr. Kerrio: Let Mother Nature do it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, first of all, it became apparent to the province in 1962, as I mentioned a few moments ago, that something much more had to be done about regeneration. However, a very intensive study was undertaken under the chairmanship of Professor Armson, who is now a special advisor, to determine which way this could best be done. Without making an estimates speech, I would say one thing that became quite apparent was that cutting and regeneration go hand in hand, forestry practices can't be separated.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It's called forest management.

Hon. Mr. Auld: That is the reason for the amendments to the Crown Timber Act which were given to the House for first reading last week. It is the reason for the program we have embarked on in having the companies do this work in their limits while the crown will continue to do it in crown management units. This is not a $5 million program. We estimate when it is running full force it will be something in the order of between $20 million and $30 million.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not agree that the figure 198,000 acres regenerated doesn't mean anything by itself unless he also tells us the total cutover area since 1962? Is the minister, in his statement, committing the government to sustained-yield operations by 1985? If so, how is he going to fit into the position of the independent sawmill operators in their criticisms of the present system and their argument that they should have a greater role?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think those are questions which could well be addressed to the ministry when we're doing our estimates, which I understand we start in a very short time.

Mr. Warner: Go on, you just made a statement today.

Hon. Mr. Auld: They're really a matter of detail. However, as far as the independent sawmill operators are concerned, and I've met with them as recently as about two weeks ago—

Mr. Swart: How many acres were included in the cutover?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —we have indicated to them, as I said a moment ago, that we will be doing the regeneration in the crown units, which is where most of their wood comes from. Their other wood, the material they buy on third-party agreements from the pulp and paper companies, will come from the areas that are regenerated by those companies under whatever arrangement we come to.

Finally, I have a meeting this afternoon at four o'clock with the Ontario Forest Industries Association, and I believe we have finally ironed out pretty well all the points of disagreement in our proposed agreement. As I said a couple of weeks ago, I hope we will be signing our first agreement very shortly.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Is the minister aware that for the last 30 years we have been falling behind by 100,000 acres, taking into account either natural or man-made regeneration of the forest?

Does he realize that on the regeneration that is being done there is only about a 50 per cent success rate.

Mr. Wildman: That's right; 50 per cent a year.

Mr. T. P. Reid: So we're falling behind 150,000 to 200,000 acres a year in regeneration? The minister has yet to tell this House how his ministry is going to make up that gap and ensure that those mills in northern Ontario can continue to operate for the next 30 or 40 years.

Mr. Warner: Tell us about the Bramalea charter.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It was mentioned in the Saturday Star story, which I must admit I didn't see until I returned here this morning; we indicated some time ago that our basic approach was to plant two trees for every one cut.

Mr. S. Smith: We heard that.

Hon. Mr. Auld: We still have that target and we're going to meet it.

MINING COMMUNITIES

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer.

Mr. Havrot: New leader over there?

Mr. MacDonald: We have reserves over here, which is more than you can say for yours.

Mr. Martel: On November 3, 1977, the Premier made a statement. This is an excerpt from it:

"In recognition of the gravity and the complexity of the problems facing Sudbury and other mining communities, the government will establish a cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities to consider those short-term and long-term measures which may be appropriate for our government and other measures which may be recommended to the government of Canada."

Could the Treasurer tell me, in view of the fact that he was chairman of that committee, how frequently it met, who has taken his place as chairman now that he has gone on to greater expectations, and when he will be in a position to table a report indicating what his short-term and long-term proposals are for those mining communities?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the committee met reasonably regularly; I would have guessed about every two weeks at that point during the first two or three months, or perhaps even six months. It generally reported quite quickly to one of two points; since it was a committee of cabinet, it was reporting to the policy field as required and, at times, directly to cabinet.

It is my understanding, and it would need to be confirmed by the minister involved, that the Minister of Natural Resources assumed that role, since I was Minister of Natural Resources at the time; I know that I relinquished it when I was made Treasurer.

Mr. Martel: A supplementary: There was a commitment that the minister would develop short-term solutions and, it would be hoped, long-term solutions for mining communities faced with problems. He has not answered that part of the question as to what those are going to be.

In view of the fact that National Steel is closing its doors in the town of Capreol on May 15, can he tell me how the goals or programs that he has established will be implemented to assist (a) the workers in the municipality of Capreol and (b) the municipality of Capreol itself?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It might be wise if the part on Capreol were redirected. I think the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) was involved in the mine up there.

An hon. member: What about the minister's recommendations?

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: I can redirect it, but I know the involvement of the Minister of Labour, which has been in an effort to try to keep the plant open. I want to know what the Treasurer is going to do (a) for the workers and (b) for the municipality of Capreol, which now is going to be confronted with about 140 vacant homes and a tax bill, because there is going to be a shortfall in the tax revenues which the municipality had not anticipated and because it built on to the schools and it built a new subdivision just two years ago.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Capreol issue came up after the change in my position; that is why I was referring that part of the question. I could talk at length about Marmora. I could talk at length about the meetings we had at Atikokan. I visited Sudbury at least once, and possibly twice. We had meetings with the Sudbury group and a number of others in the course of the action. The members know, as well as I do, that solutions are not easily found in that business.

Mr. T. P. Reid: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The Treasurer might be aware that I had this question on the order paper about three months ago. Will he not admit that the whole policy of providing any kind of assistance to one-industry, northern communities was nothing but a sham to try to get the government off the hook, and it was such a sham that the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) was not even appointed to that committee? In fact, will he not admit that nothing has been set down to provide any guidelines for communities that are facing unemployment problems because of mine or mill shutdowns?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker, I disagree completely with that comment. For example, the day we visited the town of Atikokan, in the member's area, we arranged for a grant to be given for industrial relocation or studies through the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

The Provincial Secretary for Resources Development did sit on the committee, therefore, the member's allegation that he did not is not correct. I think the provincial secretary attended almost every meeting we ever had of that committee—in my presence anyway; so I would suggest to the member that he is not elucidating the facts as they occurred.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, are we to understand from the minister's replies that this committee, if and when it did meet, just talked about particular problems in particular communities and did not try to develop any general policy for one-industry towns in the north, which is what it was set up for?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker. But when one has immediate, pressing problems, those, obviously are those one deals with in the immediate context.

Mr. Warner: You did nothing.

Mr. Laughren: You are washing your hands of it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's easy to sit there and complain, but I tell the honourable member there were some problems that were difficult to deal with.

Mr. Martel: It's easy to sit there and pronounce, too.

Mr. Laughren: You're squirming.

Mr. Warner: The worm wriggles on the hook.

Hon. F. S. Miller: When those mines were started in Atikokan 35 years ago it was predicted that they would be exhausted just about now. There are different problems in Capreol, totally different problems. I understand it was a very profitable mine at one point, and very well run.

Mr. Wildman: What are you doing for Elliot Lake?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Marmora fits the Atikokan category, and I think progress is being made at Marmora.

Mr. S. Smith: You've been the government for 36 years.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I understand studies are going on right now or a company is continuing to use the facilities.

Mr. Van Horne: A little less talk and a little more action over there.

Mr. Warner: A comparative failure.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We got agreement, for example, from the company that owned that mine, Bethlehem Steel, to work with the ministry in keeping the equipment on site in good shape and in carrying on research in eastern Ontario, through the Ministry of Natural Resources, into alternative ores that could be developed there.

I think the kinds of claims the members are making that nothing has happened are totally false.

Mr. Warner: Show us the report.

Mr. Laughren: The flimflam man from Muskoka.

Mr. Speaker: A new question, the member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: The Treasurer said it was short-term—

Mr. Bolan: That's because he's a short-term Treasurer.

Mr. Martel: —but they have had 18 months since the committee was established.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

HOCKEY VIOLENCE

Mr. Martel: To the Deputy Premier, in view of the fact that his colleague the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) is not here: Recently I received a letter from a Dr. John Elliott, assistant professor of sociology at Laurentian University, concerning the hockey violence questionnaire sent out by the Deputy Premier's colleague. In part, that letter makes the following comment:

"The number 100,000 may sound politically expedient, more than anything else. If this number is itself a sample, then it is a waste. Not that many are required. The rate of return for any mail questionnaire is usually 15 to 20 per cent."

In view of Dr. Elliott's comment, could the Deputy Premier find out for me how many answers we have received and what the reports indicate with respect to the attitude apparent towards serious hockey violence, particularly in view of all the hockey experts and players, such as Bobby Hull, George Armstrong and Bill White, who maintain it is rampant with viciousness?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I know all members of the House appreciate the very keen and personal concern which has been expressed by the honourable member himself about this matter.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In other words, you don't know.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Indeed, the honourable member will recall that the Minister of Culture and Recreation made a fairly full statement not too many days after that particular expression of concern by the honourable member.

I think the ministry wanted to make sure there was a very wide circulation of the questionnaires in order to provide people with the opportunity to respond. No doubt the minister, consistent with his statement, will want to share the results of that with all members of the House once he feels he is in a position to correctly assess and evaluate what the results of that questionnaire have produced.

Mr. Warner: You speak as well as he does.

Mr. Martel: The statement made by the minister at the time was fraught with error, and I point out another one today. In his statement he said there were 17 questions in the questionnaire; in fact there were 23. It gives me some concern, particularly when we're talking about hockey violence, that only three of the 23 questions dealt with hockey violence.

Could the Deputy Premier find out for me who prepared the statement; who prepared the questionnaire; and when we're going to get serious about resolving the problems of hockey violence as it affects youngsters?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now that these questions are on the record I assure the honourable member that I will draw them to the attention of my colleague the minister.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary: Would the minister not agree that a proper assessment of the questionnaire that was sent out is not possible, given that some homes have received as many as five or six copies of the questionnaire, my home being one of them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would assume that only one response would come from that particular household then.

Mr. Samis: They know who's important in Cambridge.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They gave him four to practice on.

Mr. Eakins: He must have used the Tory mailing list.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Obviously, I'm not in a position to comment on this, except to say that in taking part in a debate within the last week or so the honourable member made some reference to the number of sons he had; obviously they must all be involved in hockey in some respect, and hopefully they are not involved in any violence as a result of that particular exercise.

Mr. M. Davidson: They'd better not be.

DREDGING CASE

Mr. Cunningham: I have a question of the Attorney General. With the dredging trial now concluded, I wonder if the Attorney General would be in a position to inform the House with regard to certain references that were made during the course of the trial—references in Mr. McNamara's diary with regard to a William Davis and a William Kelly?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not sure that I understand the member's question. The dredging trial is not concluded. The accused who have been convicted, the companies, will be before the court for sentence on June

4. I have no further comment to make at this time.

Mr. Cunningham: I would like to ask the Attorney General when the House might be getting the results of the inquiry or the questioning by Mr. Justice Campbell Grant that is currently going on or has gone on?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would be prepared to discuss this matter after the individuals before the courts have been sentenced.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary: Perhaps the Attorney General is aware that the Premier on July 8, 1977 made this statement: "I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am looking forward to the opportunity of sharing the contents of Mr. Justice Campbell Grant's report with the members opposite. On the first occasion that is available to me as Premier of this province—because the trial is to commence this fall—I intend to share that information with all of those honourable members who are interested."

I happen to be interested. The trial has concluded.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It hasn't.

Mr. Warner: Could the Attorney General prevail upon the Premier to make the statement which he promised to make back on July 8, 1977?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just repeat that the trial has not concluded.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Mr. Laughren: I have a question of the Treasurer, who is trying to salvage support among his backbenchers in view of the answer to my colleague's question.

Does the Treasurer agree with me—and he might want to refer to his colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) on this—that one of the major problems we face, not only in Ontario but elsewhere in this country, is the growing deficit on interest and dividend payments to non-residents, which reached a total of $5.4 billion last year? If he appreciates that problem, could he tell us where he got his mandate to go to England with his colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism, in a blatant attempt to peddle even more of our potential to the British and increase further the foreign ownership of the Ontario economy?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't think that was entirely the reason for us going to Europe. We were there selling Ontario and the benefits of Ontario. That works two ways. We are trying to sell them on the advantage of doing business with us. I would have to say, as the Premier has said too, while we want to encourage Canadian investment in Canada and Ontario as much as we can, that does not mean discouraging other investment in Ontario.

Mr. Riddell: Let's keep our land in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It isn't going anywhere. It will always be here.

Mr. Riddell: You are going to be surprised when the report comes in.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Is the Treasurer not aware that any of the benefits that might accrue to us by the increased foreign ownership of the Ontario economy would be more than offset by the level of business service payments, including research and development and fees and royalty payments to non-residents, which are in the neighbourhood of $2 billion a year now?

Did the minister make it clear to the potential British investors in Ontario that we were no longer prepared to accept the kind of carte blanche sell-out that has been so much of the history of this country?

Hon. F. S. Miller: If a company came to Ontario and simply produced products for internal consumption, part of the member's argument would be correct, because then profits made on it would be sent to another country, but he tends to forget that many of the corporations in this export-oriented province end up creating employment here, adding value here, selling the product elsewhere, and while certainly there is a chance that profits will flow a great deal more stays here than would have stayed here had they not been in our province.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister realize that if he accepts that point of view it's pretty useless to set apart $200 million to encourage Ontario industry? Doesn't he realize that a branch plant economy doesn't produce any benefits other than temporary jobs for our province? And how can he reconcile his position with the intent to strengthen our manufacturing industry since Ontario has fared very badly in the 1970s and, despite last year, is the slowest growing province in Canada in the manufacturing sector?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's probably the only manufacturing sector province in Canada. That's one of the big reasons. We have always been at the top of the heap, and when we talk of resource growth, obviously that's one sector that is growing very fast.

Having just come back from Europe, there are a lot of people over there who would gladly change their standard of living for ours. Costs for food alone in that country—Britain—are two to two and a half times the Canadian cost. The costs for housing are two to two and a half times. We have a heck of a good life here and a good sound economy.

ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

Mr. Kennedy: A question for the House leader: Last week he indicated to the member for Oriole that he would look into the possibility of abolishing public opinion polls during elections. I am wondering if at the same time he would look into the matter of the length of time of elections and see if they could be reduced from the current 37 days—I think it's 45 in winter—to 30 days from here on in?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the member is echoing some of the concerns that many people are expressing with respect to the length of time between the writ and election day in the federal field. Ours is much shorter of course; 37 or 44 days, depending on the time of the year. This matter isn't presently before us, but it is my understanding that the chief election officer is giving some thought to whether or not the minimum number of days can in fact be reduced. I imagine that once he's had the opportunity to review that with his advisers no doubt we will be getting some type of an interim report and we can give some consideration to it at that time.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, the member for Wentworth (Mr. Isaacs) asked me a question and made certain allegations about the death of a lady in Stoney Creek. The ministry staff have checked with Hamilton hospitals regarding the availability of emergency beds on the night of April 26. Information supplied to the ministry indicates that emergency beds were available in all of the Hamilton hospitals that day, including Hamilton General, Henderson, Chedoke, McMaster and St. Joseph's. There were a total of 46 emergency beds available.

I would like to inform the members that I have conveyed to the chief coroner my request that an inquest be held into the facts surrounding this death. Dr. Cotnam has advised my office that he is not yet in possession of all of the relevant reports, but that a decision on an inquest will be made by him this week.

AIR POLLUTION

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister going to require that Anchor Cap and Closure Corporation of Canada Limited install an incinerator in order to comply with the minister's 1978 amended control order?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, we are.

Mr. Gaunt: I am grateful for the response in the form it has taken. I want to know from the minister why the ministry hasn't sampled the air around the plant since 1977; also, how one can expect to enforce a control order if one is relying entirely on the company's information?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As the member probably knows, we had an order on that particular plant and the original proposal was one that would require a great deal of energy to run. As the company thought that there was a better way of doing it, we believed we should give them that opportunity to explore it. We only did so on the clear understanding that if it didn't work out there would be no hesitancy on our part in insisting they carry out the original proposal. Since that time we have found out that, indeed, their proposal is not acceptable—I guess to themselves as well as ourselves—and they are prepared to live with the original agreement; somewhat delayed, I agree, but they are now prepared, and I believe we have it in writing. By the end of this year the incinerator will be in place.

When we delayed it in the first place it was on the clear understanding that we would insist they go with the original concept if they couldn't prove a better case for us. Their method has now been explored and they are going with the original concept.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, in response to a question from the member for Huron-Bruce I left out a part of the answer I should have given and that I would like to add. The question was on whether we were testing; I was concentrating on the incineration of it. I did have this information available here.

The emissions are solvent emissions and they were only calculated in 1977. However, conventional air sampling is of no use in determining emissions from lithographic and lacquer ovens as they are non-particulate. Therefore we think the only way we will be able to get any reading on it is to use that extremely sensitive machine, the TAGA 3000. That we are contemplating doing.

I hope that clears up the matter of testing better than did my previous answer.

MILK PRICES

Mr. MacDonald: A question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food with reference to the comments last week of his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) on the increase in milk prices by processors.

Since the comment of the minister's colleague was that the price increase by processors was traditionally the same as that by producers—a statement which is totally inaccurate, as they have sometimes been taken unilaterally and sometimes, when coincident with a producer's increase, have been higher or have been lower—and, secondly, since the minister's colleague indicated that the price increase was the same as that given to the producers because their costs were the same—a point which a leading official of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board says is bunkum—would the minister inform us as to whether or not he shared in that assessment of the situation by his colleague?

Also, what is he going to do about protecting food pricing, say, out in the market now, when this investigative reporter cum politician is barnstorming into the picture with obviously no real information as to what the facts are?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I recall the question in the House the other day, or I think it was in answer to a question when the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations commented on the increase in the price of milk. I think the member is very familiar with the subject, but to refresh the minds of some of his colleagues who aren't so familiar with agriculture, the fluid milk that is bought in the store is formula priced and it takes in all cost factors. I believe the increase this time, to be really technical, could have gone for three cents.

Mr. MacDonald: That isn't my question.

Hon. W. Newman: I just want to make sure the member understands the background, so that he will fully understand the answer I am going to give. Okay? Fine. The formula called for and they accepted a two cent per quart increase.

In a free marketplace the processors themselves have a right to choose their markup, but because there is a possibility, with, in most cases, good reason—and we will be able to give the member examples when we get into the estimates, probably by tomorrow night—where the processing industry costs have gone up proportionately, as have the producer's costs and they, of course, pass along whatever it may be, one, two or three cents, as far as their prices are concerned.

It doesn't necessarily follow that the increase is always the same as that of the producer. I said it doesn't necessarily follow, but I think the processors can justify an increase if asked to. If not, there is an appeal process, as the member well knows, to the appeal tribunal. The setting of milk prices by the processors is appealable.

Mr. MacDonald: Where?

Hon. W. Newman: To the appeal tribunal. We passed legislation in this House so that could be appealed.

Mr. Turner: The member said he knew the background.

Hon. W. Newman: If he knows all the background, fine. Now he does, and I hope he understands.

Mr. MacDonald: Since the minister's colleague stated it was traditional that the processors take an increase at the same time—which is totally inaccurate—and since his colleague stated that the costs of the processors are the same as the costs of the producers—which nobody has been able to justify because there is no investigation of any kind and no mechanism for that investigation of the processors' increases—how can the minister get up and give this kind of rationalization; and what is he going to do about it, other than sit there in his seat?

Hon. W. Newman: In all fairness to the member opposite, I explained the process to him; if he does not understand it, I am sorry.

Mr. MacDonald: I do understand it.

Hon. W. Newman: He does not understand it, because he asked about the appeal; he does not even know there was an appeal tribunal set up. We passed that legislation in the House less than six months ago, and he does not even know we did it. Where has he been?

Mr. Riddell: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Apart from its investigation of discounting practices, will the food inquiry commission not also be looking into the pricing practices of processors such as milk processors? Will the commission not be shedding some light on this whole matter of pricing practices, and not just the discounting practices of some of the processors and chain stores?

Hon. W. Newman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a royal commission going on now, under Judge Leitch—a royal commission that was asked for and approved by this Legislature.

Mr. Swart: And the minister fought against it.

Hon. W. Newman: I suggested another route which would have been just as effective, but that is all right. This Legislature approved a royal commission to look into discounting practices; the terms of reference are well set out for the members opposite to look at.

Mr. MacDonald: To look into them and make recommendations for stopping them.

Hon. W. Newman: The honourable member has been making a lot of noise about it. I have said nothing about it except this: If anything comes before the royal commission that is breaking any legislation under my ministry, then we will investigate it and report back. But, as far as I am concerned, the judge and the royal commission are there to look into all these discounting practices or anything else he decides to look at. He has a very broad scope to look at.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Natural Resources has the answers to two questions previously asked.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday the member for Algoma asked me a question and a supplementary about the dams at the outlets of Endikai Lake and Mount Lake, leading down to Iron Bridge. He asked whether the ministry crews were monitoring these dams and the water levels in those lakes and whether the operation was different this year from what it had been previously.

The Endikai Lake dam is not operated. The gates of the dam are left open and water is free-flowing through the dam year-round, and this has been the case for a number of years.

As far as the Mount Lake dam is concerned, the operation of that dam was the normal operation; that is, in the fall the lake was lowered about two feet, which is our regular practice, and that practice has not produced any problems in the past.

The size of the peak flow, and particularly the speed with which it arose, was not foreseen, that was the problem this year. I am informed that in the two days preceding the breaching of the dams—what happened is that in both cases water flowed around one end; I guess there was erosion, and water flowed around one end as well as going over. In the two days preceding the breaching of the dams there were 2.63 inches of rainfall recorded in Sudbury and 0.61 inches in Sault Ste. Marie. Those are the two nearest rainfall gauges. In fact, we had abnormal runoff conditions all the way from Lake Superior to the Ottawa Valley in that same belt. More rain fell in the Sudbury gauge area in that two-day period than normally occurs in the whole month of April. Normal precipitation in the month of April is about 2.19 inches.

I am informed it is not possible at this time to determine what effect the breaching of the dams had on the downstream flows and levels, but we don't expect that it contributed greatly to flooding downstream.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister in his capacity as Minister of Energy would agree with that, since Hydro seems to have indicated to the local community and to the Ministry of Natural Resources that it was the sudden onrush of flow from those dams that forced them to spill water over its dam?

Also, can the minister assure us that Kindiogami Lake dam is safe; and when can we expect a response from cabinet for the appeals for emergency assistance to the flood victims in Iron Bridge?

Hon. Mr. Auld: On the first part of that question, it is my understanding that Hydro said more water came down than it could handle, not necessarily that there was anything wrong with the operation of those dams. I wasn't there, and I am not an expert in dam operation—that's d-a-m—but more water came by than could be controlled by those dams. Consequently, I assume that for the long-term safety of the Hydro dam, the people above it and the people below it, Hydro passed more water than it would have preferred to have done.

Mr. Speaker, I have been diverted from the rest of my answer. As far as the safety of the dam is concerned, I am told that the original one, the first one I mentioned, Endikai, is an old wooden dam which the ministry fell heir to. It was built and operated by a lumber company some years ago, and I believe the ministry took it over for lack of anyone else to run it in 1964. I am told it is not in ideal condition, and that is one of the reasons it is left open and acts more or less as a weir. We are looking at what sort of structure should be there for the future. It may well be simply a weir, but funds, of course, will also have to do with how soon we get something done there.

I have now forgotten the third part of the question. In the matter of assistance, the question should be asked of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), who deals with the disaster relief fund.

FLOOD REPORT

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Natural Resources. Can the minister tell us when the government-appointed body that was to look into the Dover flood and the Lower Thames Valley Conservation Authority will be reporting? Can it be that this report will be delayed until after May 22, since we have already passed the target date of May 1?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated last week that I expected to have the report by the end of the week. I am now told that I will have it by May 10.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have the answer to another question addressed to the Minister of Energy last week by the Leader of the Opposition, who was asking whether the bid for the boilers that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited purchased for export was the lowest bid. I am afraid I am unable to give that information because it would have to be asked of AECL. It was their contract, as I understand it, and not Ontario Hydro's.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of brief supplementary, if the minister felt able to come in here and say that Hydro told him the bid was accepted from Foster Wheeler Company by a process of competitive bidding, was he merely using words for the sake of hearing them to indicate to us that more than one person bid? We already knew that more than one person bid, because Babcock and Wilcox was turned down. Or did he mean to imply that the lower bid of the two was accepted—and there may have been more than two—and if he didn't know, why did he come in and say it was done by a process of competitive bidding?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, that is what I am informed the process was. What factors make up that process, I'm afraid I'm not aware. The question should be addressed to AECL, or to the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. S. Smith: Don't you want to know why they don't use Babcock and Wilcox?

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Education. Given the fact that Metro school boards, both separate and public, are unable to respond to the school needs of their inner-city population because of her ministry's cutbacks in funding, and given the fact that reports by the social planning council, the North York principals and 53 Toronto parents' groups point out that those needs are real, I would ask the minister now, as I did on Friday, whether or not she will reconsider extra funding for those boards?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, under the general legislative grants, the Metropolitan Toronto area has been assured of a floor for funding. They have received an increase in the per-pupil grant, and the allotment which is available for Metropolitan Toronto has been granted to Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I gather that means no. Implicit in that reply, and especially the minister's reply on Friday, was that the Toronto board could find the money for their own programs if they showed restraint, and she listed a school that was closed.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: What I said on Friday was that I had asked the Toronto school board to examine their priorities to see whether there were some reallocations of their priorities which might be made in the light of the problems they had defined.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: If I might continue, that still seems to me to imply the same thing. That board has laid off staff over the last three years; it has been able to find no home for the Gabrielle Roy school—

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question there?

Mr. R. F. Johnston:—there are few vacant rooms, and I just want to know whether the minister can point out some of those areas where they can find other allocations—where they can change.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I had suggested two potential areas on Friday in response to the honourable member's question and they are in Hansard.

Mr. Sweeney: A supplementary: Given that the minister suggested that delaying the rebuilding or the renovation—I have forgotten what it was—to Frankland School might be one way that board would get money, does she not realize that capital funding and operating funding are totally separate and cannot be transferred, so that is not a legitimate way?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I realize that within the Ministry of Education allocations that is exactly so; but I also realize that it was the intention of the Toronto school board to rebuild Frankland School and build a new school, from reserves. I was not clear about the definition of those reserves and that is why I asked the question. I have not received a response from them as yet.

ALASKA PIPELINE

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, last Monday the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) asked certain questions relating to the Alaska pipeline. There appear to be five simple issues involved in his question. The first was whether there are to be any changes in procurement policy for the Canadian sections of the pipeline.

In short, on the procurement policy or program of Foothills, while it is still in the process of finalization and discussions with the US government by Industry, Trade and Commerce, recent meetings have indicated no reason to anticipate there will be any changes in procurement policies.

As to the second part of his question, whether or not the contract is to be reopened, I would point out there is no formalized contract at this stage. In simple terms, Industry, Trade and Commerce reports to us that there is no pressure being applied by the United States government for a reopening of the award, being convinced of the non-competitive status of the US supplied bids. Some US suppliers indeed are complaining and are unhappy about the situation, but others in the US have indicated their acceptance of the situation. Current information indicates no intent to alter the negotiations between Foothills and Stelco towards an eventual contract with them.

Third, assurance was sought of retention of the jobs at Stelco, Ipsco, et cetera. Again, the indicated job and contract potential does not appear threatened at this time by any US action whatsoever.

On the fourth part of the question, whether or not contracts would come to Canada for the pipeline, I can only refer the members to the earlier answers I have given and point out that the award at this stage indicates that supply of services will be on generally competitive terms. That would indicate that the contracts spoken of earlier should be consummated.

Fifth, on the question directly asked, whether or not the bids were rigged, the answer is there has been absolutely no senior level suggestion that the bidding procedure was improperly influenced or carried out. Some individual US suppliers have suggested publicly that the bidding was rigged to favour Canadian suppliers, but absolutely no supporting evidence has been provided to the US administration as a basis for any complaint of which the agency is aware.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister tell us if there is anything in writing or any letter of intent between the Foothills company and Stelco and Ipsco relative to the awarding of these contracts? If not, would he bring pressure to bear to get something in writing so that counter-pressure from the United States won't thwart the awarding of these contracts to Canadian companies?

Mr. Kerrio: Nationalize it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I believe my predecessors have indicated we were most anxious to see those negotiations completed. Those negotiations, as I have indicated, are moving along as they should at this stage.

Mr. Swart: But there isn't even a letter of intent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Finalization of those negotiations at this stage must apparently await the finalization of the documents, which are now in draft form, with regard to the agreement between Canada and the United States on the entire project.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. Bradley: I have a question of the Deputy Premier in the absence of the Minister of the Environment. I would like to ask him if it is true there were no representatives from the Ontario Ministry of the Environment in attendance at the beginning of the public hearings of the Inter-Agency Task Force on Hazardous Wastes, held at the convention centre in Niagara Falls, New York last week. If the ministry was not represented, would the Deputy Premier not agree that the entire question of hazardous wastes in the area of the Niagara River is of such importance that ministry officials should attend all hearings of this nature to be in a better position to protect the environmental interests of the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to draw the question to the attention of the Minister of the Environment. The latter part of the question is one which does invite some comment.

As the member for that area, sharing that particular part with the member for St. Catharines and the member for Niagara Falls, the member for St. Catharines will know that both the member for Niagara Falls and I have been fairly vocal in that whole issue along there with respect to representations to the appropriate government agency in Albany, hoping that they will have a public hearing on the immediate request by a particular company to increase the gallage of its flow into the Niagara River.

The honourable member will know, from reading local media there, that there is a tremendous amount of interest in that particular issue. This coming Thursday night a public meeting is being held in the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake, with representatives from the other side of the river present. It's my understanding that the Ministry of the Environment officials have been invited to attend that meeting as well. I'm not sure, at this moment, what the status of any response from the ministry is. I can assure the member that, along with others in that particular area, we do view, with some seriousness, this whole issue of chemical waste disposition in the Niagara River.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary: Knowing the concern of the members who were mentioned, including the Deputy Premier, over this matter, if it were the case that the officials of the ministry were not in attendance and had to be prompted to be there by outside reports, would the Deputy Premier not agree that a better liaison between officials of New York state and the Ontario Ministry of the Environment is essential in order that we might have representation there to look after the interests of, not only the people in the Niagara Peninsula, but the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very surprised if there wasn't liaison between the two authorities. I obviously can't speak from the factual point of view with respect to the extent of that liaison but, certainly, now that the member has raised that question we'll get a more definite reply for him from the minister.

Ms. Bryden: A supplementary: Since the Deputy Premier says he is so interested in this question of hazardous wastes, has he yet obtained a copy of the report of the New York Inter-Agency Task Force on Hazardous Wastes published in March 1979? Is he aware that it not only tries to identify what wastes are and where they are but tried to find out how they were generated and attempts to trace them to specific sites from the generator? Is he prepared to discuss with the Minister of the Environment the necessity of us following that procedure with the unknown wastes in our dumps to find out where they were generated and then trace them to specific sites?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very glad to raise that matter with the minister again.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary: May I suggest to the minister that he consider setting up a body composed of members of the Legislature whose ridings border on the various states in the union so they could represent the government in hearings held in the various US jurisdictions so that we would always know what is going on there and could relay our concerns to them and they, likewise, could do the same to us?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would have to get some advice on the protocol of all this. I know, through my personal attempts to persuade the American authorities in Albany with respect to the specific application of SCA Chemicals Waste Services Incorporated in Lewiston, there were all kinds of hangups as to who could be a party of interest and what the status of people would be before hearings. I didn't want to postpone indicating my interest in that situation until all that was solved. I simply sent a Telex along saying that I understood there was a deadline by which those of us who were interested had to make some representations and, I think, before any decision was made in this matter they should allow the public to be heard on this issue and leave the protocol to a little later on. I must say, at this moment, I have not yet even had a reply—I don't know whether the member for Niagara Falls has had a reply yet—that is, in my correspondence with my contact with the officials in Albany.

In all fairness, I can't respond too definitively to the member, but would raise his concerns, along with others expressed during the course of question and answer exchange, with the Minister of the Environment in the hopes that perhaps there can be some resolution.

I think it should indicate on the record that there is a tremendous amount of interest in this issue with respect to what is going on on both sides of the waterways. It's one thing for Ontario to be maintaining its very high standards; we hope it's being complemented and followed up on the other side as well. This is where we have to be fairly forceful in making known our representations and our points of view.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral question period has expired.

MILK PRICES

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: In the course of his scatter-gun reply to my question on milk prices earlier this afternoon the Minister of Agriculture and Food stated that there was an appeals tribunal established in legislation some six months ago to which people could go with regard to price increases. Price increases by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board may be appealed to the appeals tribunal.

My question was with regard to price increases by processors and by retailers and nobody can appeal that. The minister is in error. I hope he will get his background filled in before we have the estimates tomorrow night.

Mr. S. Smith: As usual.

Mr. McClellan: Apologize.

Hon. W. Newman: If I am wrong I will apologize, but I don't think I am.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is wrong.

Hon. W. Newman: The member is always right, isn't he? All I would like to say is that at least I'm prepared to look at things; the member is prepared to make all kinds of statements. I believe there is an appeal process, but we'll deal with that tomorrow night.

Mr. Warner: Correct the record and then resign.

Mr. Swart: One question in a month, and you blew it.

Mr. Martel: You will apologize tomorrow.

Mr. Warner: And then resign.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

STATUTE LABOUR AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 78, An Act to amend the Statute Labour Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide additional authority to road commissioners under the act in order to better enable them to carry out their duties. The principal changes are the following:

1. The limitation on the amount which commissioners may fix for commutation of statute labour is removed;

2. The authority to conduct a sale of land to recover arrears payable under the Statute Labour Act is transferred from the sheriff of the district in which the road commissioners have jurisdiction to the secretary-treasurer of the road commission;

3. The road commissioners are authorized to erect and maintain enforceable traffic signs in the area under their jurisdiction.

ELECTION PUBLIC OPINION POLLS ACT

Mr. Samis moved first reading of Bill 79, An Act respecting Election Public Opinion Polls.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, this is the same bill I introduced last year. Its purpose is to prohibit the publishing and broadcasting of political polls during an election, where the polls relate to the outcome of the election or the standing of any leader, candidate or party in that election.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

(See appendix, page 1701)

Mr. Acting Speaker: Prior to calling upon the honourable member for Armourdale, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) has asked leave of the House to file answers to certain questions. Does he have unanimous consent?

Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government House leader I wish to table the answer to question 30 and the interim answer to question 166 standing on the Notice Paper.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have just come back from canvassing in the great New Democratic Party federal ridings of Broadview-Greenwood and Beaches.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sure the honourable member will be judged by the bill that was just introduced by his colleague from Cornwall.

Mr. Renwick: I can assure you that whatever else may happen on May 22, those two ridings will remain represented by the New Democratic Party and will, therefore, provide or continue to provide a much-needed balance in the representation from Metropolitan Toronto and from Ontario and, indeed, from all of Canada because of the calibre of the candidates who are standing in those ridings.

I don't know very much else about the federal election, and I assume we can all await the result on May 22 but, as for that portion of the great riding of Riverdale which lies within Beaches riding and Broadview-Greenwood, we can be sure that the adhesion of the electorate to the New Democratic Party is very significant, very substantial and very important in the life of this city and of the province.

I want to talk about two matters in continuing some reflections I must make about matters of concern to me; they are two matters in which I have a direct interest but no particular specific responsibilities in the caucus of the New Democratic Party.

The first one is an endeavour to draw to the attention of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and of the government the importance of the loss to Canada of business service payments—many of which are paid from Ontario—to foreign corporations which control such a significant part of our economy.

The structure and priorities of the multinational corporation often result in much research, engineering, accounting, computing and other services being done outside of Canada. This not only costs Canada the cash value of these payments, but also retards indigenous development of those skills. This problem is well known, but little has been done about it. It has been recognized by economists and others who are skilled in these areas, but no full-scale studies of the outflow of dollars for business service payments have as yet been made.

I draw the attention of the assembly to the interim report of the Ontario Legislature select committee on economic and cultural nationalism, and to the heading "Capital Markets, Foreign Ownership and Economic Development," which pointed out that no one really knows how much is coming into the country and how much is going out by way of business service payments and called for "a systematic and continuing study [to] be undertaken to examine the levels of outpayments associated with foreign direct investment in relation to the benefits received from that investment. It is clear that service payments would form a key element in such a study."

That study has not been done; there has been no indication of interest on the part of the Treasurer of Ontario or of the government of Ontario in the significance to the Ontario and Canadian economies of those payments which are made by way of business service arrangements.

It is crystal clear that we are talking about enormous sums of money leaving the country—almost $1 billion yearly. It is scarcely surprising that payments to non-residents are very much higher for foreign-controlled corporations than for their Canadian-owned brethren.

The data are very old. The latest data, which I have not as yet been able to obtain for 1975 and 1976, I will have at some later time; but I do not have them today. In 1974, although the assets of Canadian-owned firms were nearly twice the size of those of foreign-owned corporations, some 77 per cent of business service payments to non-residents came from foreign-owned firms, as did 85 per cent of dividends to non-residents and 64 per cent of interest payments to non-residents.

The great bulk of the money we are talking about went in the form of royalties, management fees and professional fees. Looking at the composition of these payments, professional fees have generally accounted for 28 to 30 per cent of the total, management fees have risen from 16 per cent in 1968 to something more than 20 per cent at the present time, and royalties have risen steadily from 18 per cent in 1968 to more than 30 per cent at the present time.

In the early 1960s, business service payments were well below dividend payments and about twice the size of interest payments. By the 1970s, business service payments were approximately the same magnitude as dividends and were still about twice as large as interest payments. Since 1968, whereas assets of firms controlled outside the country increased 81 per cent, business service payments to non-residents increased 72 per cent, and dividend and interest payments rose by 99 per cent and 68 per cent respectively.

Since 1968 business service payments have accounted for about 40 per cent of the payments to non-residents by foreign-owned corporations. Any evaluation of the economic pros and cons of foreign investment must take royalties and management and professional fees as a central focus of consideration. Together they make a far larger economic impact than interest payments and are not much less important than dividends.

I am going to leave that where it lies. I haven't got the skills and the capacity to do the kind of study required to analyse the nature and extent of the foreign business payments going from Ontario abroad or the impact upon that outflow of dollars in a cash sense, let alone the impact in the sense of the subservience of the economy of Ontario, mainly to the economy of the United States. Until we have some clear understanding of that, we cannot in Ontario, let alone in Canada, continue to allow the kind of outflow for so-called know-how to impinge so greatly upon our balance of payments picture and we cannot allow that outflow to impinge so greatly upon our capacity to develop within Ontario the kinds of skills and the kinds of capacity which are necessary for the kind of society which we all believe is necessary here in a very highly technical and competitive international market at the present time, if one accepts that particular thesis of Canadian need.

I want to turn to the question of the nuclear option and the role of the select committee. I have had the opportunity to talk with my colleague, the distinguished member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), who is the chairman of the select committee of this assembly, and with my colleagues on that committee and other interested persons in our caucus. The work which they are doing is immensely important. I am concerned, however, that this assembly has not reinforced for that committee the importance of this mandate to look at the nuclear option. One of the recommendations of the original committee, on which I served during the first minority government, recommended as part of the ongoing work that was required from this assembly a careful consideration of the nuclear option.

The nuclear option as such has become so embedded in the life of the province that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to get a handle on it at the present time. We had hoped back in 1976, when that report was first made, that somehow or other the assembly through one of its committees would be able to take a very cold look at whether or not the nuclear option was the only option that was available to Ontario for the purposes of security of its energy supplies and for the growing development of the Canadian economy within the Ontario society.

Unfortunately, events did not permit that committee to take on that particular role until the impetus that has been created by the disaster at Three Mile Island in the United States.

I want to speak a little bit about what our assembly here should do for the select committee. I think the assembly must reaffirm the immediate importance of the ongoing assessment of the nuclear plants in Ontario. The only benefit to us from the Three Mile Island consequences is if they will reinforce for us our urgent sense of the importance of developing, studying and analysing the nuclear installations in this province.

In any event, I want to dissociate myself from any version that what we must engage in is to await the report about Three Mile Island, where there is a different kind of nuclear fission operation from that which takes place in Ontario, so we can then have that logical panacea which we are given almost every day that the nuclear system in Ontario, of course, is different, with the uninformed conclusion that, therefore, it is safer.

I think it is absolutely essential that this assembly let it be known to the select committee that the priority of that committee must have an overriding place in the work of the assembly. I say this for two or three reasons. I am very grateful to the unnamed or unknown person in the Ontario Hydro establishment who provided the information to our colleague in the Liberal Party, the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent). I am grateful for this reason: As a lawyer—and I see my friend, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), is here—as any lawyer would know and understand, when one's launching on an investigation of such magnitude, the very first thing one looks at are the original notes of problems within the installation; not the quarterly reports, not some interpretative analysis of the events as they are assessed and re-evaluated later on down the line, but the very raw material of the evidence on which one can make a thorough and objective investigation of the extent and degree of the problems—in this case, within our nuclear establishment in Ontario.

I want to say that it may well be that over time Hydro would have produced those documents, or the series of documents of which those were a part. It may well be. I have very real reservations in my own mind as to whether or not, without the actual disclosure by a member of the staff of Ontario Hydro of certain of those documents, the importance of that raw material evidence would be available and readily appreciated throughout the province and to that select committee of the assembly.

I think it is absolutely essential that this select committee accept full responsibility, both for the security of that information, for the purpose of its study and analysis by the committee, and, in due course, for its availability to the public as it becomes available to the committee in the course of the ongoing work of its study, in an objective sense of the safety of the nuclear system. If any of those documents are to be denied to the public, then it is my view that the select committee must take the responsibility for that decision and give the reasons why any particular documents are not made publicly available.

There may well be a case for those procedures within those installations, related to the security of those plants, where that will be required. But I think it is important for us to understand it must be the responsibility of the committee to make the decisions with respect to whether the various documents underlying the whole of the public information about the safety of the nuclear system is made public for comprehension and study and understanding of the kind of options.

The reason I think this is extremely important is that the province is at the point where it is going to have to make a decision: is the nuclear energy program the transitional way to energy produced by renewable resources—solar energy or other kinds of energy produced by renewable resources? The government must decide whether the nuclear option is the transition stage, or whether it is possible to have a moratorium now. And it must decide whether the work of the select committee is headed towards—speaking of the nuclear option—a moratorium on the development of further nuclear installations here, until that select committee makes its report. The committee must be directed not only to the question of the safety of the nuclear establishment within the province at the present time, but whether it is necessary to go to the transition through nuclear power to safer forms of energy sources for this province.

At its convention about two years ago our party opted in favour of an immediate moratorium. This would allow that kind of study to take place to determine whether we are irrevocably involved in pursuing the nuclear option or whether we can say it did appear to be necessary but it is no longer necessary in order to provide security of energy supplies for Ontario in a developing society.

I think it is interesting to recognize that a mere 25 years ago there was little if any knowledge of the technology of nuclear fission for the generation of electric power. Very little of that actual applied technology was available. Now it appears to be in an almost runaway stage, not only in Ontario but in areas where energy is in short supply or in countries which do not have any indigenous energy resources apart altogether from the nuclear option.

A concentrated, determined effort was made here when Ontario Hydro decided in the 1960s to pursue the nuclear option, under the emphasis of the then leader of the Conservative Party, the Honourable John Robarts. Whether or not it would be fruitful if that kind of direction were given today to Ontario Hydro to require them to explore with a sense of urgency and importance the technology of energy productivity and energy generation from the renewable sources is worth considering. It might be beyond the comprehension of most of us in the assembly as to what the technology would be. However, that does not make it any different from the kind of technological information which was available 25 years ago and on which the present nuclear plants in Ontario are based.

I do not know the mechanics or the procedure by which the re-emphasis by this assembly should be made to the select committee. But barring everything else, the committee should be told not to move in a leisurely way into the study of this topic along with a number of other topics, but that it move with all deliberate speed to recognize the urgency and the importance of the study which they are doing, the responsibility which they must assume, the responsibility which ultimately this assembly must assume and the responsibility which ultimately the government of Ontario must assume, before they lock us in irrevocably on the nuclear path.

Whenever we talk of energy, we have immense vested interests already involved in the field. Therefore, it takes the kind of detached, objective, independent view, which in my judgement is only possible for a committee of this assembly, to bring to the people of Ontario a sense of what the alternatives are, what the possibilities are, what leadership can provide and whether or not by the turn of the century we might very well be in the position where we could look back and say, "Thank God we halted the nuclear option at the time at which we did halt it. Thank God we have moved to renewable resources and resources which do not have inherent in them the immense destructive capacity on which the nuclear option is based."

I want to turn just for a little while now to three areas which fall roughly within the responsibilities which I have been asked to assume in our caucus. I have been concerned for some time about the adequacy—I am not talking about the competence of the people involved—of the procedures by which something called catastrophes are dealt with in Ontario, regardless of the nature of the event and regardless of the cost or whether they fall within that strange world of the acts of God, such as the tragedy of Field in the last while, or whether they are man-made in the sense of significant spills of noxious materials of one kind or another—noxious to human beings and noxious to the environment in which we live.

I have had some correspondence about it with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) and with other ministers involved. I understand that the first point of connection for practical purposes for the great bulk of the province is the Ontario Provincial Police. But nowhere do I see it clearly earmarked as to what the course of events is; what participation by the public is required in many cases; and the motivation to get that participation activated in circumstances of an emergency, wherein most of these incidents of which I speak could fall.

Because we are relatively free of climatic hazards and relatively free so far of significant spills of one kind or another in the chemical or energy field, I have the funny feeling that we in Ontario seem to be always in the position where we categorize whatever happens as a disaster. We seem to let the disaster take its course and then have a discussion as to whether or not we will make dollars available to the particular locality which has been damaged by the disaster in order to repair the damage.

I say to the assembly that that seems to me on balance, to be a very passive approach to the problems we can be faced with in Ontario. I think it is important—and I hope we will be able to pursue this matter in the estimates of the Solicitor General in due course—that we understand as members of the assembly exactly what takes place when the report goes to the OPP, which is the nexus of connection between the public and the system which is supposed to go into operation, then to understand how the system is motivated by that particular connection, and then to decide how we can in some way make certain, to the extent we have the capacity to do so, members of the public are alerted to what they may be required to do, depending upon the extent and nature of the event that triggers the whole operation. [3:45]

I haven't been to Field and I don't know the topography but I felt a deep emotional feeling towards the people who suffered that particular catastrophe, as I know many people did. I had the funny sense that we in Ontario were responding in a much less positive way than the people in Manitoba, who have had a history of this particular kind of event. We seem really to be in a very passive role in relation to the flooding that did take place. All our action seems to be after the event. It is my concern and my wish that in some way we could make certain the alarm network and how it operates, and the way in which the public is to participate, should be looked at very carefully and very clearly.

I recognize that with the limited number of members and the numbers of committees we have we can't solve everything by delegating it to a committee, but I would think it might be immensely helpful to the province if a committee of this assembly—there's no need to have a large committee—were given the responsibility of looking at the emergency procedures in this province and what the events are that are likely to occur or may possibly occur, and of publicly interviewing and calling witnesses to determine the ways in which we should respond to make certain that we have an adequate plan and an active plan.

I have this sense of passivity in the way in which we in Ontario are prepared to deal with events that may occur which are a danger to human beings, disastrous to some communities and potentially hazardous on a permanent basis to the environment in which we live.

I want to reflect on another item for a moment because I have a responsibility in our caucus with respect to this strange jargon word "multiculturalism." I'm not at home with such language. I have an instinctive dislike of words such as "multiculturalism" and "anglophone" and "francophone" and other such linguistic monstrosities in which we tend to hide matters of importance when we really don't want to communicate directly with each other as to what they may mean.

Right from the very beginning of the concept of the country, and Ontario in particular, becoming something called a multicultural society, I had immense difficulty with what the government kept saying was its policy in the field of multiculturalism. I want to try for a moment to express my difficulty, and I refer of course to the recapitulation in a report on multiculturalism, a summary of recent developments which came out I believe this year. In any event, it's quite recent and it quotes the policy of this government as enunciated by the Premier some time ago:

"The Ontario government's multicultural policy enunciated by Premier Davis in May 1977 seeks to ensure (1) the equality of all members of society whatever their heritage in terms of enjoyment of rights and fulfilment of obligations, (2) the freedom of access to public services and facilities for participation in recreation and social intercourse, (3) the right of individuals and groups to maintain and develop their ethno-cultural heritage, including language. These aims constitute the credo adopted by the multicultural development branch of the Ministry of Culture and Recreation."

The reason I have difficulty with that as a policy is that I say we could do nothing less. It would appear to me to be the elementary foundation of a civilized democratic society to say that those are the goals, be they known by the short terms of equality, participation and appreciation. I cannot conceive that a society such as the society in Ontario could have any other goals for the people who are among its citizenry, regardless of where they may come from.

I had some difficulty in understanding the problem I was faced with, and I can hardly dignify that as a policy. I could understand it as a statement of fundamental principles of necessity inherent in a civilized democratic society, but not as a statement of government policy. Which leads me to the next progression I have been trying to make, in the hope that I might at some point understand what multiculturalism is about.

I could not help but come to the very fundamental conclusion—and I suppose this is a truism or trite saying—that you cannot extract language from culture and have something left. I am not saying that culture is synonymous with language, but I have difficulty in conceiving of a culture divorced from the language, because it is such an important part of the whole world of culture.

For example, I think language is the only means by which we can interpret anyone else's mind and the only way in which we can relive any other person's experience. Certainly, in relation to cultural groups, language is not only an essential ingredient in the maintenance of the particular cultural environment of peoples, but also the method by which and through which we talk with each other and we hear what the other person has to say.

When I focus upon language I therefore must come to a significant conclusion about a riding such as my own: We must do everything, I believe, through the educational system, with government support—not through the spontaneous efforts of individuals but with direct government support, as a matter of government policy—to be certain that we maintain the many languages of the peoples who formed the society in Ontario.

I say this for two or three reasons. First of all, I do not happen to be one of the persons who gets uptight if persons from countries other than English-speaking countries are taught in their own language, in the elementary and other parts of the school system, a range of subjects. There must be many children for whom the only way in which they can participate in our educational system, at least on a transitional basis, is through the facility of their own language in our own school system.

I am surprised at the number of people who get really concerned that somehow or other the Ontario society is being hurt severely if Greek-speaking children are educated in the Greek language or have their range of instruction in the Greek language in the elementary schools—or any other language. I have never been able to understand that.

I have not in any sense come to any definite conclusion about what the specific policy should be, other than that I think it is the role of government, specifically and of necessity, to take hold of that question of languages. Be it the Chinese language or one of the Chinese languages, be it the Italian language, the Greek language, the language of the Pakistani community, the language of the Sikh community, Punjabi, or any of those languages, we must see in a positive way that they are preserved for those members of the society who come from those countries.

We stand in grave danger of losing the capacity to maintain those languages in one, two or three generations. I'm certain that my colleagues know very well that in one generation, with the impact of the English language as the language in which one lives and moves in our society, it is very easy for the first and the second generation to lose their capacity to speak in the language of their parents or of their grandparents.

I think that's tragic in a country such as this and I think we have a profound responsibility, if we are committed to multiculturalism and to maintaining a multicultural society, to ensure that that language component of culture is positively supported through the educational system.

I am indebted to Mr. Ray Wolfe in another aspect of my concerns for what this sense of multiculturalism means in Canada today. I think all of us probably received the copy of the remarks which Mr. Ray Wolfe made when he was given an honorary degree by one of the universities in Israel. When he was speaking in acceptance of the honour conferred upon him, he spoke in almost universal terms about the problem of all of us in coming to a new country, whether we came three, four, five or six generations ago or whether we came as recent immigrants.

It seems to me to speak to everybody in Ontario, if they would think about it. It seems to speak to what I believe to express the essential nature of a multicultural society and what it means in a democracy such as ours. Being indebted to Mr. Wolfe, I'm going to quote, with very few changes, comments which he made at that time.

"I should like to contribute this simple account of how one person deals with the dichotomy of loyalties which arises between the country to which he belongs and that other country which he feels belongs to him.

"My father came to Canada from a land where, as in so many parts of the world, existence was marked by persecution, bitterness and poverty. In Canada my father found a haven which proclaimed itself a democracy, and it was this attribute which I was raised to cherish above all others.

"As the years passed, it was in the light of that word, 'democracy' that I discovered the freedom to define myself both as a Canadian and a Jew. When, as sometimes happens, I am challenged to state the order of my loyalties and to justify the privilege of linking them with a hyphen, I say that what distinguishes democracy is the right it confers on people, the priceless right, to be different, to hold opinions not identical to those of their neighbour and to believe without the compulsion to conform.

"One who calls himself a Canadian-Jew is not hyphenating his allegiance but defining himself, proclaiming his own freedom. It was in pursuit of this freedom that my father crossed a continent and an ocean and came to a strange new country, so that I might have a future without having to forget my past, so that I might be myself instead of pretending to be other than I am.

"Is it not, after all, on the ability of society to accommodate and accept our differences that democracy is founded? It is not the function of democracy to obliterate historical or cultural plurality. It is the goal of democracy to allow each to contribute to the common society.

"In short, no Canadian principle requires me to develop an historical amnesia; no Canadian ethic compels me to become alien to myself, to commit spiritual suicide, to cut myself off from those who gave me the innermost sense of my own being."

I end the quotation, and it needs no comment from me because of its universal application, other than to say that if one substitutes for a particular person, instead of the word "Jew," the word "Irish," the word "French," the word "Sikh," the word "Greek," the word "Italian," whatever one wants to use as the particular hyphenated conjunction with the word "Canadian" to designate the place from where either the person or his family originally came to this country, then it seems to me, in Mr. Wolfe's words, that we have a universal statement of what I think a multicultural society is and must be.

The very study of those words poses an immense challenge to this assembly to make certain that we take the kinds of affirmative actions which are required in order to make certain that the multicultural nature of the society is something other than a mere form of words and something other than, from time to time, the kinds of ethnic celebrations which we all enjoy and delight in but which do not really speak to the way in which we must develop the kind of multicultural society which I believe is our obligation and in which we in this party—indeed in every party, I'm sure, on reflection—are dedicated.

I think we have a long way to go in affirmative action in various areas of government, in order to realize with great difficulty, in what was almost a unicultural society at one time, perhaps a bicultural society at another time—and certainly at this time, as anyone in Canada knows—a multicultural society.

I want to turn very briefly to the question of Confederation. I do so because I had placed on the Order Paper, about the same time as my colleague the member for York West (Mr. Leluk) had placed a motion on the Order Paper, a motion dealing with Confederation.

It had been our intention that had the government introduced and placed on the Order Paper its resolution foreshadowed in the throne speech—and it may well be, at some point, that will happen—our resolution will appear as a government motion. But one doesn't know what the course of events will be in this assembly in the field related to matters touching on Confederation.

There is a very evident intention, conscious or otherwise, of the government to exclude the members of the assembly from any participation in the process of constitutional rejuvenation which is going on in the country.

The resolution I put on the Order Paper—and I'm not going to read it; it's available on the Order Paper—was simply to ask that there be established a committee of this assembly to be conversant with and to have an ongoing participation in the development of the constitutional thinking which must, of necessity, be gone through if we are to reach our goal of a united Canada, to which we all pay our particular tribute and homage.

When the time came as to whether or not I would debate that resolution as my contribution to private members' public business, I had discussions with the House leader of the government and with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), because I had raised with them what the intentions of the government were with respect to its resolution. I am not casting any aspersions on the ministers involved—I have some knowledge of how these processes work—but I had the expression of the intention of the government that it would be coming forward in a very few days. That was back on April 1. We have not as yet—unless it is on the Order Paper today—seen the government resolution.

I know there was to be a debate last week on the government resolution, but for reasons which are probably locked in the minds and souls of the House leaders of the three parties the decision was made that the debate would not take place at this time but at some later date.

I want to speak now about the proposal to have a committee of the assembly, in the hope and anticipation that the government will adopt the suggestion and in its resolution will embody a provision to provide for the appointment of a committee of this assembly, substantially with the terms of reference that were set out within my resolution and with somewhat similar responsibility, and will provide that the committee be required to recommend to this House the policy and proposals for Ontario which will best ensure the continuing unity of Canada, the said committee to report not later than November 1, 1979.

The reason it seems to me to be important is because I can't understand what is taking place in the Confederation debate in the country. I haven't understood it for some considerable time and I certainly don't understand it at the present time.

It does not relate to the questions of the revising and the redrafting of the constitution and the changes which will be necessary in it. All of those are interesting alternatives. There have been many proposals put forward about the fundamental structures of the country, there have been many proposals put forward about matters of primary importance to the country, and there have been many proposals put forward relating to many of the secondary matters which must be dealt with in a constitution which down the road it will be very important that we think about.

The funny thing is, when party leaders in this assembly and in the national debate that is going on say we all want less unemployment, we all share that goal of less unemployment. We all want more economic growth, and we all share that goal of economic growth. We all want stable prices, and we share that goal of stability in prices, the curtailment of inflation, however you want to express it. In energy matters they all say we share the goal of security of energy resources, of energy sources for Canada, a security of supply. They all agree with that.

Then they all proceed to put before the people of Canada the alternatives by which they think they can achieve those goals. There is a wide range of goals which are common to the leaders of all three parties, common to all three parties, federally and provincially, that don't inhibit in any way very significant differences of opinion as to how you achieve the goal.

In most cases, the debate in political terms is about those very alternatives of achieving those goals, but the funny thing which happened in the 1977 provincial election and which seems to me to be happening, and I am only an observer of the political scene federally, is that in 1977 the three leaders of this assembly said—this is not by way of any reflection on what happened at the time, but trying simply to understand it—and again now are saying we all share the same goal, we all want a united Canada. But for reasons which I don't understand, as distinct from all other shared goals, they won't talk, any more than the leaders of our parties here in the assembly did in the 1977 election, about what we would do to maintain a united Canada.

The sole contribution and the inflexibility of the position has been stated in what we will not do—that is, we will not negotiate sovereignty association. But that's a very negative contribution to the debate. I say about my party as much as I do about either the Liberal Party or the Conservative Party—and I say it both provincially and federally—it's about time we started to talk about what positive steps we intend to take, between now and at the time the referendum is taken in Quebec, in order to achieve the goal of a united Canada. It's time we did this so there will be an open debate about it. I would hope that out of that debate and discussion we can find some specific steps which will be taken.

It seems to me we run grave danger of being mesmerized into immobility, which is unacceptable to me in a political sense—that we must await the referendum in Quebec before anything else happens. We are supposedly to go down to the wire, conveying to the people in Quebec that we are not going to take positive steps to keep Canada united. We are to say to them: "We won't negotiate sovereignty association now. You go and have your referendum in the knowledge that's our position." It is very immobilizing, very mesmerizing, and it has hypnotized the political debate in a way which seems to me to be quite unacceptable.

I don't know any more than anyone else what the course of events is going to be.

I don't happen to believe there's going to be some specific climactic moment that's going to take place and we are going to say the country's falling apart or hasn't fallen apart. I don't think that's the way the political process operates in matters of this deep import.

So far as one can judge in reading and following and trying to understand and interpret what is taking place with the many voices contributing to it, and the many diverse ways in which it is expressed, it does seem to be very clear it has already been determined that there's not going to be a question of, "Do you wish to be separated from Canada or not?" That's not going to be the question. It's not going to be a question which can be answered in those terms.

Indeed, I think the Premier of Quebec appears to have said very clearly, to me in any event, there's not going to be any unilateral declaration of sovereignty or independence. If there is, it's somewhere down the road. What he is saying presumably—and I can be completely wrong on the matter—is that the question on the referendum is going to be phrased something like, "Do we have a mandate to negotiate something called sovereignty-association?" That appears to be the question which is going to be placed on the paper and it seems to me that's the kind of question a person in Quebec is going to have difficulty voting against.

So if it turns out that somewhere within that range of possibilities I have selected one which is, by and large, the way the question is going to be put, surely we are not in a position where we are now saying that in the light of that kind of mandate there aren't going to be negotiations, that we refuse to sit down and talk, that is the other kind of rigidity which has crept into the whole of the discussion.

But I want to come back and reinforce the suggestion I put forward—and it is implicit in the resolution which I had before the assembly; to say to the assembly and to say to the government please include a provision with respect to a committee of this assembly so that all of us committed to a united Canada can assess what we will do from now until the day the referendum is taken, which everyone assumes is going to be a new chapter in the book—not a divorce within the Canadian Confederation but a new chapter in the book—and then we can deal with that.

If we are all agreed that we want a united Canada, then it seems to me there are some very specific things that can be done from now until that referendum is called in order to communicate within the country, and with the people of the province of Quebec specifically, why we want a united Canada and why we think it is important in historical, traditional, present-day or future terms—whatever terms anyone wants to use and for whatever reasons anybody wants to advance.

It does seem to me that to have this sterile immobilization of that debate, which appears to me to have taken place, is a disservice to the importance of the debate and a circumstance in which I, as a member of the assembly, do not want to find myself having sat through an important period of the life of Confederation and to find that we, as members of this assembly, have not participated in it.

The other aspect is that they argue: "Is it important? Is it a major issue or not a major issue?" That seems to me to be a ridiculous way of talking about the topic. One can make whatever rationalizations one wants about it, but it is an issue, a very vital, important issue. Whether it is the major issue, whether it ranks on top of everybody's concerns, it seems to me that we have that responsibility.

So far as individual members of the assembly are concerned—and whether I speak about the backbenchers of the Conservative Party, about the members of the Liberal Party, or about the members of this party—we have no sense of participation at all in what is going on; until we do, I for one am going to continue to call for a committee of the assembly to be a participant.

One need only look at the debates at the time of Confederation to realize that members of the Parliament of Canada went down almost en masse and toured around Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland at the time of the original Confederation. They went from city to city, sharing views and discussing the possibilities and prospects. True, that was perhaps a somewhat more optimistic time for many people to join together in the Confederation. But surely if it could be done in a more optimistic time there is an impelling obligation on us to do it in a more difficult and awkward time in the life of our country.

I do not happen to be a rabid nationalist; I happen to think that the country of Canada—and I prefer to call it a country rather than a nation or some other esoteric term of political science—the country really cannot very well exist against the immense pressure from the United States unless we have the participation of the French-Canadian peoples, as well as the peoples elsewhere in Canada, in making certain that it does exist.

Those are my positions and the reasons why I feel very deeply about the responsibility of this assembly, and the only vehicle I know is by the appointment of a select committee.

Another aspect of my reflections upon the nature of the legislative and government process in which we are engaged here, is that I think part of the solution is for us to commit ourselves to a much more rigorous form of democracy than we have been used to. I touched upon this in my opening comments on Friday last when I talked about the role of the member of the assembly in relation to his own riding and the method by which he senses what his constituents wish of him, as a member, on all of the range of issues and topics which come before him from time to time. I am inclined to think—and I have difficulty in overcoming this kind of obstacle because I tend to be a pretty rigid parliamentarian in the sense of the representative nature of the democracy; but I have tried to read a little about the referendum operation as it was worked out in the United Kingdom and the referendum law that was then passed in Quebec. Certainly, the experience in the United Kingdom was a good part of the basis on which the province of Quebec evolved their own referendum statute; not related to the one issue but a general referendum law. And now we have one in the Parliament of Canada with all of the tremors that the rigid parliamentarians like myself sense about the referendum method of democracy.

It does seem to me that we might very well give consideration, and perhaps an appropriate place would be in the procedural affairs committee, as to whether or not the time has come when a referendum law of general application could be one of the instruments available for assessing and getting some sense of what the people in the province wish on matters of significance and importance as they come through the assembly. I do not know about that, but I think we would be foolish to take a view that we are so wedded to and pure in our parliamentary representative system that we cannot envisage the possibility of a referendum law.

My last plea, Mr. Speaker, before I stop my particular contribution to this debate, in which I have welded both my contribution to throne debate as well as to the budget, having unfortunately missed the throne debate, is to say that we must be vigilant about making certain we look very clearly at a rigorous type of democracy for Ontario, much more rigorous than we have practised for a long time. I think we are almost at the point where the individual members in a little while may have the resources to permit them to do what impinges so heavily on the individual members, that is the individual case work within their constituencies. This is particularly so in the urban constituencies; perhaps also in the rural constituencies but I am not familiar with that part of it. We, as members, should see whether or not we can now direct ourselves towards the other aspect of our responsibilities, which is the nature of the democracy within our constituencies and the way in which we in this assembly, through the use of the referendum or other techniques which may be available in a more rigorous democratic society, could get less of a sense of isolation from the world around us, which isolation inhibits all of us in the expression of our concerns.

It is with those remarks, somewhat within the framework that I opened my remarks last Friday, that I now close them.

Mr. McCaffrey: As is the custom in the budget debate, I want to say some things about my own constituency and there are one or two comments I would like to make about the budget. If I may begin with an observation or two following some comments made in a broad area of procedural affairs last Friday by the member for Riverdale, who just concluded his comments.

If memory serves me correctly, the member for Riverdale was commenting on how the office of the clerk had responded to this explosion in committee work around this place effectively. It was in the form of a compliment to their diligence. I want to briefly and publicly thank Mr. Doug Arnott, who is the clerk to the standing general government committee, that infamous committee that has been now for a little bit more than one year looking at the question of continuing rent review legislation in Ontario. I guess it has been four or five months since Mr. Arnott's work as a clerk to this committee has been under way.

He has been extremely helpful and useful to us, not only in compiling the number of briefs, of which there have been many dozens over those months, making them available to us in an orderly way, but on a regular basis he has been working, sometimes under difficult circumstances, to arrange for witnesses to come in and to make their oral presentations to the committee. This is difficult because of the clause-by-clause work we are doing, and he is forced to make a reasonable guess as to where we might be one week away from the phone call by the witness. I think he has done some excellent work with us.

That committee has been a tremendous experience, a heavy experience in a lot of ways, for those of us who have been involved in this topic for some time. Just by way of a public compliment to the member for Riverdale, there will probably be another time to do this, but he has been not just a regular participant at the committee, but his contribution, I think, has been extremely important. In due course tenants, if not landlords, will want to be reminded of the work he has done.

In the broad area of procedural affairs, if it is appropriate I would like to make just one or two comments. They come by way of frustration with the system here, and I hope they are taken in that context. As recently as this morning I did make arrangements through the clerk of the procedural affairs committee to attend the next meeting, which I believe is Thursday morning, and in a more formal way express some of my concerns about the handling of timetables, et cetera in this place.

I think the whole matter of the budget speeches which we are now involved in is one indication of how I as a relatively new member here find that we often don't use time as effectively as one would hope. The budget speeches have some longstanding relevance historically and traditionally. Every private member has the right and the responsibility, if he takes it, to respond in the budget debate. But quite often, I think, it is not just unique to our caucus, we find we are rushing around at the last moment to get people to respond in the budget debate. I think that is often true in the speech from the throne debate as well.

Mr. Nixon: You could always use your old television scripts.

Mr. McCaffrey: It's even worse than that; I could use last year's response to the budget.

Mr. Nixon: There was a great program on Saturday night.

Mr. McCaffrey: Yes, that wasn't bad. It lost a little in spontaneity. What it lost in spontaneity it made up for in appearance.

I could use last year's speech, and as I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, other than my mother, who is a regular reader of Hansard, I don't think anyone else would notice. I think that is one of the things that bother me a little about the use of time in this place. We go through the motions of making sure that there is a quorum in here, whatever the number is, 20 people in any given day or night, and we seem to be a little short of that at the moment.

But we have, from my point of view, a regular series of problems every Tuesday and Thursday night when the Legislature sits from eight until 10:30, often sitting paralleling committee work, and when people are advised to be in the building in anticipation of a vote. I guess it's true in all caucuses that Tuesday night is the command performance night, being legislation night. The likelihood of a vote taking place at 10:15 on Tuesday has been pointed out to us regularly by our whip, and I'm sure that's true in the other caucuses as well.

Mr. Nixon: We're here all the time.

Mr. McCaffrey: There are those of us who are here often as well, and there are undoubtedly some who are here all the time. It does, however, beg the basic question of whether it is the best use of time to be available as it were in this building from eight o'clock on on those two nights during the course of a normal week.

I, quite frankly, take no comfort in the fact that when I mention this to people who have been seasoned veterans in this place they say it's nothing like it used to be, and I've been regaled with stories about how often votes would occur, if at all, at three o'clock in the morning and so forth. When I was a regular taxpaying citizen outside this building I didn't realize that that silliness went on, and at that stage of the game I think it would have been as difficult to accept the wisdom of that at that time as I find it difficult to accept the wisdom of these standing Tuesday and Thursday night appointments where people could be using their time more effectively. I'm not talking just as a Metro member about somebody who might be back in his own constituency meeting with voters, although it's very clear that that's a—

Mr. Nixon: Or watching television.

Mr. McCaffrey: Or watching hockey games or whatever, each of the members can wrestle with his own conscience on those kinds of things, but just to be on call for 10 or 12 hours a week for the possibility of a vote is something that I think leaves a lot to be desired.

Mr. Nixon: You're supposed to be in here listening to the debate so that you'll know what you're voting on, or possibly even being persuaded.

Mr. McCaffrey: I can usually get caught up pretty quickly on what it is we're about to vote on.

Mr. Ashe: You can miss an hour or two and not miss anything in most speeches anyway.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You could have missed all last Tuesday night and not missed anything.

Mr. Samis: Come on, Bruce, let's hear from you.

Mr. McCaffrey: Right, thank you George, I appreciate your interest in this. Maybe also as a relatively new member and not part of the establishment around here, I find there are people who—I think of them as part of the establishment, on both sides of this Legislature, just because they have been here for a long time—accept a lot of these things a lot more quickly than perhaps newer participants in it.

In summary, on this whole question of the use of time in this place and in committees and in the Legislative Assembly, I'm convinced that things could be done better and that there is a better way. If the opportunity is there on Thursday morning for me to speak in some detail at the procedural affairs committee I hope to do that, and perhaps subsequently to talk to my own House leader about it. I would hope that other private members would speak to their respective House leaders about it as well.

I said I wanted to make one or two comments on the budget, and I'd like to specifically speak now about the health premium. I think it was an important part of our recent budget where it was announced that premiums would be maintained, because it was not necessarily clear 12 or 14 months ago that that would be the case, and that premiums were increased this year 5.3 per cent to reflect the obvious increases in health care in Ontario.

In the earlier budget of March, 1978, we were faced with an unacceptably high increase in the rate of premiums. Following that it was decided that a select committee would be established to look into other alternatives of financing the health care system. That committee, of which I was a member, met for four months in the summer and early fall of 1978. That committee heard briefs from medical people, economists and others.

Our primary task was to find, if we could, another alternative to health premiums as a way of raising money.

We looked at the alternatives, some of which are outlined in the recent budget paper: lottery profits, sales tax increases, increases in corporate income tax rates, payroll taxes, and personal income tax rates.

I do not think it is appropriate to go into the reasons—I think they are fairly obvious—why we rejected increases in sales tax, corporate income tax, payroll taxes, et cetera, to cover that roughly $1 billion that is raised by premiums. But I do want to make one or two comments on the matter of personal income tax rates.

Reading from the budget paper: "The remaining financing alternative for OHIP is the personal income tax. This was the option to which the select committee devoted a great deal of its attention. In fact, both the Liberal and New Democratic members of the committee opted for refinancing via personal income tax, although with some differences as to how it would be implemented.

"The personal income tax option is appealing for a number of reasons. Even with indexing, the revenue growth of this tax substantially exceeds premium revenue growth. The necessary tax increase could be collected with virtually no increase in administrative costs and the existing premium administration system could be scrapped, thus saving government overhead and relieving employers from administering the current system. The tax is progressive, and thus the entire system of health care would be financed primarily on the basis of ability to pay.

"On the other hand, some strong counter arguments can be advanced. With premiums currently raising some $1 billion, the required adjustment in the personal income tax would be 13.5 points. This 30 per cent rate increase in Ontario income tax would create a significant disturbance in the tax system which could reverberate throughout the economy, even if it is phased in over a period of time.

With the province poised for a significant take-off in job-creating investment, many would question the wisdom of eroding individual initiative and incentive, which could certainly result from such a large tax hike."

I would like to make a comment or two on this matter of eroding individual initiative and incentive. I would like to say that not simply in the context of what that would mean if the money currently raised by a premium were raised via personal income tax routes but also in a more general sense because of the number of times members of the opposition see the personal income tax vehicle—that progressive tax vehicle—as a way to fund all kinds of other social programs.

I think that is worth emphasizing, because it is not just in the area of health that we hear from opposition members that we should go to the progressive tax rate to fund programs. There is in this province from the opposition members and in the country, from NDP members in Ottawa in particular, a frightening level of ignorance about the advisability of using progressive income tax rates to fund all these social programs.

To put my concerns in context, I would like to state that in my judgement we are at the margin now as to how much more we can rely on this revenue source without deteriorating incentive in this country.

There is a young economist in the United States named Arthur Laffer, I think, who has done some work on this matter of income tax and how it impacts upon initiative and incentive. I would not recommend that the opposition members take too much time in reading some of his work because it is relatively simple.

His basic thesis is that, as the tax rate is increased by government, the tax base goes down: so you do not in fact increase your revenues. Laffer has spoken in this province on one or two occasions. He uses some anecdotes to make his point, and I would like to try to paraphrase a couple of them.

Using the Robin Hood theory to explain how progressive tax can militate against the government's attempt to increase revenues, Laffer has a more modern Robin Hood who goes through this hypothetical forest and doesn't just rob holus-bolus those who are wandering through, but takes from them on the basis of their ability to pay. Very simply, if Robin Hood stops a rich individual wandering through the forest he would take a very high percentage of that person's income. A middle income earner would pay proportionately less to Robin Hood, and a poor individual caught wandering through the forest would likely not have to give up anything to Robin Hood.

It is the rich, though, that are singled out by him as they take the shortcut through the forest and he increasingly takes the lion's share of their worth.

Laffer asks: "After a series of such robberies how long do you think it would take a rich person to learn to stop walking through the forest?" He can expand on that simple point by talking about how people would use other alternative routes or, in more practical, modern-day terms, how people would use tax devices to save themselves from being taxed unduly. We see all kinds of tax-saving vehicles available to people in middle and upper middle-income brackets these days. It does not take people who have a high income very long to learn effective ways of saving that capital or otherwise protecting their income.

He uses, too, a mythical example of a city—call it Toronto—where members who share a political philosophy like the New Democrats might sit down and say: "Let's tax everything above—we'll pick a number—$75,000. It's a pretty high number. There's no individual family who should not be able to provide for all of their needs on $75,000, so all of those people in this city of Toronto who earn more than that we're going to tax 100 per cent of it away."

You can then ask the rhetorical question: "How much additional capital would these NDP philosophers collect when they implemented this new tax scheme?" The answer, of course, is that they would not collect any additional revenue, because anyone whose earnings were greater than $75,000, for example, would move. I think that this has been a phenomenon that has been happening in this country for some time, where, increasingly, through the public pronouncements of the New Democrats in particular, individuals and corporations can see that they're hostile to profit; hostile to capital and they tend then, very simply, to move.

Mr. Samis: You're sounding like Bill Bennett.

Mr. Ashe: You should have more of your buddies in here to listen.

Mr. McCaffrey: There's nothing more flexible than capital.

Mr. Samis: Where would they move to? Quebec?

Mr. McCaffrey: They have moved to the States. They've moved to Phoenix. They've moved to Houston. They've moved in large numbers, actually, and I think that to an alarming extent, the people who are insensitive to money, to capital and to the fact that it's a highly mobile medium, I don't think you realize the kind of impact that you have when you constantly threaten, through committee investigations and so forth, corporations that might have had a particularly good year. I want to get into that a little bit later when we talk about the employment development fund.

To summarize the thesis of this economist Laffer, as the tax rate goes up, the tax base goes down. You cannot increase the tax rate without people finding other ways to bury it, to otherwise hide it, with no additional revenue for the government in question, or, what's even worse, people will move to what they perceive to be a more hospitable environment.

I mention that because I think the maintenance of a premium here in Ontario was an important recognition that you cannot go back to the progressive tax base for everything and that there is an obligation that government's have, and thank goodness this government has it, to show taxpayers as much as possible where their tax dollars go. If people learned nothing else from that committee work in the summer of 1978, I think the fact that $1 billion, approximately 25 per cent of the money spent on health care in Ontario, comes via the premium route was an important point. I think it could be improved a good deal by advertising programs, and perhaps the odd message to constituents by members of this Legislature, to show people the premium does raise about 26 or 28 per cent of the money required for health care, that it does not pay it all.

One of the things I learned from that committee's work was that some of the opposition MPPs showed surprising insensitivity to taxes and the way taxes have an impact upon people. The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) is not here just now, I kind of wish he were here.

Mr. J. Reed: Our insensitivity is to this government's spending.

Mr. Ashe: Speak to your buddies down in Ottawa.

Mr. Ruston: You guys have outspent them.

Mr. Ashe: That will be the day; in fact ours is petty cash in comparison.

Mr. Ruston: Just look at the budget and see who has spent the most over the last 10 years, has had the biggest increase; Bill Davis's government.

Mr. Samis: What has Joe Clark promised today?

Mr. McCaffrey: The member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) indicated during the work of that committee that he had no idea how much income tax he paid. It doesn't surprise me. When one looks at the NDP caucus I think about half of the good people there were school teachers before coming into public service.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Or social workers.

Mr. McCaffrey: Or social workers. I think probably more than 50 per cent of them have never had the opportunity—

Mr. Ashe: To work.

Mr. McCaffrey: —to have a cheque in their hands or cash in their hands that did not come in some fashion directly from the public pot. As a former school teacher I think I can say that without fear of contradiction here.

All members of the Legislature would be well served, but particularly the New Democrats, if for just one 12-month period everybody received his or her cheque every month without any taxes having been taken off.

Mr. Samis: How about if Steve Roman paid taxes like the rest of us?

Mr. McCaffrey: Then once every three months the member for Cornwall and his colleagues would have the opportunity to sit down and write out a cheque to the Receiver General of Canada, paying the amount that is normally deducted at source. It's just like someone, say a school teacher, who has never had a cheque in his hand on which he had to pay any additional tax but just got the net fee; it was all laid out on the form how much went to his pension plan and how much went to health, et cetera; and how much went to federal-provincial tax—

Mr. Samis: You sound like a cross between Milton Friedman and Jackie Kemp.

Mr. McCaffrey: —so that he only looked at the net figure. He never paid that much attention to the gross figure and therefore he wasn't conscious of how much money actually goes out to various levels of government.

I make this in the form of quite a serious recommendation, that all of the members of the Legislature would be well served if, for just one 12-month period, no deductions were taken off, and once every three months, or once a year, they paid that one big cheque to the federal government, and the other cheques as necessary.

There are countless people in our society, taxpayers and voters, who don't have the luxury of having all of these things deducted at source, who don't have the luxury of regular funds being taken off for their pension plan, who don't have the luxury of paid vacations and who don't have the luxury of having somebody else do the bookkeeping for them. It does bring it home pretty dramatically when you have to sit down and take a look at what is left over when you have paid these various levels of government for services.

I mentioned that in my judgement a number of citizens have been frightened away from this country, frightened off to the United States. I believe that. I believe a great many people have seen that the New Democrats in particular are so inhospitable to capital and investment income, and as a result a lot of people have opted to move.

I'm concerned when I hear members of the New Democratic Party talk about foreign investment and their fear of foreign investment in this country. It was brought up in question period today by the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren). I forget the exact question but it had to do with the amount of dividends paid to foreign owners of Canadian subsidiary firms.

Everybody is put in a bit of a dilemma by this kind of talk because concern about foreign investment in Canada touches on fairly strong nationalistic urges that we all have in wanting to keep this country for Canadians and for Canadian investors. The real problem is, by the time a series of ground rules are set that would make this environment inhospitable to offshore money or to foreign money, those same ground rules make this environment inhospitable for Canadian domestic money. In the words of that great socialist philosopher the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), "You can't have it both ways." Ground rules that would make it impossible for an out-of-country investor to be attracted to this country cannot be set up without at the same time scaring off our own Canadian domestic capital.

There is only one series of ground rules for money and money is fluid. Actually, you put yourself on the horns of a dilemma there because you do try to have it both ways. There is an unbelievable preoccupation with multinational companies. It hits a responsive nerve end outside. It is fashionable these days—and you can pick the company, Imperial Oil, International Nickel—to be against the multinational corporations and to see all kinds of sinister implications in the establishment and growth of a multinational company.

I am amazed, after the hearings of the select committee on Inco layoffs back in the fall of 1977, when one of the things that became fairly clear, and four or five members of the New Democratic Party were on that committee, was that in most measures today International Nickel Company is not in fact a foreign company; 52 per cent of the company shares are owned by Canadians. It is a classic illustration; those members are treating it and applying to it all of the sinister motives they would to a company that might be wholly owned, or in large part owned, by a US parent. Yet Inco, if that is a reasonable measure and I can't think of a better one, is 52 per cent owned by Canadians.

When it came up in that committee I was always appalled by the attitude. The evidence was there, in black and white, that there were eight million shares of International Nickel stock held by Canadians. In spite of that, the NDP members still wanted to go back to the old game of trying to suggest it was some rich New York corporation or rich matrons in Rosedale riding who were controlling the ownership of that public company, forgetting that all of this information is public. The Ontario Securities Commission laws are quite clear in this regard. These companies have to report quarterly; it is public information as to how much they earn, what their expenses are, who the shareholders are; and share ownership can change from year to year.

Yet on a regular basis, I think sometimes for motives that are purely partisan in nature, some members work on this old straw man of the out-of-country capitalist who is somehow doing a disservice to Canadians, failing to recognize the other side of the coin; the number of Canadians who actually own many of the shares of these companies, the dividends paid to Canadians, the income earned by Canadians and the taxes paid to Canadian governments in order to provide social services in the respective communities.

I am not one to stand here and defend International Nickel or any other company. They don't need that kind of defence; but I do think they all, small and large companies, need a little more awareness of why they invest, more recognition that they have the option to move. They can move very quickly, and any time one of these straw men is set up, again members should recognize that by scaring them off they are scaring Canadian capital out of this jurisdiction as well, and I think they are doing those they purport to serve the greatest disservice of all.

The recent budget gave some details about the Employment Development Fund, the $200 million that has been set aside to assist Ontario taxpayers by encouraging existing companies to expand and putting them in a position where they can hire more people and provide more jobs. Ultimately, they can pay more taxes to help us underwrite the social programs that everybody here is committed to. I am a little bit concerned when I see some people, particularly members of the opposition, talking about the paradox of a government that will on the one hand fail to give an additional $6 million to the TTC and yet find $100 million for Ontario pulp and paper companies or $28 million for Ford when Ford had made its decision to expand. I don't see any paradox in that at all. I think it's an indication of the government's relationship with the private sector. The government's obligation to help these companies expand is intimately related to the government's obligations to meet some of the social commitments we have.

I don't have the exact numbers in front of me today, but I have talked in the past to members of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association whose head office is in Montreal. They are the people who have been responsible for a series of ads—maybe some members have seen them in the Globe and Mail—about the need to provide profits for the pulp and paper companies so that they can continue to expand and grow at this time.

I can recall one or two numbers I would like to get on the record at the moment. In 1977 Canadian pulp and paper companies in Canada paid taxes of $1.7 billion. Those were national numbers. I remember too that in the province of Ontario corporations paid just under $200 million in the form of taxes to the Ontario government. Those are just the corporate taxes. That is not the tax paid by employees of forest product companies in Ontario. The number would be closer to $350 million if that was added in.

The year 1977 was not a particularly profitable year for the forest products industry, but if one took that one year and that number, which I believe to be approximately $350 million, one could do some pretty simple arithmetic to determine how many senior citizens' homes could be built for that, how many hospitals could be expanded and how many schools could be kept open or expanded, to show that the relationship between corporate profits and social programs is an intimate relationship.

We cannot have it both ways. Every time an industry has a particularly good year we cannot threaten to have them down here for some kind of an investigation. I am amazed when the leader of the New Democratic Party shows that he's read at least one or two of the current year's articles and knows that the forest products companies have had a fairly decent year, that he singularly fails to recognize that they had about 10 or 11 dismal years prior to that. He has stood up in this House in question period, at least several times that I have seen, and wanted not only to have an investigation into some of the profits of the food companies but has suggested that to spend $100 million of taxpayers' money now on the forest products companies because they have had a good year is a bad use of money.

Of course it's just the absolute opposite. They had a good year in a large part because of the weakness in the Canadian dollar, a phenomenon that is not likely permanent in nature. It's another bit of good judgement on the part of this government to spend some taxpayers' money here in the form of an investment to encourage these companies to spend some of their own money now—it's on a one for three basis—in order to maintain existing jobs and provide new ones on a longer-term basis.

Among the new buzz words I find in this place these days are "research and development." How on earth we can encourage these companies to spend more money on research and development and at the same time want to investigate their profits every time they have a decent year eludes me. We simply cannot have it both ways. The profits that these large and public companies make are distributed almost entirely amongst the shareholders, the overwhelming number of whom are holders of pension funds. The anomaly is that a great many of these union pension funds are the largest shareholders of some of the Canadian forest products companies we have been talking about.

The leader of the New Democratic Party wants the Ontario government as a quid pro quo to get some equity in these companies to whom we are going to lend or give this $100 million. That is patently absurd to me at a time when the value of shares in those public companies that are already owned by union funds, through their pension and other accounts, far exceeds $100 million, and where the real beneficiaries of a profitable cycle are Canadian workers.

I do not find that there is any anomaly in the establishment of an Employment Development Fund. It shows an intelligent use of taxpayers' money to assist existing manufacturing industries in this province and to encourage others to locate here, once they have made a decision to move.

It should not be lost sight of in the case of Ford—and I do not pretend to be intimate with the details in that—that surely the decision had been made by Ford to locate, and it boiled down to Ohio or Ontario. In all likelihood Ford phoned the Ontario government and said: "Look, here is what we are going to do. What can you do for us? If you can't match or better this deal, we are going to go to Ohio." Everybody can have some twinge of distaste for this new phenomenon of companies using governments in competing jurisdictions, but it is a fact of life; and the decision was made. When asked what it would do, the Ontario government responded quickly and, I think, effectively under the circumstances. That $28 million will be paid back in two and a half or three years. We have talked at great length in the past here about the number of new jobs that that would create, and I think it is an intelligent use of funds at this time.

I would like to make a comment or two about Armourdale, not only because I find it is a fairly traditional thing to do here at budget time, but also because some of the earlier comments are relevant to the kind of constituency I represent.

I have said countless times, inside and outside my own riding, that Armourdale is a unique constituency; and there are some ways one could measure that. It is a riding in the north-central part of Metro Toronto which has no industry at all. In that sense I think it is one of the unique ridings in the province. About 70 per cent of the taxpayers and voters live in single-family homes, with about 30 per cent then living in apartment complexes in the riding.

One of the overwhelming characteristics of this community—and anyone who knows anything about it I think could confirm this to be true—is that it is a community that personifies some of the best of the old-fashioned virtues; in particular, “Work hard and save” is one that comes to mind for me. It is, in the best sense of the word, a middle-class community. The number of people living in their own homes and trying to pay off their mortgages is quite high. One can see, just by walking with me—and I invite anybody to come along with me and walk some of the streets in Armourdale—that the people there are house-proud. I think in the overwhelming majority of cases that house represents their major savings; for a lot of people it is a combination of their life insurance policy and certainly the vehicle through which they will get their retirement income. But the classic virtue of “Work hard and save” is one that my friends would share with me, if they knew as much as I do about that area.

A great many people in the community are approaching retirement, and in that sense it is typical of much of the province, in that we have talked in this place about the demographic charts that show the rapid growth in those approaching retirement. That reality has to be reflected in some of the government programs, and I think the budget does that. The recognition that these people approaching retirement will have a greater need for some social services in all likelihood means that the growth of government revenues has to increase, and the only way it can increase is through a healthy, expanding confident private sector.

It is an area too that would be immediately characterized by the number of neighbourhood schools or community schools. There are just under 40 private and public schools in the riding. In some parts of Armourdale, we are now facing the phenomenon of a declining school enrolment on a day-to-day basis. Some of the schools likely face closure if the school board determines it to be the case.

The Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), who is here this afternoon, and I have talked about this in the past. Much of her own constituency is very similar to mine.

There are ways in which we can deal with the problem of declining school enrolment in what we have termed a creative and innovative way, where we might use some of these half-empty schools for senior citizens' facilities, be they in the form of drop-in recreation centres or whatever. I think we can make some specific recommendations to the local board of education on that.

It is a good community. The people are responsible. They recognize the facts of life and that one cannot get anything without paying for it. I think they are pleased in large part to see that health premiums are maintained and that this government resisted the temptation to go the progressive income tax route to fund that extra $1 billion in revenue. That was a responsible and courageous decision. I think they appreciate seeing as much as possible their tax dollars identified and visible so that they can see where they go. We have enough hidden taxes already.

As an aside, I was quite surprised to see that the Ontario Economic Council made a recommendation that premiums be abolished and that money be raised through the progressive income tax. I do not have their report in front of me, but one or two sentences stand out fairly clearly. I am paraphrasing it, but they said that politically it would be a lot less painful when the additional revenue was needed to raise it through an increase in personal income tax rates. It is less visible, and politically we would not be seen to be doing it, whereas if premiums are increased by 5.3 per cent, as was done, it is front and centre and it is visible to most people. It is good that the government did the courageous and responsible thing.

On balance, I think it was a good budget, a budget that was realistic and attempted to reduce the deficit once again in the current year. A balanced budget is a commitment that is very well received in my area. People constantly work at balancing their own budgets in their firms and in their own homes and they expect nothing less from the government. They expect the government to do it as soon as it is feasible without destroying any social programs that are already in place and to do it, as I think it will be done, by intelligent restraint while at the same time making certain that we can provide an hospitable environment for domestic and out-of-country capital.

The need to stimulate investment and create jobs is a real problem; it is no longer a theoretical concern. To the extent that this is done in the next decade, we will measure the extent to which the social programs we all want will be fulfilled.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise and speak to the budget which has been presented. It is a privilege because it gives this member an opportunity to talk for at least a short while on his area of criticism, perhaps mainly because the budget that was presented this year is the most devoid of any attention to energy of any I have ever had the misfortune to sit through. As a matter of fact, the most attention this government could give to energy in this budget was to forgive the sales tax on solar heating systems or on the other parts of solar heating systems which they had not already forgiven.

It is getting to be quite a joke, this game the government plays concerning its attention to energy. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, there is still a sales tax on stovepipes? The sales tax was taken off wood stoves, but there is still a sales tax on stovepipes.

Mr. Ashe: This is a really big issue.

Mr. J. Reed: I am just trying to point out the comprehensiveness of it all—or the incomprehensiveness of it all. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, there is still a sales tax on efficiency-raisers for fireplaces: thermogrates, hollow-tube grates and one thing and another?

I have been upset so many times about the government's approach to energy that it is hard to get my adrenalin going again—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Watch your blood pressure.

Mr. J. Reed: Perhaps getting one's blood pressure up at the appropriate time has its effect; I hope it is not negative on me.

I just wonder what this government really is doing about energy. The truth is that if one asks the government if it has an energy policy—I hope the member who is in the House, and who may by some appointment in the future become the new Minister of Energy, is listening—as the government has been asked time and time again what its energy policy is, it never responds.

Mr. Kerrio: Those ministers are like kamikaze pilots.

Mr. J. Reed: All five of them now, since I have had the privilege of being energy critic. They come and go, and I suppose we will be through the whole caucus before the next provincial election.

I feel badly for the Ministers of Energy in many respects, because they really do not have a true ministry to work in; they are really operating a policy secretariat which is more of a monitoring agency than it is anything else. One of the first thrusts of a Liberal government in Ontario would be to make the Ministry of Energy a full-fledged ministry and give it the kind of attention it deserves.

It is very easy for us, I suppose, to slough off energy—or it has been up until now—but we should realize that in California today gasoline is being rationed; that in Florida gasoline has been rationed now for the last two or three months; and that North America has become such a profound importer of petroleum—and I am including the United States as well as Canada—that we are very vulnerable to whatever happens in the Middle East.

I got some figures today that gave us a little breakdown of where our imported oil comes from. In 1978, we imported more than half a million barrels a day of oil from outside of our borders; 21.5 per cent of that came from Iran, and somewhat more than that came from Saudi Arabia. There was some concern expressed about the upheaval in Iran and the kind of impact it was having, particularly on the United States and to a lesser extent on Canada. Now picture, if you will, one more country that is an oil producer going into the state of upheaval that Iran has gone into. It should be cause for concern in a province that is the largest consumer of energy in Canada. It should be of concern to a government in a province that represents a people who are the largest consumers of energy per capita in all of the world.

It's an incredible indictment; such a profligate use of energy in Ontario. We are the largest consumers per capita in all the world; that's a statistical fact. We use much more per capita than the United States. It makes me wonder how we can continue to do so when we consider that more and more we are a global village, more and more in Ontario we will have to depend on being able to compete in the world market with our technological excellence, with being able to sell product and expertise to the highest level of our talents. We will be depending less and less on the export of raw resources; we have to.

We have to migrate in direction; that's obvious. Whether we purposefully start out on that path, or not, it will be inevitable. It's like the fellow selling the oil filter, "You pay me now or you pay me later." We do it in a less dramatic way if we do it gradually, but it becomes very dramatic if it has to happen to us all of a sudden.

Our consumption of energy is incredibly important in this scene. If we are the highest consumers of energy in the world and if the energy is proportionately of greater cost, thus having a greater cost input into our production, surely that has to have a negative impact on our ability to compete in the world market; there is not only the business of being a higher consumer and having a higher energy input, but also the question of availability.

I know the argument that our nuclear industry is somehow going to save us. This is a misconception, and I say it in all seriousness. Most of us who stop and rationalize it for a while will appreciate that to transfer technologies quickly from, for instance, petroleum consumption to electrical consumption, would be a very costly and cumbersome process. It's true that some things can be transferred but many of the things that consume the kinds of energy that we import in such great quantities cannot be transferred quickly. Imagine, for instance, the magic that would be required to have a million automobiles in Ontario drive out of the garage tomorrow morning, electrified. That's the kind of transfer technology which just is not part of our ability to achieve quickly. So, to suggest that electric power can substitute or take over where petroleum leaves off, from a technological point of view is difficult. From a cost point of view it is even less desirable.

It's amazing to me that when we talk about the energy options available to us we have essentially put all our eggs in one basket and we have not given sufficient attention to energy options in the other directions, when the truth is the economics of the situation would dictate that there is a very profound place for many other energy options on an economic base.

I'm going to outline just a few of them for the consideration of the government. I do this every now and again at my own peril, because what happens is, the government poohpoohs the idea but about 18 months later they become the government's own creation. I'm going to go on record with a couple more areas of Liberal energy policy, and we'll see what happens to these in about 18 months.

Mr. Haggerty: Maybe you should have a quorum.

Mr. J. Reed: The only satisfaction I get from doing this is knowing that at least the people of Ontario will be served a little better because it's happened. I am not naive enough any more to pretend that I may somehow get some credit for having introduced the idea.

There is a potential there. Understanding that we import 80 per cent of the energy we use into the borders of our province, understanding that the bulk of that importation is petroleum, and understanding that every dollar of investment that we can transfer from energy imported to energy created inside this province is a positive step—and most of us who understand a little bit of basic economics understand that when the wheel turns over inside our own borders it has a positive effect in overcoming this $4.5 billion deficit in our balance of payments that our energy imports impose upon us—we have an obligation and a duty to develop those energies that can be indigenous to us.

Nuclear power is one. Nuclear power, with all of its concerns, provided the proper information is shared with the people of Ontario, can take its place in the energy mosaic in the future. The concern I have about nuclear power is that it's being sold as the only alternative. The concern I have is that the technology and its development and the weaknesses of the system have not been shared fully with the people of Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: And the weakness of the minister too.

Mr. J. Reed: There seems to be some inherent fear on the part of the technologists that sharing the problem in the system is going to create some sort of panic. I think just the reverse has shown itself to be true. With the events that have occurred in the last few months, it would seem that what we must do is to reveal to, and share fully with the people all the information regarding this high-technology energy source and let them make their decision about Ontario's nuclear future in a reasoned and rational way.

If we don't do that, if we hold back, if we tend to hide information and if we don't make it public, then surely we will destroy the nuclear industry, just as surely as I'm standing here. We have that obligation. The people of Ontario deserve no less than to have a complete revelation.

If the technology is not suitable, if it hasn't been developed enough and if it has too many weaknesses to be considered to be an acceptable risk, then that hard decision will have to be made. Frankly, I have more faith in the technology than that. But the fact is that everything has to be put above board, if the industry is to have a future at all.

I'm concerned that it is being sold as the only thing; it's all the eggs in one basket. Let's look at some of the others just briefly. How much money, how much time and talent and how much thought has the provincial government given, for instance, to the production of alcohols in Ontario, other than the revenue it generates from the other end use? I am talking about fuel alcohol. There's a tremendous potential.

Mr. Ashe: At about six bucks.

Mr. J. Reed: I just wonder if this government has ever gone to the federal government and asked them to drop the $300,000 bond necessary to be in possession of a still to make alcohol. We all get a good chuckle out of this, but the truth is that the production of ethanol has been, in the past, a part of agribusiness. If you look back into the 1930s in western Canada, you'll find the farmers were running their tractors on locally produced ethanol-grain alcohol. It has been calculated that the production of about 11 acres in an agribusiness operation of sugar beets would provide all of the energy that farm would need.

One might say it's going to take another investment to have the kind of little processing operation to make one's own, if a person was going to do it himself; but the truth is, as my neighbour who is a now retired farmer once told me, "It's not how much you make on the farm, it's how much of it you get to keep." I don't know why the government doesn't even recognize the potential for such a simple thing.

I've been to symposiums that have looked at the economics of wood alcohols—methanol is the other name for it. A study has been completed by this government on the cost and the potential for methanol production in northern Ontario—not denuding the forest, as some people would have us believe, but using the wastes that are sitting up there rotting at the present time. We get all kinds of these mediocre objections as to why the thing won't work.

I realize and I acknowledge that the oil companies have a vested interest. We are told quite quickly by the oil executives that alcohol is hard on internal combustion engines. The truth is that alcohol has a deteriorating effect on some vinyl lines and certain kinds of neoprene, I think, and that's the beginning and the end of that. Many of the automobile companies have engines designed and ready to go that will burn pure methanol. There's no big deal about it. Alcohol was the first fuel for internal combustion engines before there was such a thing as gasoline.

In Brazil, at the present time, there are 300,000 automobiles running on pure methanol, and because that country doesn't have a good supply of its own petroleum, there is up to a 20 per cent inclusion of alcohol into gasoline for those other automobiles whose technology is geared to gasoline burning. It improves the octane rating of the gasoline and makes the car burn more smoothly. In a northern climate, of course, it's gas-line antifreeze. You don't have to worry about your gas lines freezing up.

I don't know whether I should get into much more of it but the fact is we do have this option as a liquid fuel. The technology can be easily integrated into our present internal combustion technology. There is no problem with it whatsoever. We can begin to make it out of natural gas. As a matter of fact, I have already written to the federal Minister of Energy suggesting that northern gas, arctic gas, polar gas if you like, Mr. Speaker, might very well be converted to methanol onsite, rather than dealing with the prospect of having to transport LNG with all of its inherent dangers. A shipload of alcohol does not present a serious environmental threat. It simply disperses in the water and becomes part of the protein in the food chain. [5:30]

The longer view of this sort of thing is that it would give us the opportunity to gear up for renewably produced alcohol, to start with. The next thing is that it would give us, as a consuming province, a tremendous improvement in bargaining power when it comes to acquiring the petroleum we need. If we have an alternative technology on line and ready to go, and when it's only a matter of two or three or four years to put the thing in gear and make it a reality in Ontario, surely it's got to help keep the exporting oil countries honest, at least, when it comes to negotiating the price of petroleum.

It's only one option. I could go into it in a lot more detail. The government has chosen to ignore it and continues to ignore it.

Mr. Ashe: Not so.

Mr. J. Reed: How much money has the government spent on methanol production, other than on studies? Not one zip.

Mr. Ashe: We don't like to waste money as you do.

Mr. J. Reed: The federal government is the only group doing any work on this at the present time.

Mr. Ashe: We'll make sure it's practical.

Mr. Kerrio: The federal government has no partners.

Mr. J. Reed: Just a few minutes ago, the member for Armourdale was talking about the business of stimulating industry, small business and employment. It seems to me that if the government is really doing some serious thinking about the future one of the areas where it can stimulate that industry is in the energy industry itself. It doesn't take any great amount of brains to figure that out, I don't think.

Mr. Ashe: That's right. That's where we agree.

Mr. J. Reed: Just as long as the government does something about it.

One of the other areas is the redevelopment or the redeployment of small hydro power in Ontario. There are in existence at the present time about 4,000 dams in Ontario holding back water. There are very few of them contributing any work other than holding back the water for the purposes of maintaining levels for cottagers or some water control scheme here or there. Very few of them contain any kind of energy-producing device. Yet Ontario, which had the first commercial electric power in North America, which had abundant water power, whose economy was based on that renewable resource, and where the very real wealth of the province was created, has abandoned it.

At the present time, it's very easy for us, when we're thinking in thousands of megawatts and we have these grandiose ideas about millions of horsepower here and there, to say that 500 kilowatts or a megawatt or two megawatts are insignificant. The truth is that when we add them all up they're not insignificant at all. There are literally thousands of sites which could be developed and which could make a very real contribution, albeit on a small business basis, to the economy of Ontario.

It's been all too easy for the government to make an assessment about the economics of that sort of thing. I remember the first Minister of Energy I had the pleasure of meeting in the first estimates I was in. The first thing he did, when I talked to him about small hydraulic power, was to say: "It's just not feasible. It just costs too much money."

I said: "Why don't you turn it over to private enterprise and forget about the economics of it. It's not for you as a minister to say whether a private-enterprise operation is economic or not economic. Let the facts speak for themselves. Simply create the climate and get the situation together where these people can do it, if they so desire, where they can move without walking into incredible red tape in the various ministries. Give them a chance." I said that because I have some working experience with the situation myself, as most of the members here know.

I believe there are many areas of small hydraulic development. If the government is not interested in them and if Ontario Hydro is not interested in them, then fine. Let the government say it's not and let private enterprise do its thing and do something to facilitate it. Don't give it a handout. Nobody wants the money. Just let it happen, instead of holding it back.

Another area that is kind of interesting and which the government is not pursuing in any serious way is the subject of methane production for agriculture. I recall having a discussion about three years ago with a man, who shall at this point remain nameless, who really wanted to develop a practical, low-cost methane generator for Ontario agriculture.

There was a study done on the economics of it, and he was told it really wasn't feasible because methane would not be competitive until gasoline reached $1 a gallon. Isn't it interesting? Here we are. We have already arrived at that point, and there are no low-cost methane plants available or designs available for farmers to build them.

As a matter of fact, the one that has been developed that shows the most promise, not surprisingly, is American. That seems to be the way it goes. We become supercautious somehow and we miss the boat. Some of our neighbours who are a little harder pressed energy-wise in the south and so on get on the bandwagon. Now they have the technology, and you can bet your bottom dollar, Mr. Speaker, we will be buying it within a very few years.

The need for research and development tends to be pook-pooked from time to time, but the need for it in energy and in decentralized energy is acute at the present time in Ontario. I think the members across the House will agree with me when they look at the world scene and see what is happening and when they look at Ontario's vulnerability in this mosaic.

When they understand that we can't put all our eggs into the nuclear basket, where we have to look at the energy options on the broadest possible base, then the only way we can go in less than a generation is through comprehensive research and development, through demonstration and through the kinds of things that may seem very foreign to this government, but are things people can see and do for themselves.

I know that takes us down another path. That takes us away from the large centralized, beat-big-drum utility where we can say, "Look at this modern miracle of technology." I am indeed talking about simpler technologies. I am talking probably in the long term about lower-cost technology and I am talking very much about the kinds of technology that will contribute a great deal more to our economy in Ontario than nuclear power can ever contribute.

I say that with all sincerity because I think all the members of this House know and understand that the construction of centralized utilities is very capital-intensive and the number of jobs it actually sustains per dollar invested is about the lowest of all investments that we make in Ontario, whereas the decentralized energy thrust is far more labour-intensive and far more diffuse, diverse and more stabilizing actually to the province. If we can, if we still have time to develop a decentralized energy alternative in Ontario, it will strengthen our energy security and I think we are perhaps very slowly beginning to realize that.

The other area of the budget I was disappointed in was in connection with energy conservation. I couldn't find in that speech any addressing of the need to conserve energy. I should point out to the members one of the lowest-cost ways to pick up energy capacity in Ontario is to conserve it. It's the cheapest barrel of oil: it's the cheapest kilowatt of electricity. We know we can insulate a kilowatt of electricity for half the price of building a kilowatt of generating capacity and it doesn't matter in the overall which way we do it in terms of picking up that capacity.

It has been estimated that in insulation alone there is a potential saving of about 5,000 megawatts. This amount of power represents all of Bruce A and all of Pickering A, which represent the total operating nuclear investment we have at the present time. Why are we afraid to do that? Why is the government ignoring that obvious option? Why is it shying away from that? Why are we simply paying lip service to conservation and not getting down to the nitty-gritty of really being serious about it.

I say that in terms of other aspects of energy we can control in Ontario. What about utility efficiency? At the present time, on a mean average consumption basis, we only use slightly over 50 per cent of the capacity that's available. This is because we buy our power in peaks and hollows during the day and we have annual peaks and so on. There admittedly has been of late some interest in these peaks and hollows, but I have seen nothing in my three years that would indicate there's any serious effort to change that picture and fill in those gaps and make the utility more efficient.

There are ways of doing it. We can offer price-type incentives or costing incentives to consumers in such a way as they would tend to buy more base-line power. That was brought out in the select committee. There is the whole concept of a broad price structure change which would incorporate certain incentives to raise the efficiency of this system and in the end lower the cost of electric power. If there is a manufacturing centre that can run 24 hours a day, one can get more out of his investment dollar than if it runs eight hours a day or 12 hours a day. But this in truth is what we are doing with our utility.

We have all this machinery in gear and all this personnel in this great utility all across the province but we are not making the most use out of it we can. The utility itself has really done little to look at some of its efficiency-raising options such as load management. But I will say, to the credit of the municipal utilities, they have been taking up the idea and they are beginning to get on the ball. I see with great satisfaction the city of Guelph has a computerized load management system that in a few months of operation last year saved the city $85,000 I believe.

When we first brought up the subject of load management with this government—and I think that was about four ministers ago—the idea was just pooh-poohed and thrown into a corner, and any thought of changing or taking a fresh look at this thing and what we could do to improve the situation was simply ignored.

I am always amused that the government simply goes on the defensive in almost every case. I have not, from a number of ministers, ever seen a response such as: "We think that's a good idea, and we're going to do something about it." Yet not all the ideas coming from this side, as the members will know, have been bad ideas. As I said earlier, some of them have been adopted by the government—with no acknowledgement to the critic, of course.

If I have time, I would like to spend a few minutes discussing one other area of decentralized energy that is becoming a new reality in Ontario; that, of course, is the consumption of wood and the production of wood-burning apparatus of one sort or another.

A number of industries that are manufacturing wood-burning equipment have sprung up in the last five years.

Mr. Kerrio: The President is putting one in the White House.

Mr. J. Reed: Yes, even President Carter has become a customer. I do not know where he is going to get the wood though.

Mr. Ashe: He's going to chop down the cherry trees.

Mr. J. Reed: The fact is that, while four or five years ago that would have been looked upon by the government as being an insignificant sort of thing that we should not be paying any attention to, today it represents the lifeblood of a number of small communities around Ontario.

I have visited some of the factories that are producing wood stoves in quantity. Mr. Speaker, do you know that 750,000 high-efficiency wood-burners were sold in the United States last year? That is a tremendous change from the situation 10 years ago.

But let us look at the government's response to this sort of thing. With the agriculture critic, I sat in on a meeting with a company that produces steam boilers which are wood-burning and hand-fired, discussing its problems with the Ministry of the Environment and so on in getting this kind of wood-burning unit approved. I hope we made some progress through that meeting, but I detected a feeling there that hand-fired wood boilers simply would not meet the air quality standards imposed by the Ministry of the Environment, because for a couple of minutes they produce second- or third-grade smoke or something like that.

Mr. Ashe: The member's leader was the first one to point it out.

Mr. J. Reed: If my friend wants to get on to that kind of subject in terms of the environment and talk about the quality of wood smoke as opposed to number two smoke from coal or oil, I will debate that any time. Wood smoke is one of the least offensive and most innocuous kinds of discharges that we could possibly have, and most of the by-products of that combustion are taken back up in nature by the trees and recycled.

This is one of the anomalies in the Ministry of the Environment. They will put standards on where they will not accept wood smoke, of all things, but some other kind of smoke that is of a lower grade can continue for 24 hours a day and nobody pays much attention to it.

I can outline some more problems. There is a device called an add-on wood-burning unit that is designed to go on beside an oil burner, a gas burner and so on.

Add-on wood-burning units have had a reputation which has not been the very best for a lot of reasons, but the manufacturers have set about to create standards for themselves and to manufacture add-on wood-burning units which would meet every safety standard one could impose upon them. Yet both the Ministry of Energy and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations continue to suppress the development of a truly safe standardized—in terms of safety—add-on wood-burning unit. They simply take a negative point of view.

I pointed this out to the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) and to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea). The staff simply tends to stick in a negative mould and not recognize the new reality and move with it and try to bring these standards along.

I even recommended to the Ministry of Energy two years ago that they publish a book on wood combustion, understanding that wood firing had really skipped a whole generation, or a generation and a half, and that it would be in the interest of the people of Ontario if they had a comprehensive, informative book that would point out the dangers, that would point out the safety moves that can be made, that would point out all of the positive aspects of burning wood as well.

So far that has not come into existence. We do not have a complete book on wood burning in Ontario. Yet wood is one of the renewable resources which is coming back into its own very quickly. It is going to take its place at a certain level and will so long as energy continues to rise in cost.

I was quite interested in the Treasurer's announcement of a new investment corporation that would attract investment for small business. It sounded very encouraging at first. I was quite encouraged because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, our party has always been very supportive of small business. We thought possibly this had potential to improve it.

But if one looks at what is offered, what one finds out is that there are so many requirements on this thing that really all it does is provide a way to get a 30 per cent write-off on a safe venture. We really do not think it is going to end up doing very much. It reminds me of the Venture Investment Corporation of a few years ago that was offered hopefully as an incentive for small business and there wasn't one taker at that time.

Is that what it was called, the Venture Investment Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Yes. The federal government did not co-operate.

Mr. J. Reed: There was not one application. Nobody wanted it. It was a total flop in this province.

When we talk about jobs and investment and when we talk about small business it seems to me that kind of thrust dovetails with energy and decentralized energy very well—where one has an energy technology that is available at a local level, that can employ people, does not have to be centralized in one area, that can provide the energy security that is needed in Ontario, and help, we hope, to discharge this $4.5 billion annual deficit we are paying out of the province for the energy needs at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to present some of these thoughts on energy. I trust that the government, while ignoring them now and probably belittling some of them, will take them on in the next 18 months.

On motion by Mr. Williams, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 5:56 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

GOVERNMENT TRAVEL

166. Mr. Van Horne: Will the minister please indicate which cabinet ministers and parliamentary assistants travelled outside of Ontario on government business in 1978-79? Please indicate the name of the province or other country visited, the length of the visit, the purpose of the visit, the number of civil servants (if any) accompanying the cabinet minister or parliamentary assistant, the accommodation cost and travel cost for the cabinet minister or parliamentary assistant, and the accommodation cost and travel cost for the civil servants (if any) who accompanied the cabinet minister or parliamentary assistant. [Tabled April 26, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. McCague: The above question cannot be answered within the normal 14 days but an answer will be tabled in about eight to 10 weeks.

NURSING AGENCIES

30. Mr. Breaugh: Would the minister indicate how many private nursing agencies are in operation in Ontario? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Although the Ministry of Labour is responsible for employment agencies through the employment standards branch there is no specific register of private nursing agencies in operation in Ontario. It would be possible for any employment agency to supply nurses to a client. The ministry does not maintain a specific list of occupational categories handled by each employment agency in the province.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 8, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

MILK PRICES

Hon. W. Newman: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: My reply yesterday to a question concerning the farm products appeal tribunal hearing appeals on prices set by marketing boards was not completely correct.

Mr. Sweeney: And now you are going to prove it.

Mr. Cassidy: Another redefinition of the record.

Hon. W. Newman: Its authority in this respect only applies to prices paid to producers or the local boards for regulated products. The tribunal has no authority to hear appeals on fluid milk prices at the wholesale or retail level. I apologize for that error and I want to put the correction on the record.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: We have a very distinguished guest in the Speaker's gallery today, and I hope his presence will have a very salutary effect on all members, in the person of His Excellency Petter Graver, the Norwegian ambassador to Canada. Would members please welcome him?

Mr. Nixon: They don't fool around in the Norwegian parliament.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Correctional Services would like to make a statement on something he considers to be of urgent public importance. Do we have unanimous consent to revert to ministerial statements?

Agreed.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the members of the House in that I have a statement to give but I have not sent the statement to the leaders of the opposition parties. I prepared it only in the last few moments, having returned from Guelph a few moments ago.

I wish to serve notice that the Ministry of Correctional Services will not tolerate the kind of behaviour by inmates which led to destruction, estimated at approximately $37,000, at Guelph Correctional Centre last night. Disciplinary action will be taken against those inmates found responsible for the damage and, where warranted, criminal charges will be laid. One way or another, the inmates involved will pay for the damage done.

The destruction at Guelph Correctional Centre began at approximately 10.30 p.m. and eventually involved two dormitories, each accommodating approximately 60 inmates, a cellblock with approximately 62 beds and a few inmates from another unit. In total, approximately 180 inmates became involved before the disturbance was brought to an end at 1:57 a.m.

During the incident, inmates destroyed plumbing and furniture, including beds, property, canteen boxes, tables, windows, et cetera. Fire hoses were used by the inmates to drench all the areas involved. Chairs, furniture and mattresses were used as barricades and small fires were started in the various areas. Some time during the confusion seven inmates escaped from a dormitory corridor and absconded from the property.

The correctional officers and managerial staff at Guelph Correctional Centre responded magnificently to this potentially very dangerous situation. As I have indicated, there were 180 inmates involved in four different areas, each one of them with the potential to get out of control or to lead to a physical confrontation in which both staff and inmates could have been seriously injured. It is a credit to the staff that within approximately one hour, one of these units was completely under control; within the next hour and three quarters another area was secured, and approximately 35 minutes later the disturbance was effectively ended. There were no injuries to staff and no injuries to inmates, although one or two inmates received some minor cuts from breaking glass.

I would also like to pay tribute to the Guelph fire department, the Guelph police department and the Ontario Provincial Police, who responded quickly and remained on standby throughout this situation. The institution and the ministry are indebted to them for their outstanding co-operation. I should make it clear that the correctional staff were responsible for quelling the disturbance and the police, including the Guelph police tactical squad, were there to provide any additional assistance should it have been required.

As I stated at the outset, the inmates who took an active part in this disturbance will be penalized to the severest extent open to this ministry. The inmates involved will be interviewed by the superintendent of Guelph Correctional Centre to determine their exact involvement in the incident. Any inmates who are found to have had direct involvement in the disturbance will be dealt with fairly, but they will be made to understand that their behaviour will not be tolerated in the provincial correctional system.

I have authorized and directed the superintendent of Guelph Correctional Centre to order the forfeiture of the earned remission which is standing to the credit of any inmate who was involved. The loss of remission will be proportional to the inmate's degree of involvement in the disturbance. Furthermore, I have instructed the superintendent that the inmates must pay for the damage they have created.

Therefore, any inmates involved will forfeit any weekly incentive allowance which they have had standing to their credit. In addition, those inmates who may have been ringleaders in the incident will be placed in segregation with a complete loss of privileges. Some of the privileges that will be involved include restricted visiting rights, the loss of television privileges, the loss of mattresses in the cells and the loss of library and smoking privileges. Finally, the inmates who destroyed the institutional property will be ordered to clean and repair the damage there is as soon as possible.

It is my opinion that this action indicates that the Ministry of Correctional Services will deal swiftly and severely with unacceptable inmate behaviour which may arise in any situation similar to the incident at Guelph.

Mr. Lawlor: Why don't you work at the cause?

Hon. Mr. Walker: It is my intention that the penalties that have been authorized will require inmates to accept responsibility for their inappropriate behaviour by participating in the cleanup and by making restitution to the ministry. I toured Guelph Correctional Centre this morning to see the damage and to apprise myself of the general situation. When I left an hour ago, the situation had been well in hand.

Mr. Speaker: That time will be added to the question period.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, is it possible through your good offices to have something more than a third or a quarter of the ministry show up for a question period? It isn't even a Friday morning and there are eight ministers present in the House. Is there something you can do about this, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the Leader of the Opposition, and I regret what happened Friday. I would point out to him, however, that ministers of the crown do have certain responsibilities.

An hon. member: In the House.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I notice the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) is absent. Normally he is not, but as he is in this instance I wonder if this could be relayed to him. This government has been invited to send a number of ministers to a meeting of the northwest chamber in Atikokan on Friday. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition might consult with his colleague and inform us if he wishes the ministers not to attend so they can be here. I think there are seven who are planning to attend that northwest chamber meeting.

Further, four ministers of the crown have been invited to attend, and are probably attending, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce annual meeting in Ottawa.

The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker), if my memory is correct, will be here, but he is in Guelph at this moment. The whip of the Liberal Party, who is normally here, may be concerned about this issue, and if he feels a minister of the crown should not be involved or interested in that situation then that is a fair assessment to make. But ministers here are discharging very onerous responsibilities, and there are very few questions that cannot be—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do members want the Minister of Correctional Services to try to resolve the problems at Guelph or not? The answer is yes, of course they do. It is fine for the Leader of the Opposition to have his fun on occasion, but I just want to make it very clear that ministers of the crown do have other responsibilities as well as their responsibilities in the House. I think it's necessary for us to remind ourselves of that on occasion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Leader of the Opposition have any questions to put to the ministers who are present?

Mr. Riddell: Les Frost would never have permitted it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would like to say to the honourable member who raised a great fuss on Friday and wasn't here on Monday, I could tell him I was here when Mr. Frost was here and there was an understanding in the opposition, and an intelligent Leader of the Opposition who understood that ministers of the crown do have responsibilities which they are sometimes asked to perform by members opposite or in their ridings.

Mr. Riddell: On a point of order. Mr. Speaker: I just want to correct the record. I very definitely was here on Monday. I may have appeared 15 minutes late, but I was here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: So did a lot of ministers get here 15 minutes late.

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to speak to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. It's all very well for the Premier to lecture us about the fact that ministers of the crown have other responsibilities, we're very well aware of that. Many times every one of us has other public responsibilities and we're all absent from time to time, but many times I have faced the ministry here with half the ministers present and have made no comment; even with less than that, with only a third of the ministers present I have made no comment; but when we get two or three days running with less than a third of the ministry here the question then arises as to the purpose of having question period at all.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is not true.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Bantering back and forth like this is counter-productive. If the Leader of the Opposition has any questions to put to the ministers who are here I will recognize him; otherwise I will go to another member.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask the Premier, in the absence of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) and in the absence of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) if he is aware of some objections which have been raised in the area of Renfrew county and in the Ottawa region concerning the Rolphton nuclear station. Is he aware that questions have been raised concerning the ability of the emergency core cooling system of that particular reactor to handle a loss-of-coolant accident? Is he aware that a protest has been launched with the Atomic Energy Control Board regarding the fact that Hydro continues to operate that particular station in a manner that is thought by some to be unsafe?

If he is aware of this, will he tell us what the government's action will be in this regard? If he is not aware of it, will he kindly ask the Minister of Energy to reply as soon as he returns?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Because I think in fairness the Leader of the Opposition would want to acknowledge that unlike himself we do suffer from human frailty on this side of the House, I would point out that the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development is unwell, that is why he is not here. Ministers of the crown sometimes do suffer those human infirmities that strike all of us on occasion.

With respect to the particular question, I would say to the Leader of the Opposition I think there is actually some longer history to this. In fact the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) who is not normally absent but isn't behind his leader today—

Mr. Roy: He'll be here in five minutes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm sure he will. I'm just pointing it out; that's all. We all must retain our sense of humour.

Mr. S. Smith: The member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) is not here behind the Premier either.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say that I am not aware of the complexities of it. I am aware that a concern has been raised. Information is being obtained and will be made available to the Leader of the Opposition and others, I would think on Thursday afternoon. I can't commit myself totally to Thursday afternoon in case it takes some time longer, but it is in preparation and will be here as soon as possible.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Is the Premier aware that because of problems with the emergency core cooling systems Douglas Point is operating at only 70 per cent and Bruce is operating at only 88 per cent; and it is felt that the Rolphton reactor may not be able to operate at all because of the problems of the emergency core cooling system? Can the Premier explain why, since the system appears to be the same at Pickering as at Bruce, Pickering has been permitted to continue operations at 100 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition probably knows the answer to the question he has asked. It has been public information that Douglas has been operating at that percentage, Bruce at roughly 80 per cent of capacity and Pickering has been approved by AECB to operate sometimes at very close to 100 per cent. I'm not sure it operates at 100 per cent at all times. This has been done with the approval of AECB. I'm sure the Leader of the Opposition is aware of it, as are his colleagues who were on the Hydro select committee.

Mr. S. Smith: Why?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In reply to the supplementary question, which I assume it is, because AECB says it's quite proper and fit for Ontario Hydro to operate Pickering at 100 per cent capacity, and it's working and working properly.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact the information which has been prepared by the Atomic Energy Control Board's directorate of licensing indicates that the NPD reactor at Rolphton in Renfrew county is not capable through its emergency core cooling system of preventing fuel failure, as was put forward in the original licensing permission by AECB; and in view of the fact that reactor is now shut down for certain overhauls, will the government intervene in order to maintain that reactor shutdown until there can be a full inquiry into the matters of safety raised in respect to that particular reactor?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the normal procedure, when the Rolphton reactor is closed down as it is presently for renovation or whatever, would be that before it is given permission to start again it has to have the approval of AECB; I understand this is the normal procedure. I can assure the leader of the New Democratic Party that the procedures will not be altered. There's no way Hydro will start without the approval of AECB, on the assumption this is the procedure and that all safety policies or any safeguards will be maintained. I can give him that assurance.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the Premier direct the Minister of Energy to present to the House documents that show the differences between the Pickering plant and the Rolphton plant that might establish the reasons why Pickering is operating at close to 100 per cent and Rolphton can't?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would think the chairman of the select committee—

Mr. J. Reed: The select committee doesn't have that information.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm trying to be as helpful as I can. I am sure that after seeing the documentation the member for Halton-Burlington will be more than satisfied and perhaps take some pride in the fact that Pickering has turned out to be one of the most efficient plants anywhere in the world. There is no question about it.

In terms of the documentation showing the differential in terms of what they are permitted to use in terms of capacity, I genuinely think this documentation can and would be presented to the select committee on Hydro, members of that committee would have a chance to take a look at it; I have no objection to that.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the present shutdown of Rolphton is for reasons which are unrelated to the matters raised right now, that is the safety of the emergency core cooling system, and since AECB in deciding that the plant can reopen or not in a month's time will not be looking at the question of the safety of the emergency core cooling system, will the Premier and the government intervene in order to support the demands of citizens in the Renfrew county area that the plant remain shut down until there can be a full public inquiry into all these matters of safety; or is it the policy of the government that the legitimate concerns of the public will be ignored when it comes to matters of nuclear power?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The leader of the New Democratic Party can use all the rhetoric in the world he wants, I would restate what I said here a few days ago. No one is more concerned about the safety of our systems, whether it's nuclear power or anything else, than the government of this province. The member can phrase his questions as subtly and as sarcastically or in any way he wants, but he will not succeed in getting this government to say we are not concerned about the safety of the citizens of this province.

Ms. Gigantes: Go and tell it to Emily Post.

Mr. Lupusella: Why don't you do something about it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said on that occasion, and I repeat it during this discussion, that I think it is incumbent upon all of us to be logical, intelligent and to look at these things objectively. I think that's the responsibility of government and members of this House.

Mr. Cassidy: That's what the citizens are asking for.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm not so sure the leader of the New Democratic Party foresees that as his responsibility.

[Later (2:55):]

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I would like your advice. I think we missed a question because I misunderstood procedure. I just draw that to your attention.

Mr. J. Reed: I had asked a supplementary.

Ms. Gigantes: I would like to ask a question of the Premier. Has the Premier read the documentation of danger at the NPD reactor contained in the leaked papers on the reactor and accelerator of the licensing division of AECB? Has he informed himself of new information that has been leaked to the Ottawa Citizen from staff at the NPD site which outlines hazardous procedures which have been carried out at the NPD reactor?

Has he finished yawning?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I never yawn.

Ms. Gigantes: Is he aware that the Renfrew county emergency committee, which is responsible for carrying out contingency plans in the event of an emergency, is totally unprepared for an emergency involving the safety of the public, having met only twice since 1973?

If he is aware of all these things, or if he has not been bothered to make himself aware of this responsibility that he should feel, how can this House feel assured that his government is showing adequate concern for public safety?

Mr. T. P. Reid: The honeymoon must be over.

An hon. member: Whose honeymoon?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the honourable member to think I am not taking her question seriously, because I am. But I have to say to her that some of her colleagues in the front row were smiling, which made me smile—

Ms. Gigantes: They smile or they cry.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —some members opposite were saying to me the honeymoon was over, and I wanted her to know that I did not share that point of view.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They said it; I didn't.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Premier have an answer to the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a complete answer to that question. If the honourable member feels there is some information that should be brought to my attention, if she would do so, I would suggest that is a question that might best be put on the Order Paper. But now that we have notice of it, I will get her a full and comprehensive answer—or the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) will—for Thursday next.

Ms. Gigantes: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the Premier tell us where he feels any personal responsibility, as the head of the Ontario government, for public safety in questions of this nature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as head of government, I feel I have responsibility for many things.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You certainly do. You don't take it; but you have it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I certainly do. I have some thrust upon me that does not legitimately belong to me. I confess that.

Mr. Ruston: Yes. Like Joe Clark.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Or the Argonauts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That latter one hurt.

Mr. Speaker, I would only say to the honourable member who mentioned my national leader that I am out supporting Joe Clark, unlike the members of the Liberal Party of Ontario, who are hiding from Pierre Elliott Trudeau. Where have they been?

I expect to see all of them on that stage at Maple Leaf Gardens tomorrow night. I expect to see the Leader of the Opposition holding up—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier can be sure I won't compare him to the Argonauts. He can be certain of that.

Mr. Martel: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: When you cut the Premier off, he still had not even started to respond to the question raised by the member for—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: It had nothing to do with political leaders or football teams.

Mr. Martel: That's three times you have bailed him out today.

TRUCK DRIVING LICENCE

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Is the minister aware of an application by one Marla Ellery, a woman who is a truck driver, to renew her truck driving licence? Is he aware of the fact that she has been turned down on the basis that she is a diabetic? Is that, in the minister's view, a sufficient reason to turn down an applicant for a truck driving licence, especially in view of the fact this particular applicant received 98 per cent, I believe, when she took the rigid and demanding examinations to prove her ability to meet the requirements of being a truck driver, and in fact had acted as a driver for some time before her diabetes became a known factor?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am not aware of that particular application. It hasn't been brought to my attention, but I can understand the circumstances.

I don't have the regulations and legislation in front of me at this time to recite the particular paragraph, but on the advice of the Canadian Medical Association, and the Ontario Medical Association, diabetes is considered to be sufficient reason to not grant the higher class of licence required to drive a large truck or a bus.

I am somewhat concerned about this particular clause, because in the legislation when the classified drivers' licences were brought into force, anyone who was driving a truck prior to the particular date—I can't recall it exactly at this time, about two years ago—who had controlled diabetes and a doctor's certificate to that effect, was, one could say grandfathered into having a licence granted because they had proven they had controlled diabetes.

Because of my concern for a case such as the member has mentioned, and other cases that have been brought to my attention—the honourable House leader had a similar one from his particular area about a year ago—I asked the Canadian Medical Association to review their recommendations on this particular matter. A meeting was set up with two specialists in this particular field—I don't recall the doctors' names; one was from London and the other was from Kingston or Belleville or somewhere in eastern Ontario, and they were recommended to me by the Canadian Medical Association as experts on this particular disease. I met with them in my board room. We had a long discussion, together with my senior staff, and we expressed our concerns at depriving someone of such a licence because of this. At that time, one doctor would not budge, shall we say; he still felt very strongly opposed. The other doctor said that under certain circumstances or certain medical evidence he could consider recommending a person with diabetes for a class D licence, that is for the normal straight truck as we call it, but he would not recommend that we should consider changing the regulations for anything higher than that. Based on these two opinions, and discussing it with my senior staff and the medical review committee of the ministry, it was decided we would not change the regulations at all.

Mr. S. Smith: I'm accepting that the minister appears to have been seeking medical opinion on the matter—and I'm certainly pleased about that. Would the minister not agree, however, that for most people with diabetes the illness can be kept under control and, provided that is attested to, the public safety would appear not to be in real danger? It's hard for us to imagine that Bobby Clarke, for instance, would be refused the possibility of driving a truck.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He plays like one.

Mr. S. Smith: In fact, this is a very serious matter. One can only wonder whether the minister is just going to leave the matter there or seek a wider range of medical opinion—perhaps by introducing a bill and sending it to committee, or perhaps by calling in a much broader number of experts. Surely the minister would agree with me the present situation is most unfair to persons who have proved their ability and whose illness is under complete control?

Hon. Mr. Snow: The points made by the Leader of the Opposition are the exact points I made to my senior officials in the ministry. It's like a driver with one eye. A neighbour has been driving a truck since he was 16 years old, and he has one eye. If I could see as much with my two as he can with his one, I'd be pretty good, I think.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He's got a whole brain.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How would you be able to distinguish that?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I've had similar circumstances brought to my attention in which a person suffered a heart attack to some degree and was deprived of his licence for that reason. In this case there has been substantial medical opinion from the family doctor that this individual is fully recovered.

I did consult the Canadian Medical Association. I thought that in consulting the association, with all its expertise, I was really getting about as broad a consultation as possible. If the honourable leader has some other body that he would suggest, I'd be pleased to look at it. The last thing I want to do is take someone's licence away.

I really don't think, with all due respect, that a committee of the Legislature would be as well qualified—and I realize we have medical members of the Legislature and doctors here too—to discuss this matter and to give the type of opinion the professionals I have consulted have given.

It's a problem that is of concern to me. I really don't have an answer at this moment.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Would the minister undertake to the House to review these various regulations with respect to health concerns on the issuance of licences to ensure the regulations are fair, can be equitably applied and will allow persons who have particular health problems, although they are under control, to carry on operating vehicles if the public interest would allow that?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Certainly. We are reviewing this type of regulation all the time. We review the regulation as it relates to each individual case of this type that is brought to my attention.

As I recall, in my discussions with these two specialists, who were referred to me by the Canadian Medical Association, they made a strong argument about someone suffering from diabetes, driving a large tractor-trailer on long hauls, and perhaps not eating regularly, as truck drivers sometimes do. I'm not an expert. I myself don't know anything about diabetes; but I understand that if you don't eat regular and proper meals a sudden attack might come on that might disable a driver from maintaining control of the vehicle. I'm sure this would be of major concern to all of us, if it were to happen.

I get letters from people who have lost their school bus driving licences because they have had a heart attack and they are pleading to get their licences back. I am sure the member would agree that is something I just cannot consider, because we wouldn't want that type of unfortunate situation to develop.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: I have just returned from Chapleau in northern Ontario, an isolated community which feels 5,000 miles away from Queen's Park rather than just 500, and which is in fact 200 kilometres from Timmins and 120 kilometres from Wawa and Michipicoten—

Mr. Speaker: Could we have a question rather than a lesson in geography?

Mr. Cassidy: My question is directed to the Minister of Education. Is the minister aware that the high school in Chapleau, which was intended to offer a wide variety of industrial arts programs when it was built in 1966, has stopped offering any program in industrial arts for its 340 students effective in September of last year and has no plans to offer any program in industrial arts next September?

Can the minister explain why this high school, which is serving an isolated northern working-class community, should be offering purely academic programs, and how does she think students in Chapleau can qualify to enter skilled trades when none of the necessary groundwork is available at the secondary school level?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The decision regarding the programs offered within any school is the responsibility of the local board, and the local board, obviously for reasons which it has decided are valid, has made that decision. It would seem more appropriate, in the light of the requirements for skilled trades, particularly in northern Ontario, that those schools with the capability of providing for basic education in the technical skills should do so.

I shall be pleased to talk to the members of the local board to do whatever I can to see if there is some way, in the light of the modifications which we have made to the grant regulations this year, to assist the school at Chapleau to consider seriously the provision of such courses.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: Can the minister explain how she expects a small isolated school board, which is already providing bilingual programs because of the French-speaking population of that area, also to offer an industrial arts program when she admitted on Friday that she does not have the money to offer or will not offer the money to these isolated northern boards?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That's not what I said.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister stated on Friday that we don't have any more money at this point to make additional grants. Is the minister prepared to make a commitment to basic high school programs in all the communities up in the north that will include industrial arts as well as the basic academic programs?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There are times when I must admit I admire the capacity of the honourable leader of the third party to distort and to take out of context the statements I have made. That remark was specifically directed in response to a question regarding the additional grant requested by the Toronto school board and to nothing else.

I had also made the statement in response to a question on Friday or on Thursday, I am not sure which day, that we had added to the general legislative grants this year specifically in support of industrial training programs within the secondary schools. There was an increase in the weighting factor in order to assist the schools to upgrade the tools and the equipment which they required for those programs.

There is also a small-school-board special weighting factor this year for schools such as the schools in the area of Chapleau, which provides extra funding for those schools where the enrolment is below a certain level and the decline in enrolment has been at a percentage level above the provincial average. I shall be happy to look at all of those factors which are available to us under this year's GLCs to see if there is something that we can do, but I did not make that statement about schools like Chapleau.

Mr. Laughren: Knowing the Chapleau area very well, I'll ask the minister if she's aware that since September 1978, 69 students have dropped out of the Chapleau high school, a number which represents about 20 per cent of the student population. Is she not aware that when that happens, when they have not been trained in any of the industrial arts programs, we're really creating in that community a reservoir of unskilled labour that will go to work in the bush or in the sawmills? Does the minister really think that through her Ministry of Education she is providing opportunities for students in the Chapleau area equal to those that students have in major metropolitan areas such as Toronto?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am aware it is the intention of the general legislative grant program to provide equal opportunity on the basis of the equalized mill rate across the province. I am aware that there has been some concern expressed in some areas that indeed the equality may not be what it is perceived to be. I have been examining this problem and will look even further.

I would remind the honourable member who is supposed to be representing Chapleau, however, that there are many reasons for students leaving secondary school and we have done major studies in this area. One not too long ago I think provided some information that would lead all of us to believe there are multiple factors involved—some related to the educational program, some which are entirely different, and some over which none of us has any control; the family has more control than do many institutions.

I will be happy to look at the interesting figures which the member representing Chapleau has presented to see if there is something that we can do.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Premier arising also out of the trip I had to make in the Cochrane, Timmins, Chapleau area over the course of the last couple of days.

Is the Premier aware now of the enormous concern in every community of northeastern Ontario because of the hospital bed cuts which have been decreed by the Minister of Health? Is the Premier aware by now of the fact that these northern hospitals in isolated northern communities have to meet many needs which are not required of hospitals in the southern part of the province and, therefore, that the four bed per thousand standard being imposed by the Ministry of Health bears no relation at all to the needs of that particular area?

Is the Premier aware of the fact that in the areas which I visited, Lady Minto Hospital in Cochrane is going to lose 38 per cent of its beds after it loses a 10-bed cushion this year according to the Minister of Health's (Mr. Timbrell) decree? Is he aware that the hospital in Hearst will lose 36 per cent of its beds, the hospital in Iroquois Falls will lose 37 per cent of its beds, the hospital in Chapleau will lose 35 per cent of its beds, and these hospitals stand to have further cuts when the next level of cuts is imposed by the Ministry of Health?

Will the Premier admit that these decreases represent a disaster in terms of the provision of health services in northern Ontario? Will the government act to stop any further cut-backs in active treatment beds and will the government agree to retain the 10-bed cushion on a permanent basis in these isolated northern hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have some slight difficulty in remembering the multitude of questions the leader of the New Democratic Party raised in his speech to the House. I think one question—

Mr. Warner: He'd be happy if you answered one.

Mr. Grande: We deal in details.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Pardon? I heard a supplementary then.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections, please. Even the question was far too long; maybe the Premier could just deal with the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, you did acknowledge the fact that the question was far too long and you will understand if my answer, as a result, will have to reflect the length of the question.

Am I familiar with northeastern Ontario? Yes, I am familiar with northeastern Ontario. The fact that the government side has the members for Cochrane North, Cochrane

South and Timiskaming is clear evidence that we are aware of that part of northeastern Ontario. In fact, I'm delighted to know that the member goes up there once every couple of years to see what's happening. Am I aware of what's going on in Cochrane? Yes, I was there. I am not sure it was the same hospital but I attended at the opening.

Mr. Warner: Will you be there to close it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Am I aware that there are certain differentials between northeastern Ontario and Toronto, or the Island, or the city of Brampton? The answer to that is yes.

Am I aware that there has to be a certain flexibility in terms of government policy as it reflects many regions of this province? The answer to that is yes. If the honourable member is asking me whether we intend to deliver a high-quality health care system to the people in northeastern Ontario, the answer to that is yes; in fact, the answer is yes to that right across the province.

Is there anything else members want to ask me about what I know about northeastern Ontario? I would be delighted to try to answer it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the engagements and the commitments that have just been made by the Premier, will he turn around one day and direct his Minister of Health to withdraw the bed cutbacks in northern Ontario which are having the effect of drastically undermining the quality of health care in the northern part of the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think I have heard that question before.

Mr. McClellan: We have never heard an answer yet.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, they really are interjecting a lot over there today, don't you think?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I should ignore it?

Mr. Speaker: Please. I am trying to.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will do my best. I know you are trying. You are a very patient Speaker.

The answer is, as I stated in the answer to the first question, this government will make sure there is a high-quality health system in all regions of the province, including the northeast.

Mr. Warner: Tell the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) that. He's the one who's destroying the system.

Mr. Wildman: Is the Premier willing now to make the same commitment as the Minister of Health that hospitals with fewer than 50 beds would have a minimum of 5.3 per cent increase in budgets this year? Will he make that commitment that those grants will be covered and will he also commit the government to extending the 10-bed cushion past the end of this year?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I tried to answer that when I answered the leader of the third party's rather comprehensive question on northeastern Ontario. I really include Algoma. I guess really Algoma is sort of north-central Ontario. Is it north-central Ontario—

Mr. Warner: You are wandering again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and as the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) says, politically in jeopardy as far as the sitting member is concerned. We understand that as well.

Mr. Martel: He doesn't know where it is.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I recall being up in northeastern Ontario before the member was, to help the people in some of those communities with some of their flood problems. I didn't see the member there. Why didn't he visit? They would love to have seen him. Why didn't he have a look around?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, I see. The member for Sudbury East was there.

An hon. member: You are the Premier. He is the House leader.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I didn't see him there either. The answer to him is very simple.

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I would like to draw the attention of all honourable members to yet another distinguished guest in the Speaker's gallery. It is an honour for me to draw to the attention of members the presence of the Honourable John R. Harrison, Speaker of the House of Representatives of New Zealand and president of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. Speaker Harrison is accompanied by his wife, Margaret, and by the secretary-treasurer of the Canadian region of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Mr. Ian Imrie—also by our distinguished Deputy Speaker, the member for Perth (Mr. Edighoffer).

Hon. Mr. Davis: On a point of order: I hadn't really finished answering the question.

Mr. Speaker: I thought you had.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was just getting warmed up.

Mr. Speaker: You had answered it to my satisfaction anyway.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Mr. Bradley: Would the Minister of Correctional Services, who has taken the action which this House would expect he would take in this instance, explain to the House if drugs or alcohol did get into the hands of inmates in Guelph Correctional Centre and, if so, how they manage to get hold of these products? If this is the case, is the minister satisfied with security in the Guelph institution as it relates to the smuggling in of these items, or to the escape of inmates from custody?

Hon. Mr. Walker: This is a medium-security facility and inmates who are kept in dormitory surroundings often have access to the community. They often have access to the grounds. It is very easy for some form of contraband to be injected into the actual institution. We think there may have been the involvement of some form of amphetamines, likely secreted in the body, brought in in the person's stomach, and we think this is the manner in which some of this was imported into the institution.

The drugs, or alcohol, or whatever was the basis of the small uprising will be determined by an investigation which the ministry is in the process of conducting at this very minute and it will be available to members in due course.

We feel we have a very secure institution. In fact, considering that it was built about 1913 and is a very old facility, we are satisfied that the security is adequate. We do recognize, of course, that seven inmates did leave during the height of the riot. This was after a considerable period of time, when they were able to pry open a window after some two hours of effort. We were not able to prevent that, and the people did escape.

I am prepared to say that at any moment now we expect at least one inmate to be recaptured. I left the scene a few moments ago and they were closing in on one person. I assume we will be able to report good results shortly.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary: Does the minister intend to have all of the equipment that was damaged during this rampage replaced, or does he see withdrawal of some of these facilities or equipment as being retributive justice in his opinion, as it relates to this incident? Would he comment on reports that the mattresses, which are fireproof, were set afire, and just how they stood up to the fire?

Mr. Conway: Call Sheriff Drea.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Four television sets were destroyed; they will not be replaced for the benefit of those who did the damage. In other words, those people who took part in the riot will not have the benefit of any television facilities.

Mr. Makarchuk: They may have been watching the Tory ads.

Mr. Cassidy: Withdraw the ads, save our prisoners.

Hon. Mr. Walker: There have been other appliances destroyed, and they will be eliminated as well. With respect to the mattresses, members will recall just a few years ago the very unfortunate incident in Stratford. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that a number of mattresses were set afire, but because they were the flame-retardant ones manufactured by the ministry at Mimico they did not produce the toxic fumes which would have been produced had the mattresses not been replaced just over the last couple of years. It is fair to say that many inmates are alive today who would not have been had the mattresses been the same as they were prior to 1975.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: Having listened to the minister's statement and being in agreement with him that all legal steps should be taken against the inmates, which would include prosecution under the Criminal Code of Canada of the people who caused damage, can the minister nevertheless assure the House—as I understood from his statement, some 180 inmates may have been involved, if that is the correct figure—that in an occurrence such as this all steps will be taken to ensure that the inmates who are responsible will be the inmates who will be punished, and that inmates who were in the peripheral area and were not involved will be protected and not unduly punished?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Only the inmates involved will be punished.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Now that the minister has outlined the very severe sanctions which are being taken against the inmates who have been involved in this particular disturbance at the Guelph centre, is the minister prepared also to make available any ministry reports about shortcomings in the operations of that particular centre which may have contributed to the unrest that blew up in the disturbances that he has been talking about?

Mr. Lawlor: Did he forget about that?

Hon. Mr. Walker: I am prepared to supply to the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra), who is his party's critic for this ministry, and to the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) whatever reports are produced from the investigations.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Natural Resources, I would direct my question to the ubiquitous Premier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who?

Mr. T. P. Reid: You had better get shots for it.

Mr. Conway: My question concerns the area of Rolphton, but it does not deal with the nuclear power station there. Could the Premier explain at this time how it is that along the Ottawa River in the area of Westmeath, south of Pembroke, through to and including the town of Mattawa, we are continuing to experience high water conditions that are creating serious flood conditions in the areas of Pembroke and Mattawa? Could he explain how it is that the control agencies to which the Ontario government has input are allowing these high water conditions to continue?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member who represents one part of that area reminds me that the federal agency has certain judgement decisions to make in these situations. If the honourable member is asking me as a layman if I know the reasons why there are higher water levels than usual, the explanation I received in other parts of northern Ontario last week was that we have had an excessive amount of rainfall. There were two or three days of higher than normal temperatures where the runoff was greater than was normal. There was a fair amount of rainfall last summer, which incidentally resulted in fewer forest fires throughout the north. The water tables were up and the absorption ability was less. This explanation was in general terms and did not necessarily refer to the Ottawa River, but I think it has some application and is part of the reason for the excessive water at this present amount. If that is true of the area around Field, the Sturgeon River and elsewhere, the reason is probably the same at Mattawa on the Ottawa River.

I am not as familiar with what is causing the flooding in Manitoba, I have to confess, other than some experts say it is basically—

Mr. Peterson: Too much water.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, it's too much water. The member for London Centre has made the most perceptive observation in his term of office here in the House: Flooding is caused by too much water. I've got to tell him that's the most profound statement I've heard him make.

An hon. member: It is the first time he was right.

Mr. Peterson: There's too much water over there too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As it relates to what can be done about it, I certainly will make some personal inquiries for the honourable member and see if there is any further information I can impart to him.

Mr. Conway: I appreciate what the Premier said about too much water.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He said it, not me.

Mr. Conway: In that connection, would he undertake to explain clearly to the people of the upper Ottawa Valley how it is that with flooding in Pembroke and in Mattawa, the huge Ontario Hydro dam at Rolphton has all-time low water conditions immediately behind it? How is it that such an anomalous condition could obtain there with flooding below and above the dam, in Pembroke and Mattawa? Clearly the people of the Ottawa Valley expect the kind of explanation, which has not been forthcoming to date from this government.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's too little water.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I assure the honourable member to the best of my limited ability I will get an explanation as to why the water levels to the north are higher than they should be or normal while to the south and in the middle they are not. I certainly will endeavour to get that information for the honourable member and convey it to him.

Mr. Laughren: You even know how to make it rain.

HYDRO TRANSMISSION LINES

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Energy, I have a question of the Premier.

With the growing legitimate public concern over the safety of nuclear-generated power and, indeed, even the need for such power and, more particularly, the need for the 550-kilovolt transmission line between Nanticoke and Pickering, and keeping in mind the undertaking given by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) to the clerk of the town of Markham, in a letter dated April 11, which said, "I would like to assure you that future Ontario Hydro undertakings in your area will receive the full treatment under the Environmental Assessment Act," will he now cause to be conducted an environmental assessment hearing into the development of the proposed 550-kilovolt transmission facilities going through the town of Markham?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the honourable member that commitment. Knowing the way he approaches most issues, with logic, I think he will understand that the preface to his questions really is not relevant to the concern he is expressing on behalf of his constituents.

There is a need for the 500-kilovolt line. The 500-kilovolt line from Pickering to Nanticoke is essential in terms of the distribution system for Ontario Hydro. One can debate its specific location but I think it's fair to say—and I'm only going by memory now—that part of this routing, though not necessarily the specifics, was determined to be through Markham as a result of Mr. Soland's study, which made a determination as to the approximate location. The need for an environmental hearing in this instance, I would suggest, is one primarily of an aesthetic nature.

I went through this. There were three routes proposed through the former great riding of Peel, now Wellington-Dufferin-Peel and Mississauga North, and I know exactly what the issue is. To a certain extent, it's the same issue as that being conveyed to me by the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed) where one determines, through an environmental hearing, a question of its environmental acceptability.

In this particular situation, if my recollection is correct, we're really talking about whether it should be going through or on a particular corridor, or be moved. I have to say to the member my experience has been that while the problem can be resolved for the residents who are directly affected by location A, when it is moved to location B, another group of people are understandably upset.

So, I cannot give an undertaking that there will be an environmental assessment as to the location of that 500-kilovolt line. I met with some of the member's constituents as it related to another aspect of the 500-kilovolt line—I think this was near Richmond Hill—to see if we could work out a more acceptable crossing. He may not be aware of it, but on that occasion, I endeavoured to find a more acceptable way for the crossing of Yonge Street, I believe. Perhaps he will recall the particular situation.

I'm quite prepared to explore any reasonable way to assist the ratepayers concerned, but I cannot give the member an undertaking that there will be an environmental assessment hearing on the question of the transmission line.

Mr. Stong: A supplementary: I'm sure the minister is aware that one of the other features of an environmental assessment hearing would be to consider the safety feature of the transmission line and not just the aesthetic quality. In view of that, and since the parkway belt west plan—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Stong: —has not been approved by cabinet beyond highway 48, does the Premier not feel that he should call an assessment hearing to determine the effect on the greater number of people who would be affected by the line where it's already proposed?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really don't think the member is suggesting that the environmental assessment hearing would determine the safety of the 500-kilovolt line. The safety factor of the 500-kilovolt line has been reasonably accepted. Heavens above, that same line is going through communities two miles south, or less, of the great city of Brampton. We have had some of these debates. It's going through Milton.

While the parkway belt west hasn't been finally determined, I guess in some respects it is as close to finality as it can be and would not alter the proposed route or corridor through Markham. That is my understanding. So, while I am sympathetic to the concerns being expressed by the member on behalf of his constituents, I can't honestly say to him that there would be an environmental review.

CONSTRUCTION EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Samis: I have a question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie). Could the Premier report to the House the status of negotiations between his government and the province of Quebec on the long-standing problem of Quebec construction workers? More precisely, could he say whether or not there have been any negotiations since February and whether he has any realistic hopes for a negotiated settlement?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I always live in hope. I even live in hope that the member's party will maintain some consistent posture with respect to this particular issue which—

Mr. Samis: Don't forget the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —incidentally, they have not done to date. They were ready to lead the crusade.

Mr. Samis: The question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They wanted to declare a major incident with respect to this issue.

Mr. Samis: I asked about negotiations, not the bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now they want to see some negotiated settlement. I have a long memory, I know exactly what was said. I know they've changed their position and that is not unique.

Mr. Laughren: You're getting silly.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They do it very regularly. Yes, discussions have been going on since February.

Mr. Samis: As the negotiations or discussions have been going on for almost 18 months without any solution, could the minister assure the construction workers of eastern Ontario that if there is no settlement his government will proceed with its commitment to introduce a legislative settlement as was done preliminarily 11 months ago without any solution to it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Our statement and position on this, unlike that of the member's party, has not altered. We want to see a solution. The member should check with his leader—

Mr. Samis: What are you going to do?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —to see whether he in fact wants to see legislation, because that's not what he's been saying.

Mr. Warner: We want to know what you're going to do. You're not going to do anything.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. You people have been all around the bush.

Mr. Martel: You introduced it and then withdrew it.

Mr. Roy: A supplementary to the Premier, if I can have his attention. Would he advise the House, and possibly get a response from his Minister of Labour, in view of the fact that the Minister of Labour and Manpower in Quebec, Mr. Johnson, has made a number of statements to the National Assembly in Quebec to the effect that there has been a negotiated settlement, and, secondly, that the proposed legislation, which we supported on second reading, and on which the position of this party has been consistent, which the Premier will admit if he does have that good a memory—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do. It was one of the rare times.

Mr. Roy: Would the Premier advise the House and get a response from his minister about whether in fact there is movement towards a negotiated settlement; and, secondly, about whether his Minister of Labour agrees with the Minister of Labour and Manpower in Quebec to the effect that the Ontario minister has withdrawn his legislation and does not intend to bring it forward again?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think I can say this to the member for Ottawa East, there have been certain suggestions made and there have been discussions. My understanding is that there is, as yet, no finality.

COLLEGE EXAMINATION MARKS

Mr. Sweeney: A question to the Minister of Education: Given that one of the fundamental principles of good education is that students be allowed to know how well they are doing in their course, how can her ministry possibly justify the order that instructors at George Brown College are not to give the graduates of the stationary engineering course the marks they received on their exams?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I gather that the request was made of the ministry by the trade itself at one point, because it felt it was more appropriate to have those who passed simply know that they had passed and those who failed know by how much they had failed in order to spur them to greater efforts. I do not think it's a good policy and I have already directed that indeed it be changed.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Would this have anything to do with the experience of last December when exams set by this ministry which were deemed to be inappropriate resulted in 42 out of 42 students at George Brown, and 21 out of 22 at Mohawk College, and nine out of 10 at Niagara College failing those exams? Is there some connection there?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No. It's my understanding that the policy has been in place much longer than that, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Sweeney: One year.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It's been longer than that. It has nothing to do with that.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

VETERINARIANS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. W. Newman moved first reading of Bill 80, An Act to amend the Veterinarians Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make a minor amendment to the act to provide for class membership in the Ontario Veterinary Association and to remove the maximum amount of the penalty that may be prescribed for late payment of annual membership fees. This takes in the veterinarians who are doing work at our Ontario Veterinary College at the University of Guelph and will allow them to take part in the medical practices going on in the labs, which they are now doing but maybe not properly.

HUNTER DAMAGE COMPENSATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. W. Newman moved first reading of Bill 81, An Act to amend the Hunter Damage Compensation Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. Newman: The purpose of this bill is really to remove from the act the maximum payments for hunter damage to livestock and to allow us to do it by regulation. From time to time the price of livestock changes, and rather than having to bring in a new piece of legislation each time it will be done by regulation in the future. This will move it up or down, whichever the case may be, according to the livestock market.

DOG LICENSING AND LIVE STOCK AND POULTRY PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. W. Newman moved first reading of Bill 82, An Act to amend the Dog Licensing and Live Stock and Poultry Protection Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. Newman: This serves the same purpose here as the Hunter Damage Compensation Act. It allows the municipalities to pay, by regulation of the government, a higher return for animals or poultry killed by dogs. It is really just the same as the hunter damage bill.

BOROUGH OF EAST YORK ACT

Mr. J. Johnson moved first reading of Bill Pr12, An Act respecting the Borough of East York.

Motion agreed to.

TOWN OF NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE ACT

Mr. Kerrio moved first reading of Bill Pr1, An Act respecting the Town of Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING ACT

Mr. Makarchuk moved first reading of Bill 83, An Act respecting the Purchase of Goods and Services by the Government of Ontario and Government-Supported Institutions.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Makarchuk: The purpose of the bill is to ensure that the Shop Canadian program is seriously followed by the government and publicly-financed institutions. Businesses that make a bona fide offer that is within 10 per cent of the price of foreign-produced commodities or services and have the offer rejected, then the businessman, through the courts, will be able to extract compensation from the government or institution amounting to 10 per cent of the cost of the foreign-produced commodity or service.

MASSEY HALL ACT

Mrs. Scrivener moved first reading of Bill Pr13, An Act respecting Massey Hall.

Motion agreed to.

[3:15]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 59, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Mr. Charlton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Through you to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), I'm rising to speak for our caucus in opposition to Bill 59. I won't be too long in my comments today as we've gone on at length on all of the revenue bills at this time and a great many of the comments I would normally have made on this bill were made during the course of debate on the other revenue bills. However, I must say that with respect to this bill, an Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972, we were extremely disappointed in the government, in the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and in the Minister of Revenue. The corporations tax is probably the one tax we in this caucus would have felt comfortable about seeing increased substantially at this time.

We tend to agree with the minister's federal leader that at this time we should have been doing everything we possibly could to return tax dollars to consumers, at the very least to hold the line on taxes that effect consumers directly. Unfortunately, all of the other tax increases which this government has implemented in this budget have been direct taxes on consumers: the gasoline fuel, tobacco, liquor, retail sales, land transfer taxes have been imposed directly on consumers. Although we don't always agree with the federal leader of the Conservative Party in terms of method, we at least agree with him that this is the sector we should be attempting to stimulate at the present moment, putting money back into the pockets of the consumers of the province of Ontario and Canada; this is the tax we should have been using to raise the additional revenue the government nicked and dined out of all the other taxes.

I always find it strange that when this government imposes tax increases in consumer areas, or fee increases in consumer areas, they can find the audacity, as they did last year, to propose an increase in OHIP of 37.5 per cent in one shot and then reduce it to 17 per cent and think they've given somebody a real break. This year they turn around and increase gasoline taxes by nine and a half per cent and land transfer taxes by 33 per cent, but when they come to the corporations tax they increase it by 7.6 per cent. I know the minister is going to tell me that in the case of the banks the increase was 33 per cent, but overall it's the smallest tax increase in this budget. It's true that in that one instance it has been increased by 33 per cent, but the overall basic increase in the corporate income tax is only 7.6 per cent.

Why is it that when the Treasurer and the Minister of Revenue deal with corporations' income, corporations' ability to pay taxes in a year when we are seeing all kinds of records in corporate profits, that they deal with them less heavily than they do with the average consumers in this province, the consumers that we all know are extremely hard pressed already without any of the tax increases we have imposed this year? I and the people in our caucus find it just somewhat dismaying that we have to sit here and debate a tax increase of only seven and a half per cent to corporations, but also find that most of the consumers in one way or another are being hit with a tax increase that's substantially greater, and in more than one area.

Then the minister and the Treasurer turn around and exempt many of the corporations in this province from this tax increase altogether. The tax increase will apply only to the retail sector and to the service sector. It's strange to note again that those two sectors that are getting the increase are also the two sectors that are going to directly affect the consumers. Everything this budget has done has a direct impact on the consumers of this province and takes money out of their pocket, either in a tax increase or ultimately in a price increase that results from a tax increase.

We are not increasing taxes for the manufacturing sector. We are not increasing corporate taxes for the mining sector. In fact, we are not only not increasing them for the mining sector but we are giving them additional tax breaks in the Mining Tax Act as well. But the two sectors that are going to directly affect the consumers of this province, the retail sector and the service sector, those sectors which the consumers buy directly from, those sectors which in some way are going to implement price increases as a result of these tax increases to make up and probably, as they usually do, collect more in price increases than what the tax costs them, are going to affect consumers directly.

It's our view that this is a tax where this government should have done just a little more in order that perhaps there didn't have to be any of the other—or fewer at least of the other tax increases which were proposed and are being implemented presently. We would like to have seen the two per cent increase in the corporation income tax across the board. I have said it before, our Treasury critic, the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), has said it before, our leader has said it before; we would have preferred to have seen a two per cent increase in the corporation income tax across the board, because from what we have seen in the last year or year and a half the corporations in this province and the corporate profits which they have been pulling in for the most part, are considerably on the upswing; and that's the sector that for the most part isn't complaining about taxes, not in the same way that the consumers of this province are complaining about taxes and being hurt by taxes.

We would have liked to have seen the increase in this bill from 13 to 15 per cent instead of from 13 to 14 per cent; and we also would like to see the exemptions which the Minister of Revenue and the Treasurer have built into this bill for the manufacturing, mining, processing, farming, logging and fishing industries removed from the bill so that it's an across-the-board increase that deals with all of the corporate sector in the same fashion.

We have no quarrels with the changes in the other sections that have upped the small business exemption to correspond to the tax increase so that they stay at an effective rate of 10 per cent. We are prepared to work with the government on protection for small business and assistance and incentive to small business; we do not have any problem with that. We all understand very well the kind of pressure that the small business sector has been under as a result of the ever-increasing size and almost unbelievable strength of the large corporate sector.

We were also somewhat disappointed with the very small increase in the capital tax on banks, although the minister, as I say, is probably going to respond that in this instance it is a 33 per cent increase. But with the kinds of profits the banking sector has been making over the last number of years, it is a sector that I think we could effectively tap in terms of increased revenues for this government without doing any serious harm to that sector; instead, we increase taxes to consumers where the pressure for some at the lower end has been so intense that they do not know where to turn.

In concluding, I would just like to say that, although I did not want to carry on too long here, we are somewhat disappointed in the government because of the approach they have taken in this budget, and this bill reflects it very clearly. This is the tax area that could have been effectively used so that this government could have eliminated all or a lot of the other tax increases that they have imposed in this budget—tax increases which affected the sectors already most in trouble from taxes. We are going to oppose this bill because of those reasons.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to Bill 59, An Act to amend The Corporations Tax Act, 1972, particularly as it relates to the general rate of corporate tax, which will be increased to 14 per cent. Exempted from this increase is income from manufacturing, processing, mining, fishing, logging and farming, which will still be taxed at 13 per cent. The low 10 per cent rate will be maintained on small business income. The Treasurer said that he anticipates $36 million in new revenues will be generated by this tax hike, which takes effect April 11. In addition, the capital tax on banks has been raised from three-fifths to four-fifths of one per cent, effective April 11; as a result, banks will pay an additional $5 million in taxes.

In going back into some of my older files of past announcements and press releases by the government of Ontario, I was particularly interested in the report Ontario Proposals for Tax Reform in Canada. I believe this was tabled in the House on April 6, 1971. There are some interesting comments in that particular report, which was tabled in the House by the then Treasurer, who I believe was the Hon. Charles MacNaughton. This report deals with the white paper on taxation of corporations and shareholders, and it relates to personal income tax too. The Treasurer said:

“What these papers and studies make clear once and for all is that, while there are three levels of government, there is only one taxpayer. This means total tax burdens at all levels of government—not just one taxpayer at one level of government—must be taken into account, if increased fairness that means anything to the people is to be achieved.”

Looking at that particular comment, certainly the introduction of the budget here recently indicates that all the tax increases and tax shifts have gone to the people, and not to the corporations or to other areas where perhaps taxes could be raised.

Quoting again: “It means that public-sector expenditures must be restrained so that relief in one set of taxes is not offset by increases in other taxes.”

This latest budget brought down by the Treasurer is in direct contrast to his predecessor's original proposals back in 1971.

Quoting again: “It means that tax reform should make a positive contribution to economic growth, if both the unemployed and employed are to reap any benefits that matter.”

[3:30]

If members followed the election in Great Britain, if I am not mistaken that was one of the keynote issues that brought about a Conservative victory, namely, to reduce tax rates to spur production and to give money back to the general public to go out and buy the goods, if necessary, to create buying of consumer products that create employment later on in industry.

This government is in direct contrast to the Conservative policy.

It was a rather interesting statement by the former Treasurer. He said: “Finally, it means that the joint use of tax fields requires a partnership sharing of revenues which reflect soundly developed spending priorities at all three levels of government.”

I suppose that particular document that was tabled in the House at that time led to the Edmonton commitment. We have heard much about the Edmonton commitment, but there hasn't actually been a fair sharing of the tax basis in Canada or in the province with the local municipalities. If we look at the increases in municipal taxes throughout the communities in Ontario compared to increases in corporation tax or income tax, it is once again the average person in the province who is carrying the tax load as a result of the government's increases through the tax proposals in the budget statement.

I bring that to the attention of the minister. On previous occasions we have had the opportunity to review the Corporations Tax Act and the amendments that followed over a number of years. Talking to people in my area particularly and from the information that was passed on to me, I find there is still a difficulty in the two tax levels with regard to corporation taxes. We have it at the federal level and we have it at the provincial level. For some unknown reason, this province and this ministry still have not accepted the principle accepted by a number of the other provinces that there should be only one tax collector in this area, that is the federal government. Trying to decipher the intent of the legislation at the provincial level and also at the federal level just adds confusion on top of confusion.

There are two sets of accountants in Ontario and throughout Canada. There are the corporation accountants, and the regular accountants who deal with almost anything. It is rather confusing in this particular area for these persons to have to try to decipher all the different rules and regulations that apply to corporation taxes.

The present income tax method is simple. One government level collects it, namely the federal government. Then on a sharing basis the provinces get their piece of the action. There is no reason why this couldn't also apply to corporation taxes. Other provinces in Canada have agreed to permit the federal government to collect the tax on a sharing basis. It is a simple method and it is time this government integrated the two systems. It would make it much easier for the small businessman and even the corporations. It might also give an opportunity to plug some of the loopholes that are there over interpretations of both acts. I bring that to the attention of the minister.

The other matter I want to bring to the attention of the minister relates to the budget paper entitled Strengthening Fiscal Management. Page seven refers to corporation income tax and says: "Higher than anticipated costs of recent federal initiatives have contributed to lower revenue growth." If Clark ever makes it we are going to have a further reduction in revenue growth in Ontario because he is promising the world.

The paper goes on: "These include the three per cent inventory valuation adjustment and fast writeoff for production machinery"—I think we have that in Ontario—"measures that were paralleled by Ontario.

"An equally important factor is that from the mid-1970s until recently corporate profits before taxes have performed poorly."

In some cases they may have; in other cases I don't think I have to tell members about the huge profits that are being seen in the oil industry and in other key industries in Ontario and throughout Canada.

The quotation continues: "Furthermore, there has been some shifting of the tax base to the west. More recently these factors have been modified in some degree by the lower value of the Canadian dollar."

That's taking a short route out of solving the problem. We have seen that many industries, and perhaps many trust companies I suppose it is, and other persons in the financial world, moving to Alberta where there are certain tax concessions given.

Then again I suppose that could apply to foreign investments and foreign industries and foreign corporations here in Ontario and throughout Canada. Wealth generated from industry in Canada is going out to develop offshore industry. Let's take, for example, Inco Metals Company and their involvement in Guatemala and Indonesia and places like that. It has taken resources revenue from this province and gone out to generate jobs and businesses in other countries. We are now having the impact here in that we have to compete with that offshore industry.

I think in this case the ministry should be taking a close look at this matter of foreign investments and make sure they do pay their fair share of taxes here in Canada. If not it means the Canadian taxpayer again is subsidizing the large corporations.

I mentioned previously on one of the bills that the banks now in Canada are going offshore to develop foreign markets, but the capital has originated in Canada, even in Ontario.

Mr. Philip: Where do you get all this socialistic propaganda?

Mr. Haggerty: If the member listens he might learn something yet.

All I am suggesting is that if the House is going to make tax changes in this area it should be looking at the offshore operations for which the wealth is generated here, it could mean the taxpayer would be subsidizing that industry. In a sense, as I say, I'm a shareholder in one of the banks, and I appreciate my return. Perhaps it could be a lot higher than it is. But when I go back to the matter that they're going offshore to develop further operations in other countries, then as a shareholder, particularly in that bank, I'm looking for higher returns on my capital investment.

I suggest that in this area, where the government is only going to be raising $5 million from the banks, it just doesn't portray the corporate profitability. It is only a measly amount the government is gaining from that. There is a new tax area here and perhaps next year we will see it increased to maybe 1.5 per cent or something like that. I imagine that is the case; it is a new area, the government has found a new avenue to increase revenue; and I suggest there's nothing wrong with it, but I just question the small amount being raised. Hopefully the government will give further consideration to some of my comments.

When I look at the situation today, almost all the tax increases certainly hit the average citizen in the province. I feel there are other areas you should have been looking at, particularly in the matter of the capital tax rate increase for banks from three-fifths of one per cent to four-fifths. I think definitely that is an area the government could have broadened out a little bit further.

Based upon those comments, we will support the bill.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the bill. In the first place, I look at tax legislation as a means of implementing job creation, to bring about transfer of incomes, to create industrial strategy, to create new industries and so on. This is the purpose that corporations' taxes should be used for, and when we look at the increase in this particular tax that's introduced now we find it performs none of those functions.

We notice that, outside of the farming area, which deserves a break, the others who are getting the break are the mining, logging, fishing, processing industries. These are the industries that are doing quite well at this time. If we were to look at their last quarter profits, they were up over 50 per cent compared to the previous quarter.

It's the smaller businesses; the smaller manufacturers who really need the assistance and they are the ones who are not getting it. It boggles the mind to figure out just exactly what inspired the government to provide assistance for the ones who are making it, and making it quite well right now, and ignore the other business sectors of society, particularly in view of the fact that it's the small businesses that create most of the jobs, in terms of the total number of jobs and also in terms of the jobs per investment.

The other factor that has to be taken into account when we look at any type of tax legislation is whether it has the ability to plug various existing loopholes. Once again, if we listen to some of the experts—and one of the most notable ones, I would presume, would be Eric Kierans, who points out that, despite everything, corporations get away with a minimal amount of taxation and they do not pay their fair share of taxation.

We look at a series of articles in the papers—the most recent one was in the Sunday Star about two weeks ago—pointing out that a clerk in a bank pays the same rate of taxation as the bank does, because of certain loopholes. One would think if we had a really alert government and an alert Treasurer and an alert Minister of Revenue, we would try to snaffle onto that extra funding that's available. As far as I can see, there's absolutely nothing to prevent the government from trying to collect some of that extra money the banks are getting right now through certain loopholes. Why that money shouldn't go to the province is something I cannot understand. The government has the power to bring in that kind of legislation, and it certainly would have raised quite a few millions of dollars, considering the fact that a lot of business transaction activity is carried on in Ontario.

The other factor in the loopholes is, once again, the matter of the multinational corporations, the fact that they can transfer unit costs from a parent corporation in a foreign country to Canada, charge the local firm a price that is not really related to the actual value of the article, and in that way control the taxation or the profitability of corporations existing in Canada, as opposed to other areas.

I think the significant thing about it is it was a matter I kept raising every time we discussed corporations taxes or whenever we discussed the estimates of the Ministry of Revenue. The Ontario Economic Council has recently brought in a report which says there is a considerable possibility for erosion in the fact of the transfer of payments, that they are able to evade taxes and there is really no fair way to assess what is a fair charge for patents or royalties, management fees, licensing fees and so on.

It also states that despite the fact that we have a withholding tax it still does not deter the corporations from doing these things. It points out that the automobile industry is one of the places where this could be a matter of serious consequence, in that they may not be paying their fair share of taxation for living in a good society, and other people have to pay taxes in order for the good society to exist.

I wonder why the minister, after this is a matter that has been hashed over for a number of years, still does not make a very serious effort to try and plug some of these loopholes, to try and discover, at least, just exactly what is happening in these transfer payments, to find out just exactly how the multinationals operate in the market, and to try to collect what I consider is the fair tax owing to us that they should pay. I can't understand it.

The only conclusion I can come to, when we look at the so-called free enterprisers, if we look at the examples of free enterprise, the two major countries that stress the free enterprise system—they have a character disorder which I call strictly free enterprisers—Canada and the United States, have the highest unemployment rate, the highest inflation and the lowest growth rate.

In other words, all the economic arguments indicate they just can't operate the economy. Perhaps the fact that they can't operate the economy also indicates that they can't really write a decent corporations tax act that would ensure that everybody pays his fair share. We're not asking that the corporations pay more than anybody else, we're saying they should be paying a fair share and this tax bill really doesn't do that.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I just want to speak briefly about one aspect of the tax. It was covered very well by my colleague from Erie, however I want to reiterate my dismay that the province is not in a position to extract a larger amount of revenue from banks.

I've been reading the sections under section 16 of this bill which re-enact sections 131 and 132, and they're completely meaningless to me. I have a feeling my good friend and colleague the Minister of Revenue has studied them and they are meaningful to him, but it is the worst salad of legalese and gobbledegook you could possibly put together. One can only get an interpretation from two sources; what the Treasurer has said in his budget and the fact that the banks have said nothing.

I wish we could tax them so that they squeak a little bit. All you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is walk down to King and Bay streets and see the kind of capital and power in the financial community that lies in their hands. It's strange and difficult for me to understand why we in this country have such a commitment to the sanctity of the banking corporations. We're famous the world over as great buyers of insurance, investors in government bonds and savings bonds and contributors to savings deposits.

Mr. Haggerty: There was $47 billion in the first part of the year.

Mr. Nixon: There was an interesting article last week which said the banks were transferring an untold number of billions to the holders of savings deposits because at the end of April, the interest was credited to these savings accounts. I had a small credit myself and was very anxious to see just what it amounted to. I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no way of calculating what the banks owe you without a computer. You simply look at the number in the passbook and say, "Oh, is that all?" It is; it's that phrase that always goes with life, is that all it is?

This interest payable on the minimum monthly balance accruing once every six months has to be the damndest machinery for the benefit of the banks that was ever contrived. They can certainly calculate the interest we owe them to the nearest minute with their computers, and I have a feeling the great Liberal Party of Canada would not be in the position it is now, although we agree that they're going to be re-elected, if they had taken some sort of a reasonable, normal, up-to-date position with regard to rewriting the Bank Act.

Anybody who says the government of Canada is headed by some wild-eyed radical is certainly wrong when honourable members see the way the banks have been treated by the Liberal government in this country over many years. It leaves the field wide open for an enterprising Minister of Revenue to do something, to reach in there and get some of this revenue that we should be getting.

I won't bore you, Mr. Speaker, or the minister, by talking about the obvious wealth, opulence and power controlled by the Canadian banks, both here and internationally. We can talk about international conglomerates with their muscly hands around the economic necks of businesses and others, one can go almost—well and poor, downtrodden labour union members too—one can go almost all over the world and bankers are doing business in this great style.

I've been trying to determine why governments in Canada are so fearful of going at the banks in such a way that we might get some reasonable revenue out of them.

All I can think of is that there was a time when many politicians—I suppose now gone to their reward—were forming their ideas and concepts and that a bank here, the Home Bank, failed. Nobody has ever heard about it, but around the dinner table at home I used to hear about the Home Bank failing and that there were a lot of little depositors who were left high and dry by the governments of the day.

There is a very famous historical account, written with a provincial government subsidy, about the Treasurer of Ontario back in the early 1920s being subverted by the banking officials of the day. They came to see him and said they understood the tremendous pressures he experienced in his new responsible position as Treasurer and that a lot of people did not understand the many expenses he had, and they left him a cheque for $15,000 to assist him. He did not take it, I hasten to say to the Minister of Revenue in case he was thinking he had better look up the precedent. He said, "I can't do that," of course. But some weeks later he found the cheque in his desk. As he told the judge later, he did not know what to do with it; so he deposited it to his account.

The bank which had made this contribution failed, and the political uproar associated with that did not die down for a long time and, in fact, may have sensitized politicians in the 1920s, 1930s and 1940s—many of them existed and were active even longer than that—to the fact that the bank simply had to have lots of capital and not too much political or tax interference. That is the only thing I can think of. I do not think any other country in the world has a banking system anything like ours.

There are those who are very proud of what we have done here, because we have erected these huge, powerful, monolithic, financial institutions which we worship in one sense or another. They are changing a little bit. They are finding competition is affecting some of the facts of life as far as they are concerned.

The Bank of Montreal—"my bank" to a million Canadians, including me—was having a tough time. But now they are marketing their services with lotteries, fancy advertising gizmos and lots of stuff on the television, and I understand they are doing very well indeed.

The one saving grace as to the profits of the bank is that anybody who can get together a few bucks presumably can buy some shares of these banks. But, even then, the dividends that come to the shareholders do not reflect the fabulous profit positions that the banks have found themselves in. They certainly should be paying interest on the minimum daily balance and compounding it.

It could be done simply by an act of Parliament, in my opinion. They have the machinery and the structure for doing it. Many near-bank institutions can do this now.

I regret that we in this province seem to have followed the leads of many other governments in Canada and have not taken what is even a reasonable, let alone hard-nosed, position vis-à-vis the banks.

It seems to me that many successful politicians as they move out of the Legislature tend to move on to the boards of banks, such as the former Treasurer from Chatham, the former Minister of Agriculture and Food from north of London and the former Premier. As a matter of fact, when Leslie Frost left here, he went on the board, I believe, of the Bank of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I think it was Victoria and Grey.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, that was a very small responsibility in comparison. But I had the impression that when he went down to the boardroom of the Bank of Montreal he ran that place. It was not, as we sometimes think, the great honour that is given and a few bucks attending regular meetings of corporations, with the politicians sitting in the back and maybe expressing a view now and then.

Maybe it was Mr. Frost who took this initiative, but the Bank of Montreal directors asked political leaders down to have lunch with them. I went once. The honourable member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) went once, if you can imagine a raving socialist being asked into the boardroom of the Bank of Montreal. I guess they figured they had so many Tories there over the years that it would not hurt to bring in a couple of outsiders. We had a nice lunch which, of course, I would comment on, but when the board meeting began I do not think they did any business other than very routine business.

The Honourable Mr. Frost certainly took a leading role. The big cheeses from Montreal had flown up in the company jet to take part in this meeting and I was overwhelmed by it all, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker. But I wasn't overwhelmed to the point where I can't urge the Minister of Revenue and anybody else listening to tax more money out of the banks. This change, which increases the take by $5 million, is just a joke. I wish we could do more.

Mr. Laughren: I rise to support the remarks of my colleague the member for Hamilton Mountain. I do so with some trepidation for fear the minister will dredge up some remark made by himself or his staff about it being humbug. I was offended the other night for one of two reasons when the minister claimed that his staff thought the remarks made by my colleague were humbug. If the minister's staff said they were humbug, fine; but why does he pass the responsibility for the remarks to his staff? Does the minister not have the courage to say it himself? Is that the minister's problem? The minister is responsible for the comments of his staff.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Right, I accept full responsibility.

Mr. Laughren: The minister didn't hesitate to say it was his staff who said it, though, did he?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That was a slip of the tongue.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, a slip of the tongue.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Just the way your own slips most of the time.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, yes; sure, sure. Mr. Speaker, I will proceed with the debate on the bill and perhaps when the minister responds, he could give us his views on the comments we make on the bill and not those of his staff.

As my colleague from Hamilton Mountain indicated, and we stated this before the budget came down, we think corporation taxes should have been moved to 15 per cent across the board. That would not have made Ontario uncompetitive in this confederation, which is what the minister and the Treasurer would have us believe. Manitoba and British Columbia each have 15 per cent corporation tax; Newfoundland and Saskatchewan have 14 per cent. One would think it would be the underdeveloped provinces which are attempting to attract investment into their provinces which would be worried about having too high a corporation tax. Ontario is not in that position. Ontario is not in the position of having to compete with Newfoundland for corporate investment; that's not the case at all.

The other thing that bothers us is the arbitrary exemptions which the minister applied to the increase. He says there is going to be an increase to 13 to 14 per cent except for the mining, farming, logging and fishing industries; and the retail and service sectors stand up, look at the minister and say, "What are we, chopped liver?" Why this increase in the retail and service sectors and not the others?

I suppose the minister will say it's because they want to encourage investment and employment in those particular sectors. I haven't heard those sectors complain that the reason there's unemployment in this province, or the reason there's a decline in manufacturing employment, or the reason that a substantial proportion of our domestic demand for products is being met by imports is because of the taxation level in Ontario.

I haven't heard them say that. Perhaps the minister has some information for us. Perhaps when the minister replies he could tell us what information he has that the taxation level in the province of Ontario is causing our economic problems. Otherwise presumably he wouldn't be discriminating against the retail and service sectors and saying they have to pay 14 per cent; but that mining, farming, logging and fishing do not. We are saying to the minister we don't believe that and we could quite comfortably have a corporation tax level of 15 per cent across the board in the province of Ontario.

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) commented about the tax on the profits of the banks in this country. They really are remarkable. They must be inspirational to the free enterprisers in Ontario. I looked at a story in the Globe and Mail of April 21 of this year—I think that's the one the member was referring to—about banks skirting the embarrassment of applying for tax refunds. They paid a tax that averaged 20 per cent. Does the minister know what his increase in the tax on banks is going to do? It is going to raise $5 million. That's $2,000 for every $1 million of capital. The minister really shouldn't be so savage, he really shouldn't be so tough on the banks!

What a lot of nonsense! The banks have had an unparalleled record of profit increases in this country and he is afraid to tackle them. Given the level of tax at which they pay—the Royal paid at a rate of 14.5 per cent; the Commerce, 14.4; Montreal, 24.3; Nova Scotia, 26; and Toronto Dominion, 23.7—it is strange that he is allowing one of the most profitable sectors in the economy to get off with that kind of tax rate. He certainly doesn't allow individuals to do so.

When I was doing some reading on corporation tax, I came across a document put out by the Department of Finance in Ottawa dated November 1978, so I would think its contents are most appropriate today and they make some rather interesting comments. They do some comparisons with other jurisdictions.

The document is entitled, The Tax Systems of Canada and the United States: A Study Comparing the Levels of Taxation on Individuals and Businesses in the Two Countries. On page 40 of that report, they talk about corporation taxes as a percentage of profits. That's a pretty straight, easily understood percentage they are talking about, and it runs from 1972 through the year 1977. In Canada in 1972 corporation taxes as a percentage of profits—these are unadjusted—were 36.2 per cent, United States, 41.1 per cent. In 1973, 32.8 per cent in Canada, 40 per cent in the States. In 1974, 35.1 per cent in Canada, 38.7 in the US.

Mr. Nixon: Average?

Mr. Laughren: Yes. In 1975, 37.8 per cent in Canada, 38.8 in the States. In 1976, 36.6 per cent in Canada, 39.1 in the States; and in 1977, 33.4 per cent in Canada and 39.4 per cent in the United States. Those are the corporation taxes as a percentage of profit, so it's clear that we are competitive with the United States in case the minister is going to stand up and tell us that the reason he's doing it is not because of the other provinces but because of competition in the United States. The evidence is clear.

They go on to say on page 48 of the report that in comparing firms in Ontario and Ohio the difference in tax rates is some 10 percentage points of book profit in Canada's favour. The difference arises from the combined effect of the more generous capital cost allowance system, including the two year write-off on machinery and equipment used in manufacturing and processing—the minister will remember that write-off—the low rate of tax on manufacturing and processing income, and the three per cent inventory deduction, which together more than offset the higher value of the investment tax credit under the US tax system, and the ability of the US firms to use LIFO—which I gather is last in, first out accounting—for tax purposes.

In retail trades also, where the minister is raising the level, the tax rates are lower in Canada. The generosity of the CCA—the capital cost allowance system—and the lower statutory tax rate in Canada more than offset the value of LIFO relative to the three per cent inventory deduction. However, the differences in tax rates that do emerge are not very significant in this case, especially when it is noted that the variation within the countries is at least as large as between the two countries.

Then there's a chart provided; this is "Taxes as a percentage of book profits," divided into manufacturing and retail trades. It's the manufacturing area that was one of the sectors the minister was attempting to protect.

In Canada, taxes as a percentage of book profits—in Alberta, 30.2 per cent; in Manitoba, 32.7; and in Ontario, 31.9. In the United States they are considerably higher—in Texas, 37.6; in Ohio, 41.3; and in New York, 43.1. Taxes are a much higher percentage of profits in those states than in Ontario. I don't think the Department of Finance is trying to embarrass the Ontario government with these statistics. I suspect they are quite objective.

For retail trade, in Alberta the taxes as a percentage of book profits were 41.5; in Ontario, 43.2; in Manitoba, 45; while in the United States, in Texas, they were 40.1; in Ohio, 43.6; and in New York, 45.4. Those were for typical large corporations in 1978.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Could I have a point of clarification?

Mr. Laughren: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: On the first figures the member gave, when he was comparing percentages with Ontario and the United States, was that the net figure or was that gross? Could he give me that again?

Mr. Laughren: I will try. It is a bit thick for me. The first set I gave was aggregate corporation income tax, as a percentage of corporation profits. I am not sure I can answer the minister's question, but perhaps the small print in the document, The Tax Systems of Canada and the US, would provide the information for the minister's staff at least, if he wants to pursue it further.

Those were typical large corporations. If we look at the small manufacturing corporations at book income of different levels, for $20,000 the taxes as a percentage of book profits in Ontario were 13.4 and in the United States, 18.9. That is using Ohio as the base in the US and Ontario as the base in Canada. For book income of $50,000, it is 13.4 per cent in Ontario and 19.4 in Ohio. For $100,000, it is 13.4 in Ontario and 27.4 in Ohio. That is in the manufacturing sector.

In retail trade, it is 22 per cent for $20,000, $50,000 and $100,00 levels of book income in Ontario. In Ohio it is 22.3, 22.8 and 29.9, respectively for those three levels of book income. The minister can see in every single case, even for the small business sector, the percentage of taxes on book profits are lower in Ontario than in those jurisdictions. The minister should rethink some of his talk about being competitive with other jurisdictions. We understand very well the need to have a competitive system in this province.

In the conclusions of the federal department report, they say: "The paper leads to the general conclusion that the Canadian tax system compares favourably with that in the US. In aggregate, while tax revenues of all levels of government were 1.8 percentage points of gross domestic product higher in Canada than in the US in 1977, Canadians had the benefit of publicly provided health care services and emigrant transfer payments in the form of family allowances and old age security pensions. The dollar value of these three programs, which do not have any counterpart in the US, was about $11.7 billion measured in terms of government expenditures in 1977-78 and far exceeded the difference in relative tax levels between the two countries."

They go on further to say: "Aggregate personal income taxes, social security taxes levied on persons and estates, and gift taxes are lower in Canada as a percentage of personal income than in the US. This conclusion applies in each of the years 1972 to 1977, with the exception of 1975, when a temporary tax cut was in place in the US. In Canada, personal income taxes are a higher percentage of personal income than in the US, but this is more than offset by lower levels of social security and estate and gift taxes, Canada and Switzerland are the only"—get this—"two OECD countries without a federal estate and inheritance tax."

I won't debate that because we are talking about corporation taxes, Mr. Speaker, and you would rule me out of order very quickly. Nevertheless, the point is made, and we will be talking to the Treasurer about that when we get to his abolishment of the succession duties.

Further, the report states: "Effective corporation income taxes, which are taxes as a percentage of corporation profits, have been consistently lower in Canada than in the US over the 1972-77 period. In 1977, the overall effective corporation tax rate in Canada was some six percentage points lower than in the US. This advantage in favour of Canada results from both the more generous depreciation allowances and write-offs and the lower statutory tax rates. In both countries the effective rates of corporation income tax have fallen over the period."

Did the minister hear that? In both countries, the effective rates of corporation income tax have fallen over the period 1972-77. The minister shouldn't be so bashful about going up two points. It would not wreak destruction upon the private sector of Ontario.

Further in that report: Most industrial sectors enjoy lower effective corporation income tax rates in Canada than in the US. For the manufacturing sector, the effective tax rate was over 11 percentage points lower in Canada than in the US—31.7 per cent of Canadian profits versus 43 per cent in the US in 1973, the latest year for which data by sector are available."

There is evidence that we are not out of line with other jurisdictions south of us. The reason we have a high unemployment rate and the reason we have a devalued dollar is not because of the level of taxation of corporations in Ontario or anywhere else in this country. The minister should know that the reason we have high unemployment in this country is because such an enormous proportion of our domestic needs are met by imports. That's one of the main reasons. We are not producing our own goods; a $12-billion deficit in manufactured goods last year, an all-time high. And the Treasurer has the nerve to stand up in this Legislature and say that we are looking forward to a great future, that there was a spurt in manufacturing employment in 1978. What a lot of nonsense.

We have had a disastrous decade in manufacturing employment. As a proportion of total employment, manufacturing is lower than it perhaps has ever been, and the Treasurer has the nerve to stand up and hand us that kind of fogbound line. It really is a lot of nonsense.

The minister has missed the mark in his attempt to revitalize the Ontario economy. I understand that this is the Treasurer's move, not the Minister of Revenue's. But on the other hand the Minister of Revenue has an obligation not just to implement the programs of the Treasurer but to understand them, and hopefully to make some arguments in cabinet that this won't solve any of our problems, and that there is tax room there in the corporate sector, particularly in the banks.

The minister can't justify what he has done by increasing the level of taxes on the banks by $5 million. That's downright silly.

Mr. Makarchuk: It isn't even petty cash for them.

Mr. Laughren: I want to say, before I sit down, that there are people on the government side who look upon New Democrats as people who would tax the private sector until we did them damage. Perhaps it needs to be said that we look upon corporation taxes as a way in which to extract from the private sector what we think is equitable. We understand that when we form the government in Ontario, whether it is in 1980 or thereafter, we require a healthy private sector if we are going to implement the plans we talk about so passionately.

We understand that any political party in a mixed economy that would destroy the private sector is not talking good sense. So we would implement tax changes, whether it be at the corporate level or at the personal level, that tied in with our idea of an equitable society, a competitive society; because we know it is utter nonsense to have a million people unemployed in this country—319,000 in Ontario.

It's dumb to sit and acquiesce, as the Treasurer has done, with that kind of unemployment staring him in the face. He has done nothing about it and that's irresponsible. Raising the level of corporate tax from 13 to 15 per cent across the board is a responsible act. It would provide us with much-needed revenue. It would not make Ontario industry uncompetitive with either other provincial jurisdictions or United States jurisdictions.

Besides, the level of taxation is not the source of our economic problems, either in Ontario or elsewhere in Canada. Perhaps the minister should think about that. When he responds I think he has an obligation to tell us why he did not raise the level—why the level is not going up to 15 per cent. If he wants to be completely the lackey of the Treasurer he could stand up and say, "It's the Treasurer's policy, not mine." But if he wants to show that he has some opinions of his own—not just those of the Treasurer or his staff—perhaps he could explain to us why he has raised corporation taxes in this way.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I will try to reply to the members in the order in which they spoke. The member for Hamilton Mountain was the first speaker and one of the major points he made was that he felt all the taxes in this budget were directed towards the consumers. I guess when one adds up any tax in any program, in the final analysis it's always the consumer who pays—even if it's a manufacturing situation or a farming situation or logging or mining or whatever it might be. The final product is purchased by the consumer who obviously pays the tax.

The member for Hamilton Mountain suggests that the corporations pay only corporation income tax. That seems to be the whole theme of everyone who has spoken; they forget about all the other taxes corporations pay. Sure they pay corporation taxes, but they also pay gasoline tax, they also pay fuel tax, diesel tax, they pay sales tax on any purchases they make, they pay 70 per cent on the average towards the OHIP premiums.

An hon. member: Is it passed on or deducted, Lorne?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: These are all costs to the corporation that these members never think about. They just think about the one tax.

Right now the average corporation's tax in Ontario is 50 per cent—the total of federal and provincial taxes. They're paying a 50 per cent tax. It's not just the provincial tax they pay.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's not what Eric Kierans said.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'm reading from my chart—of course I am. Canada, 36 per cent; and if you want to add 14 or 15 per cent, which is the tax we're imposing, I think in my figures it comes to either 49 or 50 per cent. That's the information I have before me. The member can argue as to whose information is right. I can argue that the information the member gave wasn't correct, but I am giving what I perceive to be honest information.

Mr. Laughren: That's humbug.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Did the member's staff tell him that? I would suspect his staff prepared most of the things he read into the record today. Just to let everybody know that we all have staff in the background—I wouldn't want the public to assume for one moment that only the ministers have staff.

Mr. Makarchuk: The trouble is you've got so many you're tripping over them.

Mr. Laughren: We have a very good staff.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Erie again mentioned the fact that consumers were the ones who are paying all the taxes, that all the directions of this budget were directed at the consumers, and he suggested perhaps it would be a good idea if there would be one corporations tax administered by the federal government. But I would remind him that it was only about two or three years ago when we brought in Bill 88, the Corporations Tax Act, which is almost completely consistent with the federal government's corporations' tax, with a few exceptions.

We retained those few exceptions because if we were to have one corporations tax this government would have no thrust at all as to which direction it wanted the economy to move through taxation. We would be completely at the mercy of the federal people who, I think the honourable member has to admit, have not done that well.

Much has been said about the banks and the fact that we are only going to collect an extra $5 million. That is quite true; however, I think it is a step in the right direction. It is a 33.3 per cent increase.

Mr. Makarchuk: It isn't a giant step for mankind.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, it is not a giant step. But it is one step further than we were in the last budget. So we are looking in the right direction.

I cannot say I disagree that more money could not be found from the banks. I think that is probably quite true. But the thrust of this budget is not in that direction at this point, except for the extra $5 million.

Mr. Charlton: This is a bank robbery in reverse.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Brantford mentioned that small businesses need help. I could not agree more. Small businesses do need help. The tax rate we are suggesting here—10 per cent—I think is a very reasonable rate. But several times in debates he has mentioned possible loopholes or leakage as far as taxing foreign companies is concerned. I think we are doing our very best to accommodate that situation and to correct it.

As I have said before, if he has any information about any particular company, we would certainly be happy to look into it. But I am still waiting for information about that company. I would certainly be happy to direct staff to look into it. The laws are in place, and I think we can enforce those laws—

Mr. Warner: Start with Inco.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Why doesn't the member resign?

Mr. Warner: You'd be disappointed.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk talked a great deal about banks. I would like to remind him that if the federal government had passed Bill C-37, and if it had not died on the Order Paper, there might have been a greater amount of tax collected, and the banks would not be showing the excessive profits they are showing.

Mr. Makarchuk: Do you think the Tories would have supported it?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, they would have. Definitely. As a matter of fact, if the Tories are elected, that is one of the first things they will do, so they tell me.

That is one of the reasons there is a loophole in the present legislation that is permitting the banks to avoid taxation.

The member for Nickel Belt suggested I should have more input in the discussions. I have to inform him that I do have input into these discussions.

Mr. Laughren: That's all the worse.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As the member for Nickel Belt knows, we win some and we lose some in any debate. We do not always win every debate. However, in this particular instance—

Mr. Laughren: You either lost them all or you're as bad as he is.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I do not think so. I think this is a fairly good budget and a fairly good bill.

Mr. Warner: Sure, if you're the Sheriff of Nottingham.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The whole thrust of the difference between the 14 and 15 per cent rates, is simply that we want corporations in some areas to show profits because they are the ones that actually reinvest in the economy.

Mr. Warner: We know where they reinvest: Indonesia, Guatemala—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: And they are the ones, through reinvestment, that create the jobs that everyone wants.

Mr. Laughren: They are not doing it here. They've had high profits here, but they're not investing them here.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Of course they are. The honourable member has heard the figures on the employment that has been created in Ontario. I do not have to repeat those; the Treasurer mentioned them not very long ago. Where does my friend think those jobs came from? A great percentage of them come from the manufacturing sector.

Mr. Makarchuk: Most of them came from small business in services—not manufacturing.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No. Not according to the last figures.

Mr. Samis: Look at the record of the past seven years.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to the debate. I think I have answered most of the questions; some of them were rather detailed, and I am not going to go into those kinds of details.

Mr. Laughren: I have one word to describe what the minister has just said.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: What is the word?

Mr. Laughren: Humbug.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Humbug? Okay. I knew my friend wanted to get on the record.

The House divided on Hon. Mr. Maeck's motion for second reading of Bill 59, which was agreed to on the following vote:

MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL TAX AMENDMENT TAX

Consideration of Bill 54, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that section 3(1) of the said act, as set out in section 2(1) of the bill, be amended by deleting all the words after "equipment" in the fourth line so that the said subsection 1 will read: "Every purchaser shall pay to the Treasurer a tax at the rate of 5.9 cents per litre on all fuel received or used in Ontario by him to generate power in a motor vehicle other than railway equipment."

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I think we already raised this issue during the second reading debate. This tax on railway equipment is a new tax being imposed by the government, and in our view it is not only an unnecessary one but also a tax that will affect public transit right across Ontario.

This government probably had a very justifiable reason for excluding railway rolling stock in the past, and in our view that exclusion should be continued. We do not want to see the tax added. It is going to cause problems which, for what this tax will collect, we do not think are worthwhile.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, we're not prepared to accept this amendment. It is part of a total package in this budget presentation and for obvious reasons, it's necessary to collect this tax in order to meet our commitments to the people in the province.

I would remind the members that this is the only province, with the exception of Newfoundland, that has not imposed this tax. All other provinces do have it. Newfoundland doesn't have it simply because they don't have any railways. So I think we're being consistent with other provinces in imposing this particular tax.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Section 2 agreed to.

Sections 3 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill 54 reported.

LAND TRANSFER TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 57, An Act to amend the Land Transfer Tax Act, 1974.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a question with the minister that relates to a suggestion made by my colleague, the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong).

Mr. Chairman: On which section?

Mr. Haggerty: It relates to the date on which the increase in land transfer tax will come into effect. He suggested that the minister should consider exempting those transactions which took place prior to the announcement of the tax increase and include those following the date under the new tax regulations.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: May I make a statement? I did give that matter some consideration and had staff look into it in detail because I had some sympathy for the proposal. But we found that if we accepted that sort of proposal, we would have the doors open for abuse simply because anyone could backdate a sale contract and we would have no way of controlling it.

The other reason, of course, is that it has been historical in this province and in most jurisdictions that when a budget comes down and the tax is announced, it becomes effective on that particular date.

For those reasons, particularly the fact it would create quite a loophole, we have decided we shouldn't proceed with an amendment in that regard, although I do have some sympathy for the young people who might have been in the process of buying a house when the tax came in and who may have signed an offer to purchase. My understanding is that offers to purchase could go back as far as 30 days and about 1,000 transfers a day go through the registry office, so we're talking about quite a complicated system.

Had we gone that route we would have had to go to a rebate system, because some of them, obviously, have already been paid and it would have cost more money to refund the money than what would have actually been collected. So for those reasons, we decided not to move on that.

Mr. Chairman: On section 1. Mr. Charlton moves that section 1 of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(3). Clause (d) of subsection 1 of the said section 1 of the act is amended by adding at the end thereof, 'but does not include any building used solely for residential purposes.'"

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, this is another issue that we raised during second reading debate on the bill. One of our major objections to the land transfer tax is that it was intended in large measure to deal with areas of land transfer in terms of change of use, speculation and so on.

In Canada, and more specifically in Ontario, in the past seven or eight years, there have been huge increases in housing prices, the restricted ability of average- and low-income people in this province to buy housing and all of the other things that have gone on in conjunction with real estate prices: interest rates, increased legal fees and so on. This is just another tax that effectively goes up with the price of housing, and it is one of those taxes that is a front-end load on purchasers of housing in Ontario.

This amendment is an attempt to deal in part with the problem, because we could not effectively find a way in the bill as it was presented to deal with the whole question of land transfer on residential housing in total. Because section 1 was before us, we felt it incumbent on us, as we did initially, to oppose the increase altogether and, secondly, to attempt to find whatever way we could to reduce the burden on the purchasers of residential housing. That is what this amendment deals with. That is the direction that we feel this government should be going in an effort to help alleviate the problem of people's inability to afford housing in Ontario at the front end.

We have gone into all kinds of other programs in this province and in Canada to subsidize housing, to subsidize interest rates and to subsidize everything else we can think of. But these systems have not been working, and they have led us into a position today where literally thousands of people are quit-claiming on their government-assisted housing. We have not dealt with the real problems of purchasing of residential accommodation. We have not dealt with the price of housing in any effective way. We have not dealt with any of the things that affect people at the front end, where they have to get in. We have not dealt with interest rates. Now we are turning around and increasing land transfer taxes. This amendment is our effort to try to reduce that burden on purchasers of residential housing in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I certainly can sympathize with this particular amendment.

Mr. Laughren: All the people of Ontario need is sympathy from the minister.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Let me give my explanation before my friend condemns me too much.

We have done some work on this amendment to see what would happen. Assuming that 85 per cent of the transfers would be residential—and that is based on an assumption taken from Ontario Real Estate Association data and the Ministry of Revenue assessment division—the added cost of appraisal, which each resident would obviously have to have to find out what his property was worth in comparison with another house, would average about $100. That's about the average cost to have an appraisal done on one's property today.

If that were to take place, if we were to accept this amendment, it would cost almost as much money for people to have an appraisal done to get a breakdown on what part would be taxable and what wouldn't be taxable. I don't believe they would save any money on it.

Mr. Charlton: You don't trust your own ministry. You've got appraisals on all those properties with the land and building breakdown already in your assessment office.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, we haven't. Of all people, you should know what condition some of those appraisals are in. You've worked in that ministry.

Mr. Samis: The man in the field just told you, that you had them.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As 51 per cent of the transfers are below $45,000 in value, this amendment would benefit only about one half of the total number of home purchasers and would be of little or no appreciable benefit at all to the low-income people.

We have looked into the situation. As I said, I have some sympathy for this particular amendment, but I don't see where it would be of any value to us.

Mr. Charlton: The minister's comments about the extra cost of an appraisal are just a lot of hogwash. The minister may be correct to the degree that the information his Ministry of Revenue already has in terms of appraisals on the total properties are a little bit out of date because they are presently at 1975 market value, heading for 1978 market value. But the assessment division of his own ministry is studying current sales on a daily basis. It would take them a matter of hours to come up with a fairly accurate residential land value. Forget about the buildings. If the amendment passes, we're only looking at the land. An effective current market value for land in a municipality anywhere in the province would take a matter of hours to work out. There is no need for people to have to have an appraisal done to separate the land and the building. The data are already there in the ministry. It's just ridiculous to oppose this amendment on those grounds.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I also oppose it on monetary grounds. There is a revenue loss here that I must account for as well. If we take this amendment into consideration, along with the other amendment that you will propose later on this same bill, we're talking about $59 million. That's how much it's going to cost. That's the other side of that coin, and we are not in a position to take that sort of a loss.

Mr. Laughren: Maybe you could have a succession duty tax.

I simply can't let that kind of statement go by. What we're really seeing is the minister's true colours now. He is talking about this as strictly a revenue bill because any of the other arguments he used don't stand up to the face of knowledgeable criticism.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Of course, it's a revenue bill. Nobody said otherwise.

Mr. Laughren: The minister tried to flim-flam us that it had to do with the cost of assessing.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, we really looked into it.

Mr. Laughren: I believe you looked into it, but I don't think that your arguments for rejecting it are valid. The only argument you've got is the revenue one. Don't talk to us about revenues when you've abolished succession duties, for heaven's sake.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 1 of the bill will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

On section 2:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that section 2(1) of the said act be amended by striking out "$45,000" in the second line of section 2(1)(b) of the bill and substituting therefor "$70,000."

Mr. Charlton: This amendment emanates from something we see as particularly unfair and discriminatory in the Land Transfer Tax Act.

Mr. Laughren: That's why the minister likes it.

Mr. Charlton: The government has realized to some degree the problem in raising the ceiling on the lower level of tax on land transfer. What in effect it is forgetting or leaving out in this amendment to the act, which we are trying to deal with in our amendment, is the fact that in the high cost areas of housing in Ontario, such as Metro Toronto, Mississauga, Hamilton and a number of other major centres in this province, the person buying an average home which in his municipality is priced well above $45,000, is buying a home no different, no more elaborate and no more expensive in terms of which he is looking for to live in than the same house in municipalities in this province, which might be priced below $45,000 because of the land value and because of the lower speculation that has gone on in that area, largely because of its distance from the high priced area in Metro Toronto.

We have a situation where a house in Metro Toronto priced at $70,000 and an identical house in Hamilton priced at $55,000 are both identical to a house in—

Mr. Haggerty: In Fort Erie, they are $45,000.

Mr. Charlton: —Fort Erie or wherever at $25,000 or $35,000 or $40,000. The minister is going to tell me that the wage earners in Metro and the wage earners in Hamilton earn far more than the wage earners in Fort Erie, or Sudbury, or a number of other areas of the province. There is some differential, but in a large degree we have two factors and people are being penalized twice.

It doesn't matter whether you have a higher rate on part of the purchase price or not. The guy who buys the $70,000 home here in Metro, even if he pays the low rate on all $70,000, is still going to pay more land transfer tax than the guy in Fort Erie who is buying the same home for $35,000. That argument doesn't hold water. You are penalizing twice for the high cost of housing in Metro by putting a higher rate of taxation on the last $25,000 of the purchase here or the last $15,000 of the purchase in Hamilton. You are putting on a higher rate.

That's not effective and that's not fair in terms of assisting people in this province to buy housing. It's double jeopardy right down the line, and it isn't even wholly true that wages in Metro are so much higher than anywhere else in the province. In your own ministry and in the civil service, contracts are negotiated province-wide and everybody gets the same. There are 60,000 of those people and their families out there somewhere. It's the same in a lot of other sectors as well. In some sectors there are some differentials, but they are not all that great. The fact that the house price is higher here, so the rate of tax they pay is going to be higher anyway, whether there's a higher rate over $45,000, is inconsequential. You are still going to tax them more here in Metro where the wages aren't that much higher. The wages in Metro certainly aren't as much higher than the wages in Fort Erie as the housing prices are. This is penalizing people doubly, and double jeopardy just isn't acceptable to us as a form of taxation in this province.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, we, of course, reject this amendment. I agree with some of the things the member for Hamilton Mountain is saying. There is a differential in different areas as far as the cost of housing is concerned. But I think we have moved a little bit in the right direction; we have moved up from $35,000 to $45,000. I know those members opposite would like to see us go higher, but we have budgetary demands that we raise a certain amount of money. There is no question this is a revenue source and therefore we must proceed with the program as we have drawn it up.

I do insist, though, that the cost of housing does have a bearing on income to a great degree within this province. If you are living in a low-income area, a house in Toronto or Hamilton would certainly be valued at less money than another of the same type in a better area; but people in those low-income areas would be making less money as well, and therefore could ill afford to pay the same amount.

I feel there are other circumstances that can be taken into consideration and perhaps they will be in the future, but at this time we are only prepared to go as high as $45,000.

Mr. Laughren: Just briefly in support of my colleague from Hamilton Mountain, who has put forth some very responsible and reasonable amendments to this bill. These are amendments the minister could accept if he wasn't so hidebound and inflexible. What I don't understand is how the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett) can sit there and have the Treasurer and the Minister of Revenue impose a housing policy because he has left a vacuum there. I am amazed the Minister of Housing would acquiesce and have somebody else making housing policy for him. There is no doubt this is as much a housing policy as it is a source of revenue for the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 2(1)(b) will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Sections 3 to 5, inclusive, agreed to.

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 58, An Act to Amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that section 1(1)(a) of Bill 58 be amended by striking out all the words starting with "including" in the first line, up to and including "but" in the sixth line, and that the following words be substituted therefor: "but not including community antenna television, cable television and pay television and . . ."

[5:30]

Mr. Charlton: This is a new tax that is being imposed not just an increase as is the case in most of the other areas in this budget. The government is moving into a new field and, as some of my colleagues have mentioned, when you go into a new field you never get out of it. Not only that, but the tendency is to start depending on it for increases over and over again.

This particular area of television, specifically cable television and community antenna television in those communities where that particular device is used to get television signals, is one which is going to affect most dramatically all of the wrong people in the province, such as senior citizens, and all of those for whom television may be their only small pleasure and entertainment. They may live in communities—and the minister tried to throw this one back at me last week in the debate on second reading—where they can't take advantage of some of the tax breaks in the budget because they have no theatre at all; neither live theatre nor movie theatre. Their television may be the only form of visual entertainment in the community, yet on the one hand the minister, in other sections of this bill, is increasing the tax exemption for theatre-goers, but, on the other is adding on a tax for those in the province who may not have access to theatres at all.

As I mentioned, it also affects a number of other segments of society which, for economic reasons, may have an old black and white television as their only form of effective and regular entertainment because it's all they can afford. Now, it is going to be taxed. It is just not socially acceptable in the kind of cost economic situation with which the people of Ontario are presently confronted.

Mr. Samis: Very briefly I would like to support the comments made by my colleague from Hamilton Mountain. I have already spoken on this bill on second reading and emphasized that I think, first of all, it's a very inequitable tax; second, that I am sure the tax is going to be increased within the next few years; and, third, that this really hits at the average working class family which relies much more heavily on television for entertainment than other sources of entertainment.

In terms of the $7 million being raised by the telecommunications tax, I would like to ask the minister what percentage of that $7 million is going to come from the cable-tv portion of this tax? I think my colleague's amendment is an excellent one because if it's going to be $2 million, $3 million, $4 million or $5 million, sure as hell we can get that money from the banks and they can afford it. I know the people in Ontario would support a proposal to impose a $5 million or $3 million tax, two-tenths of one percentage point, I think, which would make up the balance if we were to pass this amendment which, to me, is eminently reasonable.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, to answer the last question first; this package will generate up to $30 million, not $7 million. I think it's $7 million for cable but the total package is $30 million. So it does generate some revenue.

In our earlier debates I indicated that I have regard for the senior citizens and other people on low incomes in this province, just as members opposite have. That isn't just their bailiwick; we all have that feeling. But the fact is we're talking about an average of 46 cents a month for cable television and, if it happens to be an area where they have bulk service it will be about 37 cents a month. We're not demanding a great amount of money from anyone on this particular increase.

Mr. Samis: Two-tenths of one percentage point at the banks.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: There's no question that at some time in the future the tax could be raised. It is a sales tax; if the sales tax is raised provincially, this tax would be raised. But I see no reason to believe there could be a special rate of tax for cable television other than the rate that would apply across the province for general sales tax.

Mr. Laughren: The minister should realize that saying he has some sympathy with our amendments on fuel tax; sympathy with our amendments on the land transfer tax; sympathy with our amendments on the retail sales tax, wears a little thin after a while. As my colleague, the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) interjected, actions speak a lot louder than words. He has indeed imposed a tax here that need not be imposed.

When you look at the $7 million the minister is getting at this point in time, Mr. Chairman, it is a petty tax, a petty, mean-minded thing for him to do. What bothers us more than the actual amount is that he's opened the door, and we can see in the years to come that he'll be taking a bigger and bigger bite out of this part of the services used by the people of Ontario. That's why we feel very unhappy about it and why my colleague, the member for Hamilton Mountain, has put in the amendment and why we intend to vote against the minister on it.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 1(1)(a) will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Amendment stacked.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that paragraph 70 of section 3(4) of the bill, which amends section 5(1) of the act, be amended by adding at the end thereof: "and provided that such furnishings or food preparation equipment were manufactured in Canada."

Mr. Haggerty: Point of order, Mr. Chairman: I don't have a copy of that amendment. I've got the other amendment.

Mr. Charlton: I can send you over a copy, but the copy was given to your House leader this afternoon.

Mr. Haggerty: I don't have it here.

Mr. Chairman: I'm sure the member can supply it.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, on this amendment to the bill, given the kind of debate that's gone on in this House in the past couple of years about "buy Canadian," with the kind of talk we've had from this government in terms of stimulation to the economy—and obviously this particular section is intended to stimulate Canadian industry—why has this government neglected to ensure that this exemption would apply only to Canadian manufactured goods, to things manufactured in Canada, both furniture and equipment?

The minister stated during the second reading debate last week that the vast majority of furnishings and kitchen equipment presently being bought in this sector is Canadian. That's fine. He only said the vast majority though, he didn't say all. He certainly didn't say the situation couldn't change. Who knows what foreign companies may decide to take advantage of this tax incentive and drop their price a few percentage points in order to attract some Canadian buyers.

Why, Mr. Minister, if it's desirable to have Canadian buying in this sector, can't we guarantee it is going to be Canadian? Why is it good enough to say the bulk of it is Canadian right now? That's fine; but why don't we ensure it will stay that way? Why don't we ensure that whatever additional stimulation and additional buying is caused by this exemption will be in Canadian goods, with Canadian persons installing those goods?

This amendment seems not only very important to us as a first step in terms of dealing with this kind of an approach in all the things this government does, but it seems also to be very eminently reasonable to us.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, we covered this item in the debate on principle. I did indicate we could not accept this amendment. I did also indicate that a great majority of the furniture and appliances that will be exempt from sales tax through this section is Canadian, but my staff draws my attention to the fact that it's perhaps not the best thing for this province to use provincial tax as a sort of hidden tariff.

In line with Canada's participation in GATT and so on, I don't know whether we even have the authority to really exempt certain sections and then put a tax on something else just because it happens to be made in a foreign country. I don't know whether that's a fair assumption or not. It's one I'm not that familiar with, however it was drawn to my attention.

I have a further note that with the 1975 retail sales tax rebate on autos it was originally confined to Canadian cars but was ruled unconstitutional by the Attorney General. That is further information I have on it. If that's the case, obviously it's the best reason of all not to accept the amendment.

Mr. Charlton: Implement it and let it be challenged in the courts.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Chairman, I understand the intention of the amendment that is proposed by the member from the New Democratic Party. I think this amendment embodies sentiments one can understand and sympathize with. My concern about this amendment is the concern raised at the time of second reading of the bill. The whole way this paragraph 70 is going to be applied, along with the information bulletin you've supplied to people across the province, is going to be putting a heavy onus on the people in the retail industry in these products.

I want to speak about that, but I don't want to spend time on this amendment speaking about the difficulty in applying paragraph 70 on various items. This is not idle speculation, I have been receiving complaints about that. I have here a letter which I intend to refer to at a later time.

The ministry has put out a bulletin of items which will be exempt as long as they are used by people in the hotel, motel and hostel business; resorts, restaurants and so on; in other words to encourage the tourist industry. You run into difficulty with what equipment will be exempt and what will not be exempt. It is going to be very difficult for people in that field selling that type of product to know that one item on the shelf is exempt while another item is not exempt. They are going to have to continually refer to the list.

Not only are restaurants going to be exempt, but clubs, delicatessens and snack bars located in certain areas are not going to be exempt. One can foresee a situation where an individual comes in to buy this equipment from the retailer and the retailer is going to have to find out what sort of business the individual is in. Over and above that, the retailer would now be faced with an additional burden of determining whether the equipment he is selling happens to be Canadian or to be made in the US or someplace else.

The onus on the retailer is going to be much too heavy to start with without having to put an additional onus on him. When taxes are originated by the Treasurer in this province, very often he doesn't think about the fellow at the other end of the line having to enforce it or do the bookkeeping for the ministry for certain items. I can see real difficulties in this type of amendment.

The minister was talking about another problem involving this amendment. When we are talking about agreements made between countries, the US, Canada and other countries, about tariffs, we have always taken the position that from a constitutional point of view it is not for provinces through their taxation or sales tax to be imposing tariffs on certain items. On that basis it can be a problem, although for political purposes back in 1975 the Treasurer of this province tried to do it in relation to motor vehicles. As I recall the reason he had at that time to extend it to all motor vehicles was partially constitutional and also because the opposition was asking why it should be restricted to only Canadian-manufactured cars.

I can recall there was an awful lot of pressure across the province, put on by dealers selling Japanese, German or other type cars. The tax imposed by the Treasurer at that time was some sort of a breach of tariff agreements and exchanges we had with various countries which were a part of the western world. I can see from a technical, legal and constitutional point of view where if we accepted this amendment there would in that sense be a breach.

I must say we in this party are in favour of encouraging Canadian business and encouraging the sale of Canadian products, but I am not sure we can do it through a sales tax amendment as we do now. There are other ways of doing it without breaching the tariff agreements Canada has with other countries. I can see that being a problem.

For these reasons I think it would be very difficult to accept this amendment, although we think it makes eminent good sense. But, if we are going to be in breach of tariff agreements with other countries, I don't think we should be taking the initiative at this time.

Mr. Laughren: We are not going to divide the House on this particular amendment, but I think my colleague the member for Hamilton Mountain has made his point very well and, as the member for Ottawa East (Ms. Gigantes) says, his spirit is proper.

This government has done some very strange things when it comes to sales tax exemption. For example, the exemption on production machinery is really a dumb exemption. It is an expensive, dumb exemption which does not create jobs in this province and costs us an enormous amount of tax revenue every year because of the simple fact that a lot of that machinery is produced elsewhere. All you are really doing is encouraging imports. Can you imagine encouraging imports with a $12 billion deficit in this country on manufactured goods? That's what you are doing.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We are trying to encourage purchasing.

Mr. Laughren: I know what the purpose of this bill is, but I can tell you, you need to take a long look at exemptions and what they are really going to do. Because of his statements, I think the minister should table the documentation indicating that the majority of the things that will be purchased as a result of this exemption are indeed manufactured in Canada. Presumably the minister has some documentation to substantiate his remarks that most of these products are made in Canada anyway. I would request that the minister table with the House and send over to the two opposition parties any documentation he has on this. I'm sure he wouldn't stand up and just make the statement. He must have some documentation. I would urge him to do that.

What the government really has to do is start talking about replacing the enormous amount of imports which satisfy domestic demand in the province of Ontario. It hasn't done that. The government has run around putting little red tags on merchandise in stores that say "Shop Canadian," without really doing anything substantial about ensuring that an increased proportion of our manufacturing goods is produced in this province. That's not this minister's responsibility, but his government's policies really are bankrupt in this regard.

Finally, I really would appreciate it if the minister would document his remarks that most of these goods are produced in Canada anyway.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Regarding the last request, I'm not sure whether there are any documents I could give you.

Mr. Laughren: You just have a gut feeling.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, not at all. I must tell you that at one point in my lifetime I was in the furniture business. I happen to know that most of the hard furniture that is sold in the province of Ontario is made in Quebec. I happen to know because I was in the business.

Mr. Haggerty: It was made in Japan.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I should tell you also that I was in the appliance business. I happen to know from my personal knowledge that most of the stoves and grills and all of the things that are in restaurants are made in Canada. My staff may have some supporting documents. If there are I'd be happy to give them to you. I have been in the business and I do know from personal knowledge on that particular item.

Mr. Laughren: I would just remind the minister that I don't know how long ago he was in that business, but he's been in this place now for almost eight years. I was just doing some reading on one sector, namely mining machinery, where the picture can change so dramatically and so quickly in terms of the amount we import versus the amount produced here that what he may have felt 10 or 15 or 20 or 50 years ago—I don't know how long ago the minister was in the business—may not be appropriate anymore. Really what the minister is saying is that he just has a gut feeling. I think you have an obligation to substantiate your remarks.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's not quite so.

Mr. Laughren: That's what you're selling us.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Let me have a little rebuttal here. I'm observant; I go into hotels and motels and so on and I have a look at the furniture that's there. I know where it was made. I wasn't born yesterday.

Mr. Laughren: Is the minister refusing to document his remarks that the majority is produced in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No.

Mr. Laughren: Will you table them or send them over to us?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If there is any documentation, I'll be happy to give it to you.

Mr. Laughren: If there is not any, will you make a statement in the House that there is none?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I've already said if there are documentary papers I can supply you I will. If you don't get them I haven't got them.

Mr. Laughren: The minister hasn't gone quite as far as I wanted him to go. If there is information will he send it across to us, and if there is not any will he make a statement in the House to that effect?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You can always ask me a question in the House any time you want to.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 3(4)(70) will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Any further comments on section 3?

Mr. Roy: Yes. I'd like to speak to the minister. I didn't spend sufficient time on it. I don't know whether it is the intention of the minister to come back at eight o'clock on this bill.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes.

Mr. Roy: We are to continue with these bills. Maybe I could just start warming up, then, because I want to speak to the minister about clause 70.

It is not the first time this minister has been a member of the Legislature. He has known in the past some of the difficulties we have caused businesses and retailers across this province because of changes in the retail sales tax. I can remember when the honourable Allan Grossman, the father of the present Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), was Minister of Revenue and the difficulties and complaints that were received from businesses across the province about the selective imposition of sales tax on various items. This is the situation here, Mr. Chairman.

Possibly rather than go into it fully, I can adjourn the debate until eight o'clock and start at that time to give the minister complaints I have received from some of my constituents about the imposition of this tax. The minister knows when I make these comments I certainly don't attack him personally; but I do attack the ministry. I really think it's an unfair onus on people in business. They have sufficient problems in coping with their books and everything else. Every time they sell something they are going to have to go through this list.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 8, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of the whole.

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT (continued)

Resumption of consideration of Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

On section 3:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: When we recessed, the member for Ottawa East had the floor.

Mr. Roy: I might say, Mr. Chairman, it is not every day at eight o'clock that I have the opportunity to get up and address the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) all in their seats.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is only because we are here and you are not. I hope Hansard records that.

Mr. Roy: Prior to the adjournment, Mr. Chairman, I was talking about the concerns of some of my constituents pertaining to Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act and, more specifically, to section 3(4), paragraph 70, of the act. I might say to the Minister of Revenue, while we are talking about this, that this act is getting as complicated as the Income Tax Act for the ordinary lay person to try to follow the different sections of the act.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are just trying to enhance your practice.

Mr. Roy: But I want to tell the Premier—and I am pleased that the Treasurer is here, because his initiative in his budget results in abuse to the Minister of Revenue; he is the one who has to take all the abuse from the Treasurer's initiative.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Notice that I am taking the ones with credit.

Mr. Roy: That's right. But, in the terms of the taxes to the public, the Treasurer is not around to bear the brunt—

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is his job.

Mr. Roy: Okay. I am glad the Treasurer understands that; and I trust that he appreciates the effort and the zeal of his colleague who is the Minister of Revenue.

Hon. F. S. Miller: He is a fine gentleman.

Mr. Roy: My concern, Mr. Chairman, is this: As you know, under paragraph 70 certain furnishings, as defined by the minister, and food preparation equipment are exempt. The difficulty is explained by my constituent who wrote me a letter. For the benefit of the Treasurer and possibly the Premier—his French is improving somewhat; I have noticed he has said a few words over the last year or so—I will read my constituent's letter in the language in which it was written; then I will have the translation shortly.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'll translate for you.

Mr. Roy: It is written to me, of course, as the member for Ottawa East, and it says—L'électeur, Monsieur l'Orateur, dit out simplement:

"Je vous prie de trouver ci-inclus, la copie des nouveaux règlements concernant l'exemption de taxe de vente pour les restaurateurs.

"Comme fournisseur d'équipements à ces restaurateurs, je suis très concerné par la page 2 de ce pamphlet.

"Ces règlements sont sujet à tellement de différentes interprétations que je ne pourrais tous les énumérer ici.

"La responsabilité d'interprétation qui nous est imposée nous expose inutilement à des risques sérieux d'erreurs dispendieuses.

"J'apprécierais, à votre convenance, l'opportunité d'en discuter plus longuement avec vous."

For the benefit of the audience, he says, basically: "Enclosed is a pamphlet that is printed by the Ministry of Revenue. As a retailer in restaurant equipment, I am concerned about page two. These regulations are subject to so much interpretation that I can't even enumerate them all here."

He feels that the responsibility for interpreting these regulations imposes undue hardship on the people in the retail business and can lead to serious errors which they will have to pay for. He says, "I would appreciate your comments." As a member who is aware of what is going on in government in my riding, I had already made a speech on the subject, as the minister will recall, about the difficulty of interpreting the ministry pamphlet.

As one who furnishes these institutions, my constituent's concern is that the ministry says the following businesses are exempt: hotels, motels, hostels, resorts, cottages, cabins, legions, convention centres, restaurants, summer camps and commercial resorts. That is the first onus imposed on the individual who sells the equipment: these businesses are exempt but others are not. Apartment dwellings are not. I suppose he can distinguish that from a cottage but then clubs are on the list. What is the difference between a club and a restaurant? He has got to make a distinction. When a person comes into his store to buy equipment he has got to find out "Are you serving food in your club? Is that considered a restaurant?"

Does the minister not see the onus that is being put on the individual, an onus that very often he would not even put on his own civil servants? Next is a delicatessen. What's the difference between a delicatessen and a restaurant? He has to make that distinction. Is the individual running a delicatessen or is he running a restaurant? That's the type of unfair onus I am talking about.

By the way, I notice that not exempted on the list are such institutions as homes for the aged and hospitals. I find it strange that if there are going to be exemptions, you would not include institutions which are for the benefit of the community.

Mr. Hennessy: You find a lot of things strange.

Mr. Roy: Also not exempt are snack bars, that is to say snack bars located at or in exhibition fairs, sporting events, cinemas, theatres, supermarkets, department or grocery stores or similar places. How does he tell where it is located or if it is a snack bar, restaurant or delicatessen? A lot will depend on what the individual involved calls it. He is going to have to make a distinction about who he is selling to?

Nursing homes are not exempt; nor are summer camps if they are private, if they are commercial they are. Surely when we are enacting laws, when we are asking the people of the province to collect taxes on behalf of the government or to give out certain exemptions, it is unfair to impose this type of hardship on the individual who is going to have to determine what type of business the person who is buying from him is in and what type of business he is selling to.

I notice the Premier frowning. Doesn't it make sense that that type of onus shouldn't—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Can't you think of an answer? I have an answer.

Mr. Roy: No, but your frown was enough for me. I realize that all a man of your importance has to do is smile or frown, and I can get the message.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I frowned because the answer wasn't as obvious to you as it was to me.

Mr. Conway: You haven't answered anything you were asked today.

Mr. Roy: That's right. I might mention that your performance during the question period was excellent, but there weren't any answers forthcoming. It was a pretty good performance.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really question whether there were any real questions.

Mr. Roy: Now you are insulting my colleagues the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes) and the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I thought they said they had important questions.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh I don't dispute that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: May I bring members back to section 3 of the bill?

Mr. Roy: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Chairman; I'm glad you did.

May I ask the same question the Premier asked during question period: Must I ignore interjections?

Mr. Deputy Chairman: It would be advisable for you to do so.

Mr. Roy: The onus is imposed on the individual in the business. The other thing the individual has to do is to know the sorts of restaurant kitchen equipment that are exempt—blenders, bowls, broilers, coffee-makers and so on. But exhaust canopies are not exempt, Mr. Chairman, and he has to know that.

First of all, someone walks in and says, "What are you running? What type of business are you running?" And the individual says restaurant. "Is it a restaurant or a delicatessen?" he says to him. That's the first thing he has to determine: is it a restaurant or a delicatessen or is it a club; or is it a snack bar.

If he sells bowls, he's okay. If the fellow is running a restaurant, he can sell a bowl; but he can't sell an exhaust canopy or food wrapping equipment. Mobile buffets, wagons and cooking things are not exempt.

The other point is this: When an individual walks in, once it's been determined it's a restaurant, a delicatessen, a club or a snack bar, the person has to say: "Are you buying a whole piece of equipment? Because if I'm selling you parts for the repair and maintenance of this equipment, you can have it but you have to pay the tax."

Do you see what I mean? There should be some high-priced lawyer cross-examining the individual who walks in to determine exactly who he's selling to and what type of equipment he's going to have.

I think I've made the point of the onus imposed on people in this business and that the complaints of this constituent of mine are well founded. Surely when we're enacting laws we should try to put forward something more simple, especially considering that these people are collecting taxes for the government. It's bad enough trying to run a business today, just trying to stay ahead of the overhead, trying to keep your head above water, without having to go through this rigmarole of having this type of responsibility forced on the individual. If he makes a mistake it's got to come out of his pocket, doesn't it? He has to pay it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We'll be very lenient.

Mr. Roy: You'll be very lenient. I would hope so. With that type of directive sent to individuals I would trust that you would be.

I think the point has been made that surely when laws are being passed, when regulations are being enacted, we should try to get some logic, we should have to have something comprehensive so that individuals aren't faced with a responsibility which, to all intents and purposes is impossible for the ordinary business individual to meet.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Some of the concerns the honourable member has expressed are certainly concerns of ours. It is a difficult situation, and a difficult one to administer.

In our ministry we have discussed some of the points the member has mentioned quite a few times before bringing the legislation here. However, I would remind the member there are district taxation offices that anyone who has a problem can certainly phone for a ruling. It's really that simple.

The member didn't have any problem telling me which ones were exempt and which ones were not by the list that's already been supplied. He was able to say that canopies were not exempt and stoves were. I think that's fairly explicit in the bulletin.

I would remind the member, also, that this will come under regulations; we will be looking at it a little more closely to try to iron out some of the concerns the member has.

In the meantime—and I believe it's contained somewhere in the bulletin—if they do have a question, if they are concerned about something or there's something they don't understand, they can call the district taxation office and get a ruling. Once they've done that they're not going to be held liable if a mistake has been made.

I've also instructed the staff that initially, while this program is moving ahead slowly, they should not be too tough on people who make mistakes, because it is a new law and it is a case of a few mistakes being made; we understand that.

The other thing I would like to say relates to the difference between clubs and restaurants. A club, obviously, would be a licensed club so they would have a licence to produce if that were necessary; however we've had some concerns, particularly about the definition of hotels, motels and the ones you talked about initially at the top of the page. We just haven't been able to come up with a definition that's any better than the one we have.

Mr. Roy: What's the difference between a delicatessen and a restaurant?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: When we pass the regulations we will try to make it more definitive than what we have in the bulletin, but we had to get the bulletin out immediately, because as you know the tax was effective on April 11 and they had to have some guidelines. That's not to say corrections cannot be made, and certainly they will be considered. I appreciate your bringing it to our attention.

Mr. Roy: The point I wanted to make is that even with the best of laws, the laws that are thought out, the ones we think are precise and the meaning is very clear, when you talk about tax laws there are always questions. When you set up these laws and they are enacted for the public, we always come up with question marks. What is the definition of this or that? The point I am trying to make is that we can see the problems even now, here; so imagine how bad this is going to be for others. There are some problems right here with this type of definition. We can see question marks all over the place.

I understand the difficulty the ministry officials have. I understand that the ministry officials will be most co-operative and the district offices will be co-operative, but the fact remains you can't be asking a businessman to be calling up a district office on each and every transaction. So we should force ourselves, when we're passing legislation or when we're sending forth regulations, to draft so that at least it's clear in our own minds what is meant, so that we have definitions that are clear and we have something which the ordinary lay person can look at and understand. Even at that we're going to have problems, but here we're sending out something, I'm suggesting to you, which is full of loopholes and which is full of question marks. I think it's unfair to people like this individual who is in the hotel restaurant supply business. I think it's an unfair onus to impose on individuals.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As I stated earlier we will look at it again, it will be in the form of a regulation.

The other thing I might mention to the honourable member is that you have to remember that this is actually a temporary exemption. It sunsets in 1981, so it's not something that is going to be etched in stone forever. Therefore, there are perhaps going to be some problems with it, but to cover all the items we have covered I don't think anyone can come up with something that nobody is going to have a question on. It's not that simple, because when you list one item then there is something that is very close to that one and people wonder whether that is exempt or isn't it?

Stoves and exhaust fans are good examples. In my estimation, it is all part and parcel of the same thing, and yet it isn't under this legislation. If you asked me why I would advise you there was a certain amount of dollars that we could afford to put into the tourist industry and the restaurant business and we had to draw the line somewhere; in that particular instance it happened to be between the stove and the exhaust fan.

Mr. Roy: Maybe you could answer a question for me. Why would kitchen refrigeration equipment be exempt and why would parts for the repair and maintenance of that equipment not be exempt? Why would you have that distinction on something like that?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would suggest to you that when you talk about repairs and parts, and so on, that could go into any refrigerator in anybody's house if someone so desired. If they purchase a piece of restaurant equipment for a restaurant they are exempt, but the same parts that would repair that one could also repair the refrigerator in your house or mine and we would have no way of controlling that.

Mr. Roy: With respect, you fail to see the first step. My constituent is going to have to determine what the fellow is operating before he can give an exemption. If he sells a blender, bowls or broilers he is going to have to determine that he is selling either to a hotel, motel, restaurant and all that stuff, okay?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: What's the difference?

Mr. Roy: What's the difference? He's going to have to do it whether it's going to be for the actual equipment or for the repair equipment, that's what I don't understand.

Mr. Conway: I thought the Premier had the answer to that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mine was very simple. Dial the taxation office.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I believe under the legislation they do have to produce an exemption certificate number, so perhaps that is right. I have no idea. If that is the case, I really don't know why the parts are not exempt and the refrigerator itself or the piece of equipment is.

Again I can only say there is a limitation to the amount of dollars we were prepared to put into this and somewhere the line had to be drawn and perhaps that is where it was drawn.

Mr. Roy: I don't like where you've drawn the line.

Mr. Worton: As I interpreted the remarks of the member for Ottawa East, you are not going to exempt exhaust systems. Quite frankly, as one who has been in the food business and with the thinking today on health protection, I don't think there is anything more important than having a proper ventilating system in any shop, whether it be a foundry or food outlet. I think you should seriously consider that because that is a must today in any food establishment.

I spoke to your officials, who were very helpful, and to you about the smoke detectors which are on the market. There is a great play being made for people to install them. It was brought to my attention that there are three variations of the smoke detector; one is for smoke, one is for open flame and the third is a combination of both. There is some clarification needed on that particular item. I haven't heard back from either you or your officials on it. Again I would implore you to reconsider what the member for Ottawa East has said about the exhaust systems and ventilating systems.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will reconsider the exhaust systems. I don't think that is a major item one way or the other as far as tax is concerned.

We did look into smoke alarms. The reason we are exempting only smoke alarms as such, rather than the ones triggered by heat, is that it is my understanding the ones triggered by heat are usually not put in residences but are put in commercial buildings where the heat has to get to a fairly high degree before the alarm goes off. Our thrust here was to encourage people to put smoke detectors in residences. That is the reason the ones triggered by heat were not considered, only the ones triggered by smoke.

It is my understanding the ones triggered by heat are not put into homes because they require too high a degree of temperature to set them off.

Mr. Worton: The distributor who brought it to my attention certainly indicated to me they were becoming a large installation in homes. I can understand what you said about certain homes, depending on the type of heating, but we are talking now about an open flame alarm system. When I was speaking to our fire chief, he expressed some concern. There are some alarms that go off with the open flame and the smoke detectors will not do that. I think what is good for one should be good enough for the other.

Mr. Conway: Do you remember how storm doors got into the budget last year? Do you remember that one?

Hon. Mr. Davis: That wasn't me. That was Kathleen.

Mr. Conway: It gave me a new insight on public policy.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will give the member the assurance we will look at it again. If the information you have given me is accurate, we will accept them along with the smoke detectors.

Mr. M. Davidson: I understand a position has been placed by members of our party with regard to the purchase of equipment manufactured in Canada. The amendment I suggested said in effect that "provided such furnishings or food preparation equipment were manufactured in Canada." I understand that amendment was defeated. I do, however, remind the minister of a few words that I suggested to him when this was first presented to the House. I suggested to the minister at that time that there were fully owned Canadian manufacturers in the Cambridge and Kitchener area and, now that the member for Guelph has spoken, there are fully owned Canadian manufacturers of the kinds of goods he is talking about in the Guelph area.

I realize that the amendment placed under section 3 on behalf of the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton) did not get through, but I would like to suggest to the minister that even though he is going to allow the exemption for all goods purchased by these people, be they manufactured in Canada or the United States of America, he should consider sending out a bulletin to the tourist industry and the hotel/motel accommodators who are going to purchase this equipment, stating that even though the exemption applies to any equipment purchased, as far as his ministry is concerned preference should be given to equipment manufactured in Ontario or in Canada; they should purchase that equipment rather than equipment manufactured outside the boundaries of Canada or Ontario.

I would suggest that to the minister, because I believe the manufacturers in the Cambridge, Kitchener and Guelph areas would appreciate that as would the workers in those areas who are very much concerned about the jobs they have because of the influx of imported materials going into the very industries to which he is referring. He should send a directive from his ministry to the effect that even though the exemption applies to any goods purchased, he and his ministry would prefer that if possible they buy goods manufactured either in Canada or Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I think that's a reasonable suggestion and I'd be prepared to accept it. I, along with all other members of the House, am aware that there is a program in the province that says "Shop Canadian" so why can't we extend it in the form of a bulletin to those people you are referring to? I'd be quite happy to do that.

Sections 4 to 9, inclusive, agreed to.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 59, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that section 7 of the bill amending section 33 of the act be amended by striking out "14 per cent" in the fifth line and substituting therefor "15 per cent."

In my mind, that is an increase of taxation and as chairman I would rule that out of order.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, there are four more amendments that have been proposed by the member for Hamilton Mountain related to that particular amendment and I wonder if he wants to proceed with those. The fifth one would stand on its own but I would again ask the chairman for the same ruling he has made on this one.

Mr. Charlton: If the chairman is going to rule the first one out of order, the same would apply to the next three. I don't want you to throw out number four just yet, please.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Since there's an increase from 14 to 15 per cent in the amendment I have before me, I have ruled it out of order and so we will pass section 7.

Section 7 agreed to.

Sections 8 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 11:

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 11. The minister has already suggested he feels it is out of order, but I am going to move it anyway and we will test the water on that one.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Charlton moves that section 11 of the bill be deleted.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, on this one we are again suggesting an increase in taxes and I would refer you to section 15 of the standing orders which says that only a minister of the crown or the executive council can move such an amendment.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Chairman, we would like to dispute the contention that we are increasing a tax by this amendment and this deletion. This exemption as set out in section 11 of the bill is an exemption which did not exist prior to the existence of this bill and does not exist in the Corporations Tax Act. It is a new exemption, so by removing this exemption from the bill, we will not be increasing any tax because the exemption is not there now. It does not exist in present legislation and makes no specific recommendation to a specific tax increase in this section at all. It is merely removing an exemption which the minister is proposing, which does not at present exist in the Corporations Tax Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The bill itself is to place a tax by the removal of an exemption and the motion is to remove that exemption.

Mr. Charlton: The motion is to remove the proposed exemption, not an existing exemption.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, may I say we have already passed the section to which this section refers and therefore they are trying to remove a tax. They are trying to create an exemption.

Mr. Charlton: I might point out, Mr. Chairman, that when we passed the section to which the minister is referring, we did not pass it contingent on this section passing. There is no reference in the section which we passed to this section of the bill, none whatsoever. There may be reference in this section to that section but there is not converse reference. There is no reference in sections 7, 8, 9 or 10 to section 11 of the bill.

Mr. Laughren: He's a corporation lawyer by profession, you know.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any other member wishing to speak to the point we have before us?

Mr. Conway: Very briefly, Mr. Chairman. It would be my impression, from having looked at that particular section the amendment speaks to, that it does substantially affect the pattern of tax exemption intended. To that degree it is clearly out of order. I would concur entirely with the minister's position, lest there be any misapprehension from our point of view.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Were there any other members wishing to speak to this point before the chairman rules? The member for Nickel Belt?

Mr. Laughren: Take the Liberals off the hook with your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I do rule the effect of the bill is to impose a tax that otherwise would not be imposed and it is, therefore, out of order.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Chairman, I sat quietly here and listened to this debate and you have propelled me to my feet.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am glad I have accomplished something in this House.

Mr. Germa: I don't want to do this, but I have to support the amendment put forth by my colleague that you are supplying another loophole to taxation of corporations. That is the whole argument I have with the tax system. You impose a tax and then by devious means you provide exemptions, one after the other, to relieve these people of their just taxation. This is what section 11 is; and that is why I support the proposition that section 11 should be deleted.

"There may be deducted from the tax otherwise payable . . ." is the lead-in to the section, and the whole tax system in Canada and in Ontario leads off with that proposition. You say one thing in the first paragraph and then by the time you get to the end of the legislation there is nothing left. It is like putting a hypodermic needle into an orange: you suck the juice out and say, "Now charge your tax. Levy your 14 per cent now." There is nothing left. It is like whistling in the dark, or whistling up the creek, isn't it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is quite a metaphor. It sounds like a screwdriver.

Mr. Laughren: Rowing in the dark.

Mr. Germa: Let's listen to some of the other exemptions which are provided under the Income Tax Act of Canada, which the government of Ontario goes along with: By the time you come to the exemptions there is nothing left for the people of Ontario to tax, and that is the weakness in the taxation system. I am dealing now only with mining corporations, but it applies universally to all other corporations.

I just happened to have picked up a document entitled Canadian Taxation of Mining Income, by E. N. Holland and R. M. Kemp.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I certainly do appreciate the member for Sudbury's point and I certainly want to listen to it, but I do want to know whether or not the chair is going to entertain the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: No, I have already ruled. But I am very pleased that you, yourself, suggested you were glad to hear the argument. I have ruled that it is out of order and I should really end the debate there. The chair does not claim to be infallible.

Mr. Laughren: The member is speaking to section 11 of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I might suggest to the member who put forward this deletion that the proper method is simply to vote against this section, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. Germa: I am speaking to the proposition under section 11, Mr. Chairman, which says, "There may be deducted from the tax otherwise payable . . . that portion of its taxable income or taxable income earned in Canada . . ." and it goes on and on and on dealing with exemptions. I am speaking to the exemptions in the corporate tax law—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The net effect is that the minister is proposing an exemption and you want to delete that exemption. If the exemption proposed by the minister is deleted, then in fact the amendment is what will be imposing the tax. Therefore, I have ruled that the amendment is out of order, and

I have heard nothing from you that would change my mind.

Perhaps we should go on to the next section of the bill, unless the committee wishes to hear further from the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Germa: Even though you have ruled the amendment out of order, I still resent that we are adding more exemptions to the Corporations Tax Act. I have a right to object.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I appreciate your resentment.

Mr. Germa: Let me tell you about it, Mr. Chairman, and you might agree with me.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You may challenge my ruling if you wish to do so. But I am going to declare section 11 as part of the bill.

Mr. Germa: I am not speaking to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You are speaking to section 11 as such?

Mr. Germa: To section 11, which provides further exemptions to corporations.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That is in order. I have ruled your amendment out of order; you may speak to the section, and you may vote against the section if you are so inclined.

Mr. Germa: I am not proposing any amendments, because I know it is impossible to deal with this minister. He has a closed mind. He is atrophied; he is in a rigid position. He has been listening to his advisers, and I know what they have said. But I still resent further exemptions to the Corporations Tax Act.

What I resent are the loopholes that are deliberately provided in any taxation law—not only in the corporation tax law; they exist in the income tax law or any other tax law. At this time we are talking about the Corporations Tax Act, but the exemptions that are provided both federally and provincially are simply abhorrent and unacceptable to me.

When I refer to a corporation, I am speaking of mining corporations; I am zeroing in on mining corporations because they are what I understand best, coming from the city of Sudbury, where our whole lifestyle is dedicated to and dependent upon mining corporations. Yet over a long period of time I have seen that the mining corporations have not contributed their fair share to the existence of the community or the province in which they exist.

Just listen to this list of exemptions provided for mining corporations under the federal Income Tax Act, which the province of Ontario accepts with certain reservations. In general terms the province of Ontario goes along with these exemptions, and here it is proposing one more.

The figures have been put on the record by my colleague of the benefit to the province of mining corporations; it is an infinitesimal amount when we compare it to the wealth and the value of the minerals produced. I just want to put on the record all of the loopholes that are evident and available and used by mining corporations today when calculating their corporation tax:

(1) Inventory allowance; (2) capital costs allowance; (3) the 25 per cent resource allowance—after January 1, 1976; (4) reserve for unrealized profits on disposing of resource properties; (5) interest expense; (6) Canadian development expense; (7) pre-1972 Canadian exploration and development expenses; (8) foreign exploration and development expenses; (9) Canadian exploration and development expenses; (10) Canadian exploration expenses; (11) earned depletion; (12) charitable donations; (13) gifts to the crown; (14) dividends from Canadian corporations and foreign affiliates; (15) loss carry-overs.

Those 15 exemptions are applicable Mr. Chairman, before you start calculating your corporate tax. By the time I deduct those 15 exemptions, there's nothing left for the minister to tax. These things include the corporate airplanes, the fancy mahogany boardrooms, and you're asking me why I disagree with granting them another exemption. They don't need another exemption. The mining corporations in Ontario do not need another exemption.

A headline in my local newspaper showed Falconbridge Nickel Mines Limited had $22 million profit in the first quarter of 1979, the highest profit they've seen in their whole history. What is the minister doing this for? Why is he granting this further exemption? He's already granted them the whole world. It's time the people of Ontario realized something from their natural resources.

I'm speaking now, in the whole corporate tax structure, only of mining exemptions. I'm sure it permeates the whole business community. Yet you're willing to grant further exemptions. I'm just amazed.

I understand rule 15 of the standing order—we can't propose an amendment which will alter the tax structure or the revenues of the province of Ontario. But despite rule 15, I have to stand here and oppose this exemption. I hope the minister will take my words into consideration.

Mr. M. Davidson: Point of order: Mr. Chairman, I understand that prior to my arrival in the chamber there was another point of order relating to the acceptance of the amendments placed by the member for Hamilton Mountain with regard to this. I understand also that under the standing orders, the section that was quoted by the chairman at the time was under "Regulation and Management of the House" section 15: "Any bill, resolution, motion or address, the passage of which would impose a tax or specifically direct the allocation of public funds . . ."

I would ask you, as chairman, to take a look at section 15 on page three of the standing orders. I would ask you to determine whether the motion placed by the member for Hamilton Mountain did in fact impose a tax or whether it did in fact specifically direct the allocation of public funds.

I contend that section 11 of the act and the motion moved by the member for Hamilton Mountain delete—and I want to make this very clear—exemptions that have not previously been imposed. Therefore under this section no tax was imposed and unless this is passed, there can be no allocation of public funds.

What I am suggesting to you, Mr. Chairman, is that the point of order made earlier and directed to this very section was correct and should be taken very seriously into consideration by yourself, as the chair, or referred directly to the Speaker or the procedural affairs committee to determine what section 15 of that part of the standing orders actually means.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, we are not asking for the imposition of a tax, nor are we asking that we specifically direct the allocation of public funds, because unless this bill passes there are no public funds available. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to take that into consideration—yourself, the Speaker of the assembly and, if necessary, refer it to the procedural affairs committee.

Mr. Chairman: I'd like to thank the honourable member for his comments. I would have to remind the member that the chairman who was in the chair at the time ruled the amendment out of order.

Mr. Sterling: How are you going to rule?

Mr. Chairman: Order. As that amendment has been ruled out of order by the chair the member has one alternative. He may, if he wishes, challenge the ruling of the chair. If not, we'll continue with further business.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Chairman, it is not my wish to challenge the ruling of the chair. As I said earlier in my comments, what I am asking you, as chairman at the moment—

Mr. Makarchuk: It is not because of the ruling. It is the office we respect.

Mr. M. Davidson: —to do, is to refer, through you to the Speaker of this House and if necessary to the procedural affairs committee of this House, what in fact section 15 on page three means.

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Mr. Rotenberg: You can't do that.

Mr. Chairman: The honourable member is now being repetitious. I appreciate his comments.

Mr. M. Davidson: I'm referring to your comments, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Rotenberg: You can't do that. You want to appeal and it goes to the Speaker.

Mr. M. Davidson: That's all I ask. Read Hansard, David, if you don't understand what I'm saying.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any further comments on section 11? Shall section 11 stand as part of the bill?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."
In my opinion the ayes have it.

Amendment stacked.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Maeck moves that subclause (i) and (ii) of section 126(4)(c) of the act, as set out in section 13(2) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(i) an individual who is a limited partner thereof or a member of his family is a general shareholder or is related to the general partner, or

(ii) a trust, the beneficiaries of which are related to any person mentioned in subclause (i) is a limited partner thereof."

Mr. Laughren: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Did he send a copy of that to us?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, I did.

Mr. M. Davidson: Who got it?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Your critic.

Mr. M. Davidson: He doesn't have it.

Mr. Charlton: When did you send it?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I sent it today before the question period.

Mr. Conway: Lorne, that amendment makes you sound like a Philadelphia lawyer from Parry Sound.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The Liberal critic got one. I'm sorry if you didn't get one, I can send you one over. It was sent over.

Mr. Chairman: We will be dealing with two separate subsections.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Chairman, I am going to read the explanation to this one.

Mr. Conway: Read it slowly, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: This amendment is necessitated because the loophole was not fully corrected by the existing provision in this bill. After amendment, the taxpayer will not be able to avoid or substantially reduce the amount of capital tax which would otherwise be payable had he not had a related person or corporation hold his interest as a general corporate partner of a partnership in which he is a limited partner.

Mr. Conway: Could you amplify that?

Mr. Haggerty: If I read the amendment correctly, the minister has left out the words "of his family owns any share." Is that what he deleted from his amendment? The amendment now reads: "An individual who is a limited partner thereof or a member of his family."

In the original bill it was "his family owns any share." Now the interpretation is a shareholder or is related to the general partner. I just can't understand what this will mean under the act if the words "family owns any share" are removed and just omitting the word "owns" after "family." I don't know what the minister means when he says he is plugging the loophole. It seems to me he has broadened it out, opened it up.

Mr. Conway: Is this the intermission?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I am just trying to make a comparison here.

Mr. Conway: We should have an NFB short.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Perhaps I will have an answer from my staff shortly. It is very difficult, very complicated.

Mr. Haggerty: As I interpret it, it says, "family owns any share of capital stock." The amendment is, "a member of his family is a shareholder."

Hon. Mr. Maeck: As I understand it, the idea behind this amendment is to plug a loophole where the original amendment covered most people who would be able to avoid the tax. I think I have a proper reply here.

The motion to amend the corporations tax bill is in order to block a loophole in the provisions relating to the paid up capital of limited partnerships. Under the amendment in the bill, the paid up capital of a limited partner who is an individual who owns shares in the general partner, is to be added to the paid up capital of the general partner. The original amendment did not include that. The idea of that is to make sure the proper tax is applied.

Under the present wording, the parties could arrange to have such an individual limited partner own the shares of the parent company of the general partner and in such case, the paid up capital of the individual limited partner would not be taxed under the amendment in the bill, since neither he nor members of his family would own any shares in the general partner.

This motion would close this loophole since, in the example I have given, the individual limited partner would be related to the general partner, even though he would not be a shareholder thereof.

There are some problems with this particular act simply because of partnerships. Partnerships, general and others, are formed in order to avoid the payment of tax and that is why this whole section is in here. After we had drawn up this section we located one loophole that was left and that it the one we are trying to close.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The amendment to clause (d) is in relation to the same explanation I just gave. This is just the other part of it. It requires this amendment to make the whole thing work.

[9:00]

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. Maeck moves that section 126(4)(d) of the act as set out in section 13(2) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(d) where two or more general partners of a limited partnership are corporations, and where a limited partner referred to in clause (c) is a shareholder of or is related to two or more of such general partners, the amount allocated to such limited partner under clause (b) shall be apportioned and added to the paid up capital of each general partner of which the limited partner is a shareholder, or to which he is related in the same proportion that the share of the profits of the limited partnership of that general partner is to the total share of the profits of the limited partnership of all the general partners of which the limited partner is a shareholder or to which he is related."

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Chairman, is there a subamendment that would remove the word "partners" from that amendment?

Mr. Chairman: Would the honourable member put that in writing, please?

Mr. Laughren: No, I'll pass.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any more questions?

Mr. Charlton: Yes. Mr. Chairman, Could I just ask the minister if he could put the amendment that he just read into his own words for us?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'm sure if I put it in my own words it would be more understandable but we must have the legal terms to make it legal.

Motion agreed to.

Section 13, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 14 to 23, inclusive, agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I move the committee rise and report.

Mr. Chairman: We have some votes.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I thought they were stacked. Could we have agreement that the votes take place at 10:15 p.m.? We would have to move back into committee of the whole House.

Mr. Chairman: Does the committee agree that we come back to committee to vote? At 10:15 p.m.?

Agreed.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Maeck, the committee of the whole House reported progress.

SUCCESSION DUTY REPEAL ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck, on behalf of Hon. F. S. Miller, moved second reading of Bill 47, An Act to repeal the Succession Duty Act.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The score was 2-2, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: That's the most important information you've given us in some time, Mr. Treasurer.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I really think no introductory comments are needed on this bill. Ontario followed the lead of eight of the other provinces in Canada and decided that the combination of capital gains tax and income taxes were, in our opinion, adequate in terms of the overall taxation of wealth. We followed the lead of provinces such as Saskatchewan which, as recently as two years ago, felt that—

Mr. Warner: They have got resource tax—something you refused to do.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —it was also not necessary any further to take away from the incentives we have in our society for the accumulation of wealth.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer has introduced this bill to abolish the succession duties in Ontario for basically three reasons, as I understand his budget. First of all, he feels that the capital gains taxation has eliminated the need for succession duty tax. Second and I quote from his budget statement: "I am convinced that the continuation of this tax is hurting our economic performance and costing us jobs." The third reason, and I am quoting again from the Treasurer's budget statement: "Our citizens will have one less burdensome concern to deal with in planning their private lives."

I shall return to those comments later, but they do contrast somewhat with the budget statement a year ago, 1977, which said this: "In the past year, the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan have abandoned the succession duty field. As a result, only Manitoba, Quebec and Ontario now levy succession duties and gift taxes. We have reviewed this matter carefully and have concluded that our own statutes should remain in force. They add a valuable degree of equity to the province's tax structure."

At that point, the level of succession duties in Ontario was such that all estates under $300,000 were exempted as a result of the 1977 budget; even with that $300,000 exemption, the Treasurer indicated that it was necessary to retain succession duties. Perhaps when he responds, he could tell us what has changed in the last year.

As we begin what I regard as an important debate—as a matter of fact, I think it is an extremely important debate—I would like to quote a fellow by the name of Harlan Read. This is what Harlan Read said in the introduction to a book which he wrote some years ago. The title of the book is The Abolition of Inheritance. This is what he said, Mr. Speaker, and I hope you will bear with me, because it bears directly on this debate. I quote from page three:

"I intend to prove to you that inherited wealth is the foe of freedom; that it is a violation of the rights of the unborn; that it is the perpetrator of inequalities, robbing the cradle of its opportunity and fastening upon a living generation the authority of the tomb; that it must follow monarchy and slavery into the record of things past, because it is like them both in essence and in detail. Inherited wealth is the father of poverty and aristocracy, and the hearts of mankind today are sick unto death of both.

"The case against inherited wealth is simple and clear, but the evil has been so long entrenched and the minds of men are so reluctant to admit the existence of a new world or a revolutionary thought that I ask your most careful and honest attention to my arguments. I ask you to forget for a time all preconceived ideas and to open your minds frankly and liberally to the truth, no matter how strange and new it may appear. I ask you to forget for the time all obstacles to the accomplishment of the proposed reform and merely to consider whether the principle of inheritance is right or wrong. When that question is settled, we will consider next what can be done to remedy the condition in which we find ourselves. But first let us seek with open mind to discover what is right.

"I must assume at the outset of my argument that each reader is interested—deeply interested—in the vital problem I am to present. I must take it for granted that I am writing for sane, healthy, earnest men and women who feel as I do the miseries of little children who hear as I do the groaning of strong men burdened with the yoke of undeserved poverty who hope as I do that the time of deliverance is at hand. More than that, I must assume that my proposal to destroy the privilege of inheriting fortunes suggests the possibility of relief that is well worth the thought that you, as readers, have undertaken to give it."

That was from The Abolition of Inheritance, by Harlan Eugene Read, the year 1918, and very little has changed in the thoughts expressed in that introduction to his book. That is how we feel. This government talks about the necessity of providing incentives both at the personal level and at the corporate level. The Treasurer is very fond of talking about incentives. But isn't it strange that when he talks about incentives for the corporate level it is that there are never enough and there have got to be more. When he talks about incentives at the personal level it is that there is too much there now and we have got to take away a little or we will destroy the incentive of the individual.

That is the difference in the mind of the Treasurer and the party he represents. For the corporate sector it is always, "We have got to give more in order to create incentive." With the personal level it is, "We can't give so much or we will take away incentive." What kind of logic is that? Well, we know what kind of logic it is; it is elitist logic.

This government wears its hypocrisy like a neon garment. There is no better example than the Treasurer and there was no better example than the Treasurer on budget night. That is exactly what he was doing.

The Treasurer talks about personal productivity, about the need to keep social assistance at a level so that there will be an incentive to work—he is very fond of talking about that. It is obvious, even in a relative sense, that in his eyes plenty at the personal level causes sloth.

That is what he thinks when he is looking at the individual out there in society: plenty causes sloth. That is what he thinks when he is talking about applying the revenues from the consolidated revenue fund to the family benefits levels or the minimum wage in the province. That is what he is afraid of. He is afraid that plenty will cause sloth. If that were true we would be paying family benefits to the Eatons, the Westons, the Bronfmans and all those other families who have inherited great wealth.

There is no other tax that so clearly draws the line between that party and this party, not to mention the Liberal Party of Ontario. No other tax so clearly speaks to the presence of income classes in our society as this inheritance tax, and no other tax so starkly presents a picture of the presence of wealth in the presence of people who have so little as the abolition of a succession duty or a death tax. The abolishment of no other tax would so clearly perpetuate an economic system that plainly and simply does violence to human potential, to personal potential.

Opposing no other tax abolishment would give me so much satisfaction or so much a sense of justification as opposing the abolishment of succession duties in this province. Abolishing succession duties is abolishing, plain and simply, a tax on wealth. It is a declaration of war on equity; that is what the Treasurer has done. It is a declaration of war on the redistribution of wealth in our society; make no mistake about it, that is exactly what it is. The Treasurer understands that and his advisers understand that as well. The Treasurer has indeed thrown down the gauntlet to us, and we cannot accept it, we cannot accept this bill.

Mr. Hall: You disagree with Blakeney, do you?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, as a matter of fact, I will get to that in a moment about the abolishment of succession duties.

I would call upon the Liberal Party in Ontario to support us in opposing the abolishment of succession duties in Ontario. Would the members do that?

Mr. Nixon: You want double taxation on it, do you?

Mr. Hall: You are the last holdout, Floyd.

Mr. Laughren: It is very interesting to hear the Liberal Party speaking like this. This is not simply a bill that will cost the Ontario Treasury $28 million this year; it is much, much more than that. This is a bill that is steeped in principle and tradition.

I feel that this bill demeans the democratic process in Ontario because of its intent. I mean that. The Treasurer has demeaned the democratic process in Ontario and I will tell you why.

I do not believe that this government has received any mandate from the people in Ontario to so blatantly hand over a gift such as this to the top three per cent in our society. The minister has received no such mandate. He has taken it upon himself to cater to the whims and wishes of that group of three per cent, only three per cent, but he has received no mandate to do so, none whatsoever.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am catering to the 97 per cent who hope to be part of the three per cent.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, that's very interesting. That really does speak to the minister's philosophy, doesn't it? That's very interesting and it is nice to have it on the record. What the Treasurer is saying is that he is willing to write off 97 per cent because they have his base desire to join the top three per cent.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am catering to the 97 per cent who want to be.

Mr. Laughren: No, no. The Treasurer is saying that he believes that 97 per cent of the people out there have the same base desire as he does to join the top three per cent, at the expense of the bottom 97 per cent I might add. One doesn't get to the top without climbing over the people on the bottom and he knows it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Have a secret ballot in your party.

Mr. Laughren: We'll see. I feel very strongly that this Treasurer and this government have not received a mandate to do this for the top three per cent of the population of Ontario, three per cent of income earners. I didn't hear the minister talk about that in his last election campaign, but he will talk about it in his next one, I promise him that. Because that is exactly what he is doing.

The Treasurer talks about capital gains and that we don't want double taxation. The Liberal Party does as well. What a lot of nonsense. What he doesn't tell everybody is a couple of minor points. One, capital gains are taxed only at 50 per cent. You only pay tax on 50 per cent of capital gains anyway. Two, there is no capital gains tax in Ontario as a provincial taxation measure. There is none.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are wrong.

Mr. Laughren: There is the federal capital gains tax—

Hon. F. S. Miller: We get that back.

Mr. Laughren:—which applies to the province of Ontario on 50 per cent of the capital gains realized. What the Treasurer is engaging in is, quite frankly, a deception. Perhaps the Treasurer could tell us when an estate is left in Ontario now, what tax will the heirs pay on the amount they receive from that estate? What tax will they pay? When the Treasurer responds, perhaps he could tell us.

This bill will cost this government dearly. The minister shakes his head, he smirks. And the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch)—what a joke. Social development. If anyone over there should be concerned about an iniquitous bill like this, it is the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. I don't expect anything better from the flimflam man from Muskoka, but the Provincial Secretary for Social Development should know better.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You never learned much about farming. You feed the chickens to get the eggs. You don't cut their heads off.

Mr. Laughren: I want to tell the minister, I've heard all that before. It only applies to the rich, doesn't it? The only trouble with the Treasurer is that he only provides incentives to the rich. When he provides it to the poor, he says it kills incentive. What kind of double standard is that? That's hypocrisy and the Treasurer knows it.

Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer talks about the need for economic stimulation, the need to create jobs in Ontario. Because of the high unemployment rate in Ontario and elsewhere in this country, it's being used for everything. It is being used to justify everything from unsafe conditions on the job to pollution of the environment, to nuclear development.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And to the bill before us?

Mr. Laughren: Yes. This Treasurer, Mr. Speaker, would approve a germ warfare testing centre in downtown Toronto if he thought it would create employment. That's where his head is when it comes to the creation of jobs.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, the need to create jobs has become the latest refuge for the scoundrel. That's what it's become. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer is indeed a scoundrel.

Hon. F. S. Miller: On a point of order: Isn't that getting—I'm many things but—

Mr. Nixon: You have gone too far. Withdraw "scoundrel" and substitute something else.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appreciate the words used by the member for Nickel Belt, but I'm sure he could find something probably a little more parliamentary.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I did try. I would say that the Treasurer is engaging in fiscal deceit; he is using specious arguments to justify his own elitist determination to protect that segment of our society that fawns on him. That's exactly what he's doing. He is simply protecting the property of those who need no protection at all.

I would quote from a paper entitled 'Transfer Taxes: Their Effect on Productivity and Control of our Economy,' by John Savage and D. Van Den Bulcke, a paper prepared for the Ontario Economic Council in 1968. This is what they have to say about the succession duties in Ontario, which first came into effect in 1892.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That was before capital gains.

Mr. Laughren: "Quilted in 1892, the now holey and drafty Ontario Succession Duty Act has been patched and fringed over the past 75 years until today it is a tattered and frayed remnant, providing the most complete coverage of those estates whose possessors have likely been similarly attired in relative tatters, while the heirs of the well-advised capitalists are attired in relative splendour as the benefactors of a carefully planned delivery of their successions through one or more of those gaping holes."

That's what we think, and others think, of the kind of tax system we've got in the province of Ontario. The Treasurer should know that already in the province of Ontario there are exemptions for all estates up to $300,000. Who is the Treasurer weeping for?

The Treasurer's remark the night the budget was presented was that egalitarianism is b.s. Mr. Speaker, you called me to order for using the word "scoundrel," which so aptly describes this Treasurer. That was not a thoughtless or a throwaway remark by the Treasurer. It was an expression of this Treasurer's contempt for those who have made his life so comfortable. That's exactly what it was.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I came here to suffer.

Mr. Laughren: His life is comfortable because others made it possible for him to be comfortable. He did not achieve it on his own.

Mr. Nixon: He worked hard. He took tickets at Santa's Village.

Mr. Roy: So much for free enterprise.

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer says that the abolishment of succession duties—

Mr. Ashe: Where does Morty Shulman stand on this one?

Mr. Laughren: I'm the wrong person to ask about the views of Morty Shulman.

The Treasurer says the abolishment of succession duties will make life less burdensome for people. Again what an outrageous deception from the Treasurer. The abolishment of this tax will make life less burdensome for people who already have no burdens, the top three per cent. Does he really think the top three per cent have financial burdens?

Later I'll get to the Treasurer's argument about how succession duties crunch the families who are recipients of a small business. The Treasurer says that other Canadian jurisdictions have abandoned succession duties. He's right, they have; except for Quebec, other jurisdictions have abandoned succession duties.

Mr. Conway: What kind of watered-down socialist are there out west?

Mr. Laughren: I think they are wrong too. I would say that at least when NDP governments have abolished succession duties they replaced them with progressive taxes. You've done the opposite; we in Ontario have the worst of both worlds from this Treasurer. He abolishes succession duties and imposes regressive taxes. That's a lot different from what NDP governments would do in any province in this country.

Mr. Ashe: There aren't many more NDP governments than there are Liberal ones.

Mr. Laughren: This Treasurer has given us the most regressive tax system of any province in Canada and, quite frankly, has earned our contempt for that. I mean that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Without question, that is a badge of honour.

Mr. Laughren: As a Treasurer, he has earned our contempt with this budget he has brought in. I mince no words with him. That is exactly how we feel.

The Treasurer knows that when a tax such as this one, the succession duties, is abolished, those moneys have to be found somewhere else. Guess where the Treasurer finds them. We know, don't we?

Mr. Nixon: Where? Tell us.

Mr. Laughren: We have been debating some of them tonight: sales taxes, Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums. Did my friend really not know?

Mr. Nixon: I can guess.

Mr. Laughren: I think he did. From sales taxes, from the tax on cable television to the gasoline tax, the Treasurer found his replacements to make up for the taxes that were lost from the top three per cent. Ordinary working people will derive no benefit whatsoever from the abolishment of this tax. As a matter of fact, they will pay more, because they have to make up for the lost revenues from the abolishment of succession duties.

Perhaps the Treasurer can get up and tell me how the construction worker, the miner, the teacher, the civil servant, the farmer, the small businessman are going to benefit. How is the truly small businessman going to benefit from the abolishment of this tax? Perhaps he can tell us who is going to benefit from the abolishment of this tax. We know who is going to benefit. We know full well.

In 1967, the Ontario committee on taxation had something to say about succession duties. As a matter of fact, they had quite a bit to say about succession duties.

Mr. Nixon: That was a royal commission; it was headed by Lancelot Smith.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, it certainly was; and it had some very good things to say about succession duties. I would like to quote to you, Mr. Speaker, because I know that, with your numerous duties, perhaps you have not had a chance to read all the comments that the Smith committee made on succession duties.

Mr. Nixon: It wasn't a select committee.

Mr. Laughren: I'm sorry; did I say "select committee"? I didn't mean a select committee. It was a royal commission. It was a select committee of this Legislature that examined the Smith report.

This is a quotation from the Ontario committee on taxation:

"Wealth taxes cannot be justified in any form at the provincial level by any strict interpretation of the principle of benefits received. Yet there is considerable merit in the point of view that holds that the private accumulation and maintenance of wealth are made possible, in good part, by the actions of government in creating and protecting the economic and social structure within which such assets are amassed. This contribution by government is surely of greater value than the cost of providing the services paid for through taxes. It can be argued that the state, as a silent partner in the accumulation of private fortunes, properly should share on behalf of all citizens in the prosperity of its more affluent members."

Perhaps the Treasurer wishes to be a bigger partner in the accumulation of wealth but then not make any claims against that accumulation as a partner. Talk about being a silent partner; he is a dumb partner. He is not going to get anything out of his contribution to the partnership.

The report goes on to say:

"Since the strength and growth and indeed the very foundations of our economic system depend upon the willingness and ability of private citizens to accumulate and invest capital, these consequences are held to be anathema. On the other hand, a democratic society such as ours, espousing political equality for all its citizens, cannot permit undue concentration of wealth in the hands of a few. Though differences in wealth will always be with us, extremes of affluence and poverty must be prevented in the interests of a stable society. While other arguments may have been added in the theoretical support of egalitarianism, there is a continuing validity to Plato's warning that the state should avoid riches and poverty"—speaking of Plato, in walks my colleague the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor—"for the one produces luxury and idleness and revolution, the other revolution and meanness and villainy besides." A reasonable tax on wealth is one way of ensuring a proper balance between these two objectives, capital accumulation and control of extremes of wealth."

That sounds most reasonable to most reasonable men because most of us would agree that death taxes, succession duties—it doesn't really matter what you call them—are in fact a tax on wealth. Quoting from the Smith committee:

"Death taxes, if adequately protected by gift taxes, are admirably suited to control the growth in this country of an economically powerful minority whose influence is based upon inherited wealth. By this device the amount of capital that passes from one generation to another can be controlled, an essential safeguard for the basic fabric of a democratic society.

"Moreover, because the tax is not payable until death, this end is achieved with a minimum deterrent to working and saving during a man's earning and creative life. We realize, however, that the objective of limiting undue accumulations of wealth can be defeated by sophisticated tax planning."

The Smith committee recognized the validity of this but also put in a proviso that they understood that sophisticated tax planning could avoid a lot of this. They go on:

"From the foregoing discussion of the various forms of wealth taxes we conclude that Ontario should impose a tax on wealth, and this tax should take the form of a death tax."

I know what the minister is going to say. He is going to say we now have capital gains tax and therefore we can forgo succession duties. What a joke. Is he really making a relationship between capital gains tax and taxes that pass at the time of death of a wealthy person? They are totally different principles and the Treasurer should understand that.

I want to quote further from the Smith report.

"There is no doubt that death duties which are imposed at progressive rates weigh more heavily on the rich than the poor."

That in itself is reason enough in the Treasurer's mind to abolish the tax, that in itself is reason enough to abolish the inheritance tax and raise OHIP premiums. It really is wearisome to have to cope with the Treasurer's persistent drive to make our tax system ever more regressive.

I would like to perhaps anticipate an objection of the Treasurer by quoting further from Smith:

"We have been told that succession duties have a harmful effect on owners of private businesses. It is contended that the tax forces the sale of businesses, often at the most inconvenient and critical times, frequently resulting, it is alleged, in the expatriation of the ownership of Canadian concerns.

"We have also been told that elderly entrepreneurs do not respond to pressures to continue the expansion of their businesses because of the need for consolidation of and the provision of liquidity in their estates.

"We have been deeply concerned with these arguments since we would seek to avoid any consequences of tax policy that prejudice Canadian ownership of business enterprises within an expanding economy.

"However, not only did no one present to us any conclusive examples of Canadian-owned businesses having been sold to foreign interests because of death duties, but our own researchers were equally fruitless in bringing specific cases to light and in each instance of which we are aware, succession duties were at best a marginal consideration, not the motivating or deciding factor in the sale."

Mr. Lawlor: That's right.

Mr. Laughren: A final quote from Smith has to do with the province of Alberta, because I know the Treasurer will dredge up every conceivable excuse to justify this elitist kind of taxation.

Mr. Lawlor: Alberta does more to destroy this country than Quebec.

Mr. Laughren: I quote from Smith:

"Recently the government of Alberta has enacted legislation to refund to the estates of domiciliaries and certain residents the portion of the federal estate tax which is paid over to that province. Saskatchewan has indicated that it may take similar action. There has also been some agitation in Quebec to abandon the succession duties.

"In our opinion it would be improper for Ontario to repeal its death tax. For the reasons we have given we consider the succession duty to be the most appropriate method of taxing wealth in the provincial tax system." So let us dispose of all the arguments that have to do with why the Treasurer is abolishing succession duties and get right to the heart of it: It is a tax on wealth, and that is what the Treasurer is fundamentally and ideologically opposed to. That is the only reason he is doing it.

Mr. Speaker, lest you think that the Smith committee was expressing views that were radical and not expressed in earlier years, I would like to take you back a few years to some people who expressed similar views; people from—there are quite a few, as a matter of fact—John Stuart Mill, with whom I know the Treasurer communicates.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What's the date of the book? When was it published?

Mr. Laughren: This book was published in 1918.

Mr. Bounsall: The Treasurer had it in first-year English. He took the same course as I did; so I know he had to read it.

Mr. Laughren: Is the minister saying that because John Stuart Mill said it many years ago that it is therefore invalid?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No. I just wanted the date for rebuttal.

Mr. Lawlor: The Treasurer hasn't had a single new thought since 1918.

Mr. Laughren: I know the Treasurer would like to know what John Stuart Mill would say. Writing in his autobiography, John Stuart Mill said—and he is talking about himself and his wife: "We look forward to a time when society will no longer be divided into the idle and the industrious; when the rule that they who do not work shall not eat will be applied not to paupers only but impartially to all." Does the Treasurer know what that means? It means that people who inherit a large amount of wealth can be as idle as people who have no wealth. But we do not talk about them that way. We only talk about people being idle who do not have wealth, and the Treasurer would abolish this wealth tax.

There also was Jeremy Bentham. He was, as my colleague from Lakeshore should be, a renowned jurist—

Mr. Lawlor: I haven't got time.

Mr. Laughren: —my colleague who some day will be a renowned jurist.

Mr. Nixon: If he wants to be a renowned jurist, you people ought to take up a collection for him.

Mr. Lawlor: All donations gratefully received.

Mr. Laughren: Jeremy Bentham also dabbled in economics; so the Treasurer should listen to him. What Jeremy Bentham would do is have all inheritances revert to the state, because he could see the evils of inheriting great wealth.

A little later than those fellows, there was the Minnesota Tax Commission. They had this to say, talking about inheritance tax: "This method of increasing the public revenue is wise, simple and effective." Think of those three words: "wise, simple and effective." "Wise, because it does not touch private property during the life of the owner and thus places no burden on business activity. Simple, because the tax is easily ascertained and collected while estates are in a probate court. Effective, because by the application of progressive rates it adds no burden to the poor but permits those who have much to contribute to the government somewhat in proportion to their ability to pay. It invades no natural rights. It violates no maxim of the law. It overleaps no constitutional barriers. It is neither revolutionary nor socialistic." Well, I will continue anyway. "But it is on the contrary a measure of practical wisdom and social justice and has been truly styled an institution of democracy. Another desirable feature of the inheritance tax is that it cannot be shifted." It is, I say, to the Treasurer, a tax that is wise, simple and effective. Perhaps that in itself is reason enough for the Treasurer to abolish it.

I would not want the Treasurer to think that I was quoting only from people who have the same background as I. There was a fellow of the Treasurer's ilk who had something to say about inheritance taxes too. His name was—is the Treasurer ready for this—Andrew Carnegie. This is what your friend Andy had to say. He said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope the honourable member is aware of standing rule 19(d)(4).

Mr. Laughren: No, I am not. Perhaps you could put it to me. Would you do that?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: "In debate, a member shall be called to order by the Speaker if he . . . in the opinion of the Speaker, refers at length to debates of the current session, or reads unnecessarily from verbatim reports of the legislative debates or any other document." So I would just ask the honourable member to refrain from extending that rule.

Mr. Van Horne: It's the equivalent to wearing argyle socks, Floyd.

Mr. McClellan: That would really take care of ministerial statements, wouldn't it?

Mr. Van Horne: It is called the Laughren syndrome.

Mr. Laughren: I don't understand whether the Speaker is making a rule or not. Are you really telling me that I cannot quote from people like Jeremy Bentham and John Stuart Mill and Andrew Carnegie, who have not been in this Legislature for years? Cannot I quote them to substantiate an argument I am making on second reading in a highly principled debate? Is that what you are saying, Mr. Speaker? If you are not, I will carry on with what Mr. Carnegie said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I appreciate the question posed by the honourable member. I believe that standing order states that reading from debates or other papers are within order for a short space of time, if they are not too lengthy.

Mr. McClellan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, do I take your ruling to mean that from now on we will not have ministerial statements read at the beginning of the House every day?

Mr. Ruston: That doesn't deserve an answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I was just informing the honourable member of the standing order set out in the legislative standing orders.

Ms. Gigantes: A very short reading.

Mr. Van Horne: A very short member.

Mr. Laughren: I honestly thought it would be making a contribution to debate in the Ontario Legislature to quote from people like John Stuart Mill and Jeremy Bentham, but if you rule otherwise that's fine, because you live with the ruling.

Mr. McClellan: Whom do you expect to enforce it?

Mr. Laughren: And I find it surprising that no one quote has been at length—no one quote from any source has been at length.

Mr. Van Horne: Ad nauseam, but not at length.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will permit me to give two short quotes from Andrew Carnegie. He said: "The almighty dollar bequeathed to children is an almighty curse. No man has a right to handicap his son with such a burden as great wealth." Well, that's Andrew Carnegie.

Mr. Nixon: Did your father believe that too?

Ms. Gigantes: Is that wrong, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer would probably regard that as blasphemy, but that's what Andrew Carnegie said. Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that there are—

Mr. Lawlor: It's what the Liberal members of the Smith committee said too. I was on it. It was my baptism of fire. I was burned, I never got over it.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, we know there are ideological differences between this party and the government and the official opposition—

Mr. Conway: I don't believe it for a moment.

Mr. Laughren: —but we sometimes forget just how profound those differences are. Every now and again a bill like this comes along to jog our memory.

We, as socialists, believe that we have an obligation as legislators to work towards a more egalitarian society. We believe that an egalitarian society can best be achieved in a society that encourages co-operation and sharing. We are opposed to predatory behaviour, whether in competitive practices or in the accumulation of wealth. We think that the accumulation of wealth by a very small minority is dependent upon predatory practices.

It follows then that the passing on of accumulated wealth to succeeding generations can only lead to a society motivated more by meanness than by generosity. That's how we feel as New Democrats and I would urge the Liberal Party to stand with us in opposing this bill. This is not a bill that should pass through the Legislature of this province. If I have failed to inspire the Liberal Party—

Some hon. members. You have.

Mr. Laughren: If I have failed to inspire you—

Mr. Ruston: You have read too much from that book.

Mr. Martel: What did Bob Nixon say in the last debate on this?

Mr. Samis: There are many Liberals who have failed to inspire them.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, if you have a sense, as I do, that I have not inspired the Liberal Party, perhaps I could—and I know you are going to keep a close eye on me here—go back a little bit in time to what was said a couple of years ago, well it was 1973 and 1974, when there were amendments to the Succession Duty Act. In 1973—I will be very, very brief—Mr. Breithaupt said—and I think Mr. Breithaupt in 1973 was the Treasury critic. He said:

“We believe that it is quite reasonable and logical for the province to accept the responsibility and to share in the benefit of taxation of large estates as they pass between generations. We would not like to see that removed, because I think that even though there are a small number of such estates, the benefits which are received are a reasonable expectation of the sharing by the community in the facilities which the community has in fact provided, that has allowed this wealth, at least to a degree, to have been accumulated and developed in the first place.”

That was the position of the Liberal Party in 1973.

Mr. Martel: Oh, they've switched again.

Mr. Samis: Even the member for Renfrew North agrees with that.

Mr. Laughren: We move on to the next year in which the Succession Duty Act was amended, which was 1974. I can't go on without stopping for a moment and paying tribute—I know I will embarrass him—to my colleague from Lakeshore who made the definitive statement on inheritance succession duty taxes back in 1973.

Mr. Lawlor: I give up on them now.

Mr. Laughren: It was one of the finest addresses that I have ever read.

Mr. Conway: Give us a paraphrase.

Mr. Laughren: No, no. The Speaker would rule me out of order. I won't do that to you.

But I would move on to 1974 when there was a further amendment to the Succession Duty Act, and this is none other than the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, Haldimand, Dehli, Caledonia, Hagersville—

Mr. Martel: What did he say? Tell us what he said. He is blushing. Tell us what Bob Nixon said.

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: I will try and be brief, but he was articulate on that particular day, and this is from page 3335 of Hansard, Monday, June 17, 1974.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, what a black day that was.

Mr. Nixon: One of the better days in the Legislature.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Nixon said, “Frankly”—I am quoting now—“I support the principle of maintaining succession duties.”

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Will the member address the chair, please, rather than the members of his party?

Mr. Nixon: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: I do not want to be accused of taking it out of context, so I want to finish.

Mr. Nixon: I don't mind.

Mr. Laughren: After he said: “Frankly, I support the principle of maintaining succession duties. And I must admit to you, sir, a certain distinct problem in my own mind: I suppose we can all think of instances when people who had a great influence on us in earlier years, expressed opinions. I can recall sitting around our breakfast table at home in St. George, reading the Globe and Mail, when the estate of the late Harry Oakes was probated. You may recall, sir, that Harry Oakes was a multimillionaire who had done extremely well out of the resources of this province. He had moved to Nassau for tax reasons—also I understand the climate is quite pleasant down there—and he had moved most of his assets with him. Though we shouldn't forget the fact that he had left certain emoluments to the province, like the Harry Oakes garden in Niagara Falls and certain other things, he really took most of his assets with him. But some of them were not transportable, and upon his, what you would call I suppose untimely death—which was never solved”—I didn't know you could solve deaths, but anyway—“the province of Ontario saw fit to tax $8 million in succession duties on his estate. I remember expressing to my father, the former member for Brant, some surprise at the size of that tax bite, and my sainted father"—I don't dare add to this—"saying, 'You shouldn't be so worried; it should be 10 times that big.'"

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: The member goes on, and I still don't want to take him out of context: "I've always felt sort of as the aftermath of his opinion that succession duties have been historically a basic and important means to redistribute wealth, wealth that was garnered by hard work, perspicacity, intelligence and undoubtedly good luck. The succeeding generations, while they have always had access normally during the lifetime of the patron of the family to good education and certain other assets, I have always felt—"

Mr. Nixon: Is this still me?

Mr. Laughren: "—should not be so unduly favoured as to be able to take the estate without decrease by succession duties."

I will not go on. But finally, he says, after some interjections, "I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I am glad the government has renounced, at least for the time being, its policy of attempting to become a third-rate tax haven of the type that would attract the multimillionaires of this part of the hemisphere to retirement here. I don't think, really, we could do it; our climate is better than Alberta's, but not as good as Nassau's."

Mr. Martel: Where are those people tonight?

Mr. Lawlor: Shades of E. P. Taylor.

Mr. Conway: We will call it the Harry Oakes election.

Mr. Laughren: The member for Renfrew North refers to an election. We understand in this caucus that when we vote against a bill like this it is putting certain things on the line. I can think of no better principle on which to put it on the line than succession duties or their abolishment.

Mr. Conway: So you would lose another 12 inches overnight.

Mr. Laughren: This bill is important. It has the indelible Frank Miller stamp on it.

Mr. Ruston: The three-dollar election.

Mr. Laughren: He has staked out his territory on the side of the privileged in the province as no other Ontario Treasurer has done in recent memory. If the Liberals support this bill, they will in effect be ordering the Liberal Party of Ontario to draw their wagons in a circle and fire inwards.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the member for Nickel Belt on his excellent address. The fact that he quoted John Stuart Mill and myself in one breath indicates he has tremendously good judgement when he selects the philosophical basis for his remarks. I do, however, regret the absence of the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) from this debate, because her contributions previously as Treasury critic were certainly welcome. There was a lightness, a humour, a sensitivity in her remarks that unfortunately we miss at the present time. But I suppose you have got to move with the times and Environment's gain is our loss in this debate.

I really appreciate the honourable member quoting me. I was going to tell the same breakfast-table story tonight about my sainted father. I can recall very clearly that he went on, after saying that the tax should be $80 million, not $8 million, and he said—naturally—one of the things that Liberals must guard against at all costs is double taxation. That's the way I recall his words. I will check with my mother, but that's the way I remember it.

Mr. Martel: Boy is that a double flip.

Ms. Gigantes: Shameless.

Mr. Nixon: One of the things the NDP forgets, even when they quote Commissioner Lancelot Smith, is that at the same time there was a federal royal commissioner, a chap named Carter. He made a comment that appealed to me then, and I regret that our federal cousins have not really enacted his principle in our tax laws at that level. That is, that a buck is a buck. If you inherit a buck, you pay the income tax on it. This is sometimes construed as a capital gains, and that is precisely the way that capital gains taxes are paid.

I have a case in my constituency now that was brought to my attention by some good solid dirt farmers in the constituency of Brant-Oxford-Norfolk. In this instance, these people are really the salt of the earth. They are rather rough diamonds in many respects. Their boots are dirty. The member for Nickel Belt wouldn't understand precisely what I mean, being a northerner, basking on the shores of the lakes and swatting mosquitoes.

Mr. Martel: With a sledgehammer.

Mr. Nixon: Under these circumstances, the property was owned by an older uncle. Through God's good grace, the gentleman went on until he was about 96 years of age. When he died an untimely and early death, the property went to his heirs, who, as I say, tend cattle, clean out stables and work in the fields. They found that because of the extremely high cost of land in the area the capital gain on a very small holding of about 85 acres was evaluated at something like $160,000, and $80,000 on the tax base was added to the income of his hardworking heirs.

Even without the succession duties that we're abolishing tonight, it really meant the sale of that property. I think the capital gains tax is a heavy tax indeed. It certainly was part of the conception of the development by Edgar Benson, whom we all respect in the House—

Mr. Martel: What year was that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: In 1971.

Mr. Nixon:—and who was Minister of Finance for Canada when the tax was introduced, that the provinces would share. There was an agreement across the board, in fact across Canada, as I recall, that succession duties at the provincial level would be phased out, which certainly accounts for the fact that we were prepared to support them during that phase. But now it is time that they are abolished. We in this party feel that double taxation is something that cannot and should not be supported.

There have been many good examples actually of other governments that have gone this way. You may have noticed, Mr. Speaker, by way of interjection, that the government of Saskatchewan, headed by the chief guru of Canadian socialism, Mr. Blakeney, found that it was good judgement on its part to follow this agreement that had been entered into some time ago. Death taxes, as the honourable member calls them, have been repealed in that province as well.

The province of Quebec has retained them. And it may very well be that they will retain them as a basis for some kind of fancy finance—

Ms. Gigantes: They have a progressive income tax there.

Mr. Nixon:—during the period when they expect a certain degree of transition. The Treasurer, however, might be interested to know that in hard times in this province—hard times were Liberal times, as he may recall—

Mr. Gregory: They still are.

Mr. Nixon:—and I say it before he does—something like 45 years ago when there was not much money coming in from the income tax or any other source, the Treasurer of the day brought his budget into balance—a word that this Treasurer doesn't use very often, except in his wildest projections. He brought the budget of the province into balance by means of succession duties. So it has had an honourable base in the financing of the programs of this province in times when the total budget was considerably less than it is now. But times change.

I felt the federal royal commissioner, Mr. Carter, in making his recommendation, made a blueprint that was followed at least in part by the government of Canada and is finally being followed by the government of this province. It's pretty hard to be a tax haven when we're the only province, other than Quebec, maintaining succession duties. The course of events has made the remarks my honourable friend quoted so effectively rather academic at this stage.

There was a time when Alberta was the only province that had abolished these special taxes, but now we are all following suit. In my view, it's about time and it shows good judgement and we support it with some alacrity.

Mr. Bounsall: I will be very brief because the members of the House are all concerned that as many votes as possible take place tonight. We do, indeed, wish to vote on this bill.

We, in our party, want very much to vote against this bill. I'd like to tell the House that our feelings are the same as were articulated by the member for Nickel Belt this morning in our caucus. The prospect of voting against this bill has not inspired as great an ideological orgasm since the Waffle left. That's the way we, in this party, feel about the abolition of succession duties.

It's a fundamental taxation that must take place when the wealth of one generation passes to another, in order that equalization and equality of opportunity may take place in this province as well as, from a governmental level, having funds from a very admirable and socially acceptable source with which to finance its programs. The fact that we're abolishing a tax that applies to the wealthiest three percent in this province says exactly where this government stands in terms of its attitude towards the wealthy and the rest of the taxpayers in this province.

It is interesting to realize that during the course of the 12 months this budget is to run, the money we are not going to receive in revenue, estimated by the Treasurer to be about $50 million, is just equal to the amount of extra moneys that have to be raised by the increase in the OHIP premiums. That will not be lost on the taxpayers of Ontario, when the time comes to talk about this on the hustings which, as the member for Nickel Belt has indicated, we most certainly will.

Going back over the history of succession duties and succession duty taxes, I certainly won't be as informative, nor as interesting or beguiling as the member for Nickel Belt in the entirety of his remarks. However, let me say that it was my understanding, from a federal-provincial conference, that the federal government had finally decided to get entirely out of succession duties.

There was an agreement with the provinces that taxes were to be shared in a more equitable way between the federal and the provincial governments; that the federal government would opt out of the field entirely so the provincial governments solely could collect what was considered to be a very legitimate source of fairly large revenue for the province. I believe that took place in 1972, so, it has taken the province of Ontario a short seven years to abandon it completely when it was given into its own jurisdiction and had been thought to be, by those concerned at that federal-provincial conference, a field of revenue which the provincial government would, and should, entirely occupy.

I won't go on any further than that. I oppose the abolition of succession duties most strongly. There isn't a member of this caucus who wouldn't reiterate every word and sentiment of our financial critic, the member for Nickel Belt, in his remarks with respect to the succession duty and how much we are opposed to its abolition. I would think, in months and years to come, that people in this Legislature and across Ontario would look back to tonight and mark this as a dark evening, an evening in which succession duties in this province were formally abolished. It will remain dark until we have power; when we will certainly reinstitute them.

Mr. Ruston: I am happy to participate in this debate. I was interested in what the last speaker said about how he was happy to have this vote on record tonight and how important he thought it would be. But I would just say to him that abolishing succession duties was in my opinion a wise decision. I am in favour of it completely, and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker.

With succession duties plus capital gains tax, if a family had acquired a farm back in 1850 and farmed it every day from that day until now, it would have to pay for that farm in duties, if we keep on the way we are going. I happen to know someone close to my own place who, when the family farm was turned over to one of the relatives about 10 or 15 years ago, had to borrow $15,000 to pay off the succession duties on it.

A neighbour of mine passed away not long ago. The problem is the evaluators from the capital gains and succession duties people came in and put a value of $390,000 on this farm. That farm is not worth $150,000 to grow corn and soya beans on, yet they put a price of $390,000 on it. Now they have to sell it and get off the land if these taxes are kept on; they have no alternative.

I just wonder if it is NDP philosophy that they want the government to own all the land. I know some of them do; I could mention one or two but I won't embarrass them. They don't want even to own their house and think the government should own the property their house is on. But I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, if that is what they want I won't worry about the vote tonight. I will go up and down every concession in Essex North and let the member from the NDP do the same thing and see where he will end up in the election.

Mr. Charlton: I will be very brief. I think most of the points on this bill have been made reasonably well by the member for Nickel Belt—

Mr. Nixon: "Reasonably well?" That's faint praise.

Mr. Bounsall: Admirably well.

Mr. Charlton: —but I too want to rise in opposition to this bill and just take a moment to point out a number of things to the Treasurer so he is very clear in his mind where this opposition comes from.

In relation to this bill the Treasurer said, on a number of occasions, that the $28 million and the prospective $50 million or $60 million in future years that the removal of this tax is going to cost the province is not a lot to get upset about. But we have just gone through a whole series of tax bills; we have listened to the Minister of Revenue tell us repeatedly, on amendments which I have moved to reduce consumer taxes, that he has great sympathy for the amendment but we have to get the revenue to run this province from somewhere. We heard that on gas tax; we heard that on motor vehicle fuel tax; we heard that on land transfer tax; we heard that on retail sales tax; we heard that right down the line this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of Revenue is sitting right behind the Treasurer just now. He has come back into the House, and perhaps the Treasurer should discuss with him the sympathy he felt for our amendments, but his concern over where the revenue to replace those amendments would have come from. This bill removes the succession duties tax, which only affects the top three per cent of society in Ontario, part of where the revenue to replace those consumer taxes—those taxes that hit right at the very bottom people in this province financially—could have come from.

This is one of the areas that could have been used to protect those people already under excessive pressure from property taxes and every other indirect tax that has been slapped on them in this province.

If the Treasurer had not taken this action in the budget and here today to remove the succession duties tax, at least in part the other tax increases that are being imposed this year could have been avoided.

Mr. Lawlor: May I just speak for a moment on this matter? Will you permit me, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you. I think it should be well understood that capital gains taxation is not identical with estate taxes or death taxes or wealth tax as such. There are large areas in which they overlap. If they overlap, I will concede to the member, who has certainly reversed himself tonight and turned himself inside out on the particular issue, then one ought to be played over by way of one deduction against another.

Surely Conservatives agree with us, whatever the Liberals may do on this kind of issue, with a sense of society that I think is shared to some degree, that when pools of wealth pass from generation to generation, nothing is more invidious or detrimental to a country. If democracy is to mean anything, it must mean something in economic terms too. In the old days, a fellow by the name of Deacon over here used to argue that it was effeminate. It weakens the fibre of the nation to permit wealthy fathers to visit great wealth upon their children.

According to the government's own free-enterprise philosophy, you have to make things on your own. You have to have the gumption, the forthrightness and the aggressiveness to go out and make it on your own, Mr. Speaker. But what happens? The government confirms just the opposite every damn time. It says let the parent keep the child in sloth and in various forms of jet-setting. Let him live in Monaco. The government runs just directly counter on a moral basis at least to its whole announced philosophy.

We've argued this before in this House. I wasn't going to bother again tonight as I think it's useless to point it out to the government. However, I put it to the minister that there are large areas where a wealth tax is perfectly valid and which would not attract capital gains. Lawyers exist in order to set up trust agreements and to set up various devices in order to manipulate this whole thing. We don't see the rich getting any poorer because of capital gains taxation.

But, if the government had a proper wealth tax on top or a proper wealth tax to move into those areas of opening in between where the capital gains operates, then we might some day just hope to see a more egalitarian society than what we're going to get now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I thought we had to be through at 10:15, Mr. Speaker. I have to reply.

Mr. Germa: I'm sure the Treasurer can wait for two more minutes to hear from someone who has a view on this class legislation, and this is class legislation if I ever saw it. We know what class the Treasurer is supporting in this. He is supporting the wealthy class.

Many of us have had parents who have deceased and have inherited our parents' wealth. In my case, it was a hard hat, a pair of safety boots and a lunch bucket. That's where most of us are in this society.

What the Treasurer is talking to here is three per cent of society, that wealthy group in a society which has accumulated wealth. There is no better time to distribute the wealth than when they are deceased. If any tax system is going to work, it has to indicate that there is equity in the system. There is no better time to impose equity in the system than when a person has deceased. For that reason I would choose to vote against this bill.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Every so often we do get a bill which clearly differentiates the socialist from other people in the world. I am just delighted therefore to argue this on the merits of the case the member put forward tonight. I truly believe he has just got a mixed-up view as to what wealth does in this world. He truly does believe that if you take away from somebody, you somehow make somebody else richer. That's just where he is wrong, in his total approach to the whole issue. The removal of wealth from a few does not make others better off.

We already have the capital gains tax. It has been enumerated here. In fact, I would go so far as to say the capital gains tax probably should be indexed, because currently the capital gains tax truly is a tax on capital, not just on gain. I think one needs to look at that issue before too long or else we are going to be taxing the original asset—not only the change in it due to the rate of inflation these days.

Many of the estates that are subject to this tax really are fixed. They are the land the members talked about. They aren't dollars. They are assets that have a value, sometimes far in excess of their income-earning capacity and therefore we have caused innumerable hardships to working-class people. He talks about inheriting a hard hat and a pair of boots. I didn't even inherit that. I inherited the debts of a father and I still believe in this kind of approach. I believe it's the only kind of thing that gives all of us the stimulus to go forward and create wealth in an economy which is shared with those less fortunate people through income tax, capital tax, other taxes we have.

All the quotations he had were pre-1971. That's why I asked him the question about the pre-capital gains tax. They were all made at a time when this was a fair source of taxation because we didn't have the alternatives. The Income Tax Act changed in 1971-72 and brought in a more equitable means of taxation. The only people profiting from the great bulk of the estates in this province were lawyers. There was absolutely no need to allow them to profit from that taxation. The only letters of objection I got were from lawyers who said it was a big part of their caseload. Those are the people who weren't that happy with my change.

So I have to say I am delighted to bring in this act. I am proud of this act and I would be glad to meet the member on the hustings any time with this act.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is for second reading of Bill 47. Shall the motion carry?

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Normally, we would call in the members but I understand that when the House was in committee of the whole they had agreed to vote on stacked amendments at this time. What is the pleasure and the wish of the House?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, it certainly was the understanding that at 10:15 we were going to clear up the revenue bills. Perhaps we could come to some agreement that the same bell could be used to clear the second reading of this bill and then do the work in committee. Could we agree to a 10-minute bell for that purpose?

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement? Call in the members.

The House divided on Hon. F. S. Miller's motion for second reading of Bill 47, which was agreed to on the following vote:

AYES

Ashe; Auld; Belanger; Bennett; Bernier; Birch; Campbell; Conway; Cunningham; Cureatz; Drea; Eakins; Eaton; Elgie; Epp; Gaunt; Gregory; Grossman; Haggerty; Havrot; Henderson; Hennessy; Hodgson.

Parrott; Peterson; Ramsay; Riddell; Rotenberg; Rowe; Roy; Ruston; Scrivener; Snow; Stephenson; Sterling; Taylor, G.; Timbrell; Turner; Van Horne; Villeneuve; Walker; Watson; Welch; Williams; Wiseman; Worton.

NAYS

Bounsall; Bryden; Charlton; Cooke; Davidson, M.; Germa; Gigantes; Isaacs; Johnston, R. F.; Laughren; Lawlor; Lupusella; MacDonald; Mackenzie; Makarchuk; Martel; McClellan; Philip; Samis; Swart; Warner; Wildman; Zimba.

Ayes 65; nays 23.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.
House in committee of the whole.

LAND TRANSFER TAX AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of consideration of Bill 57, An Act to amend the Land Transfer Tax Act, 1974.

On section 1:

The committee divided on Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 1, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 23; nays 65.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

The committee divided on Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 2, which was negatived on the same vote.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill 57 reported.

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of consideration of Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

On section 1:

The committee divided on Mr. Charlton's amendment to section 1 of the bill which was negated on the same vote.

Section 1 agreed to.

Bill 58 reported.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of consideration of Bill 59, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

On section 11:

The committee divided on the motion that section 11 stand as part of the bill, which was agreed to on the same vote reversed.

Bill 59, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Welch, the committee of the whole House reported two bills without amendment and one bill with amendment.

THIRD READINGS

MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved third reading of Bill 54, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1972.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Surely, sir, you will have noticed that the time for adjournment has long since passed and we're doing business that might very well be done next Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding there was unanimous agreement for second reading of Bill 47 and unanimous agreement to hold the stacked votes on the bills in committee. It is my understanding there is no agreement to go beyond that.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Are we being denied unanimous agreement to do four third readings now?

Mr. Nixon: Does the minister want us to do four third readings at this time of night?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: What's in it for us?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have unanimous agreement?

Agreed.

Mr. Nixon: As long as you don't tax my estate.

The following bills were given third reading on motion:

Bill 54, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1972.

Bill 57, An Act to amend the Land Transfer Tax Act, 1974.

Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Bill 59, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

The House adjourned at 10:40 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

TOURIST INFORMATION CENTRES

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the province's tourist information centres, which have served Ontario well, are we believe an important part of our tourist promotion package. We have been concerned for some time about the effectiveness and attractiveness of some of the older centres and the use of only trailers at one or two key locations.

Mr. Kerrio: Sounds good so far.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Hang on.

Accordingly, I am pleased to announce an exciting new program to develop our travel information centres. We will be building a new tourist information centre in the fine community of Fort Erie to replace the current facilities.

Mr. Nixon: That's exciting.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) isn't even here today.

Construction of this $350,000 project is expected to begin this summer. The centre is the first of four projects to be undertaken this year as part of a plan to revitalize our information centres across the province. The other projects to be completed in 1979 include the remodelling of our centre at Barrie on highway 400, and the introduction of a new concept in unmanned centres at West Lorne, near London, and at Odessa, near Kingston on Highway 401.

These unmanned centres will be the first of their type in Ontario and will make information available on a self-service basis 24 hours a day. The sheltered kiosks at West Lorne and Odessa will complement the services provided at our tourist office in Barrie and our new permanent site at Fort Erie. We hope to build self-service centres at all 37 of our locations over the next four years.

During this time we also plan to renovate or replace all of our tourist information centres across the province. There was a fire in our Niagara Falls centre last year, and a trailer was installed to serve tourists in the area until last month when the repairs to the interior of the building were completed. We are in the process of locating a site for a new information centre in the Niagara Falls area.

At this time I'd like to acknowledge the assistance of the Ministry of Government Services in developing our proposal—

Mr. Nixon: And the member for Erie.

Mr. Ruston: And the member for Erie.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—and for the cooperative way in which it has worked with the tourism division of our ministry.

I have one further statement.

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND GRANT

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I had the pleasure of meeting with the Smiths Falls Economic Development Commission. At that time I announced the cabinet's decision to provide an Employment Development Fund grant of $450,000 to Dominion Twist Drill Limited, a division of Litton Business and Industrial Systems of Canada.

As a result of this grant, Dominion Twist Drill will today exercise an option to purchase the RCA plant which recently closed its operations in Smiths Falls. The company will invest $8.9 million over the next five years. We anticipate that 150 jobs will be created in the community by the middle of 1981, increasing to 300 jobs by 1984. High-skill jobs will be provided as well as lower-skill jobs with opportunity for advancement.

Dominion Twist Drill will manufacture specialized metal cutting tools for the entire Canadian market. The firm will compete effectively with imported cutting tools, contributing to our self-sufficiency in this area.

I am happy to report to this House the successful completion of these negotiations to attract Dominion Twist Drill to Smiths Falls. For $450,000 we have succeeded in bringing to that community an $8.9-million investment that would not have occurred in Smiths Falls without this special government assistance.

My colleague, the member for Lanark (Mr. Wiseman), working with Mayor Jack Aboud of Smiths Falls and Dominion Twist Drill's management, headed by Mr. Mel Van Sickle, deserve much credit for bringing this development into existence.

Mr. S. Smith: Litton industries can afford to build without government help.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Leader of the Opposition had better tell that to the people in Smiths Falls because they don't believe it and neither does Dominion Twist. He would gamble with Smiths Falls, but this government wouldn't gamble with Smiths Falls. I'm sure he'll go to that community in the next election and tell them he wouldn't have given that grant to Dominion Twist.

This project typifies the kind of development we intend to support through the Employment Development Fund. It will provide stable, long-term employment, foster the development of needed job skills in the area, contribute to import replacement and stimulate economic development in a traditionally slower growth region of the province.

Mr. S. Smith: They would have built it anyway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Employment Development Fund grant to Dominion Twist Drill exemplifies our government's commitment to ensuring that eastern Ontario as a region maintains and increases its overall industrial strength, especially its strength in high-skill, stable industries.

Mr. O'Neil: Don't forget us then.

Mr. Hodgson: You don't want it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I won't but the member's leader apparently will forget him.

Interjections.

MULTIPLE SCLEROSIS CAMPAIGN

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of personal privilege: I was able, with some return compensation, to give to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) a somewhat reddish-coloured flower in support of the campaign for multiple sclerosis. I did obtain another flower on behalf of the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), for which I have not yet been compensated, knowing that he would in turn wish to do this.

I would inform him the minimum is $2 and the maximum is whatever he would like to make it. I want to send this across the House to him, knowing how interested he is in the support of the multiple sclerosis campaign. If he wants to pay the money to me, I will in turn, give it to them; or he can take it out directly himself.

OCCUPIERS' LIABILITY AND TRESPASS REFORMS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I am today tabling the government's discussion paper on occupiers' liability and trespass to property. The paper sets out for discussion purposes proposals, including draft legislation, for necessary reform of the law governing an occupier's liability to those who come on to his land and the law protecting an occupier from trespass to his land. The paper provides detailed examples of the problems that have given rise to these reforms and illustrates how the proposed changes would effect a wide cross-section of interests.

In relation to the liability question, we are proposing that the numerous duties of care that an occupier of land now owes to entrants to his land be replaced by legislation imposing one duty of care on all occupiers. This would sweep away needless legal complexity and remove the public confusion about the care that an occupier must take to protect entrants from injury and himself from liability.

Under our proposals there would be one duty of care on all occupiers: to take such care as in all the circumstances is reasonable to see that persons entering on the premises are reasonably safe while on the premises.

I want to stress that this duty of care would not apply to persons entering for criminal purposes. They would be deemed to have willingly assumed the risk of injury.

As members will recall, the Motorized Snow Vehicles Act of 1974 provides that an occupier of land owes no duty of care to a snowmobiler other than to not create dangers with the deliberate intent of doing harm and to refrain from acting with reckless disregard for the snowmobiler's presence.

As part of this package of reforms, we are proposing that this act continue in force and apply to all land.

While that legislation deals with a specific recreational activity, the government feels there is a need for protections for occupiers who permit their property to be used for other recreational purposes, such as hiking, cross-country skiing, rock climbing and horseback riding.

The desirable growth of outdoor recreational activities, which the government has encouraged with a variety of initiatives, has had some undesirable side effects. Urban residents have flocked in ever-increasing numbers to the countryside, but farmers and other occupiers of rural and wilderness land have become fearful of being sued for damages by persons who might be injured while engaged in recreational activities on their land.

At present, an occupier owes a greater duty to persons he permits to use his land for recreational activities than he does to trespassers. This penalizes the occupier who is willing to permit recreational activities and discourages this type of benevolence.

For example, hiking trails depend on the use of private land, and trail associations have had difficulty in obtaining the consent of occupiers because the occupiers are afraid of potential liability.

Our proposal in this regard would protect the interests of the agricultural community and promote the availability of land for recreational activities by giving special protection to occupiers of certain designated classes of land, including all rural non-industrial land.

Where entry is prohibited to these lands or where entry for recreational activities is permitted without charge, the liability of the occupier would be limited to dangers created with the deliberate intent of causing harm or to acts done with reckless disregard for the entrant's presence. The entrant would be deemed to have willingly assumed all other risks.

The land designated for these provisions would be as follows: land used for agricultural purposes, including land under cultivation, orchards, pastures and woodlots; vacant or undeveloped land; forested or wilderness land; golf courses in winter; unused or abandoned railway beds; utility rights of way and corridors, excluding structures on such land; undeveloped road allowances; private roads reasonably marked as such; and marked recreational trails.

This approach would effectively remove the occupier's risk and thereby encourage private land owners to voluntarily make land available for recreational activities.

The second part of the discussion paper deals with trespassing.

The present Petty Trespass Act is similar to the act passed in 1834 and in the intervening 145 years has been showing its age; and a number of problems have arisen.

First, the wording of the existing offence is unclear and, along with other factors, leads to difficulties in prosecution. Second, the act does not deter trespass on to land under cultivation, even though significant farm losses are caused by trespassers. Third, the act does not ensure the privacy of occupiers of land or permit the control of recreational activities.

To clarify the effect and purpose of the legislation, we are proposing that the existing act be replaced with three specific offences. They would be: (1) without express permission, the proof of which rests upon the accused, entering premises where entry is prohibited; (2) without express permission, the proof of which again rests upon the accused, doing an activity on premises when the activity is prohibited; and (3) refusing to leave premises after being directed to do so.

The existing act prohibits entry on lawns, gardens and enclosed lands and provides that entry can be prohibited from other premises by giving oral or written notice and the posting of signs.

We are proposing reforms to deal with these situations and to enhance the rights of occupiers to privacy.

First, we propose to expand the classes of land on which entry is prohibited without the need for giving notice to include fields under cultivation and orchards. This is needed to protect those in the agricultural business from losses which result from crop destruction and theft from trespassers.

We propose retention of the existing system of giving notice orally, in writing or by the posting of signs where notice is required to inform persons that entry is prohibited, or to specify recreational activities that are permitted.

In addition, we propose creation of a system of coloured markings and a code for interpreting signs to promote the availability of land for recreation but still allow the owner full control over the activities he desires to permit on his land.

Because the posting and maintaining of signs is expensive, a system of coloured markings is proposed. Coloured markings would be placed at the ordinary entry points. Red would mean entry is prohibited. Yellow would mean entry is prohibited except for activities specified by the owner, and it would be the responsibility of the person entering to determine which activities are permitted. These markings could be made with paint or other inexpensive materials and could be placed on existing features of the land, such as trees and fence posts.

Because many signs in use are misunderstood and have no legal effect, we are also proposing the creation of a code for interpreting signs. The code would result in the positive entry system. Under the positive entry concept, which is recommended by the Ontario Trails Council an occupier could place signs indicating the recreational uses permitted. The code would provide that a sign permitting a particular activity would mean that all other activities are prohibited. It would also provide that a sign stating the name of an activity or showing graphic representation of an activity is a proper indication that the activity is permissible.

For example, if an occupier granted permission to use his land for horseback riding but no other activity, a sign "horseback riding" or a graphic illustration of the activity could be posted. All other activities would be prohibited and persons engaged in other activities could be prosecuted.

With respect to trails, such a positive entry concept is practical. Certain activities are incompatible with others and the permitted uses can be signified.

The code for interpreting signs would also result in the negative entry concept. Where there is a desire to open large tracts of land to general recreational use with a few exceptions, it would be less expensive and more convenient to list the prohibited rather than the permitted uses. For example, if a thousand acres are to be open to all uses except fishing, it would be more practical to signify the prohibited use.

To facilitate this negative entry concept, the code would provide that a sign indicating that particular activity prohibited means that all other activities are permitted. The code would also provide that a sign stating the name of an activity or containing a graphic representation of an activity with an oblique line drawn through the name or through the representation would mean that the activity is prohibited.

We are also proposing changes to the method of dealing with violators of the new legislation. The maximum fine for trespassing would be raised from $100 to $1,000.

To make it easier for an occupier to collect compensation for damage caused by a trespasser, the judge who convicts the trespasser would be empowered to make an order for compensation up to $1,000. The occupier would also have the option of a civil action to recover damages.

In addition, we are proposing that to facilitate the prosecution of offenders, the trespasser be required to pay the reasonable costs of the prosecution when a conviction is registered.

These proposals are the result of many months of discussion within government, with members of the Ontario Trails Council and with organizations such as the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. In addition, many individuals, particularly the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) and the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) have been of great assistance.

The government's proposals are designed to strengthen the property rights and privacy of land owners and at the same time to encourage compatible recreational activities without fear of liability.

We are distributing the discussion paper widely to all interested groups and individuals and hope to receive your submissions by June 30. The government will assess them over the summer and I expect to bring forth legislation in the fall.

To adequately serve the needs of Ontario residents, the law must take into account the diversity and complexity of this province. The law must meet the needs of residents of wilderness regions, agricultural communities, areas relying on the tourist industry and urban centres. The proposals made in this discussion are an attempt to meet the needs of all Ontario residents.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, this statement is somewhat inspired by a four-page press release put out by the member for High Park-Swansea which was largely, or in a great many parts, inaccurate.

The Guelph Correctional Centre is calm again today as the mop-up of the damaged area continues to be done by inmates. Nineteen inmates were transferred to Millbrook Correctional Centre yesterday following disciplinary hearings. Investigation and disciplinary hearings continue today to determine which inmates were involved and to award appropriate penalties.

On Tuesday morning, following the disturbance, a total of 103 inmates were taken to tunnel areas in the basement of the centre. They were dressed in shirts, pants, socks and underwear—all dry clothing—and were not allowed to retain their boots, because these could be used as weapons.

As a result of investigation and hearings, 52 of the inmates have been removed from the tunnel areas and dispersed to other parts of the institution. Last night some 30 inmates returned to their dormitories, having made the dormitories sufficiently habitable.

The 51 inmates remaining in the tunnel area are divided into two groups, each group located in a different tunnel area. Each of these areas has a toilet and sink, contrary to comments made by the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra).

The member for High Park-Swansea has also made a number of other statements in which it would appear that he has been given incorrect information by the inmates. He implied that the fluorescent lights were broken by fire hoses used by the staff.

I was personally present during the hosing on Tuesday morning which occurred only after the inmates had pried stones and bricks from the wall, broken the lights, broken windows at the end of the tunnel area and started to throw bricks at the staff. I think the action taken by the staff under the circumstances was justified. Fluorescent lights were replaced yesterday and have not been broken again.

It is true that the inmates have received sandwiches since being placed in the tunnel areas. This institution normally provides meals in the dining room and does not have facilities for delivering meals throughout the institution.

The staff are working as hard as they can to complete the disciplinary hearings. A number of inmates not involved in the disturbance will be removed from the institution in order to accommodate the inmates remaining in the tunnel areas. In the meantime, inmates will remain there in the two small groups.

The honourable member has described keeping the inmates in the tunnel area as cruel and unusual punishment. I would suggest to him that the inmates were the authors of their own misfortune. They rendered a number of their living units uninhabitable through a rampage of wilful damage which was not justified, in my view, by any of the actions taken by staff or by any grievances of a serious or profound nature.

I think the taxpayers of this province probably feel that the fact they have to shell out some $37,000 to pay for the damage caused by these inmates is cruel and unusual punishment to their pocketbooks.

GAS AND OIL SUPPLIES

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, recent reports of shortages of motor gasoline in some parts of the United States have resulted in concerns being expressed about similar prospects for Ontario.

Needless to say, the question of whether supplies of motor gasoline and fuel oil are adequate, and whether there is a prospect of shortages and allocations in Ontario, is of utmost importance for us all.

As things stand now, prospects look good for at least most of this year for supplies of both gasoline and home heating oil.

There is a requirement, however, to monitor closely supplies of fuel oil for the coming winter. With reasonable care, though, there should be no need for allocation or rationing. Our domestic production of crude oil is holding up reasonably well and, to the extent that natural gas can be substituted in the fuel market, we are fortunate to be in a strong natural gas supply position. That does not mean, however, that we can afford to be extravagant or wasteful with the supplies we have.

The essential fact is that Canada is a net importer of crude oil. To that extent, all regions are vulnerable. The reality is that there is really no reliable source of crude oil on the international market. And our Atlantic provinces could face shortages if there were serious interruptions in world crude oil movements. That is the reason that for most of the decade of the 1970s the Ontario government has been concerned about energy supply and has vigorously pressed its concerns on a reluctant national government.

Mr. J. Reed: What has it done about conservation?

Hon. Mr. Auld: For Canada, domestic crude oil self-sufficiency is obtainable. Even though crude oil self-sufficiency will take some years to achieve, it is the only logical, reasonable and defensible policy objective for this nation, and it would provide us with relative energy security for some decades beyond what we would otherwise experience.

Mr. S. Smith: Why do you want to eliminate Petrocan, Bill? I don't understand that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I figured you must be in favour of keeping it.

Mr. Speaker: Why don't the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition save their energy for a later time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I don't wish to seem to assume a self-righteous posture relative to the United States, but the fact is that country is short of motor gasoline and may be short of other fuels because it simply consumes and imports too much.

It is imperative we realize this fact, because on a per capita basis Canadians consume even more than Americans but to date at least we have relied less on foreign suppliers. It might be useful to remind ourselves that the United States was self-sufficient in oil at one time and indeed was a major exporter. Today it is dependent upon foreign suppliers for nearly 50 per cent of its crude oil requirements. It is now importing crude oil at a rate of close to 10 million barrels a day.

These demands on the world market have moved both world price increases and world oil shortages forward in time. It is perfectly evident that United States consumption cannot continue to expand at historic rates. The oil to satisfy this appetite does not exist. Canada was self-sufficient in crude oil as recently as the early 1970s. We are not any more.

As I implied earlier, we are less dependent in both relative and absolute terms upon the world markets than is the United States, but we are nevertheless extremely vulnerable to interruptions in crude oil supplies from overseas. The response in this country must be a policy of self-sufficiency in crude oil by 1995 at the latest.

Mr. J. Reed: What have you done to help it along?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Canada has the capability of self-sufficiency in crude oil. We have locked-in reserves of conventional crude oil. We have undiscovered and undeveloped conventional crude oil resources. Secondary and tertiary recovery can result in increased oil flows.

Ms. Gigantes: Let the oil companies do their own PR.

Hon. Mr. Auld: There is increasing evidence of frontier resources, and of course we have the incredibly large resources of the oil sands and the heavy oil.

Mr. J. Reed: The most hypocritical statement I have heard this year.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The requirement is that we make one united, national commitment to the development of these resources. That must involve consuming areas, producing areas, the energy industry and the government of Canada. We must develop a coherent plan that will result in self-sufficiency in crude at the earliest possible date.

Mr. J. Reed: What has the plan been so far?

Hon. Mr. Auld: We must consider the price of domestically-produced oil if we are to talk of self-sufficiency. I don't think these are difficult objectives to reconcile. I don't believe prices should be escalated without consideration of the possible impediment energy costs might place in the path of economic development or the consumer's interest, but given our supply requirements and the real dangers of shortages, the prices of petroleum must be such as to result in the optimum development of new traditional and non-traditional energy resources.

Mr. J. Reed: It's taken three years to get that out of you.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The present constraint on production from oil sands derives more from an uncertainty of policy than from the level of price. I would not support a domestic price that was blindly tied to the world price irrespective of what that price might be. Self-sufficiency will result from some combination of national commitment, energy price developing technology, capital investment, transport capability, conservation and the defining of self-sufficiency in crude oil as a national purpose. This commitment is far overdue.

The alternative to self-sufficiency could inevitably be oil shortages, allocations, rationing—in short the kind of militance embodied in Bill C-42. In the months ahead, it will be one of the purposes of the government of Ontario to increase and intensify the pressure in the direction of domestic self-sufficiency in crude oil and oil products. That's our only sure defence against gasoline lineups and rationing and critical shortages of home heating oil.

Mr. J. Reed: Wait until Allan Lawrence makes up for 11 years.

Ms. Gigantes: What nonsense.

[2:30]

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: A point of order, if I might: The minister also has an answer on the Rolphton matter, but I take it he doesn't have copies for myself and for the leader of the New Democratic Party. I would be willing to hear his statement without the copy, and if the leader of the third party is willing to do the same we could hear the minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last week the Leader of the Opposition addressed a question to the Premier (Mr. Davis) regarding the Rolphton nuclear station concerning the ability of the emergency core cooling system of that particular reactor to handle a loss of coolant accident. There were also a number of other questions relating to Rolphton.

The Premier's response on that occasion was, as usual, full and complete.

Mr. Foulds: Full of what?

Hon. Mr. Auld: He did suggest, however, that I provide the House today with such supplementary information as might be available.

Mr. Speaker, the ministry has discussed this matter with the president of the federal Atomic Energy Control Board and I have been advised that: One, with respect to the request of the Renfrew County Citizens for Nuclear Responsibility for a public hearing, the AECB has assured them they are taking their request very seriously; two, the AECB has indicated it will provide the Renfrew county group with a complete chronology of actions taken by AECB, Ontario Hydro and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited with respect to the Rolphton plant, along with a statement of the AECB's views in response to the matters raised. This response from the AECB will, I understand, be available within the next 10 to 12 days.

In addition to providing this response to the Renfrew county group, the AECB will also make the information available to the public at the same time.

As the honourable members know, the AECB is the legally responsible agency in Canada, charged with regulating the safety of nuclear reactors. With this in mind, I believe it is appropriate that the concerns being expressed by the Renfrew county group be assessed by the control board in the context of that agency's expert knowledge of nuclear safety standards. If the AECB feels the concerns being expressed have any validity, we have been assured it will take the necessary steps to see that any deficiencies are corrected.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: Before we go to oral questions, I would like to call to the attention of the honourable members of the presence in the Speaker's gallery of Mr. Michael Egan, an Associate Attorney General of the United States of America, with particular responsibilities for civil litigation and immigration. Would you welcome him, please.

ORAL QUESTIONS

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. S. Smith: I hope our guest enjoyed the Attorney General's (Mr. McMurtry) speech on civil litigation matters.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my first question to the Minister of Health, and it obviously concerns the study by Dr. Kenneth Taylor on X-ray machines and the dose of radiation given to patients as reported in the newspapers today.

Since the responsibility of the ministry would seem to be the inspection of these machines in their setting where they are used and the question of licensing those people using these radiological machines, how is it the minister appears to be surprised by the data which suggests that in fact in some instances a barium series can result in an exposure of three rems and yet in another instance 90 rems, more than the lifetime dose of radiation to which people are supposed to be subjected? How is that an IVP in one instance can be 1.5 rems, and in another instance 40 rems? Why was the minister not aware of these matters as a result of his inspections? Why has he not taken steps to make sure people using these machines are properly licensed in every instance? Why is it that some action was not taken prior to this particular study and these revelations?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to point out we funded that study. That study was prepared under grants from the Ministry of Health.

Coming out of that study is a more detailed project which it has been proposed be done by Drs. Johns and Taylor, which we are also assisting in funding to the extent of $100,000 a year for each of the next three years. As I see it, the effect of that will be, first of all to complete the broader survey of the problems, to identify ways and means of educating the people who are using and ordering the uses of these facilities and taking the fluoroscopic pictures; and out of that, possibly, will come changes in legislation or regulations.

I am concerned with respect to this issue that we not unduly alarm the public. In that regard I want to read into the record a statement that was prepared by Drs. Johns, Taylor and Hobbs. I apologize that it will take a few minutes but I think it is important.

I should say that I had hoped to do it during statements, but I was told that the 30 minute limit under our rules had, in fact, already been filled. That is why I apologize that I have to do it this way. I expect that Mr. Speaker will add the time to the question period.

Mr. Speaker, this statement has been prepared by these three physicians. I think I should read it into the record to put the whole matter into perspective. There are bound to be supplementary questions I will be glad to answer.

"The staff of the radiological research laboratories, University of Toronto, in cooperation with the radiologists and technical staff of 20 hospitals in Ontario, have surveyed the doses to patients from different diagnostic X-ray procedures. A summary of the results is contained in a scientific paper in the March, 1979, edition of the Journal of the Canadian Association of Radiologists.

"This work shows that the dose to a patient from a given procedure may differ from one X-ray room to another; in the extreme case by a factor of 60 and on average by a factor of 10. Furthermore, as much diagnostic information is obtained from the low doses which are given as from the high, indicating that unnecessary radiation is being given to many patients.

"Similar findings have been made by groups in the United States. We are now looking for ways to change the high dose rooms to low dose rooms in hospitals throughout Ontario. Some of the methods for achieving this dose reduction are outlined in the paper and others are being found.

"One might ask, whose fault is this? The answer is that it is no one individual's fault but the problem has arisen because more and more powerful and complicated diagnostic equipment is being used by the medical profession to diagnose sick patients.

"Medical personnel are trained in medicine, not to measure and to control the output of these machines. Hospitals in general do not employ people capable of this type of work. We need to develop groups of such people as an in-house facility in modern hospitals. These people could assure quality control which would maintain equipment at or near optimum conditions and thus minimize the dose to patients. Training of such people is one of the main purposes of the radiological research laboratories.

"The dose reduction problem is being tackled by the radiological research laboratories and involves the Ontario Medical Association, radiologists, X-ray technologists, hospital administrators, manufacturers and suppliers of X-ray equipment in a co-operative program which is unique in North America and which covers the whole of the province of Ontario.

"We have obtained support for this program from the Ministry of Health of Ontario at a level of about $100,000 a year for three years, which, added to the support we already have from the University of Toronto and the Physicians' Services Foundation, about $10,000 each year for the next five years, will enable us to solve this problem.

"The public is interested in the biological risks resulting from this irradiation. The biological risks of X-rays such as production of cancer and damage to foetal tissues are well known. Unfortunately, there is no hard data that can predict exactly the effects of this level of radiation. Furthermore, it is very unlikely that there will ever be such data since it is unethical to carry out experiments to measure the risks to humans from diagnostic radiology.

"Because risks do exist and because the high doses are not necessary for good diagnostic pictures, the OMA, in co-operation with the radiological research laboratories, is initiating a program in Ontario to reduce unnecessary doses. By a simple method these can be reduced by a factor of three and by more sophisticated methods by a factor of 10.

"This will have two main effects. First, it will substantially reduce the risks of diagnostic radiation from their present level without any loss in diagnostic information. Second, the detailed investigations which will be required for each X-ray machine to accomplish this dose reduction and the lower doses themselves, will lead to improved performance and longer life of the equipment, and hence in the long run to lower costs. This imaginative program is unique in the world and should make available to the people of Ontario the best and safest diagnostic X-ray service.

"To quantify the risk of radiation is very difficult. Dr. Rosalind Berthell in Buffalo has found that the incidence of leukemia is 20 per cent higher in groups of patients who have received X-rays compared to those who have not. This kind of figure is an indicator, but it cannot be used as a criterion for Ontario because it depends on the X-ray dose that was used.

"From our preliminary studies, we estimate that in Ontario 20 extra leukemias per year may have resulted from excess doses in radiology. This figure should be judged in terms of the 600 leukemia cases per year in Ontario. This relative risk is surely small compared to that of refusing an X-ray and subsequently dying from an undetected disease.

"However, our dose reduction program could reduce the extra number of leukemia deaths from 20 to two. In spite of the possible risks from radiation, no sensible person should ever refuse an X-ray that is recommended by a doctor as part of the diagnosis of a medical problem. It is tempting to suggest that dose reduction can be achieved by government regulation and inspection. This is far from the truth, since we are dealing with very sophisticated pieces of equipment and many disciplines with different levels of knowledge. The only real solution to the problem is a co-operative one among the various groups mentioned above and the eventual creation of inhouse capabilities in radiation control."

As I mentioned, the study which has been referred to by the Leader of the Opposition is one which was funded by the Ministry of Health because of a concern about this very aspect of health care. The follow-up work, along with the work of our own staff in the inspection branch, is being funded to a great extent—approximately 50 per cent—by the Ministry of Health, involving the people who can best bring about a resolution of the situation, namely the medical profession and the people in the hospitals of Ontario working closely with the ministry.

Mr. Speaker: As that was partially an answer and partially a statement, we will add four minutes to the question period.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given the fact there are two things the ministry can do to deal with this question, the first being to make sure those who use the equipment are all properly licensed and well aware of these problems; and the second being to make sure that the equipment is regularly inspected to be certain that it is of the best quality and not creating an additional hazard more than is necessary; may I ask the minister why, first of all, he has ignored the pleas of the radiological technologists over the years, including letters written to him last year in August and before then, insisting that all the people using this type of equipment be properly licensed and that proper standards be set for the equipment; secondly what have the ministry inspectors been inspecting, what have they been telling the minister, why don't they have the very kind of information which Dr. Taylor had to obtain?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, back in August 1977, about 18 or 20 months ago, we sent to radiologists throughout Ontario, and on request to a number of other organizations and groups, a paper for discussion on the question of X-ray facilities. In fact if memory serves me correctly, in November or December of that year, during the consideration by the standing committee on social development of my estimates, I was asked about that paper, I think by the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne), who had obviously been approached by a physician or radiologist or someone in the community who was aware we were looking at the question.

In that paper they identified several potential courses of action, one of which involved new legislation for licensing and the question of standards. We had a number of meetings with interested groups representative of radiology and of medicine generally. The concern was expressed that the group that had developed that paper did not include any radiologists, and that the standards that were referred to would perhaps be out of date or unrealistic inasmuch as radiology as a discipline had not been involved in the preparation of the paper.

Accordingly, we asked the medical association to come back with proposals on the matter of standards. I think it has to be recognized that the medical profession as a whole is as much interested, or more so, than anyone else, in ensuring there are appropriate standards.

Concurrent with that, the ministry funded in 1977-78 and 1978-79 the paper that has been released in the March 1979 issue of the Journal of the Canadian Association of Radiologists and has resulted in this proposal which came to us in late 1978. It was approved—if memory serves me correctly—about two months ago to have the Ontario Medical Association to go this next step in developing a broader base of knowledge and applying that broader base of knowledge among the people who are working the machines and ordering the tests.

Within the branch, we have as well been working with other groups that are using X-ray facilities with much lower doses, namely, dentistry in particular, where my staff have worked with the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario and with dentists generally to reduce doses being applied in dentists' offices.

A great deal of work has gone into this. I think the course we are launched on puts us in the forefront in the world in addressing what is more and more acknowledged widely to be a general problem in the world in the use of diagnostic X-ray technology.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since the radiation received by patients getting these X-rays exceeded the lifetime radiation standard established by the International Commission on Radiological Protection on a number of occasions—not just once—and specifically since that international council, which is the authoritative body, says no one in his lifetime should have radiation of more than 50 rems, and yet on a number of occasions here in Toronto—not in the rest of the province—patients were receiving as much as 50 rems, 90 rems, 16 rems, 20 rems, 56 rems and 128 rems in the course of having routine X-rays, can the minister explain why he is saying that people should not become unduly alarmed while a three-year program of control is undertaken?

How can the minister say no one should refuse an X-ray when there now is in a single X-ray a very real risk that patients throughout this province could have more radiation than the international experts say they should have in a lifetime?

Surely the government should act now to identify those X-ray machines that are hazardous or are being used hazardously and either take the machines out of operation at once or ensure that the method of operation is changed at once to stop these very dangerous levels of exposure.

Mr. S. Smith: What have the minister's inspectors been inspecting?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: My inspectors have been inspecting the machines. I want to point out, though, that the inspectors can be in there today, and a problem can develop tomorrow.

Inspection is certainly a big part of a control measure. But in the long run what is going to be most effective is a body of knowledge, properly applied among those who are ordering the diagnostic procedures in the first place and among those who are carrying out the diagnostic procedures.

Inspection is one part of it, but ultimately it is the professional qualifications and the application of those qualifications that are most important.

I have not got that paper in front of me—perhaps one of my staff who is here will check for me—but it seems to me the figures quoted in the report were in milliroentgens, not in roentgens. I will check that figure and report back.

The point is—and I cannot emphasize this enough—that only through the co-operative efforts of the profession and the hospitals with the ministry can we effectively develop a program that will ensure we address this problem effectively.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, since the royal commission on health made suggestions back in 1964 with respect to training of radiological technologists, and since it would appear that the occupational health branch of the Ministry of Labour has resolved many of its concerns, does the minister recall correspondence in August 1978 from the past president of the Ontario Society of Radiological Technologists which said:

"It has come to our attention that only about 10 per cent of X-ray unit operators within your ministry are registered technologists. The remainder, in the past, have been given on-the-job training practising on civil servants before going out into the field. The radiation hazard to the people of Ontario is the reason for our concern"? Does the minister have any comment on that view?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I can assure the member that I did answer that letter. I recall it vaguely. That service, the chest X-ray inspection service which was, I believe, the subject of the inquiry, was under the direction of an extremely capable physician until his retirement recently and is now under the direction of another extremely capable physician.

I can assure the member that the training was, in fact, carried out in the highest of professional standards to ensure a minimum of risk to the operator as well as to those being exposed. The highest current standards of knowledge have always been applied. Again, it bears repeating that what we're talking about here is developing a body of knowledge. The Leader of the Opposition said: "Why were you surprised?" I think he was surprised to hear that we, in fact, funded these studies because we want to develop this body of knowledge.

I think it's fair to point out that a great many in the professions were surprised at the results. Quite a considerable body of knowledge has recently been acquired by a great many people and we will, in the course of action that I've outlined, ensure that that is properly applied with the interests of the ultimate safety of our population in mind.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: I want to send a copy of this article over to the minister from the Journal of the Canadian Association of Radiologists and ask him to look at the table on page two. He will see, by the way, that the credit for the funding of the study is given to Toronto General Hospital Foundation and not the ministry.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the table shows that the measurement of radiation is roentgens or in rems and not in millirems, and in view of the fact that it shows for barium meal, barium enema, intravenous pyelogram and gall bladder investigations—

Mr. Speaker: There still has yet to be an interrogative. "In spite of" or "in view of" is not a question.

Mr. Cassidy: I'm sorry, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that a large number of these investigations showed radiation to the patients which exceeded the five rems per annum standard of Ontario Hydro for exposure of its workers, and in certain cases exceeded the 50 rems per lifetime standard of the International Commission on Radiological Protection? In view of the fact that the ministry would instantly—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the Minister of Health have an answer to anything that's been said up to this point?

Mr. Cassidy: Why won't the ministry act to stop these machines when it would close down a power plant that was irradiating the workers to this extent?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Give them more X-rays, that's what you people say.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think this issue is important enough that I'm not going to try to play the technical expert. I know that in all of these things there are certain levels of background radiation which are considered to be acceptable. I know that certain procedures or certain diagnostic needs require higher levels of radiation and, therefore, what I will do is take the member's question as notice and when I'm in the House again on Monday I will answer it then, when I get some technical advice on it. I think this is the important point, I am not going to try to play the technical expert; neither, may I suggest, should any of us.

To go back to the point the member raised earlier, my concern is that people not be unduly alarmed if a physician says, "You need an X-ray for that procedure in order that I can determine what is wrong with you." The risk of people dying unnecessarily from the lack of having had an X-ray—

Ms. Gigantes: Necessary death is all right.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —is many times greater than what they have indicated in this statement I read today may be a problem.

Mr. Swart: You're copping out.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister had covered that ground previously. A new question, the Leader of the Opposition.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to address my second question to the Minister of Energy regarding the Rolphton matter. I thank him for making his statement earlier.

Surely the minister recognizes the time has come for the public to be better informed about these matters and for decisions to be made by bodies that are not all committed to the nuclear industry; therefore, I ask him this: Since the Rolphton plant is at the moment coincidentally shut down, would this not be a good time for the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs and nuclear safety to examine the concerns of citizens in Renfrew county and hear evidence on the matter pertaining to the Rolphton station so the station may be either reopened or modified in the appropriate manner as the facts might indicate? The whole situation could be made public in the select committee with all the documents brought forward and put there?

I say that especially—

Mr. Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. S. Smith: —in view of the fact—

Mr. Speaker: The question was asked.

Mr. S. Smith: —that all this was published a year ago and no action has been taken.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as part of an answer to another question from the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) I have the facts about Rolphton, which I might just give the honourable member at the moment.

That plant, which is a 20-megawatt nuclear demonstration plant, has been on a planned outage since March 26 of this year. The principal work which is being done during this outage is the inspection and overhaul of the turbine generator, inspection and repair of the main boiler, in-service gauging of selected reactor pressure tubes and the annual safety system testing. The unit is expected to be returned to service on May 31, 1979.

As I said in my statement, the Atomic Energy Control Board, which has no connection with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, is the safety regulating arm of the government of Canada and is responsible for nuclear safety in all the provinces. It seems to me their judgement is what we should be accepting. I understand the Rolphton station is licensed for full power and has been since a number of modifications were made—I don't have the dates with me but in recent years.

I may say I have heard nothing from anybody in the Deep River area about any particular concern. In fact I believe there is a message from the mayor indicating he is not aware of any concern in the community.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does the minister not recognize the citizens who have brought this matter to our attention have pointed out the modifications and corrections which were supposed to have been made at the plant, according to them essentially seem not to have been made and the reason the plant is operating at full power is because it would be useless to derate it, since even that would not affect the defect that occurs in the emergency core cooling system?

Under these circumstances and given the desire, an appropriate desire, of people to have these things dealt with publicly, does the minister not feel, since Ontario Hydro is operating the plant and is being accused of being in violation of its licensing requirements, that the select committee is the proper place to have all the documentation looked at right now while the plant is not being operated because of the turbine overhaul? Does he not feel this is the appropriate place to have a hearing of this kind and if need be reassure the people of the area?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I repeat, the Atomic Energy Control Board is the controlling agency; it has the technical expertise. With the greatest respect to the chairman and members of the select committee—

Mr. Mancini: You're just repeating that you're not going to do anything.

Mr. J. Reed: You're telling us once more that you're not prepared to do it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —I don't believe there is the body of expertise on the staff of the select committee that there certainly is with the Atomic Energy Control Board.

[3:00]

Mr. Mancini: What's wrong with reassuring the people? It would seem to me that the proper procedure is, if there is concern—not necessarily from people in the area, but people from any place—the Atomic Energy Control Board, which must have been satisfied that whatever changes were necessary had been made before a licence was continued, would be the agency to approach. As I say, the board has indicated it is looking at this very seriously and it may well be it is planning to have a public hearing or some other kind of open review to clarify any misunderstandings that may have occurred.

Ms. Gigantes: I would like to ask the minister, considering the fact the health and safety of Ontario citizens may be at stake in this question and certainly is the issue raised in the application before the AECB, and considering the fact it has not been established that the AECB, in fact, is allowing the operation of this reactor within the terms of the licence—and that is again what the application is about—doesn't he consider it would be wise for his government to take the stand, at this point, that Ontario Hydro should not operate that plant until these matters are cleared up?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I repeat that the control board is the licensing agency. It has people on site at the larger plants.

Ms. Gigantes: That's good enough for you?

Hon. Mr. Auld: When any changes are made the licence is, in effect, suspended until the control board is satisfied that the new equipment or the modifications are acceptable; then the plant is permitted to start again at whatever rating from one to 100 per cent the board feels is adequate. As the honourable member I am sure is aware, the board is very careful about those things. For example when Bruce started up it was permitted 50 per cent, then about 65 and, finally, 88 per cent for power.

The board is constantly monitoring and will only licence when it is satisfied that all the safety and other standards are met.

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a new question to the Minister of Health arising out of the radiation hazards to patients receiving X-rays in Ontario.

Knowing the outcry across the province a couple of weeks ago when nuclear plant workers in the Bruce were exposed, to just over five rems of exposure, and knowing the concern among the public that far greater levels of radiation exposure are occurring routinely through X-ray examinations in our hospitals in this province, what steps is the government prepared to take now to identify the machines, the hospitals and the operators that are carrying out X-rays giving levels of radiation that exceed safe limits by enormous degrees?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think the use of the word "routinely" is an unfair interpretation of the report which the member has before him. It really is the kind of statement by a member of the opposition which unnecessarily and irresponsibly alarms and can potentially mislead the public.

Mr. Cassidy: I am alarmed.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You are so much to be alarmed about at times—you are.

The fact is, that is an improper use or description. What I described to the member is a course of action which will ensure that we can, in fact, get at this problem. The member makes it sound as though some people purposely set out to overexpose people. That's the way it comes across.

I would like to point out, and I think this bears some reflection, that every medical procedure carries some risk. We are launched on, and have been launched on, a course of action to minimize to the lowest possible level the risk associated with diagnostic radiology.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the government prepared to act now and inform physicians of the risks entailed in having their patients X-rayed by specific machines, so that before sending their patients to be X-rayed on those machines the physicians can know whether the risk of having the X-ray exceeds the information which they will get diagnostically from that?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The success or failure of a diagnostic radiology program in a specific room or in the whole of the province ultimately depends upon the application of up-to-date knowledge by the people operating that machine.

Ms. Gigantes: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am answering the question.

Ms. Gigantes: You're not.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Listen to the answer. People over there think they can play games like this all the time. We're dealing with a very serious matter which is not the kind of thing that is going to be solved overnight. The member makes the suggestion about a problem machine. Our inspections do pick up problems and correct problems. The fact of the matter is, as I said earlier, another problem can occur the day after an inspection. Ultimately, the success or failure of the entire program, as in anything to do with medicine, depends upon the application of the most current possible knowledge in that area. This has gone a long way to improving on that body of knowledge. The course of action on which we have been launched with the co-operation of the medical profession and the hospitals will ensure that our ultimate goal will be achieved.

Mr. Conway: My supplementary deals with the ministry's inspections. Is it true that in the recent past a substantial portion of the inspection service unit formerly with the Ministry of Health was transferred to the Ministry of Labour? If so, can the minister indicate why and, generally speaking, what is its professional status? What kind of expertise does the ministry have in its unit in particular reference to the chief of the Ministry of Health's present inspection service?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: When the Ministry of Labour was given the responsibility for the inspection of the operators, I'm not sure what the numbers were. I'll get the member the numbers that were involved in the service establishment. I can tell him that Mr. Ritchie is the head of our unit. I don't have his curriculum vitae in front of me, but he has been the director in the last two years. Since the Ministry of Labour took over the question of operator safety, that branch has been able to devote exclusive attention to the question of patient safety. In the last 18 months when all of this activity has gone on, we have funded the research launched under this particular course of action.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter and I wonder if I could ask for a final supplementary at this time?

Mr. Speaker: No. We started the question period at 2:34 p.m. and we've added another four minutes to it. We still haven't got to the leader's final question yet. We've actually spent about 20 minutes on this question. I agree that it's very important, but we can't monopolize the entire time of one question period for that alone. There are other issues in the province that other members are entitled to raise. I must hear your second question now.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a new question for the Minister of Health. Can the Minister of Health explain why the government has now gone back on the commitments that it gave in March not to allow co-insurance and has just approved a rate schedule for Blue Cross to offer private insured coverage of the $9.80 a day user fee for chronic care in hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Co-payment in the nursing homes has always been co-insurable. Inasmuch as it is the same co-payment, it's co-insurable. Without going into all the legalistic background, it's because of the structure of the Health Insurance Act and the difference between insured and non-insured benefits. It has always been the case.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister explain why he is using one breach in the present structure of the law in order to justify a further one and how this equates with his promise back in March that there would not be co-insurance? Does this mean the minister agrees with the president of the OMA, who has recently been saying the answer to the problem of underfunding the health-care system in the province is to allow private money into the system? Is that what he is trying to say?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: From the beginning, insured services have not been co-insurable and non-insured have been. That's why the people have always been able to get coverage for drug plans and for various other things, including extended health care, which has included nursing-home co-payments and now includes chronic care.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain why it is that he is prepared to block co-insurance with respect to opting-out fees by doctors when patients in most parts of the province can still, it is hoped, have a choice of getting Ontario Health Insurance Plan coverage, but when patients are being required to pay this $9.80 fee he turns around and says he is not going to block co-insurance in that particular area? Why is he allowing the principle of universal medicare coverage to be undetermined?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the latter is sheer fabrication, and I have already answered the former.

BRADLEY-GEORGETOWN HYDRO CORRIDOR

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. Is it true that the Bradley-Georgetown hydro corridor and possibly other corridors in the province are being built for the export of electric power and not for domestic consumption at all?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I understand the honourable member's concern with respect to the Bradley-Georgetown corridor. I had a very pleasant meeting with some of his constituents—some of them were not his constituents—with respect to that particular part of the corridor that is an integral part of the major transmission facility.

I think it is fair to state that transmission lines are not being built for the purpose of export.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary: If that is correct, then why has the government authorized the construction of this particular line, and possibly others, in areas that are not serving the most urgent domestic need?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is a lot of history to this, which I know the honourable member has researched with great care. He has a particular point of view, and I understand that. I am sympathetic to the concerns of the people who are affected by this corridor; I happen to know two or three of them—perhaps for a longer period of time than the honourable member has—and one or two of them formed part of that delegation. But, as I attempted to explain to them, this is a part of the transmission system required by Ontario Hydro, the planning for this had gone on for a number of years and this matter has been debated for a number of years. It has been the subject of extensive litigation and the subject of a hearing before the Ontario Municipal Board.

As I explained to the people who were there, the government in its wisdom maintained the judgement of the Ontario Municipal Board. There was nothing presented to us that would justify an alteration of the board's decision. Those who were in to see me would argue that not all of it was determined at the OMB. But the decision was made by the OMB and we could find no justification for its alteration.

I have to say to the honourable member that we have gone through this. I tried to explain to his colleague. They were seeking another inquiry. They committed themselves to saying, "If the inquiry says this is the location, we will accept that location." I understand that. But I pointed out to them that part of this Nanticoke to Pickering transmission line was determined partially as a result of Mr. Solandt's inquiry some years ago, an inquiry which, incidentally, I initiated. I realize the honourable member is not talking about that; he is talking about the Bradley to Georgetown corridor, which forms part of the transmission facility coming out of Bruce, and the need by Ontario Hydro for this corridor. I mean, it is built to one end and it goes from the other end. There is, in the interim—this gap.

Mr. J. Reed: It doesn't serve the most urgent domestic need.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We can debate for hours the degree of urgency, but the honourable member and, I think, even the delegation recognized—they can argue it is not necessary for a year or two years, but I don't know; Ontario Hydro says it is needed now—the point is that it is going to be built.

I am sympathetic but I know that, if the line is moved from point A to point B, the fact remains there are going to be some people affected as far as their property is concerned.

I am sympathetic to this, but I cannot alter it in any way. If we could find an economic way of transmitting power underground, that would be great. But the honourable member, who is an expert in all of these fields, knows that underground transmission over long distances simply is not technically feasible; so, unfortunately, property owners are going to be affected, and this is true in that particular alignment.

Ms. Gigantes: Would the Premier undertake to provide us with an estimate, as far as he can make it out from Hydro sources, of what proportion of that line will be used domestically and what proportion will be used for export?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think that is really beyond my competence, although I don't like to acknowledge that there are many things beyond that competence—

Mr. Roy: But you have visitors in the public gallery and you have to be modest.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I try to be modest; it becomes me. You should try it on occasion. Let's be frank with one another: modesty is not your greatest quality.

Mr. Speaker: I am more interested in your being concise than modest.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You are interested in my being concise, Mr. Speaker? It is not easy to be concise.

The member has asked me whether I can get Ontario Hydro to give an accurate guestimate, that is really what she is asking for, an accurate guestimate as to how much of the power that might be going from Bradley to Georgetown might be for export as opposed to domestic use. I would have to say to the honourable member that guestimates, to be accurate, would depend I guess on Hydro's further guestimate as to the extent of the export of power at any particular time. I think it would depend on whether that export was on the basis of interruptible or non-interruptible. It would also depend, with my limited knowledge of the system, on exactly at what point of export it may be. If they were to guess that there might be an export into Michigan—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am trying to help the members as much as I can. If they were to guess that there was to be an export into Michigan, chances are it wouldn't involve that line at all; it would go across at Port Huron if that is where that export is. If it were to go through to Niagara Mohawk, then the export would be going through some other transmission facility.

Mr. Speaker: Given the Premier's modesty, maybe he could take the balance of the question as notice.

FOODLAND ONTARIO PROGRAM

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Would the minister tell the House what steps he has taken to prevent the misuse of the Foodland Ontario logo since I brought cases of its misuse, both in newspaper advertising and on shelf displays, to his attention last year? Specifically, could he explain why United States carrots, and it has been verified they are United States carrots, are now being packaged by Hardee Farms International of Bradford in bags displaying the Foodlands Ontario logo?

May I inform the minister that I purchased two of these bags, one at Dominion Stores on Ontario Street in St. Catharines and one on Wellesley Street in St. James Town here in Toronto, and I will send one of them over to him now.

Interjections.

Mr. Swart: And may I inform him that the latter was displayed in the Dominion Store at St. James Town, along with other United States carrots, beneath a counter sign saying,

"Canada No. 1 Grade Carrots, Ontario-grown," but that there wasn't an Ontario carrot there? Would he explain that?

Interjections.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the honourable member for the carrots. I know my wife will put them to good use. But I don't know why he says these are US carrots. Does he know whether or not they are US carrots?

Mr. Swart: Yes.

Hon. W. Newman: How does the member know that?

Mr. Swart: I checked with Hardee.

Hon. W. Newman: You know, Mr. Speaker, it is like everything else. We get a good thing going here in this province, we have a good program in the Foodland Ontario program—

Mr. MacDonald: Answer the question.

Hon. W. Newman: Just be quiet.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. W. Newman: I shall be glad to investigate the member's question and I will be glad to investigate the contents in this bag and get back to him on it.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When the honourable minister is looking into the question, would he look very closely at that bag I have sent him and note the Foodland Ontario logo is not a sticker, and that it is imprinted on the bag? Would he turn to the other side and read the print, "Produce of USA," and would he note that also is imprinted and not a sticker? Therefore, this is not the mistake of a clerk—

Mr. Warner: It is fraud!

Mr. Swart: —this is deliberate.

Mr. Pope: And the minister did it all by himself.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Are you asking the minister to look at the label?

Mr. Swart: Would he look at the label? Would the minister also think it is a pure coincidence this false promotion of United States products appears at a time when the Women Against Soaring Prices are boycotting all imported produce that could be produced domestically?

Mr. Warner: Try protecting the farmers.

Mr. Swart: Would he not think this is misleading advertising and that his ministry should lay charges against Hardee Farms and Dominion stores so as to protect our farmers and our consumers?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if there is a misuse of the Foodland Ontario symbol, we will take the appropriate action.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the appropriate action? Slap him on the wrist?

OTTAWA RIVER JURISDICTION

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier: In view of the fact that periodically and recently we have had severe flooding on the Ottawa River all the way from Mattawa through Deep River, Pembroke, Westmeath township, Buckham Bay, Constance Bay, Britannia and Cumberland, does he not feel part of the problem might be eliminated if there were a better handle on who had jurisdiction over the waters of the Ottawa?

Presently Hydro-Quebec, Ontario Hydro, the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company all have a jurisdiction of one sort or another over these waters. Does he not feel the ill-fated and horrendous piece of legislation passed on February 19, 1943, by the short-term Conant government, called the Ottawa River Water Powers Act is the source of most of the problems we have now with the Ottawa in the way of flooding?

Mr. Speaker: A question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is no question whatsoever that the few significant problems remaining in this province had their authorship and foundation in the administrations of Mr. Conant and Mr. Hepburn many years ago, but we are still working at them and I am sure we can solve them.

Mr. Yakabuski: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the Premier not feel that perhaps it is time to have that horrendous piece of legislation reviewed and perhaps the terms and the regulations pertaining to same renegotiated with the province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot guarantee successful negotiations with the province of Quebec on some issues, but I certainly agree with the honourable member that we should take a look at these matters to see if we can find a solution. I do thank the honourable member for his question and his constant interest in his constituency, which includes of course, the total county of Renfrew.

COMMISSION PAYMENTS FOR LEGAL SERVICES

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Chairman of Management Board. I wonder if he is concerned, or is even aware, that some comments have been expressed by the provincial auditor for the past two years in a row with reference to the bills of two different royal commissions? This was in connection with bills in amounts larger than $1,000 for private sector legal counsel which were paid without the signed authorization of the Attorney General. This is clearly against the guidelines established by Management Board.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is yes, I am concerned. The Attorney General (Mr. McMurry) will be making a statement tomorrow.

Mr. Mancini: A supplementary question: If the Attorney General does not recommend these bills be taxed by the Law Society of Upper Canada, will the Chairman of Management Board do so?

Hon. Mr. McCague: I will take that under consideration.

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. Have the minister and his cabinet colleagues had a chance to review the applications for assistance for flood victims from communities such as Searchmont, Goulais River and Iron Bridge and the report of his officials that visited the area last week? If so, has the cabinet made a decision on what assistance might be made available to those communities?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, cabinet reviewed the reports of the flooding in those communities—I believe the ones mentioned by my friend. Yesterday they declared them a disaster area. A release was issued today on this matter. These communities are being handled in the same manner as the Field situation.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Am I to understand from the minister's response they are being handled in the same way as Field? That is, it would be a four-to-one matching grant? If that is the case, is that also being considered for other communities such as Onaping Falls and Walden?

Hon. Mr. Wells: That is right. It is on the basis of $4 for every $1 raised locally. The areas of Onaping and the town of Walden, I believe, were also declared disaster areas yesterday and are included. The head of our subsidies branch is in that area, or will be either today or tomorrow, and he is going to ascertain whether it wouldn't be more beneficial to have one fund for north-eastern Ontario, rather than separate funds for each community. Then everything could be handled with one administration. They are looking into such an arrangement.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Can the minister indicate what is the status of the Renfrew county snow damage with respect to the disaster relief fund, since he has indicated cabinet has recently reviewed applications made under that fund?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Renfrew situation is this: Renfrew was declared a disaster area last January under the terms of the fund on a dollar-for-dollar arrangement. It is now up to the Renfrew area to establish their fund and it will be matched by the disaster relief fund.

EASTERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. In view of the fact an eastern Ontario development agreement has not been signed to date with the federal government, could the minister please give some indication to the members whether or not an agreement might be reached before the federal election on May 22?

Mr. Lawlor: Did you rehearse this, Norm?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I wish I could give that kind of assurance. We seem to be making progress on one agreement only of the three being discussed, and that is the pulp and paper agreement. The other two agreements have been stopped because the federal government is not negotiating with us.

Mr. Bradley: Oh, they're a bad bunch.

Mr. Roy: You won't have any problems with Joe.

[3:30]

Mr. Sterling: In view of that fact, will there be any announcement by the provincial government as to how farmers will treat drains that are under way in terms of drainage reports and that kind of activity that is now going on?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I think the details of that would best be given by the Minister of Agriculture and Food. We were trying to determine whether or not some of the projects that were under way would be financed. I understand some will, but there's still some doubt about where the cutoff date is. Therefore, there's some question about those where engineering works are currently under way being financed.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy and Natural Resources has brief answers to questions previously asked.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last week the member for Carleton East asked a question of the Premier regarding the NDP reactor—excuse me, the NPD reactor—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —I wish we had a little more time—about “new information that had been leaked to the Ottawa Citizen from staff at the site.” An article in the Ottawa Citizen on May 8 referred to two documents about equipment and equipment work procedures associated with non-nuclear equipment at NPD.

One document referred to a pumphouse gasoline tank, which has now been relocated to reduce the already small risk of equipment fire damage; whereas the second document referred to a caution given to employees working near steam pipes in the condenser room. There is no public safety concern associated with either of these events.

Ms. Gigantes: You mean you're not concerned.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The honourable member also asked about contingency plans. Contingency plans which include arrangements with offsite authorities have been in place for NPD since 1962. Currently, these contingency plans and the contingency plans for other nuclear generating stations in Ontario are being reviewed with the Ministry of Labour to incorporate lessons learned from the Three Mile Island incident.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Would the minister very briefly indicate what time frame he imagines for the contingency review he spoke of with respect to negotiations with the Ministry of Labour? Could he elaborate whether or not there is any time frame for review and new regulations, if such are deemed to be necessary?

Hon. Mr. Auld: That question should go to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. I am not aware of their daily plans.

REED PAPER COMPANY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to table to a question from the Leader of the Opposition last week about allowable cuts at the Reed paper company. (See appendix, page 1813)

Mr. S. Smith: We'd almost given up on you.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have the answer to a question asked last week by the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway). He asked: “Could the Premier at this time explain how it is that along the Ottawa River in the area of Westmeath, south of Pembroke, through to and including the town of Mattawa, we are continuing to experience high water conditions?" He related this to Hydro's operation of the dam.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier answered that too. He said: "There's too much water."

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I'm informed that the operation of the dam by Hydro during this particular critical situation was and is being co-ordinated through daily conference calls between the concerned agencies of Ontario Hydro, the federal Department of Public Works, Hydro-Quebec, the Ministry of Natural Resources of Ontario and the Department of Natural Resources of Quebec.

Regarding the low levels at the Ontario Hydro dam at Rolphton, the practice is to lower the level of the reservoir prior to spring runoff every year, and hold it at a low level until river flows subside. This is done in order to minimize the risk of flooding at the town of Mattawa.

If the forebay level was raised, as suggested, water levels in the town of Mattawa would also increase. The forebay is kept low until it is felt it is safe to raise it again without flooding Mattawa. The maximum practicable use has been made of storage in Lake Timiskaming and reservoirs further upstream to minimize the flooding. These lakes are now almost full.

IPPERWASH PROVINCIAL PARK

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have one other answer to a question raised by the honourable member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt). A couple of weeks ago he asked: "After 41 years, why is there not a master plan for the Ipperwash Provincial Park to guide its development and operations, and why was exemption MNR 8 issued under exemption orders under the Environmental Assessment Act?" He also had a supplementary.

A plan for Ipperwash Provincial Park was prepared about 1970, and that was prior to the time of having a master plan for each provincial park. An interim-management plan was prepared and approved in February 1977 and in this plan the need for relocation of the park entrance road was identified, as well as the importance of protecting the wet meadow. I am advised by my staff that this project is exempt from environmental assessment by virtue of the Minister of the Environment's order No. 8 under the Environmental Assessment Act.

The formal master plan has not yet been completed, primarily because the priority has been given to natural environment parks rather than recreation parks.

Ipperwash is 109 acres, but it accommodates several thousand people on busy days. As a result there were very compelling reasons to upgrade the park's entrance—reasons of safety as well as handling the heavy traffic. In siting the entrance road, it was recognized that an alignment to tie in with the park control facilities and avoid using the beach, or crossing in front of the concession complex but lining up properly with an existing bridge crossing, while avoiding the three wet meadows which are in the area, would not be easy. Nevertheless, it would have to be accomplished.

The value of the wet meadow was certainly recognized when a number of meetings were held by the staff to see how it could be least affected. The road is not located in a wet meadow but runs along the side of a sand dune adjacent to the wet meadows—

Mr. Martel: That's a statement.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —and several feet of the lower part of the dune containing juniper and red pine lie between the edge of the road and the meadow proper.

Mr. Bradley: Andy, there won't be any time left for your resolution.

Hon. Mr. Auld: In connection with his supplementary question that it had ruined the unique meadow which contains rare plants otherwise unknown in Ontario and now considered to be endangered species, I am informed that there is some difference of opinion, even among experts, as to the identification of a wet meadow. Some define it as a single area while others feel it is made up of several more specific sites. We use the latter interpretation.

Mr. Bradley: You wouldn't do that to Darcy.

Mr. Peterson: Here is the exciting part.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Here we are. In the final analysis, we acknowledge that, according to some observers, one stand of blue-hearts may have been affected. The habitat, however, has not been destroyed and other stands of this flower have been identified in the vicinity. I was looking at them last Friday morning.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Aren't you glad you asked, Murray?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In fact, the meadow, as a plant habitat, has not been ruined. The blue-heart is protected in two fenced nature zones in Pinery park, which is about 10 miles away. It's also found in other locations outside the nature zones in Pinery park and it seems to be growing well.

Finally, the blue-heart is not at present in regulations under the Endangered Species Act. It has widespread occurrence south of the Great Lakes and up to the road at Pinery park.

Mr. Speaker: There is no way the member will have a supplementary to that.

When the Minister of Energy and Natural Resources is talking about endangered species, I wish he would have some regard for the effect he's having on other species.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Mr. Ziemba: A point of personal privilege: The Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) has accused me of sending out incorrect information regarding the condition of the Guelph Reformatory tunnel. Would the minister permit the press and media to inspect it, and would he join me in a personal inspection of this tunnel in order that the public may be informed of the truth?

Mr. Speaker: There was no point of privilege there that I could recognize.

Mr. Foulds: Let the record show the minister chose to ignore that.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously the minister doesn't choose to respond.

ANSWER TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 164, 165, 167 and 168 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1813)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would also like to use this opportunity, pursuant to standing order 13, to indicate to the House the business schedule for the remainder of this week and next week.

This afternoon we will take into consideration ballot items 11 and 12. Tonight we will resume consideration of government legislation, starting with second reading of Bill 48, and then do second readings and committee work as required with respect to that bill, plus Bills 50, 51 and 49, and, if time permits, we will take into consideration Bill 17.

Tomorrow we will have the budget debate.

On Monday, May 14, the House will be in committee of supply to continue consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On Tuesday afternoon, we will do second reading of Bill 24, second reading and committee stage of Bill 17 and committee consideration of Bill 29. We will carry on with that until six o'clock. If there is time before six—and certainly at eight—we will do the following legislation: Any bills standing in the Treasurer's name not completed this evening; second reading and committee work for Bills 31, 32 and 33; then, as time permits, Bills 71, 22, 34, 72 and 73, second reading and committee stage.

On Wednesday, May 16, the resources development, general government and justice committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, May 17, in the afternoon we will do ballot items 13 and 14 and on Thursday evening any legislation not completed on Tuesday, May 15.

On Friday, May 18, committee of supply will continue consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS MEMBERSHIP OF POLICE COMMISSIONS

Mr. Watson moved resolution 13:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario should no longer be under an obligation to appoint a judge of a county or district court as one of the members of a police commission and that the government should consider introducing the necessary legislative amendments to accomplish this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes and may reserve any portion of that for a final response, if he so wishes.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve any time I may have left over. I would like to thank the House for the opportunity to introduce ballot item 11. This is my first private member's resolution. It deals with a matter which has come to the attention of my riding and of the riding of the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan). There are police commissions in the city of Chatham and the town of Wallaceburg, and the same county court judge has been asked to sit on police commissions in Tilbury and Dresden.

Since I started to discuss this matter, I have found out that it's being discussed in many forums throughout the province. Therefore, I welcome the opportunity to present it in this forum this afternoon so that members on all sides of the House can express their thoughts on this matter

The role of the county court judge in Ontario, and indeed in Canada, is often an extremely busy one. Many of the functions the judges perform go unnoticed by the public and many people are unaware of the degree to which the county and district judges are involved in administrative or non-judicative duties.

The Ontario Law Reform Commission in its 1973 report on the administration of Ontario courts divided these administrative duties into four broad categories: ceremonial, investigative, ministerial and operational.

Ceremonial functions include the performance of marriages, granting of citizenship certificates, visiting schools and acting as a public official where some person of prestige is required.

Investigative duties are of course conferred by municipalities under the Municipal Act and from time to time when committees or commissions of inquiry are established.

Judges assume the ministerial role when they exercise their powers of appointment. Bailiffs and insurance appraisers are a couple of examples of such appointments.

Finally, the operational duties are performed under such acts as the Notaries Act or the Justices of the Peace Act where either the justices of the peace or the notaries public must be examined before assuming these offices.

It is interesting that the law reform commission was unable to classify under its scheme the function which the county court judges perform as members of boards of police commissions, although it did make specific recommendations concerning this matter.

Briefly, it is section 8 of the Police Act which requires that one of the members of every board of police commissioners be a judge of any county or district court designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

The various municipalities or regions are responsible for paying the nonjudicial commissioners for the duties they perform as members of these boards. Hiring, maintenance, the disciplinary powers regarding police forces, are things these boards deal with. They also have powers to pass bylaws dealing with, as the law reform commission states, a wide range of matters having little to do with the policing itself. The Municipal Act, for example, allows police commissioners to pass bylaws which regulate licensed cartage businesses, taxi companies, magazine stores, newspaper stands, second-hand shops, restaurants, auctioneers, salesmen and many others.

I myself am not so concerned as to whether or not these particular functions necessitate the presence of a county court judge on boards of police commissioners. What does concern me is whether the scheduling and operation of county courts can be efficient when some judges are obviously going to be tied down with administrative responsibilities of no small significance.

The extrajudicial duties of the newly appointed Kent county judge are quite extensive. As I pointed out earlier, he is a commissioner on four of the separate police boards within Kent county. It is not merely the administrative burden that concerns me. Our own judge in Kent will have difficulty in sitting on local commissions merely as a result of the steadily increasing court trials that he is faced with.

The McRuer Royal Commission of Inquiry into Civil Rights, in discussing the appointment of judges to police commissions, made the point that chief judges are put in difficult positions when making arrangements for the dispatch of court business when some judges engage in extrajudicial activities which remove their ability to assist during periods of court congestion or overload.

What the McRuer commission did state, and what I see as being of some importance, is that it is not always the least busy judges in a county who are appointed to police commission boards. Often it is the reverse. In my particular case there is not even the luxury of choosing the county court judge to perform the extrajudicial duties, because there is only one. Under the present legislation it is not even permissible for either one of the two provincial court judges to assume a place on any of the four police boards.

It is for these reasons that I feel there is a need to remove the requirement of the county court judge appointments. This does not mean that the province could not encourage these judges to serve on boards. I think we are all aware of the important contribution that can be made to the present police system administration by experienced, impartial and independent judges sitting on a commission or commissions.

In this respect, I suppose I am simply resurrecting a proposal contained in Bill 113, introduced by the former Solicitor General back in 1977. That bill would have made a judge's inclusion on a commission as a commission member, optional. Where it is deemed by members of the judicial system inappropriate to make an appointment, the Lieutenant Governor in Council could appoint a local citizen.

I suppose when I first set about to introduce this resolution, I did so somewhat innocently. Frankly, I was concerned with the one issue only—that of alleviating the abnormal and inconsistent burdens experienced by some of the county court judges and specifically the one in Kent, and consequently, by the courts themselves. It was only after delving into the matter that I became aware of the other philosophical issues that surround the composition of police boards.

My concerns deal with the routines governing the court judges themselves. However, it seems that municipal authorities are more concerned with such things as police accountability and the budgetary relationships between the commissions and municipal councils. Other groups are more concerned with the possible conflicts of interest evolving from the dual adjudicative and administrative roles of the county judges. Both these groups argue that rather than becoming optional, the appointments of judges to police boards should be restricted entirely.

The McRuer commission report pointed out that in certain instances such as when a judge is presiding over a contest between a citizen and a municipal police officer, it may appear to interfere with the element of impartiality or independence. The report states it's unfair to expect a judge in one capacity to tell the police what to do, while in another decide where the police policies have been acted upon fairly.

Personally Mr. Speaker, I'm really not in a position to argue these points, however, I do know that the Solicitor General has stressed that a judge's role in court and his role as an administrator of police are separate and distinct except for the obvious fact he has a direct responsibility for the administration of justice in both roles.

It has been suggested that judges could easily avoid these specific instances where the public might see a possible conflict of interest simply by declining to sit on such cases. I would hazard a guess, that by and large, judges, with their superior knowledge of law, their impartiality and their independence, are less likely to become involved in interest conflicts than almost anyone else. I believe the public perceives this and consequently I can see no reason for restricting the appointment of judges to commissions. Rather, as I have stated, these appointments should become optional.

Although many municipalities recently have issued reports recommending that local councils be given control, or more control, over the formation of police policy, the Robarts commission report on Metropolitan Toronto is most reflective generally of municipal concerns. This report questions the organizational separation of police and other local service agencies when they seem to have such a close functional relationship. The report also states provincial legislation dictates the creation of a separate board of commissioners of police, with a majority of its members provincially appointed, because there is an appeal to the provincial body if the municipal council objects to the police budget. Because provincial regulations in this field are so extensive, the police function might well be thought to be more closely allied with the province than with the municipality.

In any event, it is certainly true that decisions regarding policing are taken quite separately from the rest of the local decision-making process. The commission, in short, felt policing was properly as well as literally a local responsibility and different organizational arrangements were required. The then Solicitor General, in his reply to the commission report of 1977, stated as follows: "Organizational separation exists for a very good reason. Local boards of commissioners of police and the Ontario Police Commission have a special role which arises out of our system for the administration of justice. This system is prevalent in democracies and law enforcement is of course an integral part of it.

"The police are part of a system which involves the prohibition of certain forms of conduct by the state, followed by the imposition of punishment in the case of transgression. It is imperative that justice be fairly, evenly and impartially dispensed and the present organizational structure is designed to ensure this end.

"The board of commissioners of police is designed to shield the police from direct political control and permit them necessary independence in enforcing the law. This independence would be lessened if the police were directly controlled by elected officials."

It was also stated that although the police function was more properly allied with the province as opposed to municipalities, there is justification for this. Under the law, a police officer is an agent of the crown. He or she is therefore a holder of a public office exercising original authority.

In my view, therefore, it would be quite proper for the province to make two appointments to police boards where an acting court judge was not a commission member. Furthermore, if the assumption that an Ontario police commission will always uphold local police commission budget appeals were removed, and if municipalities were to establish more effective systems of budgetary review, I believe municipalities could have a great deal of input into the police service policy without sacrificing the optional inclusion of judges to police boards.

It is my hope that this resolution will receive the support of the House. I would hope, too, the Solicitor General is, as he appears to be, receptive to removing this difficult requirement in the Police Act and that he will soon introduce the appropriate legislation for consideration of all members.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Chatham-Kent has reserved six minutes. The member for Sarnia.

Mr. Blundy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to rise and support the resolution that has been placed before the House today by the member for Chatham-Kent.

I am supporting it because of its wording. The resolution is that the province be no longer under the obligation to appoint a judge of a county or district court. This would seek to remove that obligation. There is still the element of discussion and debate and so forth that can be exercised by the government in the matter. I submit there are some places and some times where it would be worthwhile to have a judge on the police commission, but it is not always so.

As the previous speaker has pointed out, the judge in the ordinary court in the province is an extremely busy man. We have seen the increase in court cases that require his attention, as well as the other statutory duties of a county court judge.

I speak with a little experience in this matter, after having served on a board of police commissioners for eight years. Four years of that time I served with two judges on the commission and the last four years I served with one judge and one civilian.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of difference in judging. I am not detracting from the judges as a whole, but as with all humans, there are some judges who are particularly interested in certain aspects of municipal life; there are some who are totally devoted to their judiciary duties and do not display those same interests. Therefore, I believe the municipality and the province can better be served by not requiring that the county court judge be on every police commission.

Another point I would like to make is that the board of police commissioners in today's business has chiefly an administrative role and a very important one. When we look at the budgets for policing our municipalities today compared to the budgets of 10 years ago, we see differences of hundreds of thousands of dollars; it is now very big business. I am making reference not only to the moneys required for the operation of a competent municipal police force, but also to various administrative problems, much of which can be handled by the chief of police, but much of which has to be referred to the commission by the chief—the promotion of an officer from one rank to another; the continuation of the probationary system for the probationary constable. If the police force is to be well run, well managed and capable of serving the municipalities, the police commission must look at all of these things, in addition to having a good deal of input into the budget of the police commission.

In some respects I prefer that a judge sit on a police commission—in my past experience, it has proven to be a valuable thing. But as I have said before, this is not always the case. As a matter of fact, more often it is not the case. If the local board of police commissioners require legal opinions or legal advice in any of the operations of the police commission and/or the police department, they know to whom they can go to get that type of advice and assistance.

The municipalities, which are being burdened more and more with the provision of police services today, ought to have the right to have other than a judge on the police commission. They need a civilian from the community who is able to reflect the views of his fellow taxpayers and the opinions that have been expressed by the ordinary people in the community. They can be well expressed by a representative other than a judge in the community.

The mayor or the head of the municipality is there, so he can report back to the council and report from the council to the police commission on matters that are important to the taxpayers of the city. Over and above that, getting away from the financial aspects, in which of course the mayor is going to take a great leadership and play a great part, I believe that the views of the community as to the type of police force and the type of policing in the community can very well be given by and interpreted by a civilian representative to the police commission.

As I have said before, from my experience on the police commission I believe I can speak with some degree of understanding of the resolution before us today. I just want to say again that I am not opposed to a judge, but I do not believe it should be mandatory that a judge be on the police commission. Let us involve other very intelligent and capable people in our communities, through co-operation with the province of Ontario and the local government, in the running of the police department and the setting of police commission policies in our municipalities.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise in support of the resolution standing in the name of the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) which would remove the obligation from the government of Ontario to appoint a judge to the board of police commissioners. To my mind, this is one small step in the right direction. If I had been writing the resolution, I would have gone even further than this and put the responsibility for the board of police commissioners where I think it properly belongs, that is, within elected local councils which, by and large, are responsible for the funding of police forces across the province.

From many years of experience on the city council in the city of Sudbury, both as an alderman and as a controller, I was always frustrated by the lack of control I had over the expenditures and the activities of the police department. Despite the fact that the budget as formulated by the board of police commissioners did come for approval to the board of control, there was still no way we, as a board of control, could change the estimates or the spending of the board of police commissioners. It was just a mandatory rubber-stamping of what it thought was in the best interests of the municipality.

I think that elected members of city and municipal councils are the best representatives in any community to determine what level of policing they desire. Different people from different strata in our society have different values. To that degree, one might get a police force which is too lax with enforcement or one might get a police force which is too strict. Some place between those two extremes, a balance has to be arrived at. I can think of no one better qualified and more in touch with his community than an elected councillor.

I would suggest that the board of police commissioners might be abolished in favour of a committee of council, including the mayor and some two or three senior aldermen. I am not fussy about how many it is, probably three or four aldermen plus the mayor should be responsible for the administration of the police forces, because these are the people who have to go out and pick up the money. The board of control or the finance committee of the council has to tax the citizens in order to run the service, and

I think the people who have the obligation of picking up the taxes from the people should also have the obligation and the control over the spending of taxes.

This evasion of responsibility by elected officials is growing too rapidly. Even at this level, the amount of dollars which is spent by boards and commissions beyond the control of the elected people is unacceptable to me. This is one way that we could get a handle on the spending of public moneys.

Just to give the House one small experience I had as a member of the board of control of the city of Sudbury some years back, when we had the chief of police in with his budget for the year showing his projected expenditures. We were going through it as a board of control, looking at all of the different costs, and in the budget was an item for four extra police cruisers. I think at the time we had 16, and the chief and the board of police commissioners had come to the conclusion that we should have 20 cruisers. So there was an extra expenditure there of probably $25,000 or $30,000. I was questioning the necessity of beefing up our cruiser fleet.

In my mind the level of police service in Sudbury at the time was adequate and I saw no need for tighter police control in the community. It was a peaceful community and everything was going well. I questioned the chief as to the desirability of four more cruisers. After about half an hour of his evading my questions and going around in circles, he said, "Mr. Germa, I may as well tell you that those cruisers have already been on the street for four months." That is the kind of thing that goes on in the board of police commissioners.

At that point I said, "What the hell are we doing looking at your budget if you have already blown the money anyway? You have already got the cruisers and here you are coming to the board of control for approval by rubber stamp." We had no control whatsoever at that time.

It was at that moment that I came to the conclusion that as an elected councillor I wanted to have control over the expenditures of board of police commissioners. As I said, this is one small step in the right direction, but I do look forward to the day when the local council will have control over the administration and the spending of our police department.

Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I also rise in support of this resolution. Being in favour of that resolution, I would like to offer some comment in relation to it. First of all, I think it is important when we look at the present status of a judge on a police commission that we recognize the important contribution these men and women have made to commissions in the past.

I think the present commissions, which consist of the mayor or head of council, together with a judge and one citizen appointed by the province, have achieved a proper balance within the commission. I think there is a danger, if we followed the suggestion of the member for Sudbury, that the commission could become a committee of the council. Although police forces are providing a municipal service, and I agree with the member in terms of the financial control of those services, I think there is a significant danger of improper political interference with police forces. In the past the various commissions, as they have been set up, have worked pretty well as they have gone in the past.

The member for Chatham-Kent mentioned in his remarks that there is a significant problem in some areas, such as Chatham-Kent, where there is basically one county court judge and he is tied up with other judicial duties. In those cases there should be the option whereby the province can appoint another citizen to the commission to take over that particular function.

It might be interesting to go back in history some time. Originally, a board of commissioners was first appointed prior to Confederation. In the early days, a police magistrate was a member. In the year after Confederation, in 1868, a county court judge was appointed at that time. So for some 110 or 111 years we have had the county court judge as a member of the police commission.

The members of the municipal police force are governed and directed by the police board. This body is designed to ensure that the police are independent of direct political control of the municipality. The autonomy of the police boards, in my view, is essential to the proper administration of justice. This independence would be lessened if the police officials were either directly controlled by the municipally elected officials or were, in fact, municipally elected officials.

The dangers are obvious where the membership of the board is beholden and indebted to its supporters. Two competing interests must be balanced, namely, the need to have the police fully accountable to the elected representatives—as the member for Sudbury has pointed out—and, at the same time, to have them independent so they are able to enforce the law without favour or improper political interference. The presence of the judicial member is therefore a highly significant factor, and has been in the past, in maintaining this proper balance.

The board of commissioners of police has traditionally acted as a buffer between the politician and the police officer. In other words, the board concept is designed to ensure that the police are independent of direct political control. I mention this because it has been argued that policing is a municipal service just like any other.

I submit, however, that police boards and the Ontario Police Commission have a special role which arises directly out of our system of the administration of justice. Justice must be fairly, evenly and impartially dispensed. The present organizational structure is designed to ensure this end.

In short, the police board shields the police from direct political control and permits them the necessary independence to enforce the law.

There is truth in the contention that the police function is more closely allied in some ways with the municipal government than with the provincial government. But under the law a police officer is not an employee or servant of the municipality. The police officer is an agent of the crown as well, the holder of a public office who exercises an original authority. This distinction is basic to our constitution and our system of the administration of justice.

I wish also to point out that experience has shown that police boards are keenly responsive to local needs and desires. The mandatory membership of the mayor on a police board certainly assists in ensuring that this responsiveness will continue. The main point of my comments today, however, is to stress the necessity of separating politics from the administration of justice and the enforcement of law. Society clearly benefits from this separation and the county court judge can and does play a significant role in this process.

I indicated at the start that I am for the resolution, but I wanted also to recognize the significant contribution a judge does make. We would encourage the continuance of the judge's role in boards of police commissions. But we recognize the practical problem as outlined by the member for Chatham-Kent.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the resolution although I must say I disagree with almost everything the member for Carleton-Grenville has just said. In my opinion, it is not only that we should not be under any obligation to appoint judges to police commissions, but that judges should not be appointed to police commissions.

As has been alluded to, section 8 of the act is the section which sets up this pattern which has been traditional throughout the province. Within the region of Waterloo, we have a five-member commission consisting of a provincial judge, two other appointees of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and two members of the regional council.

In the recent report issued by Mr. William Palmer as commissioner for a review of Waterloo region—the report was issued in March 1979—he refers to suggestions as to his conclusions which would make the responsibility for police forces entirely a function, as a committee, of the regional council. In his opinion, the board of police commissioners for the region of Waterloo would be disbanded.

But he suggests one other item that, I think, should be referred to. That is the comment on page 158 of his report in which he says: “As an aside at this point, we fail to see the necessity for members of the judiciary to be involved in police governance. Such a requirement would seem an unnecessary use of their scarce time and an imposition upon the beleaguered gentlemen of the bench. As the hoary dictum would have it, moreover, ‘Justice must not only be done but must also be seen to be done.’”

“For this reason we have some reservations that a member of the judiciary may have an unwitting conflict of interest if required to supervise the police as well as to perform his foremost responsibility, which is to adjudicate the charges which those same police lay before him. This point of view was expressed by the McRuer Royal Commission on Civil Rights in Ontario, the Ontario Law Reform Commission and by three separate minority reports submitted to the Task Force on Policing in Ontario.”

I think that summarizes exactly the position which is, I believe, a sound one—that judges no longer have a place on police commissions. The comments that have been made by Mr. Palmer might suggest we do not have a police commission within the region of Waterloo. Whether that's acceptable or not to the parties involved, only time will tell.

There's another way of doing it: it could be ruled that at least a majority of the members of that commission be members of the regional council. One could also, perhaps, have some volunteer or additional members added to a committee of council—the matter could be dealt with in a variety of ways. But, in any event, the position of a judge on the continuing police governance body is something which I think is well out of date.

The member for Carleton-Grenville suggests that political influence might be brought to bear in this matter. Let me give you one more quote, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the British police forces are responsible to municipal councils through statutory advisory committees. But there is one quotation I would bring to the attention of the member for Carleton-Grenville. It's on page 156: “The arguments for keeping politics out of police are largely fraudulent. No matter how the system is structured, the police governing body must ultimately be responsible to the public. That is accountability and that is politics.”

Mr. Ruston: You'll have capital punishment.

Mr. Breithaupt: “The present system where the provincial government elected to a party system appoints the majority of police commissioners is every bit as political and more potentially dangerous than a situation in which a government composed of 24 separately-elected individuals with at least three different political stripes and seven different factions, appoints the police governing body.”

That deals, at least to my satisfaction, with the matter of politics and the police force. Clearly, the governing of the police forces within this province is entirely different from the American situation of strong mayors, police commissioners and a great variety of other attributes. I have cited the British experience, and I would hope that concise comment from Mr. Palmer would be satisfactory.

In any event, former Chief Justice Gale, now retired, has suggested that, without question, judges be removed from police commissions.

Mr. Foulds: It's hardly a revolution.

Mr. Breithaupt: The Attorney General, unfortunately, has not agreed. At least in the quotation I saw in the public press, the Attorney General said that he intended to remove the requirement in the Police Act that every police commission include a judge among its members, but that he would continue to make such appointments of judges in the future from time to time.

As a result, we may well find that the motion brought before the House today will be passed. It will not be blocked in the usual fashion by government members. The end result is that possibly we will have legislation brought in by the Attorney General which would at least remove this function of it being obligatory.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, at that point not only will I speak in favour of it being removed as obligatory; I will speak in favour of it being removed altogether.

Mr. Wildman: I wish to indicate that I rise in support of the resolution, for largely the same reasons the member for Kitchener just outlined.

It seems to me that the arguments raised by the member for Carleton-Grenville were somewhat off base when he talked about political interference. It seems to me that when we have a police commission, as we do, say, in Sault Ste. Marie, where we have three members, one of whom is a district judge, one is a provincial appointee and the other is the mayor, we already have two political appointees in the majority anyway.

Mr. Germa: Three.

Mr. Wildman: Yes. For that matter, a judge, even though he doesn't take part in the political process, is a political appointee.

Mr. Sterling: Not necessarily.

Mr. Wildman: Not necessarily, that's true, but usually, shall we say?

Mr. Foulds: The member for Ottawa East is hoping for one of those appointments.

Mr. Wildman: At any rate, I'm not concerned about that in relation to the judge particularly. What I am saying is that in a three-man commission there already is a majority representing political bodies. To argue that by putting one person, a minority, on the commission he is somehow going to limit the influence of the two political appointees, if they happen to agree with one another, is not—

Mr. Roy: Is Berger a political appointment?

Mr. Wildman: Of course he is. They wanted to get him out of the political process.

Mr. Roy: He'd be glad to hear that.

Mr. Wildman: He was so effective in the political arena they wanted to limit him and put him somewhere else, and then he proved even more effective as a judge when they appointed him to that commission. He conducted a commission that really blew holes in the whole Liberal policy for northern Canada.

I want to talk a little bit about the Sault Ste. Marie commission, which the Acting Speaker has some knowledge about. As I said, we have a three-member commission there, one of whom is a judge, another a provincial representative, and the mayor.

There has been some considerable controversy in the city about whether or not the commission is carrying out its functions effectively. The fact that we do not have the kind of representation which is subject to continual accountability to the political arena may be one of the reasons that commission is not as effective as it might be.

I wonder if the member who introduced the resolution might indicate to us why he chose to do it via the resolution route rather than presenting a private member's bill, which would amend the legislation. It seems to me that is a far more effective way. We have a private member's hour. It isn't a great deal of work. The legislative counsel can assist the member in presenting legislation. I am just surprised he hasn't gone the route of trying to amend the legislation, especially when he considers the fact eminent purists have agreed with his position.

Since I don't agree with the member's argument about political influence, I want to emphasize the reason I am in favour of the resolution is I am opposed to provincial judges serving on boards of police commissions per se. I would like to have it, as the member for Kitchener indicated, obligatory for them not to serve. In other words, I don't want to see judges on them. There is just too much risk in their situation for a possible interpretation of conflict of interest in cases where there may be difficulties in administering justice, or where there are difficulties in a situation where a police officer or a group of policemen may indeed find themselves at some point facing a judge, if that judge is also a member of the police commission.

Mr. Roy: Name one police force that agrees with you.

Mr. Wildman: I am not sure what the member means by the police force, but as a matter of fact I have had some discussions with the members of the Sault Ste. Marie Police Association and I will indicate they agree with me.

Mr. Roy: Is that a police force or a police association?

Mr. Wildman: Police association. I also know the Acting Speaker, in his role as Solicitor General, has had some discussion with that police association in the past in regard to the provincial appointee. There are some major problems which I won't go into here because it is not central to this debate, but there are some major problems in the administration and operation of the Sault Ste. Marie police commission.

I don't think having a district judge on that commission is really changing that any or assisting it. For one thing, the bench is so busy trying to keep up with the number of cases they have that in many cases the judge may find himself not having enough time to be involved actively in the deliberations of the commission. This leaves it, in a situation where you have three appointees, largely to the provincial appointee, because the mayor himself is awfully busy as well. I would prefer to see the situation changed so we could perhaps have more people who could more actively and permanently work on commission work instead of having one who is so busy on the bench he doesn't have time to be involved, and the only municipal appointee being the mayor.

I support the resolution. I regret the fact it isn't here as an amendment to the legislation we could support to give some direction to the cabinet. I would really emphasize that I don't want to see judges on the commission and I would like to see greater opportunity for local input into how police affairs should continue.

Mr. Rotenberg: I rise, of course, to support the motion of my colleague from Chatham-Kent. I support it in the way it is written because whereas I agree with the position that it should not be mandatory to have judges on police commissions, I also feel judges are people and a judge should not be excluded from a police commission.

In some areas, there is value for a judge to be on the commission. In some areas, as was pointed out, there are problems with getting a judge to act. In those cases, it is not proper for a judge's inclusion to be mandatory. There are some areas where a judge may have time, where a judge is best qualified and a judge can and should sit on a police commission. To exclude him simply because he is a judge I think is just as bad as to make it mandatory that a judge serve on the commission.

I am not sure if it was the last time this matter was debated in the House, but it was debated in this House in 1962. At that time oddly enough, the government of the day—which was the same party as the government of this day, and will be for many years to come—had introduced a bill to remove the judge from police commissions. At that time the two opposition parties opposed the removal of a judge from police commissions. I'm pleased to see that the present members of the opposition, most of them different members have changed their minds.

It would be interesting to quote from some of the opposition members who spoke on this in 1962. First of all it was pointed out at that time that the police bodies, the various chiefs of police and police associations, wished to keep a judge on the police commissions. The then member for Beaches-Woodbine, Mr. Ken Bryden, said: "I feel very concerned that the associations representing law enforcement officers in the province should feel so alarmed and uncertain with regard to the legislation before us. It would appear, from the representations made to this bill, to have quite an undesirable effect in undermining morale upon the law officers of the province." That was the NDP, which then supported keeping a judge.

The predecessor in my riding who sat opposite, Mr. Vern Singer—

Mr. Mancini: He's not here to defend himself.

Mr. Warner: This is private members' hour, remember.

Mr. Rotenberg: —indicated he was quoting from a policeman who said, "Under the present system, who could be more qualified to sit on these boards than a judge? He is a federal appointee, appointed for life, well versed in law and appreciates the duty of a police officer. We feel that it gives the municipalities assurance of a better type of efficiency in their police than if they were served by less qualified board members elected every year with, frequently, an axe to grind." Mr. Singer said, "In a very few words, the police chief, a very reasonable gentleman, expressed his opinion."

The predecessor of the member for Sudbury, Mr. Elmer Sopha, who was of a different party, said, "It is essential and fundamental that a judicial person sit upon these commissions. Perhaps the main reason, if one could select one reason out of many, that a judge should sit upon these commissions is that they are a quasi-judicial body. They have to decide questions of discipline and conduct and other matters in the police force."

Mr. Roy: Why don't you quote Wishart? He said the same thing.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, that was back in those days, and I agree only in part with what was said, because as I say, I don't think it is necessary for a judge to sit on a police commission.

But police commissions do from time to time sit as discipline bodies. Police commissions do, from time to time, sit as arbitrators in police matters, in matters of discipline, in matters of arbitration and so on. It is not a necessity but certainly an advantage to have a person on that commission who has judicial training and judicial experience, who can bring an impartial point of view to it. Because, in the police commission discipline matters, it is almost a trial. I don't preclude other people, but if you get a committee of council sitting as a police commission, there is a tendency for such a committee of council to deal with discipline matters in a different way from those who have judicial training. I say there is a tendency. It may happen; it may not.

I was interested in the remarks of the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) who seems to want the police commission to be a committee of council. I was interested also in the comments of the member for Kitchener, quoting the recent study on the Kitchener-Waterloo region, and who seemed to be agreeing with the commissioner. I hope when the government brings in a bill, the member for Kitchener will agree with everything the commissioner says on that report, but that is another matter.

Mr. Roy: Don't you worry he'll take a responsible approach.

Mr. Rotenberg: I should hope so. A committee of council is qualified to do many things but I don't think it is qualified to sit in judgement on police discipline matters. This should be done by some other body. I'd also point out to the member for Sudbury that while he is technically correct, really a municipal council cannot set the budget of a police commission. Maybe when he was on council in Sudbury he did things differently than when I was on a municipal council.

In practice, municipal councils do review police budgets and do change police budgets. Technically, according to the Police Act, if the municipal council refuses to pass the police budget, then it is appealed to the Ontario Police Commission so that someone else sits as arbitrator between the local police commission and the municipal council. In practice, however, because of that, municipal councillors do have quite a bit of control over the budget of the police commission and municipal councillors should exercise that control.

In my opinion, speaking to the point of the member for Sudbury, I feel that the municipal councils' control over the general police policy through the budgets which should be exercised is a sufficient control of the political arm of that police commission. The day to day operation, particularly the discipline problems and the problems of crime fighting, should not be done by municipal councils.

Can one imagine the type of things that a police commission has to do when it sits to set policy on how to fight crime or organized crime, if there is such a thing, or whatever? That would be done by a committee of council sitting in open session because committees of council, as we know, are always going to sit in open session. There is pressure to do so. How can a committee of council, acting as a police commission, sit in open session and deal with those police matters?

I would really have to disagree with the member for Sudbury that a police commission should be a committee of council. But that is not really what is before us today. What is before us today is the resolution from my colleague from Chatham-Kent that it shall no longer be mandatory for a judge to sit on a police commission.

It seems there is unanimous opinion in this House for at least that. I think if we pass this resolution, hopefully unanimously, that will be an indication to the government, the cabinet members, and the Solicitor General that this is the feeling of the House and, hopefully evolving from that will be legislation that will take away the mandatory provision for a judge to be on a police commission. When that legislation comes forward, which I hope it does, I hope also that the legislation will not preclude a judge from being on the police commission for the reasons I have indicated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Actually there is no time left from what was reserved unless the member for Chatham-Kent doesn't want his full time.

Mr. Watson: How much time have I got?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: You have about four minutes.

Mr. Roy: Give us a couple of minutes here. Give some of your time to someone who knows what he is talking about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for York Centre for two minutes.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, there are quite a few things I would like to say about this. I am in support of the resolution as far as it goes. However, I would like to say that this resolution has already been embodied in legislation introduced in this House by the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth) when he was the Solicitor General in Bill 113, in November 1977.

That legislation conforms not only to what is proposed here in this resolution, but it also protects the discretion of appointing a judge, if the circumstances warrant it. Unlike my colleague from Kitchener, I must say I am a person who does support the position of a judge on a commission. The reason I do is that the police commission itself does fulfil a very important function. It acts as a quasi-judicial body. It has the power to conduct hearings under the Police Act which affect the freedom and the livelihood of individuals appearing before it, namely, police officers.

It administers the Police Act, which is a statute of the province of Ontario. It seems to me that for this function and this reason only we should protect the position on the police commission that would and could be filled by a judge for the reasons set out by several members who have already spoken, namely, impartiality, expertise and legal and judicial training.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Stong: That is very important when we are considering this bill. I support the resolution but I wouldn't like to see it closed up any tighter than it already is.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the people who have spoken on this, especially the people who have had personal experience on police commissions and have a more intimate knowledge of them than I have. I would like to add something to the argument we have got into, which really is not part of the resolution. One of the reasons I didn't include it was that I realized there was a difference of opinion as to whether or not they should be removed.

I can sympathize with some of the arguments in large centres where people say they don't want the judge on the commission, but I think that in small communities with a three-man police commission, a five-man council and 2,000 people, it's pretty hard there to make it impartial or not to allow small "p" politics to creep into it.

In my particular riding in Chatham-Kent and that of the member for Kent-Elgin, we have a particular situation. I did bring this resolution to the attention of this House to try to speed up the introduction of this legislation, because we in essence have four police commissions which are operating as two-man commissions at the present time. We think it is the busyness of the present judge we have; he is new and he has been appointed to four, but he has not been acting. Essentially, we have two-man police commissions, and we would like to correct that situation.

I do appreciate the support, and I do hope that the Solicitor General will be receptive to removing this requirement from the Police Act.

PUBLIC HEALTH AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Gaunt moved second reading of Bill 67, An Act to amend the Public Health Act.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to discuss this bill today, because it is very topical. Much of the question period today was taken up with matters having to do with radiation, and this matter has to do with a type of radiation. It is topical also from the standpoint that, in the United States, Congressman Weiss introduced a bill in January to do the same thing as is being advocated in my bill; so it is a matter of some discussion in the United States as well, and that bill has gone to committee, as I understand it.

I want to deal with a number of items. First of all, I want to describe the ionization smoke detectors, the nature of the product contained in them, americium 241, and why regulations requiring controlled disposal are inadequate. My colleague from Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) will deal with the risks and the benefits, but I want to end up by telling the House why I propose this particular measure under the Public Health Act.

By its very nature this is going to be rather technical; for that I apologize, but it is a technical subject.

There are two types of smoke detectors commonly used in the home, ionization detectors and photo-electric detectors. The ionization device, which comprises between 85 and 90 per cent of the market, uses a radioactive source, most commonly a substance called americium 241, to transform the air inside it into a conductor of electric current.

A number of highly respected scientists and radiologists have pointed out that americium 241, a waste product from the nuclear cycle, is potentially a major hazard to public health and to the environment. Americium 241 is a transplutonic element; that is, its atomic number is greater than that of plutonium. It is 53 times more radioactive by weight than plutonium 239 and has a half-life of 458 years. This means that it will retain its potentially lethal properties for thousands of years.

According to Dr. Edward A. Martell, an environmental radiochemist with the National Centre for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colorado, there are thousands of lethal doses in one microcurie of americium 241.

Americium 241 is formed from plutonium and, like other plutonium isotopes, it emits alpha particles with strong energies. Alpha radiations have higher linear transfers than beta or gamma radiation; that is, they transfer greater energy in a shorter distance.

It is true that alpha radiation has a weaker penetrating power than gamma radiation (medical and dental X-rays) and beta radiation (colour television sets and luminous-dial wrist watches); however, when taken into the body, although fewer cells are reached by an alpha particle, all of its energy strikes those few cells, increasing the likelihood of cell mutation or cell death. Thus, americium 241 is potentially an extremely hazardous substance and highly likely to cause cancer once it gets into the body.

Like plutonium 239, the target organs for internal exposure of americium 241 are the lungs, liver, bones and gastrointestinal tract. Infants and young children are especially susceptible, as in their case americium is more readily absorbed from the gastrointestinal tract and more deposited in the liver of the newborn.

The greatest danger of an americium release from the detectors does not occur from normal use but if the devices are improperly disposed of. Once in the environment, americium poses a greater risk to health and safety than plutonium 239. Dr. Karl Morgan, for many years the director of the health physics division at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory and now with the school of nuclear energy at the Georgia Institute of Technology, and who has been long recognized as a leading expert in the field of health physics, explained why in an article published in the Congressional Record, February 1, 1978: "The risks are identical for plutonium 239 and americium 241 . . . and once in the environment, americium is more of a risk than plutonium, because it is more readily taken up by animals and plants."

Americium, which is soluble, accumulates in the biosphere (in soil and water), from which it enters the human food chain in drinking water, plant foods, fish and animals. Once ingested into the human organism, it moves readily from the gastrointestinal tract into the bloodstream, where it remains to cause cancer of the liver and the bone. Dr. Dean Abrahamson, physician, physicist and professor at the school of public affairs, University of Minnesota, has stated: "There is no question about the toxicity of americium, especially if it gets into the food chain."

Where do the dangers lie? Under normal operating conditions, ionization smoke detectors do not represent an immediate threat to consumers and the general public. In fact, it has been shown that one could get more radioactivity from a colour television set. However, there are some concerns about the protection of workers engaged in the manufacture of ionization smoke detectors and the manufacture of radioactive sources used in them. Those concerns have been expressed in terms that the workers are not adequately protected. The average amount of americium 241 contained in an ionization smoke detector has been estimated at anywhere between one microcurie to five microcuries, while ionization devices in the work place are reported to contain up to 15 microcuries.

The main problem with ionization detectors is not, therefore, in the actual use of the devices but with respect to their disposal. The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, an international organization, warned in a report that one possible route is direct contact with the radioactive material in the device, while another possible route is the transfer of radioactivity to ground water and subsequently to drinking water. The committee report was of the opinion that the doses to the public from this latter method of disposal would be insignificant.

These assumptions have been seriously criticized by a number of experts. First of all, the long half-life of americium 241 means it is by no means safe to assume that labelling on these devices will remain intact for the duration of its radioactive life. Second, health physicist Dr. Morgan has stated that "since americium will certainly seep into the soil and water . . . the only question is where and how much. Even though the risk may be small—and I am not saying it is—when you have millions of these smoke detectors, and you multiply a 'small risk' by a large number, the risk can be much larger." Dr. Donald Geesaman, a noted biophysicist, claims it is insidious to manufacture and distribute radioactive smoke detectors and concurs that "it's inevitable that some of this americium will enter the human food chain."

In aquatic ecosystems, both plants and animals pass large amounts of water through their systems, filtering out and retaining nutrients and, as it turns out, radioactive contaminants. Even small amounts of plutonium in water end up in significant concentration in fish and other forms of water life. This has serious implications in the disposal of americium which, once in the environment, is more of a risk than plutonium.

The OECD committee's recommendations on the use and disposal of ionization detectors stipulate that activity per detector should not exceed one microcurie per detector and shall not exceed five microcuries. Thus, the household ionization smoke detectors that are in excess of one microcurie—and there are a number of models available in retail stores in this province of up to five microcuries—are in excess of the preferred limit. Furthermore, in arriving at its recommendation that ionization detectors not exceeding five microcuries need not be subject to the condition that their recovery and disposal are controlled, the committee used several assumptions in its assessment which may not be applicable to circumstances in parts of this province.

In its calculations the committee assumed that the average activity in a single-station ionization detector unit is only one microcurie.

Second, the committee assumed for the purposes of its calculations that at present only one home in 20 is equipped with smoke detectors and that by the year 2000 one home in 10 will be fitted with an ionization detector. As I will show later, this could greatly underestimate the situation in this province.

Third, it is assumed that the average life of a single-station ionization detector is five years. However, of 15 ionization detectors tested for the October 1978 issue of Canadian Consumer magazine, nine had warranties for only one year. In addition to this, Honeywell's market manager has predicted that in a year or so the market will enter into a retrofit condition, where consumers will start buying new units instead of going to the expense of replacing batteries. Since the smoke detector market has flourished in the past two years, it is likely that the figure of five years is too long for the average life of an ionization device.

The same assumptions were used by the committee to arrive at its conclusion that the release of radioactivity to air during incineration of waste is insufficient to warrant controlled disposal of ionization detectors containing more than five microcuries of radioactive material.

I had a letter from a concerned resident of Thamesford, who attended a meeting at the Arva firehall on March 20, 1979, and asked about the disposal of these units when they become inoperable. He was told, in front of the entire gathering of approximately 200 people, to just dig a hole two feet deep and bury it. In my view, that is not good enough.

Last fall, the Atomic Energy Control Board relaxed its rules on residential ionization smoke detectors and now allows the home-use devices to be thrown in the garbage. Yet, unfortunately, it is not sufficient simply to require the reinstatement of the regulations stipulating controlled disposal, since there is no way of ensuring that the consumer will comply with the instructions on the label. Previously, the AECB regulations stipulated that the labels read something like this: "2.5 microcuries americium 241. Disposal by return to supplier or as directed by Atomic Energy Control Board, Ottawa."

Consumers who do actually take the trouble to contact the AECB to dispose of the devices in accordance with its directions would be instructed to dispose of them via Atomic Energy of Canada Limited at Chalk River. The point here is that it is a very complicated procedure, and there are nine chances out of 10 that consumers simply will not do it.

Simply putting a label on something that says it is radioactive does not give the consumer all the information he needs to make a decision as to whether or not to buy an alternative model without a radioactive substance.

Dr. R. H. Neill of the Bureau of Radiological Health, US Food and Drug Administration, makes the point that, unlike hospitals, laboratories and industrial facilities, the consumer area must, in general, be termed an uncontrollable environment. Many people may not even bother to read the label or, if they do, they will forget the instructions.

Another factor that must be taken into account is ascertaining the adequacy of labels recommending controlled disposal in terms of the numbers. In 1977, estimated sales for Canada of residential smoke detectors were 300,000. In 1978, this rose to 1.2 million, and estimated sales in 1979 are well over two million. Two independent sources which manufacture smoke detectors have indicated that Ontario holds a 40 per cent share of the market. One of these sources has said the Ontario share might even be as high as 50 per cent.

This gives us a grand total of 1.4 million smoke detectors sold in Ontario for the three-year period ending December 1979. The ionization model captured at least 85 per cent of the residential smoke detector market, giving us a figure of 1.19 million units for the province.

One manufacturer has estimated that 22 per cent of the dwellings in Canada possess smoke detectors. Ontario holds about 40 per cent of the market; by this estimate, at least one in five dwellings has a smoke detector, which indicates that the figures used by the OECD committee for the purposes of assessing waste disposal implications, that is one in every 20 homes at present and one home in 10 by the year 2000, are far too conservative for Ontario.

Other factors account for a huge volume of sales in Ontario. Market growth can be attributed to encouragement from insurance companies to policy holders to buy residential smoke detectors in the form of premium reductions, rebates and so on and, of course, the government legislation making smoke detectors mandatory is another factor here.

There is no question that the government should be commended for taking steps toward the fullest protection of human lives from fire. However, in view of the fact that an excellent alternative to the ionization device exists, the photo-electric device which contains no radioactive substance at all, government legislation with respect to smoke detector units should require that the photo-electric model be installed.

All right, why have I introduced this legislation via the Public Health Act? I've introduced legislation prohibiting the sale and distribution of ionization smoke detectors through an amendment to the Public Health Act. I favour the ban on sale and distribution because even if manufacturers and distributors of these devices were required to stick labels on them directing controlled disposal, there is no guarantee the user would see the label, read the label, remember the label or comply with the instructions on the label.

Under the Public Health Act, the Ministry of Health has the express duty to maintain certain standards of health in the community and is given very broad powers to do so. Since the presence of carcinogenic substance in the environment in the form of the radioactive isotope americium 241, which has a dangerous potential to leach into soil and water systems and work its way up through the human food chain, obviously constitutes a threat to human and public health in the community, the proposed amendment is well within the scope of the act.

Under section 4(d) and (g), the ministry has a duty to determine whether the condition of any public or private place, or the method of manufacture or business, or the disposal of sewage, trade or other waste is a nuisance or injurious to health, and if so, may order whatever changes are necessary to remove the nuisance or hazard.

As a matter of fact, the Minister of Health is specifically authorized at present to make regulations to control all uses or sources of ionizing radiation under section 642. So far, two regulations have been made; one dealing with public health labs, some of which work with radioactive materials such as X-ray equipment and so on, and having to do with microwave ovens. Therefore, there have been ample precedents to legislation of this kind.

Since no action has been taken by the ministry to legislate with respect to ionization smoke detectors which, in my view, constitute a problem injurious to health and since the ministry clearly has a duty imposed upon it to maintain certain standards of health in the community, my amendment in the form of a new section 98(a) will ensure that the sale of ionization smoke detectors is prohibited, thus removing a source of significant danger to human health.

I come back to the argument with which I originally started. The argument is, why run the risk to the environment and human health by using ionization smoke detectors when a safe, equally effective alternative is already on the market. I urge that all members support this particular bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member had one minute remaining. Does he wish to reserve that?

Mr. Gaunt: Yes, I would like to, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'd like to congratulate the member for Huron-Bruce on introducing Bill 67, which will prohibit the sale of ionization-type smoke detectors. It is a legislative initiative that is both good and necessary, and I intend to support it.

In the past two years, several members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party have raised this issue with the government and the government's response has been either vague or rather simplistic. I hope we hear something further in the way of a response today, if not total agreement with the bill as proposed.

I can recall on May 1, 1978, asking the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations the following question in the House: "In view of the fact that there is now a significant body of evidence indicating that the ionization type of smoke detectors constitute a risk to the health and safety of individuals who come into contact with them, and in view of the fact that the photo-electric type of smoke detector does not constitute such a hazard and thereby provides an acceptable alternative, will the minister consider amending the provisions of the Ontario Building Code so as to not permit the use of the ionization type of smoke detector in Ontario buildings?"

At that time, the minister responded that he would look into it and I can only suppose that his successor is still looking into it. That is one of the reasons why this legislative initiative has been made necessary.

I can recall members of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party questioning the Solicitor General about this as it related to the fire code. The response of the Solicitor General's staff during estimates was that the radioactive hazard was negligible. It's kind to characterize that sort of ostrich-like approach as simplistic.

Members of the Legislature will be quite interested to know that in fact the government has made its answer well known. When one calls the Ministry of Government Services and talks to anybody in the property management branch of that ministry, they will inform you that 99.9 per cent of the government buildings in the province use ionization-type smoke detectors. The government position is fairly clear and on the record.

This issue raised by the member for Huron-Bruce has become even more crucial now that a number of jurisdictions have moved to make the use of smoke detectors mandatory.

The ionization type of smoke detector, as explained by the member for Huron-Bruce, is unlike the photo-electric detector because it is a device based on at least two different radioactive elements: not only americium 241 but also radium 226. As he said, americium 241 is indeed an alpha-emitting radioactive isotope. Members should be aware that it is very similar to plutonium in its toxicity as a cancer-causing element at extremely low levels of exposure. You don't need to be exposed to very much of it to experience serious harm, Mr. Speaker.

With one exception, I don't intend to deal with the safety of the detector in the home because that will no doubt draw from apologists the argument of comparison of radioactive levels to wrist-watch dials and other such things.

The one exception deals with the cleaning of the ionization type of smoke detector. Recommended regular cleaning involves removal of the cover of the detector and either a light dusting or a vacuuming. If the shield foil is at all misaligned, chips of americium can come onto the cleaner's hands, exposing them to a very serious hazard.

There are three other hazards I would like to make sure are on the record and clearly understood.

First of all, I am terribly concerned about the danger to workers who are making this product in the plants. The exposure to americium in the plant is totally unnecessary, and I find it objectionable.

Secondly, I'm concerned about the risk to the health and safety of firefighters who are summoned to buildings that store or manufacture these detectors because there exists in those buildings a very high concentration of these radioactive materials. The firefighters could be in a position where they are called in, for example, to a department store and are not really aware of the degree of concentration and, therefore, can be exposed unnecessarily.

It is interesting to note that a leading manufacturer of the ionization-type detector in the United States submitted data to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission when they were studying the matter which estimated that a fireman fighting blazes in a warehouse containing only 1,000 completed units, a total of approximately 3,000 microcuries of americium, could receive a substantial dose, a 50-year internal dose of 37 rem. This estimate was based on the assumption that there is only 0.31 per cent leakage from the americium-containing foils. That indeed shows the scope and nature of the hazard posed to firefighters.

Thirdly, I share the concern of the member for Huron-Bruce over disposal. Now that the Atomic Energy Control Board is no longer insisting that radioactive detectors be returned to the manufacturer or to the board for disposal, we will indeed end up with all kinds of these detectors in our landfill sites. As has been pointed out, this element has a half-life of 458 years. It is terribly clear that this is not the kind of thing the government should allow to be tossed away in our local garbage dumps.

The ionization type of smoke detector is not a no-risk item. The debate centres only on the degree of hazard involved. Any degree of risk from a radioactive smoke detector is totally unnecessary because there are available on the market today at comparable prices safe and clean smoke detectors which are equally efficient. Indeed, the photo-electric type of smoke detector is more effective in the case of a smouldering smoke fire, the kind of fire that accounts for something like 75 per cent of home fires in North America.

I think the current policy of the government is nothing short of foolhardy. There has to be a change in policy. The question put before us by the member for Huron-Bruce is clear. Should we allow the sale of a radioactive device which presents a real hazard when there is an acceptable alternative? The answer is clear. The answer is no, and therefore I would recommend to members of this assembly that we support the member for Huron-Bruce and vote in favour of his bill.

Mr. J. Johnson: In rising this afternoon to debate this bill, I would like to say this is in no way an insignificant matter. The whole issue of nuclear radioactivity is one which I feel is vitally important today as our society becomes more and more dependent on nuclear power.

Because it is an issue about which little is known by the average citizen, it is important also that our concerns are heard publicly. I sincerely commend the member for Huron-Bruce for his concern for the overall health and safety of our population and also for presenting us with this opportunity today to air some of our views. The honourable member introducing this bill has quite honestly and sincerely outlined some of his fears arising from the various warnings issued by public interest groups who feel that we must reduce the number of cancer-causing agencies in our environment. This is a principle about which few would argue and, as I have said, it is a most commendable one.

We are all interested in public safety and avoidance of human tragedy, but in this instance I really feel we must deal with both sides of the coin. The honourable member's bill, if passed, might in the long run alleviate some amount of human suffering, but it might also in some cases jeopardize the lives of human beings. I think it is important to examine all the facts pretty carefully before we come to any conclusions.

There are two kinds of smoke detectors, as has already been mentioned. The photo-electric cell detector measures light which is visible in the detector only when smoke is illuminated. Despite the advance in technology and increased sensitivity of photo-electric models to fires generating little smoke, the ionization detector remains much more sensitive to invisible smoke particles resulting from open, blazing fires.

Consumers Union has done considerable testing in this regard and I might just quote one section from Consumer Reports of January 1977, "Are Smoke Detectors Hazardous?" It states: "The ionization detectors, as a class, responded quickly—within about two minutes—to flaring fires that produce little or no visible smoke. In contrast, the photo-electric detectors generally ignored the smokeless blazes for as long as we allowed the test to run—about 10 minutes. In a blazing fire a matter of minutes or even seconds can spell the difference between entrapment and escape."

It has been stated accurately that most deaths caused by residential fires are the result of smouldering blazes detected most easily by photo-electric models. However, the second largest number of deaths related to fires are those caused by open flames. These fires clearly, according to Consumers Report of January 1977, are detected much earlier by ionization detectors.

In fact, the US Consumers Union does recommend installing both models. They report a further advantage to the use of ionization detectors; most models don't rely on a household electrical supply which can be interrupted during fires. If it can be proved that ionization detectors save lives and the radiation danger is minimal, not just to residents but also to firemen, then plainly, we are discussing a cost-benefit situation.

Unfortunately, both safety and radiation are difficult to prove. It seems the benefits can be proven, whereas the possibilities of dangers are in fact, still open to question. Figures are not readily available, but approximately 55 to 60 per cent of all lives lost in fires are through residential fires. Most of these occur at night. Last year there were 7,487 fires in Ontario single family residences and the lives of 265 of our citizens were lost.

It is a safe assumption to say a significant number of situations have arisen in the past and will arise in the future in which a matter of seconds could mean the difference between life or suffocation. An ionization detector can provide earlier warnings and therefore permit faster escape from open blazes. Certainly the Consumers Union feels that conclusive evidence exists to prove the benefits of these devices over photo-electric detectors.

I'd like to take a few minutes just to mention for the benefit of the members some information I have on smoke detectors. Based on conversations with Harold Yoneyama, director of technical standards division, Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations and with Underwriters Laboratories of Canada, the following facts were confirmed.

I don't suppose there's much use in mentioning this because the members are not interested anyway.

Mr. Wildman: No, no, I will listen, Jack, I'm interested.

Mr. J. Johnson: Their statements are very similar to what the former mentioned. Radiation outside the unit is said to be less than that of a luminous wrist watch or a colour television set. It's an argument and each side is telling a story. It's a question of who we are to believe.

The Ontario Building Code requires all new houses to have one or more smoke detectors of either the ionization or photo-electric type, and approvals are based on tests from ULC. The Atomic Energy Control Board used to require that all ionization smoke detectors be returned to the supplier for disposal, but as of about six months ago they decided the radiation was so minimal the detectors could be disposed of in normal garbage. That's from the Atomic Energy Control Board and I thought they were a responsible body.

Ms. Gigantes: The people who brought you Port Hope.

Mr. J. Johnson: If they are not, maybe we are all in deep trouble. While it would be difficult to produce evidence of health damage because of radiation from an ionization detector, it can be proved easily that lives are lost in house fires where there are no smoke detectors. This is the single most significant concern I have with this bill. I say to the member for Huron-Bruce that reluctantly, I cannot support this bill prohibiting the sale of this type of smoke detector because in my opinion, the greater danger is that much of the public will perceive smoke detectors of all types to be dangerous to their health and as a result may not install any fire detectors—

Mr. M. N. Davison: What about the factory workers who make them and who are exposed?

Mr. J. Johnson: —in their homes. I am sure all members would agree that this indeed would be a tragedy and would without question—

Mr. Kerrio: You are setting up a smoke screen.

Mr. J. Johnson: —lead to the possible loss of many lives. In fact, Mr. Speaker, that very concern is described in detail in Consumer Reports, January 1977.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I once again commend my colleague from Huron-Bruce for his good intentions, but respectfully request that this bill be delayed until a new or better smoke detector is available.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Are you going to block it?

Mr. B. Newman: I rise to support the legislation introduced by my colleague, the member for Huron-Bruce. You will find, Mr. Speaker, that he always introduces good common-sense legislation that should be accepted by government simply because he introduces it. In deciding whether or not to permit the sale of consumer products containing radioactive materials, the decision must be based on a complex balance between the risk and the benefits involved. At least one can deal with large facilities such as power plants, where one can impose very stringent requirements to contain any radioactivity produced and theoretically, releases can be cut to extremely low values, which is itself an arguable point.

But this isn't the case with all consumer products. By the nature of their use, these products are dispersed and are beyond control. Even though the individual exposures may be very low, very large numbers of people may be affected and retrieval of the material in the event that unforeseen consequences develop cannot be assured.

In particular, research and review are needed on such questions as what is the benefit of the use of radioactive materials? Is it a unique benefit? Are there other ways of achieving the same goals that do not involve radioactivity? What differences in effectiveness are there? In this connection, I would like to stress that in the case of residential smoke detectors, a non-radioactive alternative to the ionization type is available. The photo-electric smoke detector is just as effective as the ionization type in the home and the work place according to tests performed at the National Bureau of Standards in the United States. An article by Ralph Nader in the Ladies Home Journal of February 1978—and these articles are more up to date than previous articles mentioned by my colleague who spoke just prior to my comments—states that a study done by Underwriters Laboratories and the Illinois Institute of Technology shows no apparent difference in lifesaving potential between ionization and photo-electric detectors. The October 1976 Consumer Reports states that no clear answer can be given to the question of whether photo-electric or ionization devices represent a better bet for safety in the home. They say that statistically, smoky fires cause the greatest number of deaths and photo-electric models react to smouldering fire faster than ionization models, although ionization models react faster to open flame fires. The Canadian Consumer of October 1978 had this to say: "Some fires are slow-burning, smoky affairs, which contain large particles. Others are quick-burning and flaming with small particles. The slow-burning fire is the most insidious. Bear in mind the oxygen depletion and the possible inhalation of noxious gases increases directly with the length of smoke buildup. When faced with the smouldering fire, the photo-electric devices were by far the best performers. The poorest performer among the photo-electrics was still more sensitive than any ionization device. The ionization devices eventually responded to the smouldering fire, but as a group they were less sensitive to smoke buildup than the photo-electrics."

Although it is acknowledged that the photo-electric type responds more quickly in cases of smouldering fires in a mattress or a chair, for example, where smoke particles are large, while the ionization device responds faster to clean flames and smaller particles, as would be generated by a wastebasket fire, according to US fire research engineer Richard Bright: "In general, the smoke from the typical dwelling fire will be composed of a wide range of particle sizes, so given the present state of knowledge either detector will suffice."

Defenders of radioactive detectors must be asked why take any risk when other types of detectors, devoid of inherently dangerous elements, can function equally well and save lives? There is absolutely no justification for sanctioning the widespread use of any devices containing dangerous carcinogenic material when it can be avoided. If there is not a decided advantage in using a product with radioactive material in it, as opposed to a similar product that will do the same job, it should not be authorized. This would go a long way towards doing away with any unnecessary radiation.

A large number of firms manufacture both types of devices in Canada, those using americium as well as radium-226. An article appearing in the Montreal Gazette on January 26, 1979 quotes the president of a Canadian company stating that: "We will anticipate the market will be close to $2 million in 1979 and we will capture half of that market."

That was a manufacturer of an ionization device, a device we strongly oppose while we have a photo-electric device that will accomplish exactly the thing we are looking for.

While at present photo-electric devices are marginally more expensive than ionization models, their costs are relatively insignificant in light of the purpose they fulfil. There is no reason to expect the market to shrink just because the ionization device is prohibited. Government legislation, incentives from fire insurance companies, promotion and education programs of fire departments, will continue to ensure consumer demand for smoke detectors, so that manufacturers now making the ionization device could easily switch over to producing the photoelectric model.

On a more general level, we should not forget that radiation protection standards in use throughout the world closely follow the recommendations of the International Commission on Radiological Protection. These protection standards are not intended to represent safe levels, rather they are intended to be levels where the associated risk is acceptably low. It is important to note that the history of these standards is that as new biological evidence has accumulated the standard has been made more restrictive. During the past few decades, we have found that radiation risks are far greater than we anticipated them to be some years ago. The risk of malignancy is now estimated to be 10 times what we thought it was a few years ago.

Dr. Karl Morgan has said: "There is a question about the genetic risk, whether it is greater or less, and we know almost nothing about the long-range genetic risks to man. Some years ago we had the impression that as long as one did not exceed a certain dose one was safe. I am convinced that is not a tenable hypothesis."

Dr. Arthur Templin, a staff scientist at the National Resources Defence Council in Washington, states in a paper he prepared in August, 1977 on biological effects of radiation: "Both experimental data and theoretical considerations indicate that any amount of radiation, no matter how small, must be considered as harmful to man."

For low doses of environmental radioactivity this means that any radiation exposure, no matter how small, carries with it some risk of cancer induction. Acceptability of the small doses likely to be received into the environment from the future production of consumer products containing radioactive substances with long half-lives and no controls over disposal should only be judged after the various risk options open to society have been compared. Extensive further investigation must be undertaken to determine the effects of ionization radiation on the environment. In particular, the Environmental Protection Agency and other agencies such as the National Research Council and the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation have called for the improvement and strengthening of programs and ecological studies to answer vital questions about the release of radioactivity to the environment, especially on how these materials move through the environment, where they are concentrated in natural systems, what their effect is on the environment itself, how long it might take for them to move through these systems to a position of contact with man, and how all this information can be used as an early warning system to prevent potential problems from developing.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have one more paragraph but I will accept your ruling.

Ms. Gigantes: I am pleased to rise and join my colleagues in support of Bill 67, a bill which I support enthusiastically. The need for this kind of bill has never been more obvious than it is today, as the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) mentioned earlier, because we have begun to accumulate a knowledge of how we are receiving exposure to radioactivity and how each part of the radioactivity we receive in our bodies adds to the other parts and accumulates as a potential danger to the body.

It also accumulates as a potential danger to the human species. As the member for Bruce-Huron pointed out, in addition to the exposure for individuals who either work or live near radioactive ionizing-type detectors, there is the problem of what will happen when disposal occurs for various reasons. There is a threat to the environment and long-range danger to the food cycle that we cannot ignore in terms of public health protection.

It seems to me we have not had an adequate understanding of the philosophy on which we should be operating in terms of public health protection in the use of agents and devices such as the ionizing detector. It has been the habit of this government and the federal government, indeed of governments around the world, to wait until a danger is established, to wait until there is a body count, to wait until there is damage, to wait until there is physical destruction before banning certain agents, certain drugs, certain pieces of equipment. We have seen a tragic history of human agony built up in cases such as thalidomide, a drug developed specifically for use by pregnant women, a drug which was not tested on pregnant animals. We know what human tragedy was created.

We hear now of asbestos in hair dryers. Is there any more direct a way of promoting the inhalation of asbestos than to put asbestos liners in hair dryers? We have had it proved to us by Ralph Nader that some cars, which have been designed and marketed in the hundreds of thousands in North America, are unsafe at any speed to the consumers who bought them.

We know from evidence that has been released today that the level and power of diagnostic X-rays in this province are far higher than any reasonable exposure for patients. We know from practices in Vietnam, from sad experience in the United States that the use of 2,4,5-T causes miscarriages. We know that Vapona strips which are used to catch flies, for heaven's sake, are dangerous to human health. And we know that government after government has been reluctant to ban the use of these agents, has been reluctant to set up standards to ensure consumer protection.

The philosophy has been unless we have a body count, unless we know that it is dangerous, then there won't be a ban, there won't be a proscription on sales. That's the wrong philosophy. Instead, as soon as a question of public health is involved, we should be moving to a philosophy which says, if this agent, this piece of equipment may be suspect in terms of public health, then we must call for a moratorium on its use until the safety is established. The onus must be the other way around. It should not be incumbent on citizens' groups, on underfunded bodies of concerned citizens to establish that a public health danger exists.

As soon as there is a question about public health, then there must be a response from government that calls for a moratorium; no use of this agent, no use of this equipment until safety is established.

Mr. Speaker, on this piece of equipment more than all others there is no excuse for inaction by government. As my honourable colleagues the members for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) and Huron-Bruce have pointed out, there is an alternative in terms of fire protection for home and for work. There is no excuse for using ionizing radiation when we can accomplish a very satisfactory substitute through photo-electric detection.

A bylaw has been passed in the township in which I live which requires all residences to have fire detectors installed. As you have heard from previous speakers, most of those detectors will probably be of the ionizing radiation type. I don't know if you have ever installed a smoke detector, Mr. Speaker, but most of them are attached to the ceiling. If you have an eight-foot ceiling and you happen to be a five-foot-four-inch person, then you have to get up on a chair to try to attach one of these devices to a ceiling. The chances that you are going to perforate the foil which is supposed to shield the radioactive contents of that detector are very great. As my honourable colleagues from the Liberal Party have pointed out, replacing the battery or even cleaning the battery constitutes a hazard; and these dangers will become more prevalent as the age of the smoke detector increases.

Taking everything into consideration I can see no reason why this bill should not be supported, and every reason why it should. I hope that most members will join me in giving support to it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I rise to comment on this particular bill because of my personal interest in fire protection and smoke detectors in northern Ontario and because of the large area I personally represent and the very vast area for which my own ministry has responsibility.

Before I get into my comments, I want to compliment the member for Huron-Bruce for bringing this forward. He's recognized in this House for his common sense and for his concern for his fellow men. We've always recognized him for those fine qualities. I compliment him on bringing this forward as it does give us a chance to debate the various issues. I hope that when this debate is over we will not have raised the fears of the public, particularly those who have purchased smoke detectors and are using them for the protection of their families right across this province.

Mr. Warner: He has done such a good job. Tell us about the guillotine now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: My colleague, the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson), has very ably laid out a number of arguments which I wholeheartedly support. I want to tell the members of the House that when the Ministry of Northern Affairs was established one of the first priorities we identified was the lack of a formal firefighting protection system in northern Ontario. In many small, isolated, remote communities of northern Ontario, there is no formal structure and there is no fire protection of any sort.

With the assistance and the co-operation of the Unorganized Communities Association of Northern Ontario, East and West, headed by very able people and very capable people, including Kathy Davis from Hurkett and Gerald Violette from Gogama, who also identified this particular problem very quickly, we looked around.

They spent a lot of time and a lot of effort going through and meeting with various organizations and doing research with regard to smoke detectors. They assured themselves, after a tremendous amount of research, that the ionized smoke detector was the one they should be promoting in northern Ontario.

I live in a small, unorganized community in northern Ontario and I have two smoke detectors in my home. When I purchased them four or five years ago they were $49 each. They had just been put on the market. I felt very strongly about it and purchased two and installed them myself.

I say to the member for Ottawa-Carleton (Ms. Gigantes) that there was no difficulty in installing them and there was no danger in puncturing the foil around them. They are relatively simple to install and maintain. The battery does burn out periodically, but there is an identifying noise that lets one know when this happens. They're very easy to maintain. I can assure members that when I go to bed at night I feel very comforted that I have that type of protection. Those of us who live in frame houses in northern Ontario, who don't have fire protection, have to rely on these types of things.

It's the old battle. When I first saw the bill, I had to say to myself it's the old deal of the photo-electric people fighting the ionization group. It's the same battle we have heard over the past several years.

The death rate, as I pointed out a few moments ago, is of concern to me and my ministry. The death rate due to fires is about five times higher in northern Ontario than it is in other parts of the province. This is why we moved so quickly and so decisively to assist the residents in unorganized areas to purchase smoke detectors. We went so far as to subsidize the purchase of those detectors.

I was surprised that the northern members didn't get involved in this debate. I am sure there are northern members on the other side of the House who have ionized smoke detectors in their homes, as I do.

Mr. Wildman: Why are you looking at me like that?

Mr. Bradley: My detector says you are going to block this bill.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think you are right.

Mr. Warner: That's what I thought. It's the old guillotine, and you are the dull edge of it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know that you are very familiar, Mr. Speaker, with the Northern Affairs smoke detector subsidy programs. To date we have assisted UCANO East and West in selling about 4,900 smoke detectors throughout the entire northern part of this province. We conducted a very large promotional campaign for two full years, both on radio and on television, bringing this new program to the people of northern Ontario.

The success stories are there, Mr. Speaker, as you well know. You will recall the tragic deaths in your riding, in Hurkett, a few years ago, when we lost six or seven children.

Mr. Speaker: Eight.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Eight children were lost in a fire in which the coroner clearly spelled out that had there been a smoke detector in that home those eight children would be alive today.

On December 18, again in your riding, in the Geraldton Times-Star there was the paragraph: "The Matthews family escaped their burning home into a winter's night, thanks to the shrilling of their newly-installed smoke detector." Apparently they had purchased and installed the detector only the day before. The editor went on to say: "Had it not been for the smoke sensor, who knows what would have happened to that family?"

These are the things we're reading about regularly throughout the north. We're getting compliments from those people who have installed them. There is the comfort of knowing they have at least that kind of protection. This has been followed by a very ambitious program to provide those unorganized communities with other types of firefighting equipment, such as portable pumps and fire trucks, on which I will not dwell at this time.

The Underwriters' Laboratory of Canada is a recognized testing laboratory which reports to the fire safety council made up of representatives of the fire safety community from across Canada. ULC tests products and also carries out a product followup. This recognized testing laboratory, along with the Canadian Standards Association which develops specifications, accept smoke detectors which use either the ionization principle or the photo-electric principle. ULC has accepted both types of detectors as safe and reliable.

It is also the opinion of the radiation protection services of the Ministry of Labour, and the consumer protection branch of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations that the levels of radiation emitted from ionization smoke detectors are quite low and are not considered dangerous to public health. As the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel pointed out, there is more radiation, apparently, from a colour television set than from the ionized smoke detector. Further, Ontario building code accepts both ionization and photo-electric smoke detectors in its requirements for all new buildings.

Mr. Speaker: The member has about 30 seconds.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The fire marshal's office, which works very closely with my ministry and the Unorganized Communities Association of Northern Ontario, also supports the installation of ionized smoke detectors in the homes throughout this province.

So with that type of research, with that strength, with that type of support right across northern Ontario, regretfully—and again I want to compliment the member for his concern—I have to tell him I cannot accept the bill as it is presented today.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the members who have taken part in the debate; the members for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison), Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, Carleton East, Kenora and Windsor-Walkerville, who have expressed support and/or kind comments.

The member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel indicated that by banning this type of smoke detector we might be saving some lives down the road a few years, but at the same time we might be jeopardizing other lives because the photo-electric type is not as effective in terms of alerting people to clean burning and hot, instant fires. This is quite correct, but I would simply say to him that the photo-electric type undoubtedly could be improved. I think there is no halt to the research and development that can be done with respect to the photo-electric type, and I'm sure it could be improved to the stage when it had a smoke and a heat detector all in one package.

I'm not arguing against smoke detectors, I encourage their use. I'm just saying that I want a safe, effective device rather than one which has a risk attached to its manufacture, use, and most important disposal. There has been some concern that the public might get the impression all smoke detectors are bad. I hope that isn't the case. I encourage their use. I would simply say that if that is a fear on the part of the government, the province can simply require the installation of safe smoke detectors in the homes across this province. That would overcome the problem.

I hope the government doesn't block the bill.

Mr. Nixon: It wouldn't dare.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

MEMBERSHIP OF POLICE
COMMISSIONS

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Watson has moved resolution 13.

Resolution concurred in.

PUBLIC HEALTH AMENDMENT ACT

The House divided on Mr. Gaunt's motion for second reading of Bill 67, which was negatived on the following vote:

REED PAPER COMPANY

Mr. S. Smith: Would the minister be good enough to supply the House with figures for the allowable cut and for the actual cut for the various species in the various timber limits that Reed has had?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The Leader of the Opposition asked me a question on April 19, and again on May 7, regarding the annual allowable cuts and the actual cuts for various tree species on lands licensed to Reed Limited. As promised I am pleased to table the answer with the Clerk of the House.

Actual and Allowable Cuts by Species

SCHOOL BOARD STATISTICS

164. Mr. Bounsall: Will the Ministry of Education table data from the September board report for each school board where September 1978 enrolment exceeded 2,000 pupils; the total number of full-time equivalent teachers who spend the majority of their time as regular classroom teachers? Secondly, for each of these school boards, will the ministry state the ratio of pupils to full-time equivalent regular classroom teachers; that is, the number of classroom teachers, plus the number of full-time equivalent part-time teachers? For the 20 largest school boards, will the ministry also table comparable figures from September 1975? [Tabled April 26, 1979.]

See sessional paper 55.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

165. Mr. Cassidy: Will the ministry provide figures, by skilled trade category, for each of the years 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979, giving: (i) The numbers of apprentices who completed their training; (ii) the number of these apprentices who received compulsory certificates; and (iii) the numbers of these apprentices who received voluntary certificates. NUDE ENTERTAINMENT

167. Mrs. Campbell: Will the minister advise the House as to: 1. The number of charges laid in the last year under section 170 of the Criminal Code against, (a) burlesque entertainers, and (b) club owners who employed burlesque entertainers? 2. The number of charges laid in the last year under sections 21 and 22 of the Criminal Code against club owners who have encouraged burlesque entertainers to perform nude contrary to section 170 of the Criminal Code? 3. The number of convictions obtained for each of the above charges? 4. Whether direction has been given to the police and crown attorneys regarding the laying of charges and the prosecution of charges of "nudity" under section 170 of the Criminal Code? 5. The nature of the Attorney General's consent to proceedings under section 170(3) of the Criminal Code? [Tabled April 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: 1. In the last year, under section 170 of the Criminal Code: (a) There were 25 charges laid against burlesque entertainers; (b) there was one charge laid against an owner or manager.

2. There was one charge laid under section 22 of the Criminal Code against an owner or manager—the same charge mentioned under 1(b).

3. Of the 25 charges in 1(a), four have resulted in convictions and 21 are pending trial. One of the four convictions is under appeal. The one charge against an owner or manager is pending trial.

4. No direction has been given to the police or to the crown attorneys concerning nudity prosecutions.

5. Requests for consent to prosecute are received from the local crown attorneys. Our policy has been to consent to a prosecution where there is evidence that a burlesque entertainer deliberately was nude in public in the presence of other persons. Under section 170 a person is nude who is so clad as to offend against public decency or order. The only charge usually available against an owner or manager is counselling or procuring nudity and this poses evidentiary problems since it requires the dancer to testify against the employer. Our policy is to prosecute the owner or manager wherever sufficient evidence exists. If a dancer is willing to testify against an owner or manager then we will prosecute him but we usually are unable to do so without the dancer's evidence.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

168. Mr. Laughren: Would the Ministry of Industry and Tourism table the criteria on which it makes its recommendations to the Foreign Investment Review Agency on foreign takeovers of business and new foreign business in Ontario? [Tabled April 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One of the criteria for federal assessment of applications as contained in the act states: "The compatibility of the acquisition or establishment with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policy objectives enunciated by the government or legislation of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition or establishment."

The Minister of Industry and Tourism has been given the responsibility for developing the position of the government of Ontario in response to each application received from FIRA and in doing so draws on the advice of other ministries depending on the nature of the proposed business activity.

There is considerable input by this ministry into the consideration by the Foreign Investment Review Agency when assessing a reviewable application by a non-eligible person to establish a new business or acquire a Canadian business that is likely to affect Ontario significantly.

The great majority of decisions reached by the federal government are compatible with the position of this province as both governments are seeking significant benefits to this country. However, my ministry does not hesitate to take a firm stand when it is believed that a FIRA position may be contrary to the industrial and economic policy objectives of Ontario. The resolution of such possible disagreement tends to lead to an ultimate high degree of compatibility by the two levels of government.

Applications cover a very broad range of business activities such as resource development, manufacturing, trade, commercial and retail services and financial institutions. Consequently my ministry's assessment must take into account the policies of many other ministries which are known to the members. One very strong positive factor in all of these evaluations is, of course, the creation of jobs.

There are a number of other criteria used. Some of these deal with the effect of the investment on resource processing, import replacement, exports, productivity, innovations, competition and with the participation of Canadians in the management and in the equity of the enterprise. A copy of our assessment sheet which shows our current criteria is attached.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 10, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GIFT TAX REPEAL ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 48, An Act to repeal the Gift Tax Act, 1972.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, in our opinion, having passed the repeal of the Succession Duty Act, it is necessary to repeal the Gift Tax Act, since its reason for being was to prevent a short-circuit of the Succession Duty Act. Therefore, we are repealing this act, with your permission.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, we regard this as a companion piece to the bill we debated on Tuesday of this week. Probably the same philosophical and financial arguments apply thereto. I am sure this is not necessarily going to prevent our socialist friends from some degree of repetition; some of them do it fairly eloquently, and I do not even mind on occasion. But at this point my colleagues and I, having accepted the original bill to repeal the Succession Duty Act, accept this bill; I do not think it is necessary to repeat the arguments in favour thereof.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, it certainly would have been a jar to my entire metabolism if the member for London Centre had said anything differently from what he did.

Mr. Peterson: Maybe I'll change that. I would like to jar him.

Mr. Laughren: The member for Muskoka did not have to tell us why he wants to put this bill through; it is obvious why a Gift Tax Act was brought into place in the first place: If we did not have a gift tax and we had a succession duty, then of course the people would simply give their legacy in the form of a gift before they died, if they could accurately predict when and where that might occur. Obviously there had to be a gift tax to protect the revenues from succession duties.

What we must understand about this bill is that the Gift Tax Act already protected people who wanted to give away money; they could give $10,000 to any one recipient and $50,000 in a year by a donor. There was ample protection there. It was not as though people suddenly were not going to be able to give Christmas gifts; that was obviously not in the purpose of the Gift Tax Act. Over a period of 10 years a person could give away $500,000; now we are going to do away with that entirely.

What the Treasurer and the Liberal Party tried to do the other night on this kind of tax was to deceive us in this chamber and anyone else who might happen to read—

Mr. Peterson: That is highly unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker. He should withdraw that.

Mr. Laughren: Deception is unparliamentary, I say to my friend.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This is the Allan Blakeney legislation.

Mr. Laughren: I want to tell him it is quite appropriate for him to deceive but not appropriate for us to accuse him of deception. I see the game he is playing. I would like to briefly quote from Provincial and Municipal Finances, 1977, put out by the Canadian Tax Foundation, an organization I am sure the Speaker is most familiar with, having practised before the bar, maybe numerous bars.

"In Ontario a system of tax forgiveness eliminates any adverse effect of a succession duty on family incorporated businesses and family working farms, including incorporated farms and family partnerships. Duty is forgiven over five years at the rate of 20 per cent of the duty and interest each year, computed on the market value of the shares of the business or the farm, provided it continues to be owned and operated by members of the deceased's family."

All the protection for small businesses and farms was already provided right there. The Liberal members the other night were attempting to deceive us into thinking those people would be hurt. Nothing could be further from the truth, and yet there they were. The Treasurer is party to the whole game of deception as well, but we simply will not buy it.

Mr. Lawlor: Your next move will be the move against capital gains taxation.

Mr. Laughren: Not only that, but the tax which people paid under these acts was already deductible from the federal capital gains tax they paid. That has been in effect since 1977. Did the Treasurer stand up and say that when he was saying why it was so necessary?

Mr. Lawlor: I don't think he is aware of that.

Mr. Laughren: He may not have been aware of that, even though he stands up and says, "We can't have double taxation in the province of Ontario because of the capital gains tax." The Liberals nod sagely and say, "Yes, that's true; we can't have double taxation."

What a lot of nonsense. This is clearly a case of the other parties not wanting to tax wealth. It is as plain and simple as that. They do not want to tax wealth.

Mr. Kerrio: Put yourself in our shoes. Who would you support if you had to support the government or your gang?

Mr. McClellan: Try being your own man for once, Vince.

Mr. Laughren: If we could convince the member for Niagara Falls that his talents are required elsewhere we would all benefit, except the people he went to help.

Mr. Worton: If you had nothing you wouldn't mind giving it away.

Mr. Laughren: That is a very interesting interjection; another Liberal says, "If you had nothing, you wouldn't mind giving it away."

Mr. Worton: That's right.

Mr. Kerrio: NDP policy.

Mr. Laughren: Isn't that interesting. That is exactly the point, isn't it? The majority of the people out there don't have anything to give away, but you are protecting the ones who do. That is exactly what you are doing. Don't tell me that people who are getting protection are the ones who need protection.

Mr. Kerrio: If you could pick anywhere in the world, where would you go from here?

Mr. McClellan: Why should he leave here? Why should anybody leave here?

Interjections.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Nickel Belt wants to be serious. May we have a little order for him?

Mr. Kerrio: Certainly.

Mr. Laughren: It is going to be doubly difficult, with the member for Niagara Falls and the Premier here at the same time, being serious about any issue in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now, Floyd, that is not polite.

Mr. Laughren: Well, it is true. The performance of the Premier during question period in the past month has been deplorable, absolutely deplorable.

Mr. Hennessy: What about your leader for the past three months?

Mr. Laughren: The Premier has refused to address any issue seriously in the last month.

Mr. Kerrio: When you can't stand the heat get out of the kitchen.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The subject of the bill is to repeal the Gift Tax Act.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Take a look at the questions.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, we have looked at the questions. The Premier should be looking at them too.

Mr. Makarchuk: You have been taking lessons from Pierre, you know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who?

Mr. Makarchuk: Pierre.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who?

Mr. Martel: That's Joe you are talking about.

Mr. Makarchuk: Not Joe, Pierre, he is having a tough time living that down.

Mr. Laughren: I did not for a moment think the Premier entered the chamber tonight to seriously engage in or listen to the debate. That never entered my mind; nor did it enter the Premier's mind. I have no illusions about why he came into the chamber tonight. It was not to engage in the debate, was it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I came to listen to the member.

Mr. Laughren: Did the Premier come in to engage in the debate? No; only if he is abused to the point where he feels he has to do so to maintain any honour.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Will the honourable member please return to the repeal of the Gift Tax Act and I will try to control the House.

Mr. Laughren: If the others will stop abusing me, I will get back to the bill.

Mr. Peterson: Why is the member for Nickel Belt so testy tonight?

Mr. Laughren: I am testy tonight. When I think about the debate the other night on the succession duty tax and the arguments that were used by the Treasurer and by the official opposition, I get angry all over again.

Mr. Hennessy: An angry young man.

Mr. Martel: The Liberals the other night changed their position again.

Mr. Laughren: It was a pretty shabby performance.

Mr. Martel: They voted against succession duty in 1973 and 1974.

Mr. Lawlor: The feds step out of the whole field and make room for you guys so that you could get a little money. What do you do? You abolish it immediately afterwards so that there is none for anybody.

Mr. Laughren: My colleague from Lakeshore made the one intelligent interjection of the evening.

Mr. Kerrio: He's really suffering too.

Mr. Laughren: He's absolutely right. The feds did stand aside and this government was supposed to take up the tax room that was left but the Treasurer abolished it and stepped out of it. It is not as though we were protecting a single person who needs protection. The people who are getting protection because of the abolishment of these two bills are people who need no protection from this government or anybody else.

Mr. Kerrio: They only make the country go; that's all.

Mr. Laughren: There were lots of exemptions under the existing legislation without abolishing this legislation. For example, in the gift tax exemption, for $25,000 or less there was a 15 per cent tax; over $25,000 and up to $50,000, it was 37.5 per cent plus 20 per cent on the next $25,000. There were lots of exemptions. I could go right through the list up to $200,000. There were lots of exemptions there under the existing legislation and there was no need for the Treasurer to abolish either of these bills.

I understand the difficulty of maintaining one of the bills without the other; that's why they are companion bills. But there is no justification whatsoever for it. I said before that the abolishment of these bills is not protecting people who need protection. I look at a very quick list of income tax shelters available to people who have the kind of discretionary incomes to invest in them. I look at the multiple-unit residential buildings program, MURBs as they are known, capital gains, RRSPs, RHOPs, RPPCs—that's registered pension plan contributions—return preferred stocks and the interest income deduction program. There are more exemptions and protections there than they need for people who have income, particularly when they have already got exemptions under gift tax and succession duties as well.

Here we have the Treasurer saying to the people of Ontario, the vast majority of whom don't have any opportunity even to take advantage of these things, "We haven't given you enough; we're going to give you more." That's what he's saying. We can't buy that kind of argument at all. The Treasurer at some point along the way is going to have some answering to do for this budget.

My own suspicion is that because of the federal election which is under way now the Treasurer has got off very lightly on his budget because of the kind of budget he has brought down. If we were not in the middle of a federal election, he would be feeling the heat a great deal more than he is now because that is a bad budget. One of the worst parts of the whole budget was the abolition of succession duties and gift taxes. There was simply no economic or social justification for the abolishment of those taxes.

I know the Treasurer sneers at egalitarianism. He stood up the other night and said he was most proud of the fact that the people who have high incomes were getting more. He stood up for his response the other night and said that. He is quite proud that people in the top three per cent are getting even more protection than they had before because of the abolition of this tax. It defies my being able to describe it without obscenities that, because the top three per cent of estates are being taxed, he says that's too much. He abolishes that even. That takes some kind of chutzpah, and the Treasurer has it. The Treasurer cries about the hardship of those people who—

Mr. Bradley: Party of privilege, that's the Tories.

Mr. Laughren:—receive the benefits of the state—or gifts, I suppose he would use the same argument—but doesn't talk about the exemptions. That's what I call deception.

He talks about the hardships without saying the exemptions look after any of those possible hardship cases where a family business is passed on or a family farm is passed on. The Treasurer doesn't tell us that when he stands up, does he? No. He's hoping that people will either forget or won't pursue it with him.

Of course, if this Treasurer has one ace in the hole when it comes to introducing regressive legislation or abolishing progressive legislation, it's the Liberal Party in this province. They can always be counted to support anything regressive and to aid in abolishing anything progressive.

Mr. Kerrio: Thank God for sane people. Common sense will prevail.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise and join my colleague, the member for Nickel Belt, in opposition to this bill, and take a slightly different tack to the withdrawal or the abolition of this tax.

My colleague in his comments mentioned a number of times the negative, regressive nature of the Treasurer's budget. I would like to go into that a little bit further in relation to this bill.

This bill, along with the succession duties bill and the repeal of those two taxes, is costing this government tax dollars. We saw a whole list of other taxes increased, every one of which affected the people at the bottom of the scale most severely, the people who could least afford it.

But with the repeal of this tax and the succession duties tax, we only see a benefit to those at the very top end of the scale, those who don't need any protection, those who have no financial problems, those who will smile more broadly because of the assistance as they walk to the bank. But all of the tax increases in the budget affected consumers from the top of the scale to the bottom of the scale and affected those consumers at the bottom end of the scale most severely.

The repeal of this tax and the repeal of the succession duties tax on Tuesday point very clearly to this government's attitude and this Treasurer's attitude; they point very clearly to their approach to the problems of average and low-income people in this province and the plight they face in being able to afford the ever-increasing tax burden.

Their own federal leader runs around this country telling people we need to put money back into the hands of consumers, yet everything they do is in contradiction to that. It makes it very difficult to believe a Tory now, or at any point, in terms of economic strategy.

Mr. Martel: Very well put.

Mr. Charlton: It's just not acceptable to debate—

Mr. Martel: With a head start.

Mr. Charlton:—this gift tax bill in isolation as has been said by the other participants in this debate. First of all, it's a companion bill to the succession duties tax and secondly, it's a part of this government's approach in the budget, an approach which is just not acceptable in this time of economic hardship. It's just not acceptable to the people of Ontario in terms of the kind of economic leadership and economic assistance they need.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I'll end what I have to say by emphasizing that the reason why we're opposing this bill and why we opposed the succession duties bill on Tuesday night is because of the regressive nature of what had to happen to replace those tax dollars in this budget.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to speak? If not, I will call upon the Treasurer.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have no comments.

The House divided on Hon. F. S. Miller's motion for second reading of Bill 48, which was approved on the following vote:

THIRD READING

The House divided on Hon. F. S. Miller's motion for third reading of Bill 48, which was agreed to on the same vote.

ONTARIO LOAN ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 50, An Act to authorize the Raising of Money on the Credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I'd be glad to make some comments on this bill. It is a routine annual bill but this year we've made some changes in the act that incorporate recommendations the public accounts committee suggested a year ago. That is there is an expiry date for the borrowing of the funds authorized in this bill rather than an open date. I would say that really is the most important of the changes in the bill itself.

Mr. Peterson: We'll let the hockey fans empty out of the House. Mr. Speaker, I must say, just by way of preamble, I'm very disappointed, as a member of this Legislature, to have had to sit here for an hour tonight waiting for a bell on that last bill, just because a particular member happens to be a little cranky and subjects all the rest of us to that kind of thing.

I'm just a little tired of it. They take an hour and they go out and whip 18 members back into the House.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker on a point of order: I believe the rules of the Legislature allow for divisions and an opportunity for members to be brought back in. As the government House leader well knows, and as the Liberal House leader knows, we calculated this bill would come in for a division approximately between 8:45 and 9 o'clock.

Mr. Nixon: Eight-thirty was the number I gave.

Mr. Martel: Well it might have been the number the member gave. He hasn't been known to be right before anyway.

I'd like to say, Mr. Speaker, that was what the whips were told and so, consequently, the members were advised of approximately the time they should return to the Legislature. I think the clown who just spoke, should withdraw his comments about my colleague.

Mr. Speaker: The member for London Centre has the floor on Bill 50.

Mr. Peterson: I say there's just a limit to how much this House has to put up with because of the petulance of one little particular member.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Peterson: It's the kind of self-centredness that party collectively exhibits on—

Mr. Speaker: Bill 50, please.

Mr. Peterson: And even though there is the odd—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: If you have a contribution to make on Bill 50, I suggest you do it right now or I will recognize another member.

Mr. Peterson: I do have a contribution to make, Mr. Speaker but I was speaking to the member for Sudbury East's point of order, which you allowed in its totality.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have a member of the Legislature who would like to speak to second reading of Bill 50?

Mr. Foulds: A point of order.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of order. There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Peterson: Well, on the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order.

Mr. Peterson: Then you should have ruled him out of order at the time.

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order. He was responding to your ill-advised point of order.

Mr. Peterson: I wasn't speaking on a point of order; I was speaking on the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, you are not. If you don't proceed with it now, I will recognize another member.

Mr. Peterson: I am going to forthwith, immediately, Mr. Speaker.

I want to speak to Bill 50 which, as the honourable Treasurer has pointed out, is a routine bill. It is an annual bill; we face it every year and frequently it is passed over as another piece of housekeeping legislation, even though, interestingly enough, over the years some very interesting debates have transpired around this particular bill. I remind you that it was my colleague, the former member of the Liberal Party, who—

An hon. member: Former member?

Mr. Nixon: I may join up again.

Mr. Peterson: —brought to this House the government's intention of borrowing in German marks and forced the Treasurer of the day, one Charles McNaughton, to at least tell the House what he was doing in Germany and what he was planning on borrowing. He was warned subsequently against that.

I discussed this to some extent in my budget response, but interestingly enough, so far we have already lost something like $28 million in exchange losses on that loan. That is just one example of the vicissitudes of borrowing in the foreign marketplace. Our exposure today is something, as I recall, over $100 million for the province of Ontario if those loans had to be paid off today.

And that is not speaking about the massive Hydro debt. As I recall, Mr. Speaker, if that Hydro debt for which the province is responsible had to be paid back today, it would increase the province's exposure some $924 million; close to another billion dollars in exchange losses, if one is playing in those kinds of marketplaces.

This bill is a little bit different because what it does is authorize the internal borrowing of funds. We are borrowing a maximum of $1.6 billion. I am very happy to see the time limit on it this year; it is a progressive move. The Treasurer is responding to the advice and to the beseeching of the provincial auditor on this matter. But we are borrowing from the Canada Pension Plan, from the CMHC waste and control loans, and the teachers' superannuation fund.

Believe me, Mr. Speaker, this bill is fraught with difficulties—the procedure and the past behaviour of this government. We are quickly running out of time with this kind of borrowing practice. Five years from now the Treasurer will not be able to bring this kind of bill to the House because there will be no more money. He is going to be in a net cash-flow deficit position with those funds, at least with the Canada Pension Plan. He is going to be paying back more than he can borrow.

Every serious observer of this scene says we are necessarily headed to a very difficult situation. The former Treasurer acknowledged this on more than one occasion, but he never could do anything about it. He talked about increasing contribution rates on CPP, he alluded to the fact that we are going to face a financing crisis in the 1980s. I have tried within the limits of my powers of persuasion to convince this Treasurer that he, or whoever is the Treasurer in the 1980s, is facing a massive problem of financing in this province. As yet I have seen no evidence that he understands it, and if he does understand it, that he has done anything whatsoever about it. I find that quite alarming.

I would at least like to see the start of a public debate about the nature of the financing of this province sometime in the 1980s. The classic response is, "Well, we will wait for the response of the Haley commission." That was supposed to be out this month, as I recall, and now I gather it is going to be out next fall and we are not even sure about that. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations told me today to the best of his knowledge it is probably coming out sometime in the fall. And this is in the wake of a lot of very serious people looking at this issue.

We have had the Confirantes report in Quebec which addressed itself to borrowing by the province as well as other aspects of the pension program. We have had various submissions to the federal government. Some governments are starting to address their minds seriously to this issue. What we are doing is putting ourselves progressively every year into a larger hole. In the 1975 budget, 6.9 per cent of our budget was in interest; in 1976, 7.6 per cent; in 1977, eight per cent; in 1978, 8.8 per cent and in 1979, 9.2 per cent.

The only thing we know for sure about the budgeting practice of this province is that interest payments as a percentage of expenditures are necessarily growing year by year, and that necessarily, as it has this year and will next year and did last year, leads to higher taxation. And necessarily, as interest payments increase, the transfers to pay off our debt for money already borrowed increase. We know for a fact that transfers to the various other jurisdictions under the province of Ontario—to health care, to education or whatever—are necessarily going to be squeezed and necessarily occupy a smaller percentage of the overall budget. That is one of the reasons we are seeing the tremendous squeeze in social services, health care and many other services of this province, when the transfers are below the effective rate of increase in inflation. We are necessarily, as a result thereof, seeing cutbacks and a serious squeeze in many parts of this province.

I say very seriously one of the important reasons this is happening is that we are having to honour our debts of the past; obviously we cannot renege on them. What we have done in this generation of government—of the Davis-McKeough-White now Miller government—is to continue on this excessive path with no recognition of what is going to happen in the future.

Even though this bill is treated as a routine bill, it is far more important to the province and the people of this province than the two bills we have just discussed, the Gift Tax Repeal Act and the Succession Duty Repeal Act. It is more important to the future of this province than those two bills, even though those two bills invite far more interest and even though those bills incite the passions a little more and get a few people a little more cranky and a little more upset where people divide on philosophical grounds or whatever.

Mr. Foulds: I thought second reading was for debate. It's too bad the Treasurer didn't debate the last bill.

Mr. Peterson: Serious people are saying, "Look, we are going to have to address our minds to it." The Treasurer, as a long-term fiscal planner, is going to have to come up with some answers. I know he is new on the job. This is his first time. Just today I was looking at the debate we had a year ago with the former Treasurer, Darcy McKeough. I was prophetic. I say so with some degree of humility.

I said then, and I quote myself: "In our budget responses some six weeks ago, I predicted then the start of a demise and the decline of the Treasurer." Was I prophetic? I was prophetic.

Mr. Nixon: Where is he now?

Mr. Peterson: Everything we said then has proved subsequently to be true. The former Treasurer did understand, even though he did nothing about it, some of these problems. He could see the forces conspiring against him. He could see his predictions were not going to come true. He could see the money was not going to be there. He could see his dream of balancing the budget, part of the great Brampton charter, was going to be an impossibility. He could see his ridiculous attempt to increase OHIP premiums at that time was not going to wash with this Legislature. As a result, I have no doubt, he lost his personal clout in cabinet and he lost his own efficiency and ability to influence the course of events in this province—

Mr. Nixon: That is what is happening to the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) right now.

Mr. Peterson: —because he was part of the creation of a series of events and numbers that overtook even him. We are looking to the new Treasurer—God bless him, he is a nice fellow—

Mr. Nixon: You are going too far.

Mr. Peterson: —to address seriously some of these issues of long-term financing, because when one extrapolates the trends and when one looks at them, one knows we are headed for some trouble.

This Treasurer has adopted some of the techniques of the former Treasurer. He is confusing net cash requirements with deficit. He has successfully confused the majority of the editorial writers in this province. They all say, "A wonderful fellow, Frank Miller, the deficit is $1,153,000,000." But that's not true; the deficit is $1.7 billion. There has been a $38 million improvement in the budgetary process of this province this year. [9:30]

He is using the same devices as before, fiddling with the below-the-line transactions, the non-budgetary transactions. He is taking them into current income to obfuscate the amount of the current account deficit—mortgages he is going to sell off, more assets of the province of $100 million, and of course patriating his $105 million investment in Syncrude.

Mr. Nixon: Burning the furniture to heat the house.

Mr. Peterson: All of those are fine. I'm not against that. But what I am saying is that there are limits to that. Last year when I was asked the question, "Will McKeough balance the budget by 1981?" I said there is only one way he could do it the way he runs the province, and that is to sell off the furniture. He could sell off the Robarts library; he could sell off this building if anybody would buy it. There are a few other assets.

One of the things the Treasurer should start thinking about is selling off some of that $600 million or $700 million worth of land the government acquired which is sitting growing poplar trees and lying fallow. That was a classically terrible mistake of this government. All of those nonproductive assets are accumulating interest on an annual basis, and that is part of the legacy of debt we have inherited today.

Back to my earlier suggestion: The Treasurer said that our net cash requirements are $1,153,000,000; I say the real deficit is $1.7 billion. But if that is the case, if he is right, why is he, with a net cash requirement of $1,153,000,000, borrowing over $1.5 billion? In fact, he is borrowing $1,544,000,000 this year. He is borrowing much more than his net cash requirements. That has to trigger something in even the most average of minds. Some of my friends in the NDP may understand it when I put it in those terms.

Why is he borrowing $300 million, $400 million or $500 million more than his net cash requirements? What is happening is that he is trying to make up for another way that he obfuscated the figures last year by retiring some of the treasury bills from the $195 million worth of treasury bills he took out saying at that point with a firm commitment, we would go to the marketplace for no more public borrowing.

After that he ran into a revenue squeeze and because of 12 successive quarters of irresponsible and wrong predictions he had to go to the public market and increase his treasury bill offering on a weekly basis to bring in another $195 million worth of revenue that year. And now he is going to try to retire them. That was after a firm commitment from the Treasurer of that day that he would go to the marketplace for no more public money.

This Treasurer tried to obfuscate that a little. He said no more public "debenture" borrowing. He snuck that little word into his statement. But in fact they violated a tenet that was held very close to their hearts. They were so proud of the fact that since 1975 they had not gone to the public marketplace for any more money; but they did last year. The Treasurer is going to have to speak to that I am sure, in a moment.

This is an alarming trend. We are seeing the biggest single increased expenditure in the budget this year is 12.5 per cent for debt servicing; it is now close to $1.4 billion a year, adding up to about $3.8 million a year. We know for a fact that is going to be up next year. Probably in the order of 10 per cent of the budget next year will go to interest. We know that now. And probably that is going to run in the order of $4.5 million a day as opposed to $3.8 million this year, to pay off that interest of the past.

We can predict also with some certainty an increase in taxation. There is no other way. This government is not prepared to cut back in expenditures. It hasn't done so in the past; it has built up a legacy of debt in the past that we have to honour. We know for certain with this government, that necessarily, year by year, we are going to have an increase in taxation.

One of the problems is that this money has been available to borrow. Probably the biggest corruption that came about in provincial financing in most of the provinces, not all of them, in different degrees—Quebec has been far more responsible in handling its provincial pension fund borrowings than Ontario—the fact that this money was available at all, in my view, has created a major distortion for which we are going to pay a price in the future.

John Robarts in those days could see a big pot of money would be available to the province to borrow, and so he borrowed it. And part of the preconditions of his going into the Canada Pension Plan—because it is a provincial jurisdiction under the BNA Act—was that the provinces would be able to borrow that money back.

This year we're going to borrow about $960 million from CPP. We're going to have to pay them back about $600 million or $700 million on money we've already borrowed. We know, and we've already established in this House, we're going to go into a negative cash-flow position in about 1982 or 1983.

But all this big pot of money was available—this big pot from the teachers' superannuation fund—for which they paid less than market interest rates. Still, out of $2.5 billion they owe the teachers' superannuation fund, about 28 per cent of that portfolio is in six per cent money, paying the teachers far below what market rates would get at this particular time.

Had they allowed that money to be used in the marketplace; had they treated it as responsible fund managers would, the unfunded liability in that teachers' superannuation fund of about $1.5 billion to $6 billion, according to the 1977 actuarial notes—that's not the real actuarial update; the last real evaluation was in 1975, although they have looked at the fund in 1976 and 1977, under pressure from some of the members of this House.

Still, had that money stayed in that fund and been used in the private marketplace, there would be much less of an unfunded liability and the taxpayers of this province would not have to cough up as much money in the future as they are going to have to now.

Those funds have created the great distortion. I have advanced before in this House the availability-fed demand thesis. They looked at how much money was available to borrow; they borrowed; and they spent it. Now, as we head into the 1980s, that money is not going to be available. I have no idea what the Treasurer of this province has planned to finance the deficit that he's become so accustomed to running on an annual basis.

Even the Ontario Economic Council, a responsible body in most respects, has advanced the same availability-fed demand thesis, saying there is no incentive for the Treasurer of this province to balance the budget as long as he can borrow all this money and without having to go to the marketplace.

But it does say this, because it has a long-term, responsible view. Knowing the shortage of capital in the markets of this country, heading into the 1980s, and knowing the massive amounts of money we're going to have to spend to keep our capital infrastructure built up in this country, it says this:

"As the level of government investment gradually accelerates, led by energy and resource development, the need will arise to redirect a larger percentage of domestic savings from the government to the private sector and from short-term investment instruments to long-term investment instruments more suitable for financing long-term capital investments."

"An increased flow of private savings from the public to the private sector could be encouraged in several ways. The largest flow to the government sector occurs through the medium of the Canada Pension Plan. Consideration should be given to depositing at least a portion of the net contributions to a special trustee fund in each province to be available to the private sector on a competitive bid basis. To ensure the maximum availability of such funds to finance business capital investment, it might be desirable to limit the use of such funds to equities or debts with terms of 10 years or longer."

What they are recognizing very clearly is that we are going to have to liberate some of these moneys we have spent in the public purse in order to build the kinds of projects we need in this country.

As I alluded to earlier, Quebec has been far more successful, through the caisse de depots system. They have taken about 30 per cent of the eligible moneys they could have borrowed and spent on current consumption or to make up for the deficit, and spent it on productive capital, investing in banks, investing in business and building a capital infrastructure for that province.

Had we done that, there are studies available that say had we built the capital infrastructure, had we invested in companies and plants, machinery and capital here, our unemployment rate would be less, there would be more real income. All the economic indicators and some of the problems we are facing in this province would be much less than they are today.

They're some of the examples of the short-term greed of this province. And 10 years ago, that was the problem. It was almost like putting a bottle of whisky in front of an alcoholic, when you put those funds in front of this government, because they spent every single penny with no regard to the future. And they're doing it again this year.

Mr. Kerrio: You spend every penny, Frank.

Mr. Peterson: Frankly, it disturbs me very greatly to have to vote for this. I would vote against it, except that it would cause an election and that is the only conceivable reason for not voting against it. That is another different and separate issue. But it bothers me very greatly to see how this government has treated this issue. We have questioned it in the House. My friends have questioned it in the House. We have questioned this Treasurer and other Treasurers. But I have yet to see either a recognition of the seriousness of the problem or any kind of feeling about what they're going to do about it beyond saying, "Yes, it's a problem, and we've got to think of something to do sometime."

If I could do anything, if I could impress upon this Treasurer just one or two things, I would have to tell him about the seriousness of the pension crisis from a macro-economic sense. I would talk of the serious distortions that are brought into this province and that he has to address his mind to these long-run problems and the sooner he does it the better.

Every solution to this problem is unattractive. I cannot, for the life of me, devise a simple solution. I can't see anything that is going to be easy. But if we don't start now and ease our way into it, then 10 years from now it's going to be apocalyptic. It's going to be almost impossible to handle, and there's not going to be anything we can do short of some major kinds of defaults.

And it's not as if the evidence is beyond us. Good Lord, New York City went into default—for a myriad of reasons obviously, but principally because they had become overextended in their pension funds. They created obligations they couldn't honour—subsidizing the middle classes. It wasn't because it was a welfare situation. It was because of the middle-class ripoff and because they created obligations they just couldn't sustain.

Mr. Laughren: This is going to be a new slogan for the Liberal Party—a middle-class ripoff.

Mr. Peterson: We are heading in that direction, and it's coming probably sooner than we like. It's too bad we got into the habits that we're in, but had the Treasurer been subjected to the disciplines of the marketplace 10 years ago, if he had to go out and compete against General Motors and Inco and all the other sort of people wanting cash in the marketplace, pay competitive rates, then I suggest that this government would have been substantially more responsible than they have been heretofore. It was like giving whisky to an alcoholic. It was like giving catnip to a cat. We have seen just irresponsible behaviour with this money.

Mr. Mancini: Why don't you resign?

Mr. Peterson: It saddens me a great deal. I have suggested some of the solutions, all of which I said would be difficult.

Mr. Kerrio: Do the honourable thing, Frank.

Mr. Peterson: But I say to the Treasurer very seriously, if he comes back to this House recognizing a comprehension of the problem and some solutions to this problem, I'm sure he would get the full co-operation of all the responsible members of this House.

Mr. Kerrio: That leaves out the NDP.

Mr. Peterson: It better be done sooner rather than later.

Mr. Mancini: They're not responsible anyway.

Mr. Peterson: It is with a heavy heart and with a great deal of sadness that we support this bill. I think it's far more serious than housekeeping.

Mr. Hennessy: A heavy head.

Mr. Peterson: I think it's far more serious to those who come after us and many, many of the pieces of legislation that come through this House. I say only I am looking for some recognition of the problem by the Treasurer and, hopefully, some solutions.

Mr. Laughren: I notice the Treasurer is keeping notes. It might even mean that he is going to lower himself to take part in the debate at the conclusion of the opposition remarks.

I must say that it does take courage for a Liberal to harangue a Conservative about government deficits. Of course, if one is an Ontario Liberal rather than a federal Liberal I guess it comes a little easier.

Mr. Kerrio: You socialists know what deficits are all about. Wherever you form a government you have the biggest in the world.

Mr. McClellan: That's fortunately not true.

Mr. Mancini: Fortunately, you don't form governments in too many places.

Mr. Kerrio: Just go over to Britain and see.

Mr. Laughren: I'm trying to be non-provocative, Mr. Speaker. I'll continue.

The New Democrats have always looked at deficit financing by governments in a very serious way. We've always said you can draw a comparison between running a government and running a home, a household, a family, in that the amount of debt must be in relation to the ability to pay. Just as people have higher mortgages on their homes now than they did 20 years ago, so are their incomes substantially higher.

It's true, of course, that the provincial debt, as a ratio to the provincial budget, has indeed gone up in the last four years from something under seven per cent to a little over nine per cent. That is a substantial increase when we're talking about that kind of money.

On the other hand, the province of Ontario, by incurring its large debt, has undoubtedly built up a fairly substantial reservoir of socially useful assets.

Mr. Peterson: Vacant land.

Mr. Laughren: I'm talking about schools, and I'm talking about hospitals and roads; that is a responsible use of debt.

The member talks about land. We have always believed that there should be land-banking in the province of Ontario. There are funds available from the federal government to the provinces, and the provincial government can co-operate with the municipalities to have land-banking. We see that as a responsible use of deficit financing as well. It's building for the future; that's the kind of thing we would endorse.

What has happened, of course, is that while the public sector has engaged in a great deal of deficit financing, the Treasurer should take a look at the behaviour of the private sector. Whereas we have increased substantially the public assets in Ontario, and we have some of the finest in Canada—

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: I'm setting you up. Just wait for it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I'm glad to see you're smiling.

Mr. Hennessy: A hit man.

Mr. Laughren: I want to tell the Premier it was the Treasurer who made me cranky by an arrogant display not even bothering to debate what we regard as a substantial bill.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We debated it last night.

Mr. Laughren: We did not debate it last night. There is no rule of the House that the Treasurer has to debate; I understand, that's fine. He can sit there and smirk while a substantial bill goes through if he likes.

Mr. Kerrio: Just like your responsibility when it comes time to vote tonight; you sat out in the hall like a poisoned pup.

Mr. Hennessy: That's it; give it to him.

Mr. Mancini: You were pouting out in the hall.

Mr. Laughren: What I started to say was that while the province of Ontario has invested substantially in public assets, the Treasurer and his predecessors have also presided over the private sector, which has not been responsible about reinvesting in this province. The industrial machine in Ontario has been allowed to run down. It's not dead yet, but it has run down substantially.

It bothered me a great deal to see the Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) over in England trying to sell off more of Ontario—

Interjection.

Mr. Laughren: —and the Premier is trying to sell us to Japan; and so it goes.

Mr. Hennessy: You're trying to sell us to Russia.

Mr. Kerrio: They were over there studying Margaret Thatcher. That's what they were doing.

Mr. Laughren: Now the minister is going to Japan to further exacerbate the problem. So there has been an irresponsible component in the whole supervision of Ontario's Treasurers too, in that they have presided over the deindustrialization of Ontario. That's not even my language, that's the language of the people of the Science Council of Canada who are saying that about this province. We are the industrial heart of this country and we have an obligation that goes beyond the borders of Ontario.

Perhaps the Treasurer could share with us this evening some of his plans as to how he intends to start the rebuilding process, because surely the debt of the province of Ontario can be used partly to do that. Whether or not he is looking at the province in the long term and seeing how we rebuild it rather than just sell it—we can always sell off our assets, I guess, but that's a pretty sad way to rebuild the Ontario economy.

The Treasurer and his colleagues play the odd game, too, as to how they're going to reduce the debt in Ontario. In the budget speech, which I could quote if I had it in front of me, the Treasurer talked about financing the Employment Development Fund through the sale of the province's share in Syncrude. He made that statement on budget night. A couple of weeks later the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) stood up with another plan for the use of the Syncrude share.

Mr. Peterson: And they included a capital asset, which is nonsense.

Mr. Laughren: If it is the same, perhaps when the Treasurer responds he could tell us what that is. As a matter of fact, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) rose on a point of something or other that day and made the point that they were selling the same asset twice to do two different things. That is rather perplexing. Perhaps the Treasurer could explain what he intends to do.

The Treasurer and the official opposition, particularly the official opposition, talk a lot about how we pay for debt, what debt costs us, how many millions of dollars a day and how the people have to pay for it through higher taxes.

Mr. Peterson: It's real catchy.

Mr. Laughren: There is another kind of debt that we in this province are paying for, and paying a very high price for, that is the debt we pay out to non-residents every year. It is a substantial sum of money.

Mr. Peterson: Of course you're right.

Mr. Laughren: That bothers us a great deal when we see them trying to increase that problem by selling more of Ontario to the Japanese, the British, the Americans and so forth. That doesn't make any sense at all. It is going to make the problem worse. That part of our debt has to be looked at in a much more careful way, because that is very serious matter.

There is an investment house in Toronto called Burns Fry. Perhaps other members in this chamber would be more familiar with it than I. They published a document last year in which they painted a frightening picture of what is ahead for us on our balance of payments over the next 10 or 15 years. That really is a terrifying picture if those figures come true—and some of them are so incredible it is hard to believe they could come true.

On the other hand, when one looks at how our interest and dividends payment debt is going up every year—and going up dramatically, perhaps Burns Fry knows something we don't—that is going to have a substantial effect on the standard of living in Ontario, a much more substantial effect than the interest on Ontario's debt. That is something we simply must address ourselves to. They are talking federal figures, but one cannot talk federal figures on the economy of this country without zeroing in on Ontario. This is where the action is, this is where the bulk of our industrial production is. We have simply got to take a federal view of our balance of payments problems.

The Treasurer has to involve himself more in those debates with the federal government because it really is serious. We are very worried about the emphasis on stimulation of exports rather than import replacement. We think the government is fundamentally wrong in concentrating on export stimulation. We are not saying there shouldn't be export stimulation, I want to make that perfectly clear.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have to have both.

Mr. Laughren: Of course we have to have both. What is happening is that the Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Tourism are centering on and emphasizing export stimulation. That is exactly what they are doing. They can't do both, because the two programs require a different set of policies and it is not happening.

If the government thinks that by inviting the Japanese and Americans to come and set up their operations here, if it thinks that is going to solve our problem on our balance of payments, then it is wrong. It won't solve the problem, because historically the branch plants that are here have not cracked the international market and have not cracked the export markets because that is not why they are here. They are here to cater to the domestic market.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But if the Japanese establish car plants here and replace the imports that now come from Japan—it is important to the economy.

Mr. Laughren: Of course. I would suggest to the Premier—and I am glad he interjected—that when he is talking to Japanese businessmen he should say to them: If you are going to come here, you must realize we give up something when you come here and own a portion of this province.” I think the Premier would agree that with increased foreign ownership we give up something. There is a return in terms of import replacement, which the Premier agrees with, but there is something else. The long run costs of foreign ownership are such that we should be very, wary. Studies have been done which show that the long-run benefits of foreign ownership are a delusion. This is not the time to do it, but I can prove that to the Premier.

I would hope when the Premier talked to those Japanese businessmen he said to them: “If you're going to come here and locate in this province and own a share of Ontario, when you ship your cars in here there's to be a reciprocal agreement on where replacement parts for those imported Japanese cars are produced.” That's only fair, to demand in return for selling them part of Ontario that we get a return on producing auto parts here. We have a serious deficit on auto parts; I know the Premier knows that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We suggest two things: they have the parts made here and also export them for the same vehicles in Japan.

Mr. Laughren: I wish the Premier would stay around and take part at the end of the debate. What I want him to say is that we don't have to have Japanese auto parts manufacturers do it, we can do it with Canadian parts manufacturers; that's what he is saying?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said that.

Mr. Laughren: No, the Premier was talking about Japanese auto parts manufacturers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was saying the Canadian auto parts people make the parts over here and export them.

Mr. Laughren: I find it hard to believe that we're on the same wavelength.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member should never give up on me.

Mr. Laughren: We feel very strongly we can produce our auto parts here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You should have come up to the meeting.

Mr. Laughren: I wasn't invited. Perhaps they knew they couldn't bludgeon me over our environmental standards and our minimum wage laws.

There will be other times to debate the whole problem of the Ontario economy, but I'm serious when I say the Treasurer, the Minister of Industry and Tourism and the Premier are on the wrong track if they're trying to sell off more of Ontario. That will not solve our problems; it will make the problems worse and the Treasurer and the Premier should understand that.

I'll conclude, but I want to refer to the fact that the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) talked about this bill being more important than the succession duty and gift tax bill. It's rather silly to compare this bill with the succession duty bill. This is not blatant, rank, class legislation, despite his reference to the middle-class ripoff. I think that's going to be the next Liberal campaign slogan: “Stop the middle class ripoff.” I can see it now. It fits so beautifully in with Liberal philosophy it's irresistible for them.

Mr. Van Horne: What do you know about Liberal philosophy?

Mr. Laughren: Well, I've listened to it for—

Mr. Van Horne: Come on, elucidate.

Mr. Laughren: I'm glad the Premier is here. When Premier Levesque was here a couple of years ago for a reception—we had a reception in the Lieutenant Governor's suite—the Premier brought him around and he was introducing him to members. He introduced him to one member and Premier Levesque said: “Oh, he's NDP.” The Premier said: “No, no, you've got the wrong philosophy, he's a Liberal.” Premier Levesque said: “If he's a Liberal he can't have a philosophy.”

Perhaps the Premier recalls that. I was standing nearby and I heard it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's not true. He was talking about the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Laughren: No, no. As a matter of fact that particular member is in the chamber tonight; I wouldn't think of identifying him but he's in the chamber tonight.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Now that the member for Nickel Belt has rambled so much would he please return to Bill 50?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, I will. I should tell one very short anecdote, Mr. Speaker, just for you.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Can we tie it in with the credit of the province?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, because I think I am a credit to the province, even though I wasn't born here. I was born in the province of Quebec. I was born in the Ottawa valley north of Ottawa, which is very staunch Orange lodge country. When Premier Levesque came around and the Premier introduced him to me, I said: "Yes, I'm from your province." "Oh," he said, "where are you from?" I said: "Shawville." "Oh," he said, "I don't blame you for leaving."

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Acting Speaker: We will accept that. Is there any other member who wishes to speak to Bill 50? Mr. Treasurer.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I will make some brief comments. The debate tonight had certain overtones, and properly so I suppose, of the budget debates we had recently. I would like to assure both of my critics that while we may not always agree on the way to solve the financial problems of the province, I do take my position very seriously and I am very concerned about the problems.

Mr. Lawlor: You talk about the problems, but what are you going to do about them?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think I have talked about them at length in my budget, and I think most people in Ontario who have reviewed that budget have found it reasonably satisfactory.

Mr. Van Horne: They did for the first day, until they realized how they were getting hammered.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have to say to the honourable member, never did I try to confuse cash requirements and a balanced budget. I have been quite careful in the terminology I use and I am quite keenly aware of the difference in the two meanings. Of course the eventual desire is to have a balanced budget. I am working first towards minimizing the cash requirements, as I would in any business venture, trying to maximize our use of cash and of assets in the province. I don't see anything wrong with that.

The member was talking about the dollars in this particular Loan Act, as we would call it in its short term title, not necessarily coinciding with our cash requirements. That's true, but the member should remember the time period does not coincide either. He should remember we do bring forward some unused authority from the previous year which is used during this interregnum, if he wants to call it that, this period between the end of the fiscal year and the passage of this particular bill.

Under the old act, since there was no termination date, there was no particular worry about that hangover. We had, for example, some authority to go ahead and take up the Canada Pension Plan borrowings as they came due each month. We had some $534 million, if my figures are correct, left over from last year's authorization when this fiscal year began. We are currently using it. This bill runs until September 30, 1980, if I am not wrong; and of course the number of dollars, the $1.6 billion or thereabouts, is authorized here.

Mr. Peterson: You are borrowing $1,554,000,000.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, $1,153,000,000 I think, is the cash requirement.

The reason for the difference, of course, and I can document where it goes, is to increase our liquidity. I think the honourable member will admit we have been winding down the amount of cash kept on hand to meet our daily bills and we are going to increase it slightly. We are going to pay off some $60 million of public maturity, of debenture debt. We are going to use about $195 million in the course of that period to reduce the Treasury bill, and I think he referred to that. There are other non-public retirements of about $26 million. We use about $427 million of that for purposes other than the moneys needed to operate the province.

This year, I believe for the first time, the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System will not be called upon as a source of money.

Members have all the data on our debt in the budget; I don't think I need to review that, except to say that as a percentage of provincial income the cash requirements have actually dropped somewhat dramatically over the years. I look back into Mr. Frost's years, the years when many of us thought Ontario had its heyday in terms of the growth of the province, the apparent liquidity of the province, the state of health and so on, and I think members will find that in those years we were actually borrowing a greater percentage of our annual cash income than we are today.

The honourable member for Nickel Belt, with whom I don't always agree, pointed out quite properly that one's debt should or can have some relationship to one's income. I think that is one of the key points.

Although I am an advocate of a balanced budget, I think a good argument can be made for the proposition that capital goods or capital assets produced in one year in some cases should be shared by taxpayers in future years, rather than being paid off completely in the one year.

I looked across the table, on page six of I think budget paper A, which showed capital investments versus financing from borrowing in the years 1972 right through to 1977. In all of those years there was only one—the 1975-76 fiscal year—when the borrowings actually matched or very slightly exceeded, it is hard to tell from the bar chart, the investments in capital in the province. In that particular year we had $1.48 billion worth of capital investments and we financed $1.092 billion from borrowings and $388 million from revenues.

Pardon me, but I am suffering from a cold tonight, so if I sound a bit nasal you will have to get used to me.

I think it is important—

Mr. Peterson: Sorry, but this year the Treasurer is borrowing more than he is spending on capital investments. There is just no way that $200 million in the Employment Development Fund is for capital investments.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Oh, that is a point I want to get into. The member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) said that the Minister of Energy and I had used the same dollars twice. I would like to point out that the $140 million we talked about that came from the sale of Syncrude, which we said in the budget would be used for the Employment Development Fund, was the amount Treasury recovered from the sale of Syncrude. The total sale was in excess of $160 million. This explains the apparent double counting of the money.

What Treasury got back from the sale of Syncrude was Ontario's original investment, around $105 million, plus the interest it has cost the Treasury in the meantime, which came to about $143 million. The difference was allowed to remain in the hands of the Ontario Energy Corporation for investment in energy-related projects. So they kept $23 million of that money—I think that was the exact figure. We got about $140 million. So neither of us is double counting any dollars in that.

Mr. Laughren: I'd never play the shell game with you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I know that. I only say that is the way we counted it.

I have to say to the member for Nickel Belt that he and I share one very real and genuine feeling, and that is we do want to see Canadian industry owned by Canadians.

Mr. Laughren: The minister is going about it in a funny way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One has to recognize that in today's day and age, as technology requires larger and larger corporations, it is very difficult to have large corporations like automobile companies, steel companies or petrochemical companies owned within one nation. I guess one of the better alternatives is to have those corporations at least registered in Canada with shares available to Canadians to purchase on the market. So Ford Motor Company of Canada for example at least is an entity in which Canadians can buy shares.

Mr. Laughren: You are using the EDF in the wrong way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Interestingly enough, the very first project that was mentioned today by the Minister of Industry and Tourism, for Smiths Falls, where $450,000 was granted to a company—

Mr. Laughren: A branch plant.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Mr. Nixon: It's good stuff, Frank. Right from the horse's mouth.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You are reading the wrong budget.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I probably am.

Mr. Nixon: I know there was some reason he kept the member for Oxford around.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: At least I feel useful.

Mr. Nixon: We will give the Treasurer a minute to read it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Now I am blushing.

Mr. Laughren: Let the record show it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The grant today not only created roughly 300 jobs in Smiths Falls in an area where we badly needed them, but will give Canada about $100 million of import replacement. I think that was one of the objectives we spelled out.

I want to say that while obviously it is premature to announce other decisions until they are totally finalized, I think the honourable member will discover we are getting some interesting Canadian-based requests. Sure there are going to be American-based requests, but we are getting some Canadian-based ones, Canadian companies that in fact are selling into export markets as well as filling the home market. Believe it or not, one is filling the very criterion the honourable member mentioned a few moments ago of sending Canadian parts to Japan. It is really very interesting to see a Canadian company able to do that. We hope some of these will be finalized soon and we can share them with the members as soon as the decisions are made. We are encouraged by some of these things.

Mr. Laughren: You're spreading it around too thinly. You aren't rebuilding any sectors.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'll tell the member what we're doing. I am not trying to spread it around too thinly with my colleagues, what we are trying to find out in each of these negotiations—and this is why a formula doesn't necessarily work—we are trying to determine the minimum number of government dollars, in the best possible form, that will cause a decision to be made to locate in our province.

Because one company gets 10 per cent doesn't mean all companies should get 10 per cent. It may take only two or three per cent to trigger the difference in some instances; or it may be considerably more with others. It may take a loan guarantee with one; it may take a cash grant with another. That has already become abundantly clear in the discussions we have had with the first ones.

Mr. Speaker, I would like at this point to stop my discussion. I think we can have philosophical arguments later on. I ask that this bill receive its second reading.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 51, An Act to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Financial Administration Act, as I am sure my honourable colleagues in the two other parties know, is perhaps one of the major pieces of legislation under which the Ministry of Treasury and Economics operates. There are certain amendments in this particular bill aimed mostly at clearing up housekeeping problems.

There is one I think deserves particular attention. In section 3 of the bill we talk about increasing from $50 million to $250 million the amount of money which the Treasurer, with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor, may borrow by way of temporary bank loans without it being charged to the Loan Act.

The only thing I point out to the honourable members in this connection is that the cash flow of the province is now some $27 billion a year. This then represents less than one per cent of the cash flow. We believe this is required for what you might call overdraft privileges, Mr. Speaker, the overdraft privileges required to make sure you do have chequing abilities over weekends, for short terms. In the one case under the Loan Act, if we have an overdraft of $10 million five times, as members know it counts as a $50 million charge against the Loan Act.

This act was set up with this provision so we didn't have that kind of short-term utilization charged against the Loan Act. I would suggest it is in order. We have that line of credit already established with the banks. We have $50 million at each of the five chartered banks.

Mr. Peterson. They have never looked at your books.

Mr. Mancini: They are afraid you'll tax them more if they don't lend you money.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I suspect that if I signed the notes tomorrow we could get it, and I'm quite willing to share it with the member. It would take them a week or two to catch us too.

Mr. Peterson: You run down with your little book every morning, do you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I do this account balance stuff.

We also have a section in the act that is allowing interest rates to be in excess of five per cent. I think one would agree the time has come for us to face that.

Mr. Peterson: We certainly don't plan to vote against this bill.

I understand the Treasurer's reasoning for section 3. It is probably quite reasonable and I will support it; but in other ways I do so somewhat reluctantly.

Mr. Laughren: I would hope so.

Mr. Peterson: The more disciplines we have on this government the better it functions. As I said before, when the Treasurer saw the availability of all those pension funds he spent them, he runs everything to the limit.

I recognize he needs flexibility, but I have more faith when I see some responsibility, or more responsibility than the Treasurer has demonstrated, at least in my judgement in the handling of these funds in the past.

Like this little sneaky move into another $195 million worth of treasury bills last year; clearly a violation of what the previous Treasurer said. The government obviously looked around for money and said, "There is a place we can cough up $195 million."

I recognize clearly it was done before the member for Muskoka became Treasurer; I recognize clearly it's something he had to deal with in this budget and I respect him for doing it. But it took a lot of pressure on a lot of guys on Bay Street, putting the wood to them, saying, "You must pick up your weekly allotment of treasury bills." You know the way the system works.

Mr. Laughren: Make him name one.

Mr. Peterson: Everybody bids on them, hoping they won't get them. They want to look credible, so they can't put in a ridiculous kind of bid; they just put in a little bid hoping someone else will take them so they don't look silly.

The point is it was another little way to raise $195 million, quietly and without announcement, until people figured out what the government was doing.

That's why short-term provisions, increasing a line of credit, can become a long-term line if one isn't careful; particularly if one has good credit, and the taxpayers of this province still have reasonably good credit. It is a bottomless well, really if the government gets in trouble it just increases the tax rates.

I can see so-called temporary lines turning into permanent lines or turning into long-term debts; in the same way, in a sense, it happened with the treasury bills, although the government is paying that off this year; and the same way it has almost become with the pension funds available to the government.

I have to put that concern on the record. I hope the Treasurer uses that extra $200 million for the purposes for which it was intended, as a short-term line for overdrafts, for special contingency situations, and that it does not turn into a long-term line.

Had the government had the power last year to borrow this kind of money I am quite confident the Treasurer of the day, not being the member for Muskoka, would have said: "There's a way we can get another couple of hundred million dollars, because our revenue projections were off and no one will really know." Who really knows if the government is borrowing an extra couple of hundred million dollars at any given time? He would have obscured, at that time, the real debt position of the province.

That is the danger, and I know this Treasurer knows that danger. I recognize that when he has—I accept his number—a $27 billion cash flow, relatively speaking this is not a lot of flexibility in terms of assisting with his banking, and obviously he doesn't want to run overdraft interest if he doesn't have to do it.

I understand all that, and that's why I will certainly vote for it, but with that strong reservation that I think has to be put into the record.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I was glad the Treasurer singled out the section of the bill that raises the limits on borrowing from $50 million to $250 million. I did want to assure the official opposition that if they want to vote against this because of the irresponsible level of borrowing which they talk about so often, we would be quite happy to support the government. They don't need to worry about an election. We will not have an election over this particular issue.

At any rate, I just wanted to make the Liberals feel at ease so they could really stand on their principles on this particular bill and vote against it without worrying about the dire consequences of a provincial election in the spring of 1979. They can return the favour to me some other time.

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: The other part of the bill I found rather interesting—and since we won't be sending this to committee, I assume, I just wanted to mention it briefly—where they take out the rate of five per cent per annum of money that's owing to the crown. I'd be interested in knowing a little more about that. I'm a little vague on that.

I do not understand, quite frankly, who it is that this applies to. I'm sure that we don't want to subsidize creditors to the crown; those are creditors to all of us. I'm not particularly interested in leaving it at five per cent, but I'd like to know exactly who these people are who have been getting away with five per cent interest rate, owing to the crown. They'd be crazy to pay it off. It would be better to borrow money and leave the debt stand at five per cent interest rate.

Perhaps the Treasurer, when he responds, could tell us who these lucky folk are who have been getting a five per cent interest rate for all these years. Perhaps there are others who owe the crown money and are getting away with five per cent as well. I don't know whether this is an isolated example or whether it runs throughout the Treasurer's administration.

But, basically, we do seriously regard this as a housekeeping bill and I'm always very jumpy about saying any bill is housekeeping because you know I know, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer plays the shell game without a pea under any of the shells. We always are very careful before classifying any bill as being simply housekeeping, because it could be used to slip a lot of things through. I'm sure the Treasurer and some of his colleagues would call the abolishment of the Succession Duties Act a housekeeping bill if we gave them the opportunity to do it.

We shall not vote against the bill; we shall support it. But, once again, I want seriously to make it clear to the Liberal Party of Ontario that if they feel anxious about what they would regard as irresponsible borrowing, they needn't worry about precipitating a provincial election, because we will stand with the government in this particular case.

Mr. Speaker: Does any other member wish to speak to the bill? If not, the honourable, the Treasurer.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support of both the parties.

Mr. Laughren: You don't very often.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's true. Apparently, the kinds of moneys that we're talking about with the five per cent rate aren't large amounts. They are individual amounts that may be owed to the crown, such as an overpayment to a physician through OHIP that has to be recovered; a payment to OHIP by a person who underpaid, or who was late in paying their account or something of that nature. Apart from that, Mr. Speaker, I would move that the bill receive its second reading.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

The House adjourned at 10:23 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MAY 11, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of all honourable members the presence in the Speaker's gallery this morning of Mr. R. B. Duncan, MP, a member of the Legislative Assembly for New South Wales.

HOCKEY GAME

Mr. G. I. Miller: On a matter of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker: I would like to pay my debts this morning. I bet the Premier of Ontario $1 that Boston would win last night, and they almost did. If it hadn't been for the assistance of the referee in the last few minutes, I think they would have come across.

The real reason that I support Boston is that Stan Jonathan, who is a neighbour of ours, won the sixth game for them. I thought they were going to come through again in the seventh. It is a pleasure for me to present the Premier with this dollar this morning.

An hon. member: The Premier usually bets on the Argos.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's a great pleasure to receive the dollar. It compensates for others I have lost on other athletic events. I just wanted to say to the honourable member that I understand why he was betting on Boston. I know the rest of his caucus, like all of us in this House, is totally committed to national unity and that our sympathies and support were behind the Montreal Canadiens. At least, I think that's the case, although I happen to know of a couple of the member's colleagues who didn't.

USE OF HERBICIDES

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, as members of the House may recall, in March I announced plans to temporarily prohibit the use of two herbicides, 2,4,5T and 2,4,5TP in Ontario. This was achieved by amending the regulations under the Pesticides Act to bring the application of these herbicides under strict regulation by permits. Since then, we have denied permits as a matter of policy. This action was taken to allow time for the Ontario pesticides advisory committee to review the report and the action taken of the US Environmental Protection Agency.

I have now reviewed the committee's report and shall table it for the information of the members. It is entitled, Report on Assessment of a Field Investigation of Six-year Spontaneous Abortion Rates in Three Oregon Areas in Relation to Forest 2,4,5T Spraying Practices.

After careful consideration of all available data, the committee has determined that the scientific basis of the American study was inadequate. It did not, by itself, justify the conclusion and subsequent action of the Environmental Protection Agency. After deliberation, they have recommended that continued use of the two herbicides should be allowed in Ontario, subject to strict permit system.

I bring to the attention of members that officials in the federal Department of Agriculture, and Health and Welfare Canada independently came to the same conclusion, that, after a review of the recent American study and all other relevant and available scientific data, there are no grounds to invoke a regulatory ban at this time.

However, knowing of the great public concern over the use of these two products, I am extremely reluctant to act on the pesticide committee's recommendations at this time. Federal authorities are of the opinion that the absence of much crucial information has made a full assessment of the American study impossible. Appeals launched in the American courts against the EPA decision have placed legal constraints on the availability of necessary background information. It may be many weeks before these details are available.

Before we make a final decision on the use of 2,4,5T and 2,4,5TP, this data is needed to assure a thorough assessment. Therefore, the restricted classification for these herbicides will remain at this time and we will continue to deny permits for their use.

I have advised the Honourable Eugene Whelan, Minister of Agriculture, Canada, by letter, of my position on the subject and I have requested that his ministry assess the need for further health studies in Canada concerning these two herbicides.

While on the subject of pesticide use in this province, I would like to table another scientific report by the pesticides advisory committee. This report, entitled, A Review of the Use of 2,4D, Other Phenoxy Herbicides and Picoram by Ontario Government Agencies, reviews the use of these pesticides by Ontario Hydro and the Ministries of Transportation and Communications and Natural Resources. This review includes quantities of herbicides used and an overview of the programs which each agency administers.

It should be noted that the pesticide advisory committee concludes its report by stating that the effect of these herbicides on the environment is minimal and that the programs run by the respective agencies are both effective and safe.

SPENDING BY ROYAL COMMISSIONS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, on April 3, certain members raised questions pertaining to royal commissions.

While I fully appreciate the position which must be taken by government to control the spending of public funds, one must be concerned, however, that a proper balance is maintained between the responsibility of government for public funds and the necessary independence of royal commissions. The primary role of government is to provide the necessary logistical support which a royal commission requires.

To understand the need that royal commissions be independent, one only has to consider the nature of the matters with which they are charged. They, of course, encompass a wide variety of subjects and include matters of major public concern and interest, matters relating to the conduct of government itself and, occasionally, matters relating to the conduct of the judiciary.

The initiatives of government to ensure effective spending of public funds, therefore, must not fetter a royal commission to the extent that it will not be able to effectively and properly discharge its mandate. In this regard, the government introduced guidelines for royal commissions in the manual of administration on July 20, 1978. The purpose of these guidelines, as stated in the manual, is "to ensure the efficient expenditure of public money."

Reference was made to a comment by the provincial auditor that the Royal Commission on the Northern Environment and the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning had not complied with section 50(8) of the manual of administration in that they did not submit legal bills in amounts in excess of $1,000 to my ministry for "review and approval" prior to payment. One member asked how it was that these funds for legal counsel were expended without my authorization.

First, the operative documents pertaining to the administration of royal commissions are contained in section 65(11) of volume one of the Ontario Manual of Administration, issued July 20, 1978; and the Administrative Guidelines and Procedures for Royal Commissions, issued by Management Board in May 1977 and revised in May 1978. Neither of these documents requires that the billings of private sector legal counsel be submitted by royal commissions to the Ministry of the Attorney General for review.

Such a requirement is, in my assessment, redundant inasmuch as the director of common legal services of my ministry, prior to the engagement of legal staff of a royal commission, evaluates the professional qualification, expertise and proposed duties of lawyers to be engaged. A rate is then established, based on rates currently being paid in the private sector, and is submitted to Management Board for approval in accordance with the provisions of the enabling order in council.

It should be noted that neither the Royal Commission on the Northern Environment nor the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning, which commenced on July 13, 1977, and July 28, 1978, respectively, are funded through the Ministry of the Attorney General. In referring to this fact, I am not in any way suggesting any impropriety or mismanagement of public funds, but rather simply informing the members that the role of the Ministry of the Attorney General was a consultative one only. The orders in council establishing these commissions authorize them to engage such counsel and other staff as they deem proper at rates of remuneration and reimbursement approved by Management Board of Cabinet.

Section 50(8) of volume one of the Ontario Manual of Administration, as revised and reissued on December 8, 1978, no longer contains a provision that billings from the private sector legal counsel for amounts in excess of $1,000 be submitted to the Ministry of the Attorney General for review and approval before payment is made. Rather, the revised policy contains a provision that ministries, not royal commissions, shall obtain the approval in writing of the Assistant Deputy Attorney General, common legal services, prior to engaging private sector legal services. Furthermore, there is a provision by which this requirement can be waived if it is judged to be impractical or unnecessary.

It must be stressed that royal commissions are not ministries, agencies, boards or commissions of government and should not, in my judgement, be restricted or limited in their selection and utilization of necessary legal counsel.

With respect to the earlier version of section 50(8), the previous wording did include a provision requiring the Ministry of the Attorney General to review billings from private sector legal counsel for an amount in excess of $1,000. However, this section was specifically in reference to the use of private sector legal counsel by a client ministry and not by a royal commission.

The Ministry of the Attorney General has traditionally had the responsibility for the courts and other judicial and quasi-judicial offices. It seems to me entirely unrealistic to set policies that are unnecessarily restrictive, when the purpose of these commissions is to conduct unrestricted investigations of various areas of public policy. I must categorically state that the practice whereby the chairman of a royal commission recommends counsel is fundamental to the independence of a royal commission.

There is an effective working relationship between the Ministry of the Attorney General and the five royal commissions currently funded through my ministry. The commissioners and their staff have been provided with and are aware of the guidelines contained in volume one of the Ontario Manual of Administration and the Administrative Guidelines and Procedures for Royal Commissions issued by Management Board. Furthermore, my officials provide such assistance as those royal commissions which are funded by other ministries may request.

The question was also raised whether or not there are salaried counsel available within the Ministry of the Attorney General who could provide the required advice within the existing budget. As I stated in my initial reply of April 23, I do believe there is very expert legal advice available within the Ontario public service. The crown law office, civil, has a complement of 23 lawyers and the seconded legal services number 119, including the ministry directors, and service a total of 21 ministries. Currently, one lawyer is seconded to the health records commission and one to the PCB inquiry. To my knowledge, there have been no requests for crown counsel to serve as counsel to select committees.

I believe there are four fundamental considerations in the provision of staff lawyers to royal commissions and select committees.

First, the demonstrated need of a royal commission or a select committee to retain counsel in which it has confidence is fundamental to the success and independence of a royal commission.

Second, the possibility of a conflict of interests must be scrupulously considered. I'm certain that all members will agree that where such a possibility, real or imagined, exists, utilization of such legal staff is unacceptable.

Third, the availability of suitable legal staff will always be a determining factor. Legal counsel within government with the necessary expertise may not be available because of their on-going responsibilities.

Fourth, the existing demand for the legal services of the crown law office, civil, and the seconded legal services, if coupled with the provision of legal services to royal commissions and select committees on a regular basis, would require additional legal staff. This would, therefore, necessitate an increased salary budget.

There's also the practical consideration of the availability of and effective use of legal expertise employed in every field in anticipation of their possible requirement on royal commissions and select committees. The cost of such a program, if in fact it could be achieved, would be unwarranted, prohibitive in cost, and not an effective use of public funds.

I was asked whether I would consider having the legal bills of the Royal Commission on the Northern Environment taxed by a master of the Supreme Court of Ontario. I have reviewed a summary of the legal fees paid to the three lawyers who assisted the northern environment commission. There is no need to have these accounts taxed.

The Management Board secretariat and the Ministry of the Attorney General are continuously reviewing the guidelines for the administration of royal commissions.

In closing, I would like to reaffirm that the role of government is to ensure that public funds are wisely expended and, in the case of royal commissions, to ensure that they are provided with the necessary funds to discharge their mandate in an effective and independent manner.

Mr. Nixon: The auditor is wrong.

Mr. S. Smith: The auditor's wrong.

Mr. Nixon: The auditor's mistake.

FOODLAND ONTARIO PROGRAM

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, yesterday it was drawn to my attention that imported carrots packed by Hardee Farms International Limited were being sold in some Dominion stores with a Foodland Ontario logo on the package. Needless to say, the misuse of the Foodland Ontario logo is a great concern to me.

My staff began an immediate investigation. It was discovered that Hardee Farms had packed imported carrots in bags with the Foodland Ontario logo on them.

Mr. Riddell: Has Bill Stewart got anything to do with Hardee Farms?

Hon. W. Newman: You know, that's pretty down.

Mr. Wildman: That's what Mel Swart said yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: He's running Hydro and the banks; now he's getting into this business.

Mr. Breithaupt: A carrot by any other name is still a carrot.

Hon. W. Newman: Listen, why don't you go and chew on a few of them and listen?

Hardee Farms advised that 24,000 two-pound bags had been packed. My staff took steps to make certain any of the packages remaining at the Bradford warehouse of Hardee Farms were detained.

Mr. Laughren: Were they detained overnight?

An hon. member: Did they take their television away too?

Hon. W. Newman: Hardee Farms have agreed to remove any unsold imported carrots in packages containing the Foodland Ontario logo from retail stores. Dominion Stores Limited have also agreed to remove the product from their shelves immediately. They started doing that yesterday and I think they're all off now. The Foodland Ontario logo will have to be completely obliterated before any packages may be offered for sale.

Hardee Farms have advised my staff that the Foodland Ontario logo was printed on the carrot bags in error by the manufacturer.

Mr. Martel: Another clerk! What an inefficient bunch. Always somebody else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you buy that?

Hon. W. Newman: You'll be gone next time.

Apparently the Foodland Ontario logo was used earlier in the season when Ontario carrots were being packed. Hardee have also advised the improperly marked packages were used only between May 8 and May 10, 1979.

I am advised that the supply of marketable Ontario carrots has been almost depleted and that is why US carrots are being imported and repacked for sale.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the members that this unfortunate incident is being cleared up, and the parties concerned are both co-operating fully.

ORAL QUESTIONS

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a question of the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell). Could the Premier explain how it is that the X-ray machines, which I asked the minister about yesterday, are inspected at best only once in five years, when the opinion of Dr. Taylor at least is that fluoroscopy machines and others should be inspected every three or six months? Since his government is able to inspect elevators on a far more regular basis, why is it unable to inspect X-ray machines on a more regular basis?

Can the Premier tell us what happens to the inspection reports on these machines? Will he make them available for us to peruse and will he also explain how it can be that some people told the Globe and Mail that their machines hadn't been inspected in as much as 22 years? What is going on in the inspection branch of the ministry and what can we expect to happen in the very near future?

Mr. MacDonald: Nothing. That's the problem.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would tell the Leader of the Opposition that the Minister of Health intends to make a further statement on this matter on Monday. I don't think it would serve the purposes of the House for me to endeavour to get into a detailed discussion here this morning, other than to make the observation to the leader of the third party—and I say this very objectively because I watched some of it last evening—that while one doesn't minimize the potential problems, to suggest, as really was implicit in what he said, that people should not take X-rays or the machines should be shut down is totally irresponsible.

I just glanced at the report. I don't pretend to be an expert, but I think it is really totally irresponsible for the leader of the third party to go out—

Mr. Martel: Why don't you answer the question that was asked? You haven't answered a question in a month. You're a clown.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —before television and to be suggesting that these machines should be closed down.

Mr. Martel: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I just think it's irresponsible.

Mr. Martel: Why be such a hypocrite and not answer?

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is another point that needs to be made.

Mr. McClellan: It's pretty silly for you to talk about being serious when most of the time you give a half-baked impression of answering.

An hon. member: What's that got to do with this question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, it has. Why be so defensive? As I said, the Minister of Health will make a statement. I cannot give the numbers of inspections. I did listen to the minister very carefully yesterday though. I think it is also necessary to restate this. I am not an expert, but my understanding is one can inspect a machine today—the Leader of the Opposition would know this—and one can have a cardiograph today that tells one he is very healthy. Two hours later one can have a heart attack.

I would say to the Leader of the Opposition also something I think is important. This province is perhaps one of the very few jurisdictions in North America that has undertaken this sort of review that is endeavouring to bring some form of standard or regulation.

I would say to the Leader of the Opposition I also watched channel 11 last night in order to catch up on what was happening. I don't often get this opportunity. I was encouraged to see that the medical people in the city of Hamilton, as one area, had undergone some form of study encompassing all of the hospitals in Hamilton. The chief radiologist from McMaster said that in terms of any potential problems for the public being served in that part of the province—and it related only to Hamilton—that they were safe. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition must have been encouraged to hear that.

I think it's an important issue and the Minister of Health will have further statements or information to relate to the members of the House on Monday. He is in the city of Ottawa—well, he may not be as he was delayed a little bit because of fog at Malton International Airport. But he will be here Monday to make a further statement.

Mr. J. Reed: He has been in a fog for a long time.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, I am sure every member of this House is happy to hear when properly inspected machines turn out to be providing no excess hazard for the public. The problem, as the Premier knows, is that a report exists which indicates that the machines are not being properly inspected and many do present a hazard to the public. Therefore, I would ask the Premier does he not recognize that, apart from the study which is being undertaken, there is a need now for every machine in Ontario to be tested, not necessarily by the ministry, but on instructions from the ministry, by people in the various hospitals in the various communities and for the results to be posted immediately.

Does the Premier not recognize that when a doctor orders an X-ray he is making a judgement, as when one orders any kind of blood test or anything else, between the benefits of the X-ray and the possible risk? The doctors must know to what risks they are subjecting their patients. Why doesn't the Premier undertake this within the month so every doctor knows the status of the equipment being used on his or her patients?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I, once again, don't purport to be an expert in these matters, but I would assume, and it is only an assumption, that the radiologist at a particular hospital certainly would acquaint his fellow colleagues with whether or not there may be a problem with the machine.

Mr. S. Smith: He doesn't know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I would suggest perhaps part of the responsibility has to lie with the person who has the responsibility for the X-rays within any given institution to have some knowledge of this. My understanding is a lot of them do.

Now, as I say—I want to emphasize this—I don't purport to be an expert in this field and I think this matter is important and it should be discussed when the minister is here. He is certainly more knowledgeable than myself and he is going to be here on Monday to deal with it.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege: First, I did not say the people should refuse to take X-rays. I suggested the defective machines should be closed down.

In view of the fact Dr. Taylor, the author of the study, has told us some 200 to 250 X-ray machines across the province are, in fact, defective and emitting excess radiation, is the province prepared to act immediately in order to ensure those X-ray machines are closed down? Is the province prepared to act in order to provide funding to replace those defective machines, given the fact many people in the province are needlessly being exposed to levels of radiation which far exceed, for example, the maximum radiation which is permitted for workers in Ontario Hydro's nuclear plants?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I won't add to what I said earlier. I would only say to the leader of the third party he may know what he felt he was saying yesterday, but I can tell him in terms of the perception of a lot of people across this province, by way of his contribution through the media, they would have gained the same impression I did. If he is saying today he didn't intend to create that impression, then I am delighted to hear that from him.

I would say it has been pointed out to me that not only should one be concerned about those within institutions, but chiropractors also use these machines. I was at the dentist myself the other day and the dental profession also use machines.

Mr. MacDonald: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is quite obvious that if the ministry knows of a defective machine that needs to be repaired, or what have you, obviously they are going to do it. No ministry and no institution is going to knowingly tolerate a machine that is not working properly. I think to suggest any of them do is making a mistake. Certainly, the ministry is prepared to assist those institutions if, in fact, a machine is not working properly.

Mr. MacDonald: Why didn't you say that in the beginning?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact Dr. Taylor's study indicated equipment to monitor the exposure rates for radiation of X-ray machines is, and I quote, "simple, easy to use and readily available, but not now in use," will the government act to make that equipment available to all of the major X-ray users in the province so they can monitor and inspect on a regular basis rather than having to wait for five-year inspections by the Ministry of Health?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the leader of the third party is tending to overlook something, and that is it was the Ministry of Health that initiated a great deal of this discussion and initiated the report. I think the leader of the third party should understand the Ministry of Health is a totally responsible ministry. They are the ones trying to find an answer to the problem.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier is right that the ministry is certainly responsible for the fact

X-ray equipment in Ontario is not properly inspected. They are responsible all right.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Mr. S. Smith: I will ask a question of the Minister of Education, Colleges and Universities and sundry related matters. Would the minister explain to us with regard to apprenticeships how it is that her predecessor, the member for Oxford, said on June 6, 1978, the federal government would be providing $8 million for employer-sponsored training? He went on to say: "Within the next year we expect to see several thousand people go to work across Ontario in employer-sponsored training activity." Yet it would appear that only 750 people are in the program, of whom 100 would have been in anyway under the former program, and a very small fraction, only $1.5 million, of the federal money has been spent on the program.

Why was the minister's predecessor so wrong? What happened?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, my predecessor was not wrong. The commitment of the federal program in support of apprenticeship and light training was of the order of $7 million to $8 million for the year 1979-80. It is the intention of those responsible for the program within my ministry and those responsible for the negotiations on the part of the federal government that this commitment will be totally accommodated and will be absorbed by the program established.

All the figures relating to this program and others in the apprenticeship area will be released in a statement I shall give to the House early next week. All of the details will then be available to all members in the House.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary—I am not sure if it should be a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I would like to quote from the then minister's statement of June 6, 1978. He said: "A contract recently signed with my ministry will provide up to $8 million in the current fiscal year"—that was as of June 6, 1978—"for employer-sponsored training projects." He went on to say, "Within the next year we expect to see several thousand people in the employer-sponsored training activity." The minister should not try to push it off to another year.

Furthermore, in responding to the question, would she also tell us how she responds to the Hushion report on the legislative basis for apprenticeship training in Ontario which basically says there is a policy vacuum that has existed for some time? As I read it, it says the blame lies on the present legislative setup, namely the government.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to say 1979-80, I should have said 1978-79. That was an error on my part.

Mr. McClellan: That is all right, correct the record. Give us this day our daily correction.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the Hushion report has been received by the ministry within the last six weeks. It is a very comprehensive report examining all of the reasons for problematical areas within skill training programs in this province. I think it is one of the most comprehensive reports that has ever been commissioned by any government to examine the problem.

Mr. Van Horne: The apprenticeship program is a disaster.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The report is being examined right now by the industrial training council. We, within the ministry, are also examining it. We will be having discussions about the ways in which we can solve some of the problems which have been delineated by Mr. Hushion in that report within the very near future.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister: Can we expect new initiatives on the part of the government where the provincial government adds some of its own resources into the apprenticeship program in this province, rather than the $8 million of federal money last year? And can we expect a new approach on the part of government where industry also contributes to maybe a grant levy system, or some type of program that has been successful in other countries, so that all corporations share in the costs of training people through the apprenticeship program?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There has been a major commitment in terms of personnel and energy and time by the provincial government in support of the program which has already been established. I should like the honourable members to know the program has been extremely successful in terms of recruiting interested employers and the interest of trade unions in the support of such programs. There are now I think something in the order of 30 community industrial training committees throughout the province. I know that a new one has been established in my own area within the last month.

Also there is a great deal of activity going on which is involving the commitment of employers, trade unions, educators at all levels of education, and the interested people within the community. I believe with that kind of co-operative commitment we will be able to make very significant progress in the area of employer-sponsored training.

In terms of apprenticeships, as I told the House last week, and the honourable member will note it if he reads Hansard, the problems with apprenticeships are several. One that has been disturbing has been the apparent rigidity of programs. We are having discussions with both trade unions and employers about the ways in which we may produce programs that are more flexible and responsive.

We are also having discussions on the methods which might be used in order to ensure that there is a broad spectrum of apprenticeship places available throughout a number of industrial sectors involving small, medium and large employers. That is a problem that has been identified and one which must be solved. There are a number of approaches to that problem which I think were very clearly demonstrated in last June's Skills for Jobs conference.

Those approaches are being discussed with the relevant people in order to ensure that we develop the right kind of program. This whole area has a very high priority within the ministry and within the government. I can assure the honourable members they will be hearing a great deal more about it.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of final supplementary, since my first question was, how come the minister who preceded the present minister was wrong when he said on June 6, 1978, that there were eight million federal dollars available and that several thousand people would be in the program within the year, and it is now May and we find that only $1.5 million has been spent and 750 people are in the program? She said the minister wasn't wrong, it was intended for 1979-80. By way of supplementary I got her to admit it was not 1979-80, it was 1978-79.

Could she answer the original question and tell us what happened to the money, why the ministry couldn't spend it, why there are not several thousand people in the program as the minister promised, and why was he wrong?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the propensity for the Leader of the Opposition to attempt to assign single blame for any kind of activity—

Mr. S. Smith: You're all wrong. I just spread it around.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —really is somewhat annoying at times. I did say that I would have the details of this program available for the members of the House early next week. All of that information, all of the details and all of the figures I will be very pleased to provide early in the week.

DAY-CARE POLICY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services about cutbacks.

In December 1978, a survey of home day-care needs in Metropolitan Toronto identified a need for 230 places. We have done a survey now which indicates there is a need for 645 day-care places in home day care according to the waiting lists of all of the agencies in Metropolitan Toronto. In addition, there is a need for 250 places in group day care identified by Metropolitan Toronto's government itself.

In view of the fact that there are now 895 children on the waiting list here in Metropolitan Toronto for day-care services, can the minister explain why the government's funding formulas for this year will not allow the creation of even one additional day-care place in Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, certainly there is no planning on the part of the government—

Mrs. Campbell: You're right.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —that would lead to the conclusion that the honourable member has suggested. We have not made that determination strictly. There is provision within our budget for a modest increase in day-care spaces in Ontario of about 400 this year.

The situation, though, in Metropolitan Toronto as it stands at the moment is that last year Metropolitan Toronto exceeded its budget by—my recollection off the top of my head is some $500,000, which we have committed to make up and in fact to build into its base for day-care services this year, and make that part of the base on which the calculation of the increment is made for this fiscal year.

I think that once there has been a little careful planning on their part they may not be in what they are portraying at the present time as a desperate situation. I say that not critically of them, but I would point out it was only about a week ago they were talking about the possible need to lay off in excess of 100 employees because of a shortfall in their budget, for which they blamed us, claiming they were short about $850,000 in terms of their needs in one of their departments this year.

The following day a senior official of my ministry spent half an hour with their senior administrative officials and demonstrated to them where without any cut in service, but by efficient administration, they could make reasonable administrative decisions which would save $830,000. Again, I say that not critically. Before they portray their situation as alarming, I would urge them to sit down and very carefully assess their administration and areas where they might make more efficient use of the resources we have at the present time.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The Metropolitan Toronto government has now gone through the exercise the minister talked about, but because of the province's five per cent spending guidelines they have in fact, been forced to cancel the 200 additional day-care places in home and group day care they were intending to create this year. Can the minister say what action his ministry is prepared to take to meet the desperate need for close to 900 day-care places, most of which are for children of parents who face the very difficult choice of if they can't work for lack of day care, they may well have to go on welfare? What action is the ministry prepared to take in order to ensure this desperate need is met?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, as always, the staff of my ministry are prepared to work co-operatively with the Metropolitan Toronto staff. Of course, we cannot usurp the administrative responsibility they have.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, would the minister explain how effective his co-operation is without dollars attached to that co-operation? He talks and he talks but the responsibility he leaves with the municipality. Where is his responsibility for these children in the International Year of the Child?

Mr. McClellan: International year of the hypocrite.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member knows, there has been, I suggest, a more generous rate of increase in funding in the area of children's services than probably in any other area of government spending.

Mrs. Campbell: Children's mental health centres. Don't talk.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The honourable member knows, if she will sit and be honest, and stop sensationalizing things, for one moment, that for over two years we have been consulting with people across this province engaged in working with children and people in the general public, and consistently they have been saying to us it is important there be some redirection in the services for children in this province. We have been listening to that. We have been planning and we have been planning carefully—

Mr. Martel: Cutbacks.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —and now we are at the point where we have to make some very tough decisions in order to execute the plans that have been developed—

Mrs. Campbell: The execution is clear.

Mr. S. Smith: You are executing the program. You are assassinating it.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —with the support of the people in this province.

I ask the honourable member, is she really being honest with us and everybody else in this province, or is she going to dig in her heels and thwart the efforts on our part to do what we know is right and what she knows is right and what has been recommended by the people engaged in children's services in Ontario?

Mrs. Campbell: Point of privilege: I have never yet spoken or acted in anything other than an honest way, and I resent that insinuation. I ask it be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: I have no control over that sort of thing. I can't insist, unless it's unparliamentary, and I don't see that it is.

Mr. Peterson: Tell the Sergeant at Arms to run a sword through him.

Mr. Warner: Apologize.

Mr. Swart: Apologize to the children.

Mr. Warner: Apologize and then resign.

Mr. McClellan: As a supplementary, what I want to ask the minister is this: Within his budget, although it is true he has given a 9.9 per cent increase for children's services, why has he imposed a five per cent ceiling on day-care services? That exceeds even the most oppressive measure that the former minister (Mr. J. A. Taylor) took. Surely it makes sense to the minister to provide additional funding above a five per cent ceiling to day care, because this is the most effective preventive children's service we have available?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I'm not sure. I'm not saying that the last statement of the member is incorrect, but I'm certainly not sure that it is correct.

Mr. McClellan: It's the minister's own statement I was reading from. It could be incorrect then.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I agree that there are many people who feel very strongly that quality day care is an important preventive tool.

Mr. McClellan: Take the ceiling off, that's all we're asking.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Although, at the same time, I would point out there are many other services that have been identified as necessary as preventive measures in serving the children of this province. One of the realities which goes with responsibility for government programs and accountability to the public for expenditures we have to face is that one must engage in what is a very difficult task at times of establishing priorities, just as the member has to, I trust, with his own personal budget in serving his own family, or meeting the needs of his own family.

Mr. Warner: Why doesn't the minister get a job as the keeper of Newgate?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Surely the member too must establish certain priorities? We have engaged, in the last two years, in what I believe to have been one of the most extensive priority-setting exercises ever.

Mr. S. Smith: The government spent half a million dollars on one multinational to buy out another multinational.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would also point out to the Leader of the Opposition that the future of our children in terms of employment is also something that we have to be concerned about. We do not, in this government, develop tunnel vision.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister doesn't have any kind of vision, tunnel or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would point out to the honourable member that, certainly, if we had unlimited resources available to us, rather than simply generous resources—

Mr. Peterson: So you threw away succession duty revenues in the Year of the Child.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —then obviously we would try to meet every expectation and perhaps every need in the province. Maybe we would do that, but clearly we cannot do it. So what we have to do is try to assess essential needs, try to assess realistic expectations that we ought to be meeting and do our best to meet those.

Mr. Warner: Scrooge is a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We cannot be all things to all people at all times. That is the reality of 1979 in Ontario and in Canada, and it's the reality of life in the western world. We're still doing a better job than almost any other jurisdiction in the western world.

Mr. Speaker: A new question, the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Peterson: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I lose again.

Mr. Cassidy: Your party lost out in BC again too, yes.

Mr. Breithaupt: How did you do?

Mr. Cassidy: Not bad. We'll take it next time.

Mr. Foulds: We will take 47 per cent of the vote any time.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: We got 47 times the combined votes of the Conservative Party in BC.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the member for Ottawa Centre has a question please put it, or I might even recognize the member for London Centre.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment arising out of his answer to a written question from my colleague from Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) about carcinogens being used in the plastics, rubber and pigments industries.

In view of the fact that the ministry's hazardous substances handbook noted back in December 1976, more than two years ago, the extremely dangerous nature of such chemicals as methyl yellow, benzidine and MBCA, can the minister explain to the House why it took almost two years before the government commissioned the MacLaren study to determine what should be done in order to control or limit the use of these very hazardous chemicals?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take that question as notice.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the 1976 handbook said about methyl yellow that no exposure by any route should be permitted and about benzidine that any exposure is considered hazardous, can the minister say why in his written reply he said that the use of these chemicals was relatively small, when it came up to 25 to 75 tons per annum? Can he tell the House why there are not standards in Ontario even now for exposure to these very hazardous chemicals?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'll take that as notice.

Mr. Speaker: That's taken as notice too.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Van Horne: I have a question for the Minister of Labour concerning nuclear energy and public safety. Can the minister explain the discrepancy in the information provided in a recent CBC television news report from the Bruce and Douglas Point nuclear plants? The report made two points. One was that local police, fire and ambulance people have had no education from or through Ontario Hydro in how to respond to an emergency at nuclear plants. The second point was that one contingency system consisted of placing a disc in front of the home of a lady. When the lady was interviewed, she was able to say that her information was that if the disc went off or an alarm sounded from the disc, she should get into her car and drive off somewhere, not unlike Don Quixote, I suppose.

Mr. Riddell: Where? Into Lake Huron?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: London North.

Mr. Van Horne: There is a discrepancy between those comments and the minister's comments of April 2, in which he indicated that his ministry was the lead ministry in matters of safety. He made specific reference to the fact that "should evacuation be required, this would be under the control of local authorities who are represented by the control group."

There seems to be a discrepancy. Can the minister explain it?

Mr. Wildman: No.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: First of all, the question of off-site contingency plans was dealt with in great detail at the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs. I would refer the member to that for a more detailed review of the problem.

We are aware of the fact and the member is aware of it too, that the Bruce generating station does have a fairly detailed off-site contingency plan.

Mr. S. Smith: It just so happens that nobody knows about it.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I can't deny that we have much to learn from all that has gone on over the past few weeks. All of us have a lot to learn. Immediate plans are under way to carry out a full-scale, mock disaster situation at Bruce, simply to inform the public and the various groups involved, the fire department and the police department, so that a situation such as the member has reported to us—and I saw the program he saw on TV that night—does not occur again.

Mr. S. Smith: What did you think of it?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have the same concerns the member has about the fact the public in that area doesn't feel it's well informed, and we will move to correct it.

Mr. J. Reed: You're concerned about everything but you've done nothing about it.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: I have the minister's statement of April 2 and I have the information from the select committee, but there is still the question as to when these people are going to be informed. As recently as the last few days, they say they have not been informed. How long is the minister going to wait?

Mr. Warner: Clean up your act.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As the member knows, there are two parts to the question of any nuclear situation that may be of an alarming nature. The first is the on-site plan, which was gone into in great detail at the committee and which the member is fully aware of.

The on-site plan also requires that there be a certain awareness of the community involved and that it take some responsibility for that. In addition to that, my ministry as lead ministry and, I might say, under the direction of the emergency committee of cabinet, has a responsibility for off-site contingency plans. Those plans have been drawn up.

We have had two mock exercises in the Pickering area. We are now planning a mock exercise in the Bruce area. We recognize the need for that sort of educational process to inform the public and we all have learned a lot from the situation which has occurred in the past few weeks. I acknowledge that. We are now proceeding to have the public and the facilities, such as fire and police, better informed about what to do in the case of any disaster situation.

Mr. Foulds: Does the minister not agree that in terms of public perception it is much better to have the public fully informed? Therefore, does he not agree that instead of having just one or two mock exercises, it is important the public be fully informed of the procedures and that the mock exercises be carried out on a regular basis, simply because there is a transitory population in both those areas?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That has been our policy in the Pickering area, as I mentioned in my previous remarks.

Mr. Foulds: Two in how many years?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Two in two years. It is our plan to carry out that sort of regular exercise at each of the plants. The member can appreciate it hasn't been an easy matter to develop contingency plans that are that thick for each plant, but they are being developed and they are developed in particular with regard to Pickering and Bruce.

We are going to proceed with the mock exercise at Bruce and will do so on a regular basis.

Mr. Sargent: Being aware of the minister's thoroughness, I know he will follow through on this. But is he aware there was a release this morning from Washington that 41 nuclear plants in the United States will be closed down very shortly if they can't come up with immediate evacuation plans?

I am not aware of the minister's communications with the plants, but is he aware that last night there was a unit alert that lit up like a Christmas tree—an evacuation last night at Douglas Point, Bruce A? Does he have communications about things like that?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I do not have immediate access to communications such as that unless the on-site contingency plan alerts the off-site group director. I would not have knowledge of that unless the on-site planners, Hydro in that case, felt there was any possibility of an off-site concern. So I would not automatically know of that.

CONSTRUCTION EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Mr. Elgie: During my absence from the Legislature on Tuesday last, questions arose concerning the present status of our discussions with the province of Quebec concerning its regulation restricting the rights of construction workers resident in Ontario to gain employment on projects in Quebec.

Suggestions have been made in the media and elsewhere that a compromise agreement has been reached between our two provinces and that a firm decision has been made by the Ontario government not to proceed with Bill 136, an Act to Stabilize Employment of Tradesmen in the Construction Industry. I wish to advise members that both of these assertions are incorrect.

As to our discussions, I last met with Dr. Johnson, Minister of Labour and Manpower for the province of Quebec, on March 23 in Montreal. At that meeting we once again reviewed the entire matter and Dr. Johnson advised me of certain changes to the Quebec regulations that were about to be made, unrelated to the Ontario situation. Frankly the proposed changes were not ones that made the prospects of settlement any easier from Ontario's point of view.

Notwithstanding that fact, I undertook to consider the proposals he made, discuss them with my colleagues and respond as soon as possible. Subsequently I received a letter from Dr. Johnson dated March 28, 1979, in which the proposals made at our meeting were set out in writing.

It is quite clear from the text of that letter that Dr. Johnson was under no misapprehension that an agreement had been reached. In fact his summary of the points discussed is premised by the phrase, "The proposed solution could be drawn up as follows."

On April 6 I replied to his letter and in my reply expressed my disappointment that the impression had apparently been created that we had reached agreement at our meeting of March 23. I reminded him I had made it clear I would have to present his suggestions to my cabinet colleagues and to my caucus before I was in any position to respond. I went on to say that on further reflection, it had become apparent there were four specific matters of substance which required clarification before I would even proceed further to discuss it with cabinet and my caucus.

The four matters upon which I required further information were set out with particularity in a letter to him on April 6. That letter concluded with the statement that once I had received the requested information, I would pursue the Quebec proposal with my colleagues and advise him of the results of our deliberations as soon as possible. I have not yet received a reply to that letter.

The questions I asked were, I believe, simple and straightforward and the information I have requested is essential before any further decision can be made. In an attempt to expedite the matter, I have sent a Telex to Dr. Johnson asking when I may expect to receive a response.

As to Bill 136, An Act to Stabilize Employment of Tradesmen In the Construction Industry, members will recall that it was introduced in the House for first reading on June 22, 1978, and was subsequently referred to a standing committee. In the current session, it was reintroduced and received first and second readings on March 6. On the same day it was referred to the standing committee on resources development.

I hope this clarifies precisely where the matter now stands. It would be premature and unproductive for me to comment further on the substance of our discussions with the province of Quebec, at least until I have received a response from Dr. Johnson.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister table his exchange of correspondence with the Quebec Minister of Labour and Manpower and the specific letters which he cited, in order that the Legislature can be fully informed about this matter?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my previous response, I do not feel it would be productive at this time for me to table the correspondence. When I have discussed the final process with cabinet and with my caucus, I will be pleased to consider doing so.

Mr. Cassidy: That's open government.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: That's responsible government.

FOODLAND ONTARIO PROGRAM

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. I believe the Minister of Agriculture and Food has breached a privilege where he has inadvertently misled the House in his statement this morning where he said he had been advised the improperly marked packages were used only between May 8 and May 10, 1979. I can bring him a sworn affidavit that the carrots improperly marked were purchased before that time in the Dominion stores in St. Catharines.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, on this point of privilege. I said in my statement that Hardee Farms have also advised the improperly marked packages were used only between May 8 and May 10. This is the information that we got from their office yesterday and if there were some before May 8—

Mr. Swart: It brings into question their credibility, doesn't it?

Hon. W. Newman: I didn't mislead the House; they said that so don't let yourselves get carried away.

An hon. member: You say what they say.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: He reported what they said.

Hon. W. Newman: I'm reporting what they said.

Mr. Speaker: Really, nobody's privileges have been breached. Obviously, there's a difference of opinion and I see no reason why we should take the time of question period in this way. It seems to me they are honest differences of opinion and it will all come out in the wash.

DISEASES AMONG MINERS

Mr. M. Davidson: I have a question for the Minister of Labour with regard to the federal study, Cancer Mortality in Selected Northern Ontario Mining Communities. Does the minister agree with the remarks made by Dr.

McCracken of the Workmen's Compensation Board when he says: "It is not the policy of the board to review unpublished documents; what I would hope is that Dr. Wigle will have it reviewed, analysed and commented on by his peers." This statement implies to me that the board is prepared to do nothing, therefore would the minister not agree that it is the responsibility of the board, and not of his ministry, to initiate its own study based on the findings of Dr. Wigle?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I think there may be some misunderstanding about the whole question of a study of disease, including mortality in miners in Ontario. Some time ago this ministry, in conjunction with the board, commenced a study related primarily to uranium miners, with other miners being used more or less as a control group. It soon became apparent such a study was going to involve collecting all of the health records of all of the miners, including non-uranium as well as uranium, and there might be a lot of valuable information to be obtained by gathering data on all of those miners from the information records we have which go back to 1955. It, therefore, was obvious the study needed to be expanded so we could have greater information about the incidence of various diseases in all miners, be they uranium or non-uranium miners. That's what we have been doing now and that's a study that's under way.

The Wigle study from the federal government might be termed a sort of a mini-study in that it's selected two or three communities and zeroed in on them. His findings, of course, and the study are not in conflict with what we are doing but are rather a collaborative sort of effort. I don't see any suggestions that anyone's not interested in the Wigle study. I am interested in it.

Mr. McClellan: What about McCracken? He's not interested.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Hang on or I'll get my dog after you.

I have asked my staff in the occupational health and safety division to specifically review the Wigle study, having in mind there may be some information in it that requires us to explore some matter in greater depth. We are attempting to establish a broad understanding of diseases and complications from the workplace that miners are exposed to and there's no interest in doing anything else. There is a commitment to try and understand what has gone on in the past and to try and correct it for the future.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given that the study shows some very dramatic deaths having resulted from lung cancer in comparison to what may normally be expected, is the minister now prepared to assure us a central registry for all miners in Ontario will be established as soon as possible? This registry, I might add, has been called for by this party and the United Steelworkers of America for a good number of years. Will the minister assure us that not his ministry but the board will in fact, initiate its own study based on the findings of Dr. Wigle?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as the member knows, the Occupational Health and Safety Act 1978, does have provision under regulations for the establishment of certain worker registries and we will be proceeding in that area. I might tell the member, the first registry we intend to set up is one related to silicosis. That's not to say there are not other equally important registries; one does have to establish some list of priorities in which one will proceed. We do have an interest in establishing certain registries and the new legislation does give us that authority, but let's not assume there are no lists or compendiums related to miners in Ontario. The Workmen's Compensation Board, as the member knows, has a full list of miners in Ontario. It goes back, as I mentioned, to some time in 1955. There is a list, and we do have access to it, and in conjunction with the Workmen's Compensation Board, we are involved in this study. They are involved and are showing their interest in the whole problem.

Mr. McClellan: You didn't deal with McCracken.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: I am going back to Dr. McCracken's statement. Over the years it has been our experience that certain trends and certain illnesses start to develop which ultimately lead to the untimely deaths of miners. I remind the minister of Elliot Lake and the cancer problem in the sintering plant in Sudbury. Why is it the compensation board, when that starts to occur, does not institute its own study to try and head off a total disaster?

Dr. McCracken's statement indicates they are not prepared to move in that direction. Will the minister direct the compensation board, when it starts to get these type of figures, to look into those matters immediately?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, I think there's clear evidence we are concerned about this problem and are carrying out a joint study in conjunction with the WCB. If there's a suggestion the Wigle study from the federal government is going to be ignored, it's not a correct assumption.

Mr. McClellan: You should initiate your own assessment of it.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have directed the occupational health and safety staff to review it to see whether or not—

Mr. McClellan: Don't leave it up to them.

Hon. Mr. Elgie:—there should be any change in the direction our own study is taking. At our forthcoming meeting with the board, I will also get their assurance they will be involved in the same sort of review of the Wigle study. There's no doubt about that.

Mr. Martel: That's not what McCracken says.

AUTO REPAIRS

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations: Does the minister realize that if a consumer in this province finds himself in the unfortunate situation of having totally unauthorized work done in the repair of a car, that the use of the Mechanics' Lien Act will force the person to pay for that work, whether it was authorized or not, if the person wishes to have the car made available to him or to her? Does the minister have knowledge of this kind of a practice and does he think that that is a proper application of the Mechanics' Lien Act, where work has not been authorized?

Hon. Mr. Drea: From time to time that is brought to our attention. There have been and there are continuing discussions with the Ministry of the Attorney General regarding this problem. I am very hopeful that those discussions will lead to the inability, in a procedure where the work has not been authorized, for a mechanic's lien to be filed.

There are some areas in the field of automobiles where, quite frankly, a mechanic's lien should be filed, even though there is no authorization for any work, particularly in the field of towing, where a vehicle has been abandoned or what have you. I am not talking about an accident where there is a driver or that type of thing. But in terms of what the member is talking about, namely, repairs, there are ongoing discussions with the Ministry of the Attorney General regarding this problem.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: To take the example which I have here of a lady who took her car in for an oil change and the garage had a new motor put into the car without any authorization, would the minister not agree that in circumstances such as that the use of the Mechanics' Lien Act is wrong? What powers does the consumer protection bureau have to attempt to remedy matters like that and avoid a forced payment if the person wishes to obtain the car?

Mr. Makarchuk: Was the oil in the motor or did they add it later?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Obviously we have certain powers, notwithstanding the use of the Mechanics' Lien Act. The mechanic's lien and other types of liens are used in areas other than automobile repairs. It has been our policy to move in and deal with the problem. If the mechanic's lien is not removed voluntarily, while we don't actually participate in the court case for civil action against the person who laid it, certainly we provide sufficient expert evidence that it is a relatively easy and not a financially straining proposition for the person who is involved.

I would say that while the example given by the honourable member certainly is bizarre—and I don't know anything about it—I would presume that the argument there is it was a verbal thing. I don't want to get into the merits of it. That is why I have a fleet of ghost cars on the road. Nobody has asked me a question since January about the fleet of ghost cars that are operated by this ministry.

Mr. Nixon: Tell us about the ghost cars. Why don't you make a statement about it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: You will find honesty and integrity and things like that out there.

Mr. Speaker: If they are ghosts, I don't know how they would be aware of them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the reason I said that is that I said in December we would do it.

Mr. S. Smith: Are you the ghost writer for the Premier's review of Morty Shulman's book?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The use of the ghost car in this type of operation has diminished that type of activity quite remarkably.

Mr. S. Smith: It sounds as if the lady doesn't have a ghost of a chance.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Supplementary: If the minister would come back to the original question raised by the member for Kitchener, in his ministry's dialogue with the Attorney General will he tell the House today that he and his officials will make strong representation to the Attorney General in cases where the Mechanics' Lien Act cannot be used, in those cases where payment is sought for automobile repairs where there was no authorization by the consumer?

Hon. Mr. Drea: As I pointed out to the honourable member who asked the original question, we have been making strong representations for a period of time to the Ministry of the Attorney General, but it is not as simple as he has just laid out. It is not as simple as "there is no authorization," because there are times, particularly when a vehicle is abandoned—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Just for repair.

Hon. Mr. Drea: —that is considered to be a bill. There are also other times when the automobile repair man's defence in business is the mechanic's lien. This is how he gets a hearing when a customer says, "I don't like what you did, regardless of how you did it," and refuses to pay.

It is not a simple thing; it is a very complex thing. None the less, I understand the point of the honourable member's supplementary question and that is the area we are trying to resolve. We are trying to resolve it as expeditiously as possible, so that a person will not be victimized by the relatively automatic placing of a mechanic's lien which suddenly turns it from a dispute between a consumer and a businessman into the courts. Then the law comes in on the side of the businessman, much to the detriment of the consumer.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. Since the Minister of Industry and Tourism and his colleague, the Premier, have been trying to sell Ontario first to the British and then to the Japanese, would the Treasurer share with us his views as to why he thinks increased foreign ownership of Ontario is an appropriate economic and industrial strategy? Does he not think that creating jobs in Ontario can best be achieved by rebuilding our own Canadian manufacturing industries, rather than inviting someone else in, which would cause even more foreign ownership? And is he not afraid the continued sellout of Ontario will result in the Toronto Star endorsing the NDP in the next provincial election?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is perhaps the kind of assistance we are looking for to get a real majority.

Mr. Foulds: The minister will eat those words.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, we are selling the English and the Japanese on Ontario. I think that is the key difference.

Mr. S. Smith: You are selling Ontario to them.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We are selling the English and the Japanese on Ontario in many ways, not just to invest here. We will be quite honest; we are glad to have investment here.

Mr. Warner: Make sure you're selling it, not giving it away.

Hon. F. S. Miller: At the same time we want to make sure we make it easier for Ontario business to be done in those countries. The Japanese in particular have made it difficult for other countries to sell into Japan, I think the members would agree. The latest round of GATT negotiations I think almost foundered on that point of view. We also have to encourage, as I have said many times, Ontario and Canadian citizens to get back into the habit of, and confidence in, investing in their own country and we need to help them do that.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact the Treasurer does seem to think that increased foreign ownership is a good thing, is he aware of a very major study that was done by Professor Powrie of the University of Alberta on the contribution of foreign capital to Canadian economic growth? I will be very brief; there are only three major conclusions:

1. From 1950 to 1976 if there had been zero inflow of foreign capital into Canada for all 26 years, the Canadian standard of living would still be at least 98.7 per cent of its actual level in 1976.

2. If there was zero inflow of foreign capital into Canada for the entire decade from 1977 to 1987, the Canadian standard of living—

Mr. Speaker: That question should really be put as an inquiry of the ministry.

Mr. Laughren: Okay. I will summarize my question then, Mr. Speaker.

In view of this major study which I would ask the Treasurer to read, would he please tell us and perhaps even table in this chamber, information contradictory to the conclusions in this major study which indicates foreign ownership is not a blessing for Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are many opinions on that matter; there is no one unique solution to the matter. I do not think anyone in this chamber would like all the multi-nationals or all the capital to withdraw from this country. What we do need to do is create jobs in this country, some of which are going to have to involve multinationals, and at the same time encourage Canadians to invest in this country and support those small industries that are starting to become large companies.

One of the great things I am finding is we are getting Canadian multinationals these days. I think we should encourage Canadian multinationals to invest in other countries and have their home base here.

RESOURCE EQUALIZATION GRANTS

Mr. B. Newman: A question of the Minister of Revenue: As it is understood by some municipalities the new formula or weighting factor for the calculation of the resource equalization grant will be available in June of this year, will the minister inform the Legislature as to the date of the introduction of this new formula and what opportunities municipalities will have for input to express their concerns over the new formula?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The equalization factors will be gazetted by July 15. That is when the municipalities will be officially advised of the new equalization factors.

They have from July 15 to some time in November to study their equalization factor to see how it affects their present condition. Then, if they feel the equalization factors are wrong, they have the right to appeal to the Ontario Municipal Board which will assess whether or not there has been a mistake made.

PETITION

CABLE TV SERVICE IN OHC PROJECTS

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario signed by 214 senior citizens of Ontario Housing in Welland, and a few in Port Colborne:

"We the undersigned, being residents of the OHC senior citizens in Welland, object to the termination of the block purchase of cable TV which enables us to obtain greatly reduced rates. We petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to instruct the Minister of Housing to reconsider and authorize officials of Ontario Housing Corporation to negotiate continuation of the agreements with the cable TV company."

PRIVATE INVESTIGATORS AND SECURITY GUARDS ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 84, An Act to revise the Private Investigators and Security Guards Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The bill is an amended version of Bill 87 which received first reading in the last session. The bill would substantially modernize the legislation which was last updated in 1965.

The current Private Investigators and Security Guards Act will be extended to apply to new groups such as the burglar alarm industry and security consultants. The bill would provide, in addition, for improvements in the licensing system and the powers of enforcement.

A new tribunal would also be established to hear appeals to the decisions of the registrar respecting licences.

The proposed law is intended to alter and renovate the existing regulatory process for the betterment of the industry, the licence authority and the public.

PUBLIC SERVANTS' POLITICAL RIGHTS ACT

Mr. Cassidy moved first reading of Bill 85, An Act to provide Political Rights for Public Servants.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that public servants will be able to write, to speak, to contribute, to solicit funds, to work, to join, to hold office and to vote on behalf of, in, for, or to a political party or candidate in a federal or a provincial election. It will protect public servants from punitive action by their superiors or from being forced to carry out partisan duties as a condition of their employment.

It's designed to end the second-class status, as far as political rights are concerned, of Ontario's public servants. It's time this bill was adopted now.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, it's a pleasure to speak in this budget debate—

Mr. Ruston: On a point of order, I want to ask the Speaker if I could have a ruling as to the adjournment of a debate. If I remember correctly, on Monday afternoon last the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams) adjourned the debate. I was under the general impression that parliamentary procedure was that that person carried on in the next debate.

Mr. Haggerty: There are no other speakers indicated, though.

Mr. Speaker: The member was under a false impression, if he had that impression. There's a general agreement by the whips, who order the speakers, that speakers follow in rotation. On numerous occasions in the past we've had members get up and adjourn the debate on behalf of a particular party. It's just whoever happens to catch the Speaker's eye. I'm assured by the Clerk that from time immemorial you follow the normal rotation as long as you have speakers to fill the slots.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I don't beg to differ. That was the general operation of this House for the last 11 years I've been here. At the time the member for Oriole adjourned the debate the problem was there were no NDP members in the House, and maybe that was the reason.

Mr. Speaker: I think if the honourable member will check back to the last time we had this item before the House, I think it was the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) who adjourned the House, and the next speaker was the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed). I think if the member will check back on that, we're not establishing a precedent here this morning.

Mr. Foulds: Well done, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Philip: It's a pleasure to take part in this debate on the budget. It's a budget that once more socks it to the middle-class taxpayers who have built this country and made it the great country that it is. It's a regressive budget by a regressive government. It's a doctrinaire budget. Gone are the days of the pragmatic practices and pragmatism of John Robarts, and so enters a new version of Goldwater and Adam Smith fundamentalism in economics in this province.

The budget gives lip-service to one of the most pressing problems and then falls into its rigid ideological trap of assuming that complete reliance on private enterprise, with little direction or leadership from government, can somehow produce the kind of growth necessary to put this province's 300,000 unemployed back to work.

This blind faith in private enterprise is also reflected in the lack of any initiatives in the consumer field. The very least the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) could have done was to provide an Ontario food prices review board to protect consumers from unjustified increases in food prices. He fails to do this. It is little wonder that the consumer is being ripped off daily in this province.

We saw recently, in the condominium bill that was introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) and debated in this House, that even the simplest requests from condominium owners for some consumer protection were rejected. Even the simplest requests for the licensing of management firms, a request that was backed by many of the reputable management firms, were rejected not only by the Conservatives but also by the Liberals, out of some kind of blind faith in Adam Smith economics.

What was important was a rigid ideological position taken by the government and by the Liberals, not the basic needs of the consumer. The consumer be damned; ideology is what's important to this government.

As transportation critic in this Legislature, I spend a great deal of time documenting the lack of policy in this ministry. The very fact that there is, right now, an inquiry into the Ontario Highway Transport Board is ample evidence of the lack of leadership by the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow). Instead of accepting the fact that mistakes have been made in the past in a vacuum of any kind of policy, he has engaged in the kind of shoddy politics that have no place in this province.

The most recent example of this was the speech made on May 8 at the Ontario Traffic Conference. I was present when he told the audience that it took 19½ hours to vote only $50 million, and half an hour to vote over $1 billion. The minister implied, of course, that members of the opposition took all this time on matters of minor importance and were not interested in the concerns of people who attended that conference.

Mr. Eaton: That's right on.

Mr. Philip: I didn't see you there, so how would you know?

Mr. Eaton: I was at it.

An hon. member: Where were you, Bob, under the table?

Mr. Philip: The minister conveniently neglected to mention that a great deal of the time was spent on the first vote, a vote dealing with policy and, therefore, affecting more than the specific costs to the administration. He failed to mention that part of the time for estimates was taken by an inquiry into the transportation board, an inquiry affecting billions of dollars to shippers and to transport companies in this province.

He failed to mention that much time was spent on safety, a vote which, once again, is important not only in economic terms but also in very real, human terms.

He failed, also, to mention that there are Conservative members on that committee and that they spoke on many of those early votes. He failed also to mention that the committee was chaired by a Conservative, and had that chairman properly administered the new standing orders of the first vote, much less time would have been taken on the vote.

Mr. Eaton: He was a much better chairman than you ever were.

Mr. Philip: In fact, the minister even failed to give the correct information. He misled that audience.

The facts are that after 9:45 p.m. on the day he referred to, the committee voted on votes 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609 and 2602, and it adjourned at 10:25 p.m. The total vote prior to 9:45 p.m. was for $74,018,920. These figures can be checked.

I dare the minister to table his speech so that all members of the Legislature can see the kind of shoddy politics the Conservatives are engaged in. Instead of policy in terms of transportation—

Mr. Eaton: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A point of privilege.

Mr. Eaton: I thought it was unparliamentary in this House to state that somebody misled. I would ask that the statement be withdrawn by the member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member did use the term "misled" and I wonder if he would withdraw it.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the rule indicates that it may not be stated a member misled the House. I did not say that the minister misled the House, I said that he misled a conference that I attended.

Mr. Eaton: He's still accusing a member of the House of misleading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I really don't feel that's parliamentary and I would ask the honourable member to withdraw.

Mr. Philip: Since I have a lot of respect for the present Speaker, then, I'll withdraw the remark. What the minister said is evident. I challenge the minister to table his speech and we can all examine what he said.

An even shoddier form of apologetics in transportation was the letter that was sent to all the northern newspapers by Mr. Oliver Korpela of Sudbury.

At that time, Mr. Korpela, in his letter to all of those newspapers, suggested that somehow the New Democratic Party and the Liberals were responsible for the fact the people of Chapleau have to pay 69 cents for a loaf of bread. He stated that 24 cents of that price were freight costs and that was because, in the words of the minister—quoting from a conversation with the minister—somehow "the Liberals and the NDP had combined to defeat a bill in the House."

I would like to read into the record a letter which I and some of my northern colleagues have sent today to all of the northern newspapers. I want to show those people that they cannot get away with this kind of shoddy, cheap politics.

It reads as follows:

"Recently a letter from Mr. Oliver Korpela of Wesmak Lumber Company Limited, Chapleau, Ontario, appeared in the North Bay Nugget and other northern newspapers charging that NDP and Liberal transportation policies are responsible for higher bread prices in northern Ontario.

"Mr. Korpela's letter is a totally inaccurate attack on the NDP which, we suspect, is politically motivated, coming as it does during a federal election campaign. Political differences are no excuse for using fabricated figures to support one's own self-interest.

"To begin with, the allegation that a 24-cent difference in bread prices exists between Toronto and Chapleau is nonsense. The same premium brand-name, 24-ounce loaf that sells for 64 to 67 cents in Toronto sells for 67 to 68 cents in the Sudbury region, a price differential of one cent. Mr. Korpela, according to bakery company officials, is referring to private store bread when he mentions the 45 cent figure. These loaves are produced for chain store operators who, in many cases, use the product as a loss leader, as a means of attracting customers by offering a lower price—often below cost.

"Transportation costs between Toronto and Sudbury amount to 2.5 cents a loaf, not the 24-cent figure which Mr. Korpela quotes. Some of the bread sold in Chapleau actually comes from Shaw Bakeries in Thunder Bay. Godbout General Store sells this bread for 65 cents a loaf, while Dominion Stores offers it for about 63 or 64 cents. Dominion also offers its own brand at around 45 cents as a loss leader in this town.

"It is clear that Mr. Korpela is comparing apples and oranges, and using false information as well.

"Mr. Korpela's concern about empty trucks returning from Toronto after delivering lumber to Toronto are understandable, but his company could not service the Chapleau area with bread. Trucks bring the bread in on large racks which are returned to the bakeries along with stale products left over from the previous deliveries. This means that service to the Chapleau area is a two-way process, not the one-way operation implied by Mr. Korpela.

"Mr. Korpela points to regulation of the trucking industry as the root cause of the problem of empty trucks travelling between northern and southern Ontario. We in the New Democratic Party, on the other hand, believe that this problem stems from the type of economy that has been forced on the people in northern Ontario.

"This economy, supported by the Progressive Conservative policies and by the present budget, is based on the mining of natural resources, with almost no attention paid to secondary manufacturing. A diversified economy in northern Ontario would improve the situation considerably. We remind Mr. Korpela and the Conservative Party that it was Darcy McKeough, the former Treasurer of Ontario, who indicated in 1977 that there would be no secondary industry in northern Ontario for at least 20 years.

"As to whether liberalization of the trucking industry would reduce freight costs, a select committee of the Legislature, chaired by the Conservative MPP Bud Gregory, concluded that this would not be the case.

"The committee discovered no significant differences in tariffs between the regulated trucking industry in Ontario and the unregulated trucking industry in Alberta.

"On the contrary, however, the committee did find that transportation costs are less expensive in Saskatchewan, which does have a regulated industry.

"Mr. Korpela also states that in his discussions with Mr. Snow, the Minister of Transportation and Communications, it was indicated to him that Mr. Snow attempted to liberalize trucking in Ontario and that it was blocked by the New Democratic Party, aided by 'enough misguided Liberals.'

"As to whether the Liberals are misguided or not is neither here nor there, but the facts of the case are materially different from those stated. The Minister of Transportation and Communications presented a bill to the Legislature, Bill 21, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

"On May 2, 1978, this bill was withdrawn without ever having been debated and a new bill, Bill 78, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act was introduced. This bill also remained on the Order Paper for many months and at no time did it receive second reading. Simply put, it was never voted on.

"It is a well-known fact that there is a split in the Conservative ranks over the question of deregulation. When the critics of the two opposition parties indicated that they were prepared to proceed with a bill which would remove the North Bay restriction, the government chose not to call the bill because it could not count on the full support of its own caucus.

"In conclusion, Mr. Korpela's letter should be dismissed as a politically motivated attack on the NDP"—and I might add on the Liberal Party—"for which it has no substantial basis in fact." That kind of shoddy politics which is used as an absence for any kind of policy in transportation is the kind of thing which is unbecoming to members of the Legislature or to their supporters and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that any time we run into that kind of thing we will attack it in the same way that we have dealt with it right now.

I would like to deal briefly with a matter that concerns many people in my constituency, and that is the matter of health care. I would like to read to you excerpts from an article which appeared in the Etobicoke Guardian, Wednesday, May 9, which I think deals with the matter of how this particular government is destroying the health care system in this province. The article, written by Leslie Ferenc says:

"Approximately 1,200 outpatients turn to the services provided at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital when times get rough. But when the hospital closes in September, these individuals will be forced to look elsewhere for help." It is that "elsewhere" of course, that the minister has promised to take care of, but so far we see no evidence of that.

"Currently there are approximately 15 outpatient programs serving the borough. People who rely on the 89-year-old facility for such services as day-care programs, alcohol clinics and behavioural therapy programs which will soon begin to feel the side effects of the closure.

"Ontario Health Minister Dennis Timbrell has promised $1.3 million will be spent for community-based services. But with only 114 days left before the hospital locks its doors, time is running out.

"Mike Travers, a vocational counsellor and assistant director for the DARE program"—Day-care Assessment, Rehabilitation and Education, Etobicoke—"says the service will not be able to meet the needs of all the people who will be coming out of Lakeshore when the facility is closed. A relatively new organization"—I am proud to be on the advisory council—"called Friends and Advocates also is doing its share to help individuals who have been discharged from Lakeshore. Program co-ordinator Jill Butler describes the organization as 'a people's program.'

"We feel, however, that there was a great need for more outpatient programs in Etobicoke, even before the minister announced that Lakeshore will be closed,' she says. 'When there is no support from the community, some people will be forced to go back into the hospitals.'"

A letter was sent to the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) by the Family Service Association of Metropolitan Toronto on April 6, 1979. When I spoke to them last week they still had no answer from the minister. The letter points out that the Family Service Association is "the only professional family counselling and family support agency in the Etobicoke community. Yet the minister has not informed anybody as to why Dr. Lynes's outpatient transfer committee has not contacted this professional association."

I would ask the minister, assuming he will be reading this speech, to table a list of those agencies that have been contacted to date in this regard, since the minister knows that the FSA cannot handle the large increase in referrals sent from the psychiatric sources. Since it cannot handle them under its present facilities, where is the slack going to be taken up?

Is this association going to be given additional funding? What other associations are being contacted? One would think if the minister were serious about providing the kinds of outpatient services he has promised, he at least would have contacted this organization as one of the first organizations to be involved in some kind of planning.

As they said in the Guardian article, two days ago, there were 114 days left. Now there would be, by my arithmetic, 112 days left and one wonders what the ministry is doing.

There's been a great attention paid in this Legislature and in the newspapers to the inadequacies of this particular budget. The commentators and editorial writers have had a great deal to say about the inadequacy in providing employment. Much attention has been focused on the problem of cutbacks in medical services. In all of the heated debate, perhaps housing has not received the kind of attention it really deserves.

To many seniors in our society, housing is a major problem. The fact is the present Conservative government at Queen's Park is taxing many seniors out of their homes. Last year the budget promised property tax reform and enriched tax credits for seniors. They are still waiting for it and some have simply given up and reluctantly have had to sell their homes.

Only this week a report adopted by the Toronto planning board suggests seniors who can no longer afford to retain their homes should be allowed to convert them into smaller senior citizen apartment blocks. The report points out there is a shortage of accommodation for seniors in the Toronto area. Whatever the merits of the report in creating new senior citizens' accommodation, isn't it sad seniors in their retirement age should be asked to open up boarding houses? That's basically what's happening as a result of the actions of this Conservative government.

Where are the golden years the Premier loves to talk about when he appears?

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, I don't see a quorum.

Mr. Deputy Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am advised there is a quorum. Would the member for Etobicoke continue?

Mr. Philip: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I really think the Conservatives should use their whip rather than the bell in order to get some of their members into the House. I notice there were two present at that time.

Hon. Mr. Walker: You've only got six. There are 28 of your people missing—98 per cent.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There were 100 per cent missing for prayers.

Mr. Philip: Since part of my comments were missed, I guess perhaps I should start at the beginning and go over them. Only this week a report adopted by the Toronto planning board suggested that seniors who can no longer afford to retain their homes should be allowed to convert them into smaller senior citizens apartment blocks. The report points out there is a shortage of accommodation for seniors in Toronto. Whatever the merits of the report in creating new seniors' accommodation, isn't it sad that seniors in their golden years must be asked to turn into boarding house operators?

Mr. Haggerty: That's the NDP policy; sharing the wealth.

Mr. Philip: Where are the golden years for these people the Premier (Mr. Davis) loves to talk about when he comes to my riding—only at election times, mind you—to visit the seniors at R. J. Smith and West Acres senior citizens' residence? The education and social services component of property tax is an enormous burden on the elderly. We in the New Democratic Party feel this should be shifted to a more progressive form of taxation. However, the present government is moving in the opposite direction.

In 1975, the government met 61.4 per cent of the average education costs across the province. This left 38.6 per cent to be paid by property taxes. This year the government's share is expected to be only 51.5 per cent, so property taxes must meet 48.5 per cent of the total.

In Metropolitan Toronto, as our critic, the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) has pointed out, the shift is even more dramatic. The government provided 35.1 per cent of the education costs in 1975 but will pay only 20 per cent this year. In other words, while property taxes had to provide 64.9 per cent of Metro's education dollar in 1975, in 1979 they must meet fully 80 per cent of the cost.

Property taxes are regressive taxes. They take from those who often can least afford to pay—the retired, the person temporarily unemployed, the disabled and the middle-income earner. In provinces like Saskatchewan, where the NDP is the government, they have moved to a more progressive form of taxation, and one need only compare the property taxes of seniors and others in Saskatchewan with those of Ontario.

I find it hard to understand why this government is so insensitive to the needs of the seniors in this province. It is not as though the government doesn't know the issues. Groups such as the United Senior Citizens of Ontario have done an excellent job of making the views of seniors known to all members of the Legislature. One would think that even from a purely pragmatic political point of view the government should be interested in seniors' issues. The USCO, for example, has almost 1,000 affiliated clubs across the province and these people are articulate and increasingly politically sophisticated. If the government doesn't respond to their needs they will soon turn to those political parties, such as the NDP, that are listening to them.

The government should also be aware the average age of the population is changing. While the percentage of seniors, that is, people over 65, was 8.4 per cent in 1971, we can project that by the year 2000 the percentage of people over the age of 65 will be 13.6 per cent.

Mr. Ziemba: One day the grey power will drive out the Tories.

Mr. Philip: Conversely, while 37.9 per cent of the population consisted of people under 19 in 1971, the projected drop is to 23.3 per cent by the year 2000. Thus, the needs of seniors today will be multiplied considerably within the next 20 years. It is therefore necessary from a purely pragmatic point of view to understand senior citizens' needs and to develop new programs that can be used in the years ahead when a very large part of our population, some of ourselves included, will be part of that retired population.

I have been pleased to have a close association with the United Senior Citizens of Ontario. Only last week I had an opportunity, as transportation critic for this party, to accompany a delegation of them to a very profitable and very worthwhile meeting with officials from the Toronto Transit Commission.

The USCO has presented a number of thoughtful briefs to this government. It has pointed out how regressive the system of taxation is and how it imposes hardship on seniors. In the brief presented in December 1978, we find a number of recommendations on housing that make an awful lot of sense. If I may, I would like to quote one section from it that I think deals with a problem that has certainly been brought to my attention by many seniors in my riding.

The brief says they have received a number of requests for two-bedroom apartments to be supplied in senior citizens' housing projects. The need for this type of housing becomes apparent in the case of a married couple living together, when in the event of illness the occupancy of one bed is not in the best interests of both parties. Another reason for two-bedroom apartments is so two friends could share one apartment and thus reduce costs. One might add that in those instances they might also reduce the need for someone going to a nursing home or other institution of more intensive care.

The brief also recommends an alternative to the housing situation is for the ministry to relax the rules of qualification and for people waiting for such housing to be subsidized in their existing living quarters.

We have in our riding an excellent experiment called Highway Terraces, in which we have 50 units geared to income. The others are on a non-profit payment basis. It means what we have in that building is an economically wide cross-section of seniors who are in the one building and are able to share their talents and their wide variety of experiences with one another.

We have not created in that building the kind of ghettos that will be created if senior citizens' housing is restricted to only the very poor. I suggest that that kind of experiment is worthwhile and is certainly needed.

Seniors may not in some instances have an economic need for senior citizens' housing, but they have a psychological or health or other reason for wishing to live in that kind of accommodation. Simply because they have been able to save some money is no reason they should be restricted from the advantages that come from living in that kind of accommodation.

Some seniors are confined to nursing homes for long periods of time. At times they have a need for certain privacy. A particular nursing home in my riding, Kipling Acres, has an excellent chief administrator and an excellent staff who are able through a number of experiments to provide that kind of privacy. However, this is not common throughout the province. It strains the staff and resources of every nursing home when we find there is a need, either for medical reasons or for psychological reasons, to have a resident given the kind of privacy that may be required. USCO deals with this in its brief. It recommends that nursing homes provide rooms for their patients when needed, at the recommendation of the patient's physician. I think that is a very reasonable kind of suggestion.

Another suggestion that has come from seniors in various groups has been about the extremely expensive cost of automobile insurance. Some seniors find that because of the location of accommodation—in our case, for example, those who are on geared-to-income rents at 75 Tandridge in Rexdale—the only way they can get out is by automobile. Yet car insurance is extremely expensive for them. Certainly the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations should conduct a complete study on the high cost of car rates charged to senior citizens. Many seniors contend that this age group has fewer accidents and should be considered for rebates on car insurance. A study of this might produce some interesting results and provide some basis for negotiations with the automobile insurance companies to give what would be fairer rates to seniors.

This budget is a reactionary budget. It gives more tax concessions to the resource corporations and it does nothing for the seniors and for middle-income groups. I find it is certainly a budget that in conscience I cannot support.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the all-important budget debate for this year. In so doing, I am particularly pleased to have an opportunity to speak to this particular budget. It is one that realistically looks at our financial past and gives consideration to our financial needs in the immediate future, as well as commenting on long-term considerations of a financial nature.

The bringing down of the budget each year is of course the time of financial accounting. It is a time when government must really face the moment of financial truth. It is very easy for governments to embark on ambitious programs to provide either hard or soft services to the community, and it is indeed an obligation of government to ensure these basic services are provided. There is a particularly heavy onus that rests on the government in power to ensure these objectives can be achieved in a responsible financial fashion.

We always must bear in mind it is not the government per se that makes the financial wherewithal available in order to provide these services and distribute the wealth in a meaningful way to ensure this society is equitable, fair and desirable, so citizens from anywhere would like to live in it. Indeed, those cash resources are located in areas other than government. It is axiomatic that we do have to look to the individual citizen and to the business enterprises that operate within the private sector of our society to ensure the financial wherewithal is available, in order that we, as a responsible government, can ensure basic and fundamental services are attended to to ensure the basic wellbeing of all people in our society.

The Treasurer of the province has, of course, a unique and singularly important role to play in having to match these programs in all sectors of our government as identified by the different ministries. He has to be able to relate these in a very business-like fashion to the all-important consideration of cold, hard cash and the dollar equation.

There is an amount of rhetoric forthcoming from members of this Legislature, on an ongoing and quite often repetitive basis, about the lack of services provided to the people of this province which create purported welfare ghettos and pockets where people live below the poverty line and have yet to see the light of day as far as having the basic social amenities available to them. These types of speeches continually go on.

One never hears attached to them the important responsible financial considerations that must accompany any government program brought forward to assist the less fortunate in our society, and indeed to ensure there is an orderly behaviour of all of our society, whether it be through the provision of appropriate law enforcement agencies or just responsible statute law by which people govern their activities in society on a day-to-day basis.

I think it is a fundamental part of our democratic system that there has to be a financial accounting on an annual basis and the government in power has to account to the people as to how it has not only administered the programs in the preceding year but found the financial wherewithal to ensure these programs have operated within a responsible fiscal budget.

The thing that has interested me over the years in listening to the budgets that have been brought down has been observing the reaction of the opposition parties when the budgets are presented. As we all know, the budgets speak to the successes of the preceding year, that is as to whether the government services and programs have been discharged during the preceding 12-month period within the financial allocations that were designated in the budget. But they also provide some financial prognostication as to how we can best afford to provide continuing and basic services within reasonable limitations, bearing in mind the state of the economy as a whole.

What has surprised me is why the members opposite sometimes obviously feel—by the looks on their faces—uncomfortable and perplexed and sometimes bewildered at the time of budget presentations. I look in particular to the members of the third party. They seem to be floundering about somewhat when they have the cold, hard facts of economic life presented to them. I've often wondered why this is so and why it showed up so obviously among the ranks of the members of the third party. But after reflecting on this for some time I came to realize that perhaps the reason for this is that they lack a grasp of the significance of budgeting and of having to account for dollars and having to raise taxes from people in order to present these government programs.

It's interesting that throughout the year, from one budget period to another, the third party in particular brings forth a wealth of proposed legislation, by way of private members' bills or resolutions or—

Mr. Philip: We don't make as many promises as Joe Clark.

Mr. Williams: —just through debate that would bring services like they'd never been seen before.

Mr. Philip: Have you costed Clark's proposals?

Mr. Williams: I can think of some of the bills that have come forward in recent times, and in concept one can't argue with them. But when one is not part of the government one doesn't have to be responsible for accounting financially. One never hears mention of financial accountability or the availability of the dollars to provide these marvellous programs our socialist friends bring forward.

Mr. Warner: You missed Floyd Laughren's speech.

Mr. Williams: They have no real, true concept of what the meaning is all about of attaching dollars to government programs.

Mr. Philip: Sounds like Joe Clark.

Mr. Williams: This is why they're so perplexed and bewildered.

I look behind the party as a whole to the individuals and I can understand this is probably generated by the fact that none of them has worked in the private sector. While each and every one of them undoubtedly has come from an honourable profession and occupation, I don't see one of the members sitting over there—if I'm in error, I'd like to see any stand up who can be the exception to the rule—who has ever worked in the hurly-burly of the private sector—

Mr. Warner: Stand up. Stand up.

Mr. Williams: —who has worked in the real world of trade and commerce.

Mr. Warner: There they are.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Three out of 20.

Mr. Williams: Those who have seen fit to join the party—

Mr. Warner: Half of those now in the House.

Mr. Williams: —and castigate and chastise—

Mr. Ziembra: There are more opposition members standing up than government members.

Mr. Williams: —the government when we talk about financial restraint and responsibility, are the ones who've never had the privilege or opportunity—

Mr. Ziembra: You don't know what an honest day's work is.

Mr. Williams: —in their whole lifetime ever to go out and have to sell a product or to worry about operating expenses or financial losses or having to pay their employees. They're all people who have been on government salaries and staff—

Mr. Warner: John you're absolutely right. You'd do well in selling baloney.

Mr. Williams: —or they are people who have worked with the big unions and have worked for the multinationals and all they've had to do is pick up their pay cheque at the end of the week. They haven't had to worry about where the money's coming from. They might be teachers—and that is an honourable profession—but they don't have to worry about where the buck's coming from. All they have to do is pick up their pay cheque each week for professional services truly rendered. They don't have to be concerned about—

Mr. Philip: What's your business background?

Mr. Williams: —the responsibilities and the difficulties and the business risks involved in running a business and in hiring people and having to pay them their benefits, and having to compete with other people in this—

Mr. Philip: Where's your business background?

Mr. Williams: —hurly-burly world of trade and commerce. They don't know what the word means. That's why they don't understand budgeting.

Mr. Warner: So says the lawyer.

Mr. Williams: It is because they just don't have any comprehension or real appreciation of the fact that one has to relate dollars to provision of services. I've come to understand now why—

Mr. Warner: Let's hear it for the lawyer.

Mr. Williams: —they are so perplexed and why they flounder about each time the budget comes forward. They just don't know how to handle it. They simply get up and go on with their continuing rhetoric of more social programs and we never hear mention of the dollar factor at all.

Mr. Warner: We admire your sense of humour.

Mr. Williams: Some of the bills that have come in in the past session alone would eat up the provincial budget of the past five years if they had their way. There is just no reality at all between the fact of raising a tax from the poor taxpayers and the corporations and having to provide those services. That's the difference between responsible government leadership and that from those in opposition who are so far removed from—

Mr. Philip: If the government is so responsible, how come it owes so much?

Mr. Williams: —the realities of the situation that they continue to live in an Alice-in-Wonderland world. It's reflected in the rhetoric, the response and the reaction that we get from them in this Legislature on an ongoing basis.

Mr. Lupusella: That's complete nonsense.

Mr. Williams: We've learned to live with it, but I think the people of the province get pretty sick and tired of hearing that nonsense when it can't be substantiated with responsible considerations and dollar considerations.

Mr. Warner: That's why there are 33 of us here.

Mr. Ziembra: You're almost bankrupting us the way you're running the store.

Mr. Williams: I think they would be a lot more respectable and responsible party if they started doing that. I don't see that happening in the foreseeable future. That's why they will never be the governing party of this province.

Mr. Ziembra: If you're so smart, why aren't you in cabinet?

Mr. Philip: He can't even make parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Williams: There is another consideration which comes in directly in this budget that we have before us. Not only is it talking about dollar considerations, but this budget is directed very strongly towards the private sector and the fact that there must be an initiative by this government on a continuing, co-operative basis to support the private sector that has had its difficulties in these difficult economic times. The difficulties have not been of a regional nature or a provincial nature or a national nature. They have been international in scope.

No one government alone has been able to counteract the onslaught of inflation. It's been a world phenomenon. The private sector has reeled under the impact of the negative aspects of inflation, as have the workers, because when the private sector can't function and when it can't provide its productivity to its full extent, we all suffer.

Mr. Philip: Now I know why I am not a Conservative. I would never get to sit beside anyone intelligent.

Mr. Williams: This budget clearly recognizes the need for the government to work with the private sector.

Mr. Philip: The Minister of Education can't take any more.

Mr. Lupusella: She is leaving.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I'd love to stay and listen to it because it's worthwhile listening to. Get the bananas out of your ears.

Mr. Lupusella: That's why you're leaving.

Mr. Williams: The Minister of Energy concurs.

Mr. Ziemba: It's called comic relief.

Mr. Williams: I was going to be referring to bananas later, but I'll save those for a few moments down the line. It's in this area that we must be concerned and we must be developing a positive attitude towards the private sector. Often in previous years people have considered government to be on a confrontation basis with the private sector and that we're out to try to regiment and control the private sector out of business.

Mr. Ziemba: No, only small business.

Mr. Williams: This simply is not so, not with this Conservative government in any event.

Mr. Philip: You look after big business but you shaft small business.

Mr. Williams: Those in the opposition, particularly the third party, who suggest we're giving the private sector a free ride and that it's not being taxed enough and not being dunned enough, should sit back and reflect once in a while—

Mr. Philip: Not the private sector, just the multinationals. You don't give a cent to small business.

Mr. Williams: —rather than shouting and yelling as we have seen exemplified here this afternoon.

Mr. Philip: Why don't you do something for small business for a change?

Mr. Williams: If they would just sit there, reflect and think about what's going on and about the fact that this government has perhaps enacted more legislation and has responsibly provided, where needed, reasonable controls on the private sector and in certain industries than any other government, then I think—

Mr. Ziemba: Trickle-down theories.

Mr. Williams: —they could not criticize this government for not having responded to consumer concerns and needs. The fact is that we have been able to respond in a very responsible way to ensure that all sectors of the private sector do have an opportunity to succeed—

Mr. Ziemba: You responded to Judy LaMarsh all right.

Mr. Williams: —with reasonable, and only reasonable, government intercession and control, where it was deemed absolutely necessary.

Mr. Ziemba: How about the 2.2 million Judy LaMarsh got?

Mr. Williams: It's been a stated objective of this government to withdraw from some of the areas where we have, because of given specific circumstances, moved in with legislation at a certain point of time under a certain circumstance to regulate a certain industry.

Mr. Philips: All you did was to try to ruin the trucking industry in the province.

Mr. Williams: Once the difficulty has been resolved, this government has no hesitation in backing out, if we find that an industry can indeed behave in a responsible fashion towards the consumers of this province and let it regulate itself, if necessary. We have no hesitation in recommending this.

Mr. Warner: Tell us about Inco.

Mr. Williams: The contrary is the attitude of our colleagues in the third party.

Mr. Philip: How would you like to have a few million dollars invested in the trucking industry?

Mr. Acting Speaker: Order, please. It's fine to have a few interjections—they are in order—but the member for Oriole has the floor, and running dialogues in opposition to what he is saying are not in order. If you want to make a few interjections that's all part of the game, but we can't have this continual chat. The member for Oriole may proceed.

Mr. Ashe: They don't like hearing the facts of life.

Mr. Ziemba: Try not to be so inflammatory.

Mr. Williams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for imposing some reasonable restraint on our colleagues across the way.

Mr. Ashe: The facts of life are scary.

Mr. Williams: One other attitude I have to comment on that I see coming forth from members of the third party when they are speaking about the budget, and about the big corporate enterprises and the multinationals, and big government spending too much money or not spending it in the right direction is the fact that that party will never be a creditable party as long as it continues to consider only two parts of the three-part equation.

Mr. Haggerty: Don't give away your trade secrets.

Mr. Williams: We are all fully aware of the fact that there are three major elements that contribute to the economic life and facts of life of this province. We have, of course, government itself, of which we are members. We have big business, and of course we have big unions and labour.

Mr. Haggerty: Big government too.

Mr. Williams: This province cannot move forward and flourish and become an even greater province than it is without co-operation from each of those three sectors. None of them is perfect; not one of them. We all commit our errors, we all try harder, but none of us is perfect and we all make mistakes.

Mr. Ziembra: I'm glad to hear you say it.

Mr. Williams: I alluded a few moments ago to legislation this government has felt, from time to time, the need to enact to control a particular industry in the private sector, or to give some means of regulating an industry so that there is no chaos and confusion in the marketplace. By the same token, we have no hesitation, if there is some element in the labour movement that is giving cause for concern to the public, to respond to that situation too.

When we are criticized as a government for spending too much money and bringing this economy to a point where over 40 per cent of the work force in the province is in the public sector rather than in the private sector we know we have a problem. We realize we have a responsibility to exercise restraint and control and to contain ourselves. It's a perfect example of the fact that we ourselves are getting too big for the purpose and the function we have to ensure that there are proper laws, that there is order within our society, and that we can outgrow ourselves.

We ourselves have to show reasonable restraint. If we are going to ask the private sector to show this type of restraint and control we have to go to big labour, we have to go to management, and we have to ask them as well to follow our lead in showing restraint and control in the manner in which we conduct our affairs, so that no one in our society will be prejudiced by inappropriate and irresponsible actions by any one of those three sectors.

The area where I find there is a lack of real credibility from our colleagues in the third party is the fact that they continue—

Mr. Philip: You at least recognize who the opposition is.

Mr. Williams: —to recognize only two of those three elements. They understand where their power base is. They know they have to rely on the large unions to ensure their financial support and success, and they get much of their direction from that source. For that reason, I can understand that they are very reticent—

Mr. Ashe: Bashful.

Mr. Williams: —to be critical if criticism of their benefactors is needed.

Mr. Haggerty: That marriage is going to be fractured after May 22.

Mr. Williams: Of course, by the same token they will criticize this government as being supposedly in the hip pocket of big management, which is nonsense. We are prepared to look at all three elements. We are prepared to look at our own house and clean it where necessary. We are prepared to chastise big industry where it needs to be chastised. We are prepared to enact legislation if labour unions are misbehaving.

If I might exemplify the point, it wasn't too many months ago that I introduced a bill during the private members' hour. It was Bill 169 and that bill was an amendment to the Labour Relations Act. That bill was designed to deal with a segment of the labour community which our friends in the socialist party have forgotten about. They are so enamoured and taken up with satisfying the top management within the labour union movement they forget sometimes about the rank and file.

Mr. Philip: Even the Minister of Labour voted against your bill.

Mr. Williams: I brought a bill in to deal with an area that had been neglected for so long and I feel it has been neglected by all parties. It was a bill that I felt would have given a fair shake to the rank-and-file working man who is a member of one union or another.

I felt there were areas where we could be pulling together existing legislation from other provinces and from the federal government that would bring certain security to the voting as to whether or not to have a strike within their union or whether it had to be with regard to financial accounting to the rank-and-file union members, or whether indeed the moneys raised from the union members to support the union activities should be contained as far as the amount of dollars that could go out of this country was concerned, rather than being invested in our country to ensure more Canadian jobs here. These were real, legitimate concerns I had for the rank-and-file union workers.

Our socialist friends over there had apoplexy. I have never seen them become so uptight. They were jumping up and down, they almost lost reason that day. It was unbelievable. I have never seen such a performance in all my life. They feel that their particular sector that they ignore continually is free and clear of any wrongdoing in any way that would contribute to any problems we may be experiencing in our society.

The problem in particular that I brought up in that bill had to do with the fact there wasn't sufficient accountability from the large unions, large and small, to their members. It is quite true that even our own Minister of Labour was sceptical whether we needed the type of legislation that existed federally to file detailed returns, as do corporations about their financial wellbeing and their financial activities to provide some degree of accounting to the shareholders. This may be done through filings with the Ontario Securities Commission or through the federal government on taxation matters, whatever it may be. I felt there truly was a need for this type of accounting.

I mentioned the fact of recent experiences in the United States where major swindles had taken place within the unions, which has unfortunately given the union movement there a black eye. It is a fact of life in every industry, whether it is the legal profession, the medical profession or some other occupation, that eventually there could be a bad apple in the barrel and it reflects on the whole industry or the whole profession, whatever the case may be.

I had the audacity to suggest this could even possibly happen within the labour movement. The cries of outrage were unbelievable. I have never seen such a performance. In particular my friend from Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) was just about prostrate on the floor. He couldn't believe what was being said.

Even the members of this party, I must admit, were sceptical as to whether such a thing could ever happen. It was on November 23, 1978, I spoke to that bill. I stood alone in support of it and I would have no hesitation in introducing it again and debating it again in this House, because I think it deserves much more consideration than it got that day. It was interesting that within three months of that date, a headline on February 6 in the Toronto Star read, "Mail Union Audit Hunts $150,000 In Lost Funds."

There wasn't a comment in the House about that particular incident. What brought it about? Simply this, Mr. Power who is an executive of the local involved, said: "There was strong evidence the funds had been fraudulently and systematically misappropriated."

That is the very thing I was speaking to in my bill. There could be cases where persons who wanted to take advantage of their positions could indeed, if they were of that state of mind, perpetrate a fraud and cause an event to happen that would work against the wellbeing of those members who have placed their trust in their union leaders and have given their weekly pension dues to those union leaders to administer properly and invest for them.

Mr. Ziemba: I am glad you are a strong supporter of the letter carriers' union.

Mr. Williams: They may find all of a sudden, and it's no reflection on the union per se, but even within the ranks of the union executive there may be a misguided individual who could commit this very type of thing. It's happened in the United States. I was pointing it out that day in the debate and I said this country is not completely immune from that type of situation possibly happening here. It did; it happened three months after I spoke to my bill. The union leader clearly stated it: "It appears that the funds have been fraudulently and systematically misappropriated."

It may be, even with the financial filings that I'd asked for and as existed in federal law, this fraud still would have been carried out. It's alleged this has happened, and I'm not suggesting it has been proved because it's still before the courts as far as I know and it's certainly under investigation. There was sufficient evidence at that time to arouse the concern of the union officials and acknowledge there appears to have been some misuse of union funds, $150,000 of hard-earned money of the rank-and-file members of that particular letter carriers' union. The money had been misappropriated and apparently misused.

We'll soon know the final outcome of that. I suggest to the House that is only the tip of the iceberg. Why is it the members of this House are not prepared to do what they can do to further ensure the security and wellbeing of the rank-and-file workers in the union movement throughout the length and breadth of this province?

I'm suggesting that type of legislation is entirely realistic and would assist them and accommodate them and provide that measure of security that heretofore they haven't had. They may think they have it, but they don't. I think it's regrettable this situation came up, but it simply went to prove my case. I felt I had to refer to it today to show this bill was not unreasonable and was not irresponsible, as some of our friends suggested that day in fits of hysterical rhetoric.

Mr. Ziemba: You would ask for public disclosure of union funds but not corporate funds.

Mr. Warner: You should be ashamed.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, as I say, I had no regrets about introducing the legislation, and I hope in due course similar legislation will be given consideration by this House.

It brings me back to my main point that members of the third party take this type of attitude towards budgets where they don't seem to grasp the realities of the financial needs and realities of raising taxes from the community. As long as they continue to ignore one sector of the triumvirate that really governs the wellbeing of the provincial economy, then I don't think they can be considered as creditable.

They can come forward with all the social programs they want, but without putting a price tag to it they're continuing to misrepresent the simplicity of implementing programs, many of which they speak to but which we have, in the past, talked about and have openly wanted to do ourselves but have said, quite frankly, there's no way we can afford to do them at this time. One example has been universal dental care. That's a program this government has had under consideration for a number of years and the Premier (Mr. Davis) himself has said it will come in the full passage of time, the sooner the better, but it will take time to bring forward such a program.

Mr. Ziemba: Get one started.

Mr. Williams: It is not one that can be purchased overnight and that the people of this province or this government can afford, but with these people it's a "put it in tomorrow" type of attitude. It's just unrealistic.

Mr. Warner: You wouldn't even start with dental care for children.

Mr. Williams: For these reasons I can better appreciate the mentality of the members in the third party.

Mr. Warner: Take a little visit to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Williams: What really concerns me at times is that even three of their more responsible members sometimes get involved in dialogue and rhetoric and get caught up in their social program.

Mr. Ashe: Who are they?

Mr. Williams: They get encouragement, of course, because all of their supporters believe in that socialist philosophy that you can buy all of these services with air; that everything will operate well and that you can run—

Mr. Ziemba: Just the money you give Judy LaMarsh.

Mr. Williams:—the automobiles on air and you can heat homes and provide the energy needed to turn the wheels of industry on air. These are the kinds of airy-fairy approaches that just don't stand up under careful analysis and consideration and the public understands and appreciates that. You can fool some of the people some of the time, as they say, but you can't fool all of the people all of the time.

So in a way I feel sorry for the third party when they take such an extreme position towards these budgets and in their attitude towards the private sector. That's the hand that feeds them and they can't put all their eggs in one basket, as the Hydro critic from the official opposition has been saying about the Hydro program over the past few days.

Having looked at this budget, there are three areas that I would really like to zero in on. One I would like to speak about very briefly brings me back to the business of developing a positive attitude within the private sector and the need for government to be responsive to the private sector. What has been of great concern to me, even earlier today in the House session during the question period, is an attitude that I understand coming from the third party, but now the official opposition is starting to get on this bandwagon of attacking the multinationals; of crying wolf about investment by foreigners in this country; that it's not good for the well being of the province; that we can go it on our own and let's get the big giants off our back and, as far as Inco is concerned, let's just completely take over.

Mr. Warner: The sooner, the better.

Mr. Williams: This is the kind of attitude that doesn't foster confidence and wellbeing within the private sector, although it is great stuff for home consumption. I have occasion to go to the States from time to time to talk to businessmen, and while that home-consumption stuff is great and they love reading about it in the press, it goes beyond our borders. People who are looking objectively at this province read some of the rhetoric and the sabre-rattling and the flag-waving that goes on and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, in talking to some of the people, I find their response is, who needs that kind of aggravation and who needs that kind of hassle? We have got lots of opportunity—I am speaking about the bankers and the business people within the—

Mr. Ziemba: Who needs them?

Mr. Williams: That's the type of attitude I have been talking about for the past half hour, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ziemba: They don't do any work.

Mr. Williams: That's a classic response that you will get from our socialist friends. Who needs them?

Mr. Ziemba: They just live off working people. You are talking about the parasites—the parasitical element.

Mr. Williams: This is a real concern, particularly because the official opposition seems to be pushing this at the moment. They are doing it a little more carefully, but nevertheless they are questioning foreign investment—whether or not it is in our best interests. These foreign investors don't need us; we do need them. I think it is important that we regulate them in a responsible way when they come in, to ensure their investments are going to benefit the country.

Mr. Ziemba: Give him a job at the US embassy.

Mr. Williams: We need industry in here.

Mr. Ziemba: Tell us about how you control Inco.

Mr. Williams: There is the simplistic approach that is being taken by our socialist friends; I was reading it in one of the federal campaign brochures that came around—"Canadian ownership means Canadian jobs."

Mr. Ziemba: Right.

Mr. Williams: Everything implied in it is that if the industries have not been financed or have not been established here by foreign enterprise, somehow we will be better off. It implies that if they did bring investment here, they should go home and leave it to us to run all these operations.

Mr. Ziemba: That is what the Canadian Federation of Independent Business says too. That is what Mr. Bulloch says. Are you saying that Bulloch doesn't know what he is talking about, John?

Mr. Williams: That is almost an irresponsible attitude to take.

These business people get an ongoing responsible report on all activity that is going on, not only within their own country. I am speaking of the United States in particular, but this happens in Japan and in Germany and with the other major investors in our country. They keep a very close eye on what is happening. They know Ontario is the industrial centre of Canada and they know that as Ontario goes, so goes the trade and commerce of this country in large measure. We have a very important responsibility to encourage these people within reasonable guidelines. We should attract, not deter, those who might be interested in coming here.

We are 22-odd million people strong in a country that is the second largest in the world, I guess, geographically. To the south of us we have a country that has 10 times the number of people and resources. They have had confidence in this country; they have seen the potential benefits here; the wealth they can earn for their shareholders, as far as the private companies are concerned; and also as far as building and staying in Canada and providing jobs to the local people.

I haven't heard anyone here do a count on how many companies here are truly Canadian and what percentage of the labour force they employ as compared to foreign corporations. I am not restricting it to the United States because that country is always the whipping boy when we turn to the multinationals. They seem to be considered the lowest on the totem pole and they are always good for use as a whipping boy. Yet it has been through American ingenuity and know-how that this country has come in large measure to appreciate the standards of living that we enjoy today.

Mr. Ziemba: Why don't you run for office in the United States, John?

Mr. Williams: It is through their technology and know-how that we have been able to capitalize on it and to learn from it and to develop our own strategies and technological know-how. Were it not for our neighbours to the south, we wouldn't be enjoying these standards today. Yet I hear in the House today, and in days gone by, this continuing attack on the multinationals and how they are down-grading our society and locking us in—

Mr. Ziemba: Not paying their taxes.

Mr. Williams: —and leaving us dangling without people being gainfully employed and so forth.

There are ways and means of regulating and controlling these industries through company law legislation and through other forms of legislation. Our legislation lets them come and be good corporate citizens, as the vast majority of them already are. But it's wrong to scare off foreign investment and to let people know we can go it on our own and to say, "We don't need your type of investment. Somehow you are going to do harm to us. While you might benefit from your investment in Canada, you are going to hurt us." That type of attitude just doesn't accord with responsible consideration.

To take it to the extreme, not only has it affected the multinationals and the foreign investors and the foreign companies, but our own domestic companies are finally starting to realize that yes, they have had some of this hassle here and some of the confrontation and some of the anti-private-sector attitude, to the point where they have decided: "Look, maybe we are not welcome in our own house; maybe we should go elsewhere." In fact they have. They have not gone away mad, they have just gone away.

Some of the largest corporations that are in the field and have the highest labour content, namely the development and building industry, are not here any more, they are down in the United States building. They have never had it so good. They have gone away because of frustrations, whether it be because of existing legislation—I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, quite frankly I think the land speculation tax did a great deal of harm in this province. The repeal of it by this government could not have come fast enough. I appreciate that it had to be done at the time under the given circumstances, but I do not think we should have withdrawn it faster than we did. It had a tremendous negative impact on those who were considering investing or setting up shop in this country.

There is no question the rent control legislation, while we felt it had to be done and it has benefits to the people who cannot afford their own housing and have to have rental accommodation, it too has had some negative impact, as I guess was verified by the Ontario Economic Council, which felt that rent controls should go because they have completely dried up the rental accommodation building sector.

I am not sure that we have moved in that direction, but I think the new legislation that is coming forward is going to provide a much more suitable climate that will continue to protect the concerns and needs of the tenants while perhaps providing a greater degree of latitude than has existed under the present legislation—if the new legislation ever comes forward out of committee.

It is somewhat discouraging to see that our own corporations and companies, not only those in the land development sector but in other areas as well, have seen fit to go abroad to really prosper and do well; not only earn reasonable returns for their shareholders but to grow in every sense of the word.

I have spoken to some of the businessmen down in the United States and they are just befuddled. They cannot understand how so many Canadian companies have come down there and have done so well and are in fact taking leadership in the marketplace down there. I will be speaking to that part of the activity of companies that have gone down there in the land development field later in my budget remarks, but it is a genuine concern.

I think we have to be a little more careful in the comments we make in this House about foreign investment and foreign capital. I have no hesitation in agreeing with members that there must be a mechanism or a vehicle for ensuring that those who do come to our country and have a genuine feeling of support for our country come in a way and fashion that will be beneficial to our economy as a whole, and to all of our citizens, and that it will ensure job opportunities and will contribute in a very significant way to our economy.

As I said a few moments ago, some of these remarks that are made are very dramatic and they are very sensationalistic and they get the headlines in the local papers. It is great for home consumption, but it is hurting our image abroad, it really is. I think we have to be a little more careful. There is lots of room for constructive criticism on ways and means of improving the system, but to simply turn around and in effect say to those foreign business people who are looking at us, "Go away"; or, "If you are coming here we are going to control you so tightly that before you get through the front door the conditions of coming here are so onerous why bother with it at all?" That's the type of attitude I don't think we want to see projected.

If I picked up a copy of Hansard for one day when the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziemba) was speaking and sent it to the United States it would probably turn away 10 or 20 industries that are considering coming into the province because of the rhetoric and extreme views and attitudes expressed in that official document of this House.

While we are going through these difficult economic times, and I think our budget has been designed to recognize this and has been designed to assist the private sector, I would hope with the support of the responsible members within the opposition ranks—and I look to the official opposition party for that type of support—we can assist the private sector to come through these difficult times. There are better economic days ahead that have nothing to do with the activities of this one government or the federal government, but that will bring the world out of its present economic woes.

Those are some of the concerns I have with regard to this government supporting the private sector in the fashion outlined in the budget. It is a realistic and responsible approach, and one I know has been applauded by the private sector everywhere.

There is another important area I would like to get into. It is an issue members from the opposition have been speaking to during the budget debate, and I think it deserves discussion and debate. It is the one that deals with Ontario Hydro and the whole matter of energy for the people of Ontario. It has to do with the nuclear problem and the safety component; it has to do with our long-range forecasts and the responsibility of this government as a matter of policy to support the initiatives of Ontario Hydro.

In the budget debate, as in the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, I think Ontario Hydro from time to time has perhaps been used as a whipping boy and has also been subjected to heated rhetoric and emotional charges as to a willingness or otherwise to be totally accountable to this government.

Mr. Warner: They're out of control.

Mr. Williams: Because of this, I think it is important another perspective be brought to that part of the debate. Members from both opposition parties have seen fit to speak to it.

One of the things that really concerns me about the debate occurred in very recent days. It has to do with the image being created in the public's mind because of some of the statements or misstatements made, either in committee or in this Legislature, with or without intent, with regard to the willingness of Ontario Hydro to be accountable to this government, and through this government to the people of Ontario.

I will quote from Hansard of a day or two ago to make my point, and from there I would like to elaborate.

It was interesting that the member of the Legislature whose remarks in the Legislature I'm going to quote had in effect to be brought into line by a member of his own party, because indeed he was, I suggest, giving an inaccurate impression of Ontario Hydro's willingness to co-operate with this government, and with the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs in particular.

I'm going to quote from Hansard, the report of the afternoon sitting on Tuesday, May 1. I would like to read this comment into Hansard and proceed from there. The leader of the third party asked this question of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld):

"How can the minister expect the public to make informed judgements about nuclear energy, a very serious problem now in the province of Ontario, when Hydro has been so reticent about providing the public with both accurate and full information related to nuclear safety?"

He goes on to add: "In the spirit of freedom of information, will the Minister of Energy direct Ontario Hydro to make a full revelation of all material related to nuclear plant safety in the province of Ontario, without constantly having the information dragged out of them?"

That's the type of attitude that has been engendered by that type of statement. I think it conveys to the public of Ontario a suggestion that somehow Ontario Hydro and its officials are being dragged screaming and kicking before the select committee—

Mr. Ziembra: Aren't they?

Mr. Williams: —to testify under oath, and that they have been holding back on the operation of Ontario Hydro—

Mr. Warner: You missed the speech of the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor).

Mr. Williams: —and that it's been a cloak-and-dagger affair that the public of Ontario has been unaware of for all these many years.

It was interesting that following that statement the chairman of the select committee on Hydro affairs felt compelled on May 3, two days later, to issue a press release to the select committee. I'm going to read that press release into the record because obviously that type of statement was a matter of great concern to the chairman of the select committee. That wasn't the only one, but I think it dramatizes the situation, because that type of question was used for dramatic effect and for that very purpose.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just in case it's a long press release, I wonder if the member wants to continue or adjourn the debate now.

Mr. Williams: I think it will take a minute or two to read it into the record. Perhaps I could get it on the record and then I'll adjourn the debate—it will take about a minute and a half—so that the two statements are together in the one copy of Hansard. Then I'll continue on Monday.

The chairman issued the following statement: "If public concerns regarding the generating of nuclear power in Ontario are to be dealt with effectively, there must be the fullest possible disclosure of documents relating to it. Otherwise, the suspicion that legitimate public information has been withheld will continue.

"There is a widespread lack of information as to what this committee decided last Friday in this connection. For the benefit of the public and the media, if not the committee members, let me emphasize what was decided.

"By unanimous vote of the committee, it was decided that we will seek, for our consideration, each and every document relating to nuclear safety. Hydro will indicate to us which of those documents they feel should not be released to the public, but the committee itself will make the decision as to which, if any documents, are not to be released.

"The mechanism for reaching this decision was also decided by unanimous vote of the committee. The documents will be considered, in the first instance by our steering committee. If there is a unanimous agreement in the steering committee that a document should or should not be released to the public, that decision on behalf of the committee will stand.

"If, however, there is not unanimous agreement in the steering committee, then that document or documents will come to the committee as a whole, meeting in camera, for a decision.

"For those who still harbour a suspicion that the committee will not get all relevant documents, may I remind you that in all the committee hearings so far Hydro has provided the committee with every document and all information which we have sought. I am confident that that full disclosure will continue in the future, and as chairman of the committee it will be my intention and obligation to see that it is so."

Mr. Warner: It's a good thing we raised it.

On motion by Mr. Williams, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

WHITE PAPER ON PLANNING

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I would like to bring the House up to date with regard to the white paper on the Planning Act and the draft legislation thereto. I am pleased to announce that we anticipate having the white paper in the hands of members around the end of this month. In preparation for release to members and to municipal officials, I am announcing today that we will be holding regional meetings in eight locations across Ontario to outline the white paper and the draft legislation.

In order to undertake a meaningful dialogue with municipalities, the regional meetings in southern Ontario will be aimed at the heads of councils and certain designated officials. In the three northern meetings, additional groups will be involved. Right after regional meetings we will start a series of smaller seminars or meetings at which the details of the white paper and its implications will be outlined to municipal and planning board staff, committees of adjustment, land division committees and many others.

The eight regional meetings will be held in Ottawa on June 8; Sault Ste. Marie on June 12; Dryden on June 14; Thunder Bay on June 15; Toronto on June 19; Kingston on June 21; London on June 26 and Barrie on June 28. Details on the meeting sites will be sent to all members' offices in the very near future. In selecting these committees for the first level of regional meetings, we attempted to secure locations that would be the most convenient to all concerned.

The white paper, which will contain the government's position on a new planning act, is important. It will affect every property owner in the province, from the farmer who wants to sever a portion of his farm for a son or daughter to the urban dweller who seeks security in the way his neighbourhood will be protected and to the large developers developing in major cities. That is why we have taken so much care in finalizing the white paper and why we intend to undertake a very extensive distribution and education process in regard to developing the new Planning Act.

PESTICIDES LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The Ontario government is actively deregulating and simplifying the structures and functions of government with the objective of improving the delivery of service to the public and to make it easier for the individual to do business with this government and the civil service.

In accordance with this customer service program, I would like to introduce the Pesticides Amendment Act for first reading. The purpose of this bill is to eliminate the Pesticides Appeal Board and to incorporate its responsibilities with those of the Environmental Appeal Board. It is my intention to retain the specialized abilities and expertise of the members of the Pesticides Appeal Board by appointing them as members of the Environmental Appeal Board.

Under this amendment the Environmental Appeal Board will hear appeals from decisions of the director under the Pesticides Act which normally relate to matters of licences or permits concerning pesticides. The procedures for these appeals will remain unchanged at least for a period of time. At some future date, these procedures may be amended to parallel other appeals to the Environmental Appeal Board.

In conclusion, I would like to recognize the substantial contributions in time and effort which the members of these two boards have made in the interests of environmental protection in Ontario.

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of clarification, last week in response to questions, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) stated that the study by Dr. Kenneth Taylor about the risks of X-rays had been funded by the ministry. He said that study was prepared on a grant from the Ministry of Health to look at the situation. The next day the Premier (Mr. Davis) said: ". . . it was the Ministry of Health that initiated a great deal of this discussion and initiated the report."

We have been in touch with the Toronto General Hospital Foundation, which funded Dr. Taylor's report published in the Canadian Association of Radiology journal in March of this year, and they have told us explicitly there was no provincial government funding at all for that particular report. I stand to correct the record, because the government is incorrectly claiming they had a part in bringing this matter to public attention.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order Mr. Speaker: What is the point of clarification and would you examine that and advise us? I know from time to time a private member wants to make a speech on a matter such as this and if we can do it on a point of clarification perhaps it ought to be uniformly available.

Mr. Speaker: I don't think there's any provision in our standing orders for anything other than a point of privilege or a point of order. However, there are precedents for a member getting up and simply correcting the record. I leave it open to all the honourable members as to what kind of point they would like to call it, but there is no such thing as a point of clarification per se.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM

Mr. S. Smith: I was going to ask a question of the Minister of Health. Is he going to be here later? I'll ask a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation.

Could the minister tell us some facts with regard to the Royal Ontario Museum? Can the minister tell us whether when he or his predecessor—I'm not sure which it was—approved the money for the expansion of the museum and the courtyard area, he knew it was the intention of the museum people to close the Royal Ontario Museum for a period of a year or more? Did he know when the money was approved for the museum expansion that was planned as part of the expansion process?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as I guess most members of this Legislature know, if they read the press at all, there have been many very conflicting reports and allegations made by a number of people from the Royal Ontario Museum, including the question as to whether or not and for how long, if at all, the museum should be opened or closed. Because of this rather confusing range of reports coming from the Royal Ontario Museum, I've had a number of meetings and discussions with the chairman and with the director of the museum.

I have now asked the director and the chairman of the board, who is responsible for the day by day management of the Royal Ontario Museum, to provide us with a very detailed report on the expansion plans of the museum, including whether it will close or not and for how long it will close, and when, and so on. Until such time as I have received that kind of report from the chairman of the board, who is responsible for the management of the museum as I have said, I'm not prepared to draw any conclusions or make any further report to this House. I think it would be premature. It would be conjecturing.

Frankly, I'm aware of the situation, I'm aware of the conflict of reports, but until such time as we've got the information we really need and what's happening can be demonstrated exactly, I don't wish to report further.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the question was: Did the minister know it was intended to close the museum? I take it from his rambling answer, and since he's waiting for reports, he did not know it was the intention to close the museum for a period of a year or more during the renovation.

May I ask by way of supplementary then, whether the minister approves of the idea the museum should be closed? Does he not recognize the importance of that institution from the point of view of tourism and from the point of view of certain educational programs? Does it make sense to the minister that renovations should go ahead in a manner that would in fact, close the entire museum for a year or more?

Given the view of the curators that the museum may not even reopen, depending on the circumstances, will in fact, the minister order the audit which has been requested by those somewhat anonymous people?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As the Leader of the Opposition has indicated, the letter from the curators was an anonymous letter, and obviously I cannot respond to an anonymous letter.

Mr. S. Smith: You would only be replying in kind if you did.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I would only reiterate that until such time as we have received a report from the management that is responsible, which is the appointed board of directors of the museum, I am not prepared to say here what course of events will take place.

To reply explicitly to the honourable member's earlier question, we did not know; we had not been advised that the museum would be closing down for a year or a year and a half until we read these conflicting reports in the press. Frankly, until such time as we have had the report from the management, we will not be able to answer.

Mr. Grande: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister not realize that it is his ministry's responsibility to ensure that, on a yearly basis, that information is gathered and comes to the ministry from the museum, or from any other cultural institution that is publicly supported?

Does he not also realize that it is a month after the first revelations in the social development committee, which showed that the administration clearly gave misleading financial information to the committee, and it is about time the air was cleared and he began to take action to save the museum?

Furthermore, does the minister have any knowledge of the impending meeting at the museum on Thursday, May 17, at which the staff of the museum is going to call for a no-confidence vote in the administration of the museum? Is it not clear to the minister that he should act now?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, there is an implicit error in that question, in that it assumes we have not acted until now. Indeed, we have acted, and we have acted on many different occasions. But I go back to the point that, until such time as the board of directors of that museum is prepared to report to us, it would be premature and precipitate for us here to draw any conclusions or to make any judgement on it. It will come in due course.

I would hope that the honourable members opposite would exercise a little patience. After all, the fiscal year of the Royal Ontario Museum, unlike the fiscal year of this government, begins July 1. I have a feeling that if the honourable members opposite would exercise a little patience and be a little less political about this, perhaps all of us could help the Royal Ontario Museum. We are all committed to maintaining this as one of our great institutions.

Mr. O'Neil: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since the province has decided to give approximately $12.75 million as an outright expansion grant and will be providing another $10 million in Wintario funds, as well as likely being required to give further funds, does the minister not feel that he should have had a firmer grasp upon what was going on over there, especially with all the appointments that his government has made to that board? The minister should not be waiting for an answer. He should be prepared to give us, today, the reasons why they are in the predicament that they find themselves in.

Mr. S. Smith: He's going to give them more than $20 million, and he didn't even know they were going to close.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I realize there may be some members opposite who would immediately disregard the duly appointed and elected board of directors, which is responsible for the operation of that museum.

Mr. Sweeney: Who appointed them?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I certainly will not make any judgement as to the competence of that board until the directors have been given the time and the opportunity to provide us with the data and the facts we need. Anything before that is premature.

Mr. Sweeney: You don't know any more about the museum than you did about Hydro.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: As soon as the copies arrive, I will have a statement to make—and I will ask the House at that time to revert to statements—on the question of X-ray procedures.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

POLIO

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In addition, if I may, I would like to—I don't have copies of this because the information has just come to me this morning—inform the House we have two suspected cases of polio which have not, at this point, been lab confirmed. I emphasize that, they have not been lab confirmed. They have been admitted to Victoria Hospital in London. I am informed by staff they are clinical cases and confirmation is unlikely for several days.

Mr. Speaker, the two persons in question are related, they are unmarried and they are members of the Amish community in Middlesex county. They have not been immunized and they have not, I am told, been in contact with members of the Amish community in Pennsylvania, where last week we had word two cases had been confirmed.

The associate medical officer of health for Middlesex is following up on this and checking all of the contacts of these individuals who, as I say, are related and have not previously been immunized.

I have asked for an immediate update on vaccine supplies which my staff assure me are, in fact, quite adequate. Once I have those figures I will report those to the Legislature and, as well, I will keep the Legislature and the public informed on this matter.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, my second question was on the subject of X-ray problems and radiation, and I will await the statement by the minister.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Minister of Health, not about X-rays, but arising out of the situation at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

In view of the very serious concerns that have been expressed by the medical staff of the Queen Street Mental Health Centre regarding the lack of planning and overcrowding as a result of the minister's decision to close Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital; and in the light of the testimony over the course of the past few weeks that Lakeshore is not a firetrap; that its outpatient programs are threatened by the closing and the mental health services in Lakeshore's catchment area will not be able to cope with the closing; will the minister now admit publicly that he made a mistake in ordering the closing of Lakeshore? Will the minister now undertake to rescind the order to close Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital and to maintain its services until there is a conclusive study done on how Lakeshore should be rebuilt?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, I think the honourable member would be wise to wait until the head of the medical advisory committee has appeared at the standing committee this afternoon. My staff met with the medical advisory committee this morning and discussed their concerns, as outlined in that letter.

As I understand the report of that meeting, I think the members of the medical advisory committee were not in fact saying, "Don't close Lakeshore," but expressing concerns, valid concerns, about the patients who are, after all, their first and our first priority. I will be at the social development committee this afternoon and I suggest we wait until the head of the MAC has had a chance to clarify their concerns, and their approach. Then I will discuss it with the social development committee.

I think, with respect, the member is being rather selective in the testimony to which he is referring, because if he looks at the progress of the testimony over the last three weeks, it has in fact been, and I suppose the evaluation would have to be it is equivocal. There have been strong arguments advanced on both sides.

Mr. Lawlor: You don't read the same testimony.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Oh, no. Listen, I have followed—

Mr. Cassidy: You could have put your experts up.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Well, that may, as much as anything, be a function of how many people were invited. The arguments have been advanced strongly on both sides of the question and this is a matter of—

Mr. Cassidy: You could have offered the studies made.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —serious importance, and we certainly attach serious importance to it. I will be appearing at the social development committee this afternoon, following the discussion with—

Mr. Warner: Admit you made a mistake.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —the head of the MAC. I may say, too, I have asked the administrator and the medical director of Queen Street to stand by at the committee this afternoon to answer any questions because, of course, the members will recall their testimony of a few weeks ago.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the minister's attention the fact the administrator of the Queen Street Mental Health Centre testified that neither at Whitby, where he had previously been administrator, nor at Queen Street, was he ever consulted about the difficulties that would be created with the closing of the Lakeshore Hospital.

I would also bring to the minister's attention, as well, the fact the McKinsey report sat on his desk for a year—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: —and was then rejected.

Mr. Speaker: Are you asking if the minister is aware?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, what I want to ask the minister to reply to is this: When the medical staff of Queen Street Medical Health Centre states it is impossible to state that the closure of Lakeshore is wise—

Mr. Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Cassidy: —how can the minister make that reply, when the medical staff raises very serious long-term questions, both about overcrowding and about the quality of care at Queen Street, if this closure goes through?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, I think this is the sort of thing which should be done at the committee because even if one looks at the press report of that letter in this morning's paper, by the time one gets from the first page to the second, one is getting a different slant on the meaning of the letter.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister showed a little flexibility on the first page and became obtuse on the second.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This is one case where it pays to read the whole thing. The committee will benefit greatly from having before it this afternoon the chairman of the MAC. The administrator of Queen Street, as I said, will be standing by and prepared to answer questions. These two gentlemen are ultimately responsible for that facility, in the final analysis. When the two latter gentlemen appeared, it was made clear that of course there would be some problems in the transition stages, but that will be explored this afternoon.

Mr. Cassidy: You have imposed a shotgun marriage and mental health patients will suffer.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It has had a very broad consideration at the committee. They have heard the entire range of opinions from one pole to the other and everything in between. I will be pleased to take part in that discussion this afternoon with the committee, after they have had a chance to talk to the author of that particular letter and to clarify for themselves exactly what the position of the MAC is.

Mr. Lawlor: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I suppose the only supplementary is, is the minister aware? I could stop there but I won't. That was a pretty trenchant and damning statement. If I may just refer to the newspaper article, the letter says: "The Health ministry failed to make proper plans—"

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of order: All of this is going to be considered at the social development committee this afternoon. It is going to be considered by the members over the next day or two as they consider motions and the preparation of a report.

Mr. Duszta: Why can't we talk about it now?

Mr. Warner: The minister does not want to answer the question. He is avoiding the issue.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am quite prepared to discuss it this afternoon with the honourable member who is a member or a substitute member of the social development committee. Is that not really the forum in which to consider this and the preparation of a report?

Mr. Lawlor: The minister, being a politician like the rest of us, knows that the press is not at the meetings in great abundance. This is our opportunity to—

Mr. S. Smith: To play to the gallery?

Mr. Breithaupt: Maybe they will show up today.

Mr. Speaker: Place a question.

Mr. Lawlor: I was referring to the total lack of planning. The rub is with respect to unilateral closing. The letter says that is part of the problem. The minister has made no provision for ensuring that patients get proper treatment at a new location. He loads the hospital beds. All he does is knock down.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lawlor: He does not know anything about treatment.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister agree?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No.

Mr. Lawlor: Is the minister aware of that and of meeting the future needs of the population in the Lakeshore area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Your syntax is not what it used to be.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am aware now of the member's interpretation of that newspaper article. Again, I suggest that in the interests of meaningful discussion about a very serious matter we carry on this discussion at the social development committee this afternoon. After the committee has had the opportunity to question the author and to talk some more with the administrator and the medical director, who are ultimately responsible for the Queen Street facility, then we can discuss how we are going to go about maintaining existing outpatient programs and how we propose to expand to more outpatient programs. All of these things will be considered this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Culture and Recreation has the answer to a question asked previously.

HOCKEY VIOLENCE

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, in response to a question raised in this House on May 7 by the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), dealing with hockey violence and the initiatives taken by my ministry and the Ontario Hockey Council to ascertain the attitudes and opinions on this subject by the parents of Ontario amateur hockey players,

I would like to say I am pleased this question was raised. I have been planning to make an interim report to the House and welcome this opportunity.

The honourable member raised a number of issues to which I would like to respond. First, he stated that Dr. John Elliott, assistant professor of sociology at Laurentian University, had questioned the need to send questionnaires dealing with hockey violence to some 100,000 parents of hockey players. He felt that such an extensive survey might well prove to be a wasteful effort and that a more random limited survey would prove to be as effective.

Of course, we are aware that a fairly accurate picture of parental concerns could be obtained through such a random sampling of something like 2,500 families. However, I point out the grave concerns which have been expressed in this House regarding hockey violence, and establishing direct contact with some 100,000 concerned parents is reflective of our collective concern for our young people. It is far more than a mere exercise in survey research.

Dr. Elliott, in his letter to the honourable member, is quite right when he notes that normally such questionnaires enjoy only a 15 or 20 per cent response and indeed in some surveys as little as a five to seven per cent response. I am pleased to report that this has not been our experience with this survey. Thus far, the response has proven that our decision to put our questions to all parents concerned has met with the wholehearted support and co-operation of most of those parents. In all, 78,754 questionnaires were sent. To date, we have had an outstanding response of more than 50 per cent, with close to 40,000 replies received, and they are still coming in.

Moreover, another most significant measure of the degree of interest and the validity of this approach to the inquiry is that 98 per cent of those responding have utilized the space set aside in the questionnaire for their personal comments.

The honourable member opposite also questioned why only three of the 23 questions contained in our questionnaire related directly to hockey violence. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, this does not in any way reflect a low priority of concern regarding this subject. On the contrary, the researchers felt, and quite correctly so, that the parents' views on violence can also be assessed by posing indirect questions regarding their attitudes to the game itself—is it for fun or competition?—plus their views on officiating and on the attitudes of parents concerned.

As noted by the member for Cambridge, some parents have received more than one questionnaire. This is most understandable; the questionnaires were sent to the home addresses of each individual player involved. This was the most simple and inexpensive method of ensuring that all parents were contacted. In instances where there were several players in one family, then indeed more than one questionnaire would have been received. However, in the close to 40,000 responses received to date this does not seem to have posed a problem. The parents obviously recognized the need to return only one questionnaire.

The research part of this exercise is under the capable direction of Dr. Barry McPherson, acting dean of the University of Waterloo. The returns still have to be key-punched, verified, tabulated and analysed under his direction. Upon the completion of this phase of our exercise in late June, the Ontario Hockey Council will be sponsoring a series of open forums throughout Ontario to discuss the issues raised by parents through the questionnaires and to invite further participation and debate on ensuing recommendations.

The Ontario Hockey Council hopes that at least some of the recommendations forthcoming from these public forums could be implemented as early as the next playing season.

Obviously it is too early to even conjecture on what will be the emerging concerns and issues raised by the parents. However, the tremendous response by parents so far indicates to an encouraging degree their interest. I feel we will be assembling for the first time ever the collective views of the parents and not just those of a random sample group. This information will, I am sure, prove to be of enormous value to the Ontario Hockey Council and the other hockey governing bodies as they look not only to violence in the game, but also at the many other closely related issues, and recommend such changes as may be indicated.

Mr. M. Davidson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could explain a couple of discrepancies between his original statement and his answer to the questions. His original statement, I believe, talked in terms of 100,000 questionnaires. Today's statement refers to 100,000 parents of hockey players. They are two totally different things. I thought I heard correctly—

Mr. Speaker: What's the question?

Mr. M. Davidson: The question is, does the minister realize that there are discrepancies in the original statement that he has made and in his answers today? In his answer to the question he raised the point that some 70,000 questionnaires had been distributed. Can he possibly explain to me how it is cheaper to send four or five questionnaires to one home, and how he can tabulate and get a correct answer from a questionnaire that has four or five answers coming out of one household?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, if there is one reply from one family, if that family has two, three or four children playing hockey—

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister has kicked that around all winter. It's about time he has had an answer.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —we ascertain the views of that one set of parents. They will have the same attitudes about one of their children playing hockey as about four of them.

I think it was the member for Cambridge who seemed to be confused by the fact that they had received four questionnaires and didn't know what to do with them. As indicated in the report here, that apparently has not been the problem with the 40,000 or 48,000 others who have sent replies. They knew what to do with it.

Mr. M. Davidson: They didn't know where they came from.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Let's get on with some important business.

Mr. S. Smith: That's surely not a matter of urgent importance?

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Bolan: I have a question of the Premier. Is the government considering flood relief to the tourist operators and townships in the non-designated flood areas of Lake Nipissing, particularly in the Nipissing area, as well as in the Parry Sound area, the South Bay area, which is in the area of the honourable member behind him, which has been hard hit by these flood waters? I'm thinking particularly of funds for repairs to roads leading to the places of business, as well as interest-free loans to tourist operators who have suffered great losses in these areas.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of visiting with the deputy mayor of the city of North Bay some few days ago when I was visiting Field and other points. I was looking for the member to greet me at the airport, as a matter of fact, to take me into North Bay. I did visit, from approximately 200 feet, the shoreline, but of course at that point the water levels of Nipissing had not reached the levels which they are presently at.

The government is quite prepared to consider this, and upon application from the municipalities we will do an evaluation. I would suspect that the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) already has some information, so if the member would like to relay further information please do so. Of course, the member for the great district of Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck), who is his next-door neighbour, always keeps a constant eye on those issues that relate to his constituents, and the member opposite just happens to be the beneficiary of the Minister of Revenue's concern about the total community in that area and I'm sure that he will, as well, convey to us any concerns.

Mr. Bolan: Supplementary: Does this statement apply to the unorganized townships in these areas as well? The Premier has indicated that he is waiting to hear from the townships, or it will be considered if an application is made by the townships. Does it apply to an unorganized township as well?

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the honourable member had been keeping close touch on what was happening in the area just to the northeast of him, he would recall that the government made a decision that would affect the municipality of Field and other areas around Field that happen to be parts of unorganized townships.

Mr. Bolan: Northwest, not northeast.

Hon. Mr. Davis: So I think the member already knows the answer to the question. We have never been reluctant. The question of organization or not organized has not been a relevant issue. The relevant issue is whether there is a genuine need.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

Mr. Duksza: I have a question of the Minister of the Environment relating to the control order which Anchor Cap and Closure Corporation of Canada saw fit to ignore. Since the ministry was aware, at least as early as December 1976 according to its own hazardous substances handbook, of the health hazards of exposure to xylene emissions, why has the ministry blithely continued to debate technical problems with the owners of Anchor Cap and Closure when Anchor was in clear violation of a control order issued by the ministry, a control order which Anchor simply ignored?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I answered almost an identical question in the House either Tuesday or Thursday of last week.

Mr. Wildman: No, you didn't.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm prepared to repeat that as best I can, or perhaps the member might refresh his memory by checking that response and ask the question on another occasion.

Mr. McClellan: Just answer the question.

Mr. Warner: You can't wiggle out of it.

Mr. Duksza: It is not an identical question. The member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) asked a question about the control order and why the ministry had not dealt with it; I'm asking very specifically about the health hazards of xylene emissions, which is a different question. I have a supplementary which may explain to the minister in much more detail than he was aware the health hazards of xylene.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if you put the supplementary now he could deal with both of them at once.

Mr. Duksza: Is the minister aware that allowable levels of xylene exposure in some other jurisdictions are much lower than those allowed in Ontario? In view of the fact that residents near the plant in question have reported adverse health effects; and that the last time the Ministry of the Environment bothered to sample the air around the plant, two years ago, it was emitting xylene in concentration in excess of the allowable standard in Ontario; doesn't the minister think his ministry should enforce its own regulations rather than simply play the good fellow and allow a clear potential danger to public health to continue to exist?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As I understand the problem with that particular company and with xylene, it centres around the fact that it is an odour and is not associated with a particulate matter; therefore it's extremely difficult not only to record and read but to control.

I'm not aware of the standards in other jurisdictions off the top of my head. I'd be glad to get them, and if we think ours are too high we'll certainly redress that problem. I can't accept, however, that we have not strenuously gone to work on this particular problem for those residents. I again state that by the end of this year I believe it will be eliminated, or extremely controlled.

Mr. Duksza: A further supplementary: Is the minister aware that xylene emission is related to the manufacture of benzene, which occurs at Anchor Cap and Closure, and that one has to study both of these questions together? He seems not to be aware of the potential health hazards and of the study. Why is he not taking into account the study made two years ago on the hazardous effects of xylene emissions in that very area?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't have with me today the exact levels that were recorded. From memory I think our staff said they did not consider it a health hazard. I will double-check that tomorrow and respond.

SOVIET CITIZENSHIP

Mr. Leluk: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Premier. The news media recently carried a story that the Soviet Union intends to amend its citizenship act on July 1, automatically making Soviet citizens of those persons whose parents were born in countries which come under the USSR. Does the Premier intend to make representations to the Prime Minister of Canada or to officials in the ministry of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Bradley: The United Nations.

Mr. Leluk: —on behalf of those Canadian citizens now living in Ontario who have no say in this matter and who do not wish to become citizens of the Soviet Union?

Mr. Peterson: Will you move the embassy to Leningrad?

Mr. Conway: Joe Clark thinks Russia is part of the free world.

Mr. Cunningham: Move the embassy to Kiev.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for Renfrew North speaks with some facetiousness about the next Prime Minister of this country.

Interjections.

Mr. Conway: A great deal of facetiousness.

[2:45]

Hon. Mr. Davis: We won't be here a week tomorrow, so I guess it will be a week Wednesday before I get a—

Mr. Speaker: Order. You see where the interjections get us? They serve no useful purpose whatsoever. I think it is unfair the member should make that kind of interjection when he knows it is going to be picked up and it is going to be responded to. Let's call it a draw and try to recall the original question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am delighted any time you say I have achieved a draw with the members opposite. I will take your judgement, knowing it is totally objective.

Mr. MacDonald: The question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But it was the member's fault; I didn't do it. What was the question?

I would be quite prepared to discuss this with the next Prime Minister of Canada after a week tomorrow. I feel confident Mr. Clark has the same concerns on this issue as those expressed by the member—I am getting that in subtly—he has the same concerns as those expressed by the member for York West.

Actually, there is a member of my staff who falls into the category of being described as a Soviet citizen because of some legislation in the Soviet Union. He is quite adamant that he has no intention or desire to become a Soviet citizen; he happens to like it as he is, as a Canadian.

Mr. Ruston: Would it not be better if we had a resolution from this Legislature with the unanimous agreement of all people here? That might help and could even be sent to the United Nations.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am a great supporter of the United Nations and certainly, they have performed many important and constructive functions over the years.

Mr. Peterson: Maybe you would like to speak on the subject. You are truly ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, he asked me a question. I was getting around to answering it. The member for London Centre quite obviously has no great respect for the United Nations. I was just saying what a great organization it is.

Certainly we could give the question of a resolution here some thought, but I really think we should await until the new government of Canada is in a position to deal with these international issues, which will hopefully be some time after next Tuesday night.

Mr. Makarchuk: When you are going to talk about citizenship. What I am saying is the next time the Premier is going to talk to the supposedly future Prime Minister of Canada about this matter, would he kindly take a map with him to show him where the areas are located?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is delightful the member for Brantford, in his own inimitable fashion, has acknowledged that in fact, Mr. Clark will be the next Prime Minister. I appreciate that endorsement. If he will provide the map I will do with it what one should do with a map provided by the member for Brantford.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Health has asked for unanimous consent to revert to statements. Do we have that consent?

Agreed.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not sure that last suggestion by the Premier is healthy.

The question of diagnostic radiation safety has become a matter of public concern during this past week. In order that the members and the public at large understand the situation, I would like to provide this background.

Originally the radiation department of the Ministry of Health was responsible for X-ray safety and other radiation hazards. In 1976, responsibility for radiation other than X-rays was transferred to the Ministry of Labour, since any hazard associated with these areas were considered to be an occupational health matter. The X-ray inspection service remained with the Ministry of Health, which now concentrated on matters of patient safety. This then led to the formation of the committees for X-ray program development.

In August 1977, the assistant deputy minister for institutional health services at the time, Mr. Chatfield, wrote to medical professional groups, federal and provincial government agencies across Canada and equipment manufacturers. He sent them a discussion paper prepared by the steering committee for X-ray program development in which the proposed program had two parts, a licensing portion and a safety standards portion. He asked for their comments containing details of their proposed safety standards by October 1977.

In the fall of 1977 discussions were held between ministry officials and the Ontario Medical Association. We invited their professional input for development of safety standards. It was agreed that health physicists Drs. Johns and Taylor of the University of Toronto would respond to the proposed safety standards on behalf of the OMA by January 15, 1978.

In the interim, Drs. Johns and Taylor had already applied for a ministry grant for research into a new method of testing diagnostic X-ray machines. The application was submitted for peer review in December of 1977 and the grant was approved in February of 1978. It was $43,090 for 1978-79 and $43,000 for 1979-80. The inspection branch continued its followup with the OMA and developed a consulting relationship with Dr. Taylor in his project.

Also in 1978, our inspectors worked with the Ontario College of Dental Surgeons to establish a new X-ray safety program for dentists. This program began to be implemented in August 1978 and is introduced to each dentist's office as it is inspected. This is primarily an educational program.

The OMA responded to the request for comments on the report of the steering committee for X-ray program development by submitting an alternative proposal in December 1978 for a study on radiation protection and diagnostic radiation in the province of Ontario. The OMA asked for a research grant of $100,000 per year; the ministry approved $100,000 per year for three years. A letter was sent in March 1979 to Dr. E. J. Moran asking the OMA to sponsor and to supervise the project, and to establish contact with the OHA and hospitals involved. Additional funds for this project were provided by the PSI foundation. It is the ministry's understanding that staff hiring for this project will commence on June 1, 1979. As requested in the project's submission, the ministry is committed to provide staff time internally to assist and to co-operate on this project with Drs. Taylor and Johns. We are committed to sustain this program on an ongoing basis until it reaches its full development.

In February 1979 the Ontario Society of Radiological Technologists submitted a letter to the ministry, in fact to me, in which certain recommendations were made regarding training and licensing of technicians. The committee also pledged the full resources of the society to the ministry to establish the safety standards required. I responded in April 1979 advising the society of the development of a joint ministry-OMA program on radiation protection in which I confirmed the need for the active involvement of that society.

It should be clarified at this time that my letter concerns the paper entitled Variations in X-ray Exposure to Patients, which was published in the journal of the Canadian Association of Radiologists of March, 1979.

From details provided in this paper, some of the opposition has concluded that most X-ray machines are hazardous.

Mr. S. Smith: We never said that.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No; that's why I qualified it as, some of the opposition.

The paper states: "Many factors contribute to differences in patient dose and some factors are more significant than others. Of greatest importance is the fluoroscopic exposure rate. In only one case was a high rate due to a machine's fault."

The next factor of importance listed in the paper is the fluoroscopic time. The paper stresses that: "It is the responsibility of all operators of X-ray equipment to use the shortest possible fluoroscopic time." The fluoroscopic procedure is a diagnostic procedure used by radiologists. The time taken for this procedure is directly at the discretion of such medical practitioners. The paper concludes by calling for: "A continuing concern on the part of radiologists and technologists for the dosage which patients receive."

On May 10 the honourable member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) raised the issue that the radiation received by patients receiving X-rays exceeds 50 rems, which he says is the lifetime radiation standard established by the International Council for Radiation Protection. It should be pointed out there is considerable confusion on the difference between lifetime occupational exposure levels and X-rays used for diagnostic procedures.

Lifetime exposure standards do not refer to patient exposure during medical procedures. As already mentioned, this is at the discretion of the practitioner, as only he can determine what is necessary for his diagnosis. It can be easily recognized that this varies widely from patient to patient, depending upon a wide variety of patient conditions. There are not, however, any international standards for dose levels used for diagnostic purposes. It is acknowledged that radiation in and of itself can be hazardous to health. However, when a clinician prescribes an X-ray, it is expected that the patient will derive medical advantage in that an undiagnosed condition may be identified and treated.

The ministry has already responded to concerns about dosage levels for clinical purposes by funding the OMA study and earlier studies for that matter. We have always made funds available to address issues of safety, and we will continue this emphasis. We have also committed ourselves to reviewing these concerns with the professional organizations, and we are prepared to commit additional funds and manpower. The present study and others the ministry is involved with, together with proposals from the potential bodies, will in our estimation provide the residents of Ontario with an assurance that their safety will always be our primary concern.

As I have already stated, the decisions regarding the necessity for radiological procedures are appropriately placed with the medical practitioners. A great deal of discussion has taken place, and it has been inappropriately suggested by some people that patients should refuse their physicians' directions for X-rays. As the Minister of Health, I would repeat the warning I made in the House last week that no one should refuse an X-ray prescribed by their physician.

Mr. Speaker: We will add five minutes to the question period.

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Health: The minister seems to downplay the question of the actual X-ray machinery in quoting from the paper by Dr. Taylor, in which he correctly says that in the fluoroscopic danger, which seems to be the greatest one, a machine problem or a machine fault was the cause in only one case. However, Dr. Taylor goes on to speak of many other problems which are machine-related. Dr. Taylor said on As It Happens, on the CBC, that in his view machines should be inspected every three to six months.

Therefore, I ask the minister why it is that while this exchange was going on for the past few years between these various learned societies, his ministry's inspectors were not inspecting machines sufficiently frequently? Were they in fact inspecting machines in the offices of chiropractors as well as those in the offices of dentists and doctors? Can we see the documents, the inspection reports, and can we find out basically what questions they were asking? Dr. Taylor says they were asking the wrong questions.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, my estimates will be considered at some point in the next few weeks, and I will be very happy to get into some of these related questions at that time. But let me say that one other matter which the staff in the inspection branch have been working on, and which relates to this, is the possibility of developing some kind of self-checking mechanism or checklist. This has been worked on over the last six months. We would anticipate, inasmuch as my staff and the inspection branch will be working directly with the two physicists involved in this study, that perhaps with their assistance that could be further advanced.

One of the suggestions—and I think it's very much in line with that which I have just described that my staff have been working on—one of the suggestions that came from the technologists' society was that there be a self-inspection or self-checking project. It would seem to make good sense to me that we work in that direction as well as, of course, regular inspections by the ministry's inspectors. They make the point that these things could be filed regularly with us, and we are working along those lines.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: With great respect, while the ministry was exchanging views between these various societies for three years, a lot of people—two years; it's three years that his ministry's inspection branch has been there—a lot of people were receiving a lot of radiation they should not have been receiving. They continue today to be receiving a lot of radiation they should not be receiving while a three-year study now is under way.

I ask the minister, will he not now instruct all the owners of X-ray equipment in how they can inspect their machines immediately and for the information of those doctors or others who use those machines, post the information that is pertinent? Will he also make certain that any of the machines that, in order to give a decent picture, require too high a dose of radiation, or have some other defect in them, will be replaced?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think I have just described exactly that process. There is no such set of standards anywhere in the world, to my knowledge or from what I have been advised. It is just that which the staff are working on, to try to come up with something that we can send to every owner or operator that can be a self-checking mechanism, which would assist also in our cooperation with this particular study under way by these two physicists.

I want to go back to the March 1979 paper. As I read that they keep coming back to the fact that it is a question of judgement. It is a question of the three factors that dictate the amount of radiation being used: the kilovoltage, the milliamperage and the exposure time. What they are saying in that paper time and time again—and I won't take the time of the House to repeat the statement I read last Thursday or the paper—is that it is an educative process, in addition to anything else.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that doctors will not often know what degree of radiation that patients have been exposed to through X-rays, and since it is a world-wide standard of medicine that the minimum amount of radiation needed be used in X-ray diagnostic procedures, will the government consider introducing regulations to require that the X-ray radiation dose received by patients be entered into their medical histories, as is done already at such outstanding institutions as the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Maryland?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If that suggestion has any potential medical benefit to the patient that will come out of the work which is under way by Dr. Johns and Dr. Taylor.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I respond to the point of privilege which I understand the member raised before I arrived today and say that in the statement I made last week I was going on the advice of my director of research. It was his impression, and based on that impression he advised me, that some of the money in the $86,000 grant which we gave for the study entitled New Method of Testing Diagnostic X-ray Machines had in fact been applied to the paper which was released in the March issue of the Journal of the Canadian Association of Radiologists. That is apparently not the case; I apologize for unintentionally misleading the House. There are other papers to come which will make the notation that Ministry of Health funds were applied to them.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Since Dr. Taylor has suggested that inspections should be made on a three-to-six-month basis for most of this equipment and since present requirements are for five-year inspections, with my understanding that there are items of equipment that have not been looked at in over 20 years, would the ministry now look into ensuring that these three-to-six-month periodic inspections will take place so that it will have a good statistical base upon which to base further studies, knowing the equipment has in fact been reviewed?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, if the honourable member knows of any piece of equipment which is being used for diagnostic purposes in a clinical setting that has not been seen for 20 years I would appreciate knowing about it.

Mr. S. Smith: It was in the Globe.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Was it in the Globe?

Mr. Breithaupt: Do you not read the paper?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I scan. As we work together with Dr. Johns and Dr. Taylor, if it becomes clear that additional personnel are needed, we have already indicated we are prepared to add personnel.

Let me give an example to illustrate the basic point. Apparently during this earlier study, the team associated with the research went into a hospital and complained about the high levels of radiation being used in certain fluoroscopic surveys. The operator or the technician said: "But the ministry people were just here last week." They came to us and quite rightly started to raise hell. It turned out that our people had been in and had advised that it would be advisable to use lower levels—in other words to adjust the exposure, the milliamperage, the kilovoltage and so forth—but in the judgement of the physician in that particular case he felt it should be higher.

What we are involved in here is a means of showing every operator, and this comes back to the very basic point, that a lot of the assumptions that have existed for years about the levels that are required for good pictures for diagnosis are wrong. Obviously, one does not want to send people back all the time because one got a bad picture the first time. Some of those assumptions are wrong. It is a matter of educating all of these people in the ways which Taylor and Johns are uncovering. They make the point in their paper that they have already uncovered some ways and they anticipate they will find many more to assist all these people in making these decisions.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it is now 15 years since the Ontario Society of Radiological Technicians began pressing the ministry to have only licensed technicians operating X-ray machines in public hospitals in Ontario. Two years ago, the executive director of the Breast Cancer Advisory Committee testified before Congress in the US that it is outrageous that the beautician who shampoos, cuts and sets our hair must pass difficult qualifying examinations and be licensed, when X-ray technicians are not required to do so.

I would like to ask the minister, in view of the seriousness of the radiation that leads to such things as using these lead aprons when people have X-rays in the dentist's chair, and which leads to the situation where my doctor told me today that despite a cracked rib, I should not have an X-ray for fear of the radiation, does the minister not at least agree that X-ray technicians operating these machines should be qualified, trained and licensed in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, we do not, through our legislation, govern the activities of technicians in the United States. That kind of testimony, while the concern about the level of ability in any jurisdiction is appropriate, is germane to whatever is current in the United States of America in total, or in any one of the 50 states. Secondly, I am advised that 97 per cent of the operators in the public hospitals of Ontario are members of the society. That is advice I have had from my staff.

In addition, I would like to answer one other point which has recently been raised, although not today; I think I should raise it myself. That is the question of the staff who work for the ministry. A year and a half ago, in meetings with the society, we agreed with them that from that point forward no one would be hired to work for the ministry as a technician who was not, in fact, registered with the society. We have asked them to submit to us proposals on how we might assist those of our staff who are not registered to upgrade themselves.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, Dr. Taylor's report indicated clearly exposure rates were set high, either because of a lack of understanding by the users or because of manufacturers competing with each other for the best fluoroscopic image. In other words, Dr. Taylor was suggesting it is the technicians using the machinery and not just radiologists prescribing certain lengths of exposure. What steps is the ministry taking at once in order to instruct the people operating this machinery to ensure they use the machines for the minimum time required to get any kind of an image, so radiation hazards can be reduced to the minimum?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the honourable member is just reinforcing my point. It is a matter of judgement. Every one of these machines is under the supervision of a qualified practitioner. As the research to date indicates, it comes down in most cases to this combination of the milliamperage, the kilo-voltage and the exposure time. The fact the member's physician indicated no X-ray for a cracked rib—and I am sorry to hear he has it—illustrates perhaps quite different attitudes about cracked ribs. There was a time when he would have been taped for that. I doubt he is taped now. Am I correct? Nobody tapes any more for a cracked rib. The physician is reflecting current knowledge as to whether it is useful or not.

Mr. Breithaupt: With regard to the raising of that point on qualification which I made last week, will the minister ensure the suggestions made by the Ontario Society of Radiological Technicians will be considered, particularly with respect to those locations such as dentists' offices and chiropractic offices, where the use of X-rays is accepted and where the staff might not be fully required to be qualified technologists but where they are required to have some training and certainly clear standards by which to perform?

Will the minister ensure that this body, the OSRT, will have the opportunity of being involved in the setting of those standards so that we can encourage the safe use of this useful machinery by all of the parties involved?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, in my letter of reply in February to the most recent letter that I have seen, I indicated that I felt the society had to be involved in the work that we have begun over the last 18 months with the medical association, and indicated that I was asking a member of my staff to contact them in that regard—which, if that has not already occurred, will soon occur—in order that they will in fact be involved.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH CENTRES

Mr. Peterson: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Is the minister aware that because of the ministry's cutbacks the Madame Vanier Children's Services in London is having to sell one of its facilities and is cutting back five beds minimum, and there is already a waiting list for young people to get into that residential treatment? If he is aware of that, what is he going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am aware that the centre has announced that certain decisions have been made, as described by the honourable member. I would point out that to the best of my knowledge those decisions were made without prior consultation with the staff of my ministry.

I indicated at the time of the announcement of the restrictions in growth in the budgets of certain large children's mental health services that the staff of the ministry would be working with such services to assist them in developing a long phase-in period in order to achieve the budget objectives that had been established for them.

I don't believe that those meetings have as yet taken place with all of the services affected. I believe that the decision that has been announced by the Madame Vanier institute has in fact been precipitous and too hasty.

Mr. Peterson: Can I take it then that the minister and his staff are prepared to reconsider the funding they have given to that institution this year so that they perhaps do not have to sell that particular facility? Are they prepared to reconsider and meet with them?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Certainly my staff are prepared to meet with them. I don't believe at this point in time that a meeting with me is necessary. I'm not suggesting, though, that the budget allocations are going to be changed. I think it is possible they may have misunderstood the period of phase-in.

I also would point out to the member and to them that in fact it was also made clear that those services which were affected were eligible, along with all other children's service agencies in the province, to prepare and present to us proposals with respect to preventive programs that they could introduce and make application for funding under the $16 million for new initiatives in that area. I do believe that the decision has been too hasty, as I believe it was in Windsor as well.

INCO DISPUTE

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Now that the eight-month lockout by Inco in Sudbury is over and the strike has begun, is the minister prepared to tell the officials at Inco that the workers in the community have paid a high enough price and that Inco has successfully reduced its stockpiles, which was of course its goal, and that it must now make a decent offer to the workers in Sudbury?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: With the greatest respect to the member, I have never heard the description of the work stoppage as he has outlined it before. However, it's an interesting interpretation. I must say I am certain that the member shared with the Steelworkers the view that was expressed very clearly in The Miner's Voice, in which the president of the union and the director of district six of the union expressed firm support for the settlement procedure.

I share the member's disappointment that there was not a settlement. But to discuss now any bantering with either of the parties, I think, does little for the process. My mediators at the present time are discussing the matter with each of the parties to see what their wishes are on this issue.

PETITIONS

WINDSOR CHILDREN'S CENTRE

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to present the following petition to the Legislature today. It reads as follows:

"We the undersigned protest the closing of the 12-bed residence for emotionally disturbed children at the regional children's centre at Windsor Western Hospital. This centre is the only one of its kind in this area and many children are on the waiting list. Why shut the doors on children? They are the adults of tomorrow, and this is the Year of the Child."

This petition was circulated, when it was thought the 12-bed unit was going to be closed, by Linda Bryce of 1541 Albert Road in my riding. She collected 1,000 signatures. I think it demonstrates the very strong feelings of the people in Windsor about this centre and the strong support for it. While the situation has been resolved on the short-term basis, the long-term problem still exists.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions 169 and 170 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1921.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS (continued)

On vote 701:

Mr. Chairman: I believe the honourable member for Nipissing was in full flight.

Mr. Bolan: I don't know whether I was in full flight or not, but in any event we were asking some very serious questions of the minister. He has had over two weeks now to respond to them and we're awaiting with great anticipation the responses he will give.

I don't have much to add to what I said. I just want to go on a little while about the Ontario Northland Railway. There are some very nasty things going on with that railway—

Interjection.

Mr. Bolan: Well, if the minister is considering selling it, if he considers that a big thing, yes, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm considering it.

Mr. Bolan: As the minister knows, there have been very serious comments—

Mr. Ruston: He's not listening now.

Mr. Bolan: —made with respect to the Ontario Northland Railway. When it was under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, we didn't have those problems. The minister ran a good railway. I suggest you might want to start by giving it back to that minister. At least he seems to have known what he was doing.

Ever since the railway has been under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Northern Affairs, there has been one controversy after another, mostly stirred up, of course, by some of the commissioners, one of whom was recently appointed for another one-year term.

Mr. Nixon: Again?

Mr. Bolan: They put Mr. Piche back in for another year. At least they had the good sense to make it only one year and not two this time. I hope that will be the end of Mr. Piche after June 1980. He has been appointed for another year, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, it is. A great member.

Mr. Nixon: Do they still have their meetings at Moonbeam?

Mr. Bolan: Dealing with the Ontario Northland Railway, as I indicated in the House some two weeks ago, I had some information—which was not denied—that Bell Canada was trying to grab the telecommunications system. I'd like to have some confirmation in our deliberations today, or whenever we get around to it, because if anything this symbolizes the advance the ONR has made over the past years. It certainly is a step into the future and it certainly is something I feel is not worthy of selling off.

I also understand that Via Rail is interested in the rail passenger service. Does the government intend to get rid of that particular branch?

The minister has sold the lodge in Moosonee. He has also tried to get rid of the boat on Lake Nipissing without success, because of the political pressure that was brought to bear by the North Bay Chamber of Commerce, as well as by other agencies. He backed off on that. I want to know about the plans for the boat on Lake Nipissing and any other boats that belong to the ONR.

I'd like to find out the plans with respect to the bus line which is operated by the ONR. I understand it is up for the highest bidder as well.

Mr. Wildman: They're cutting the service.

Mr. Bolan: In other words, the people of northeastern Ontario are very much concerned with what is being done with the ONR.

Mr. Wildman: I don't think he knows.

Mr. Bolan: I can assure the minister there is considerable unrest, not only in my area, but in all the areas which are affected by the Ontario Northland Railway.

Mr. Nixon: I bet they're keeping a private car.

Mr. Bolan: It would appear to me that the ONR we'll end up with will be a highly subsidized executive air transportation system called norOntair, and that's going to be about the size of it. I would hope the minister will be able to tell this House and the people of northern Ontario that the answers to many of the questions I have raised with respect to the disposition of the assets of the ONR are going to be known.

I have no further comments to make as far as an opening statement is concerned. However, we will get to other matters during the course of the next 10 hours.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Algoma. Applause.

Mr. Wildman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nixon: The member for Nickel Belt is trying to sound like a whole crowd.

Mr. Wildman: First I'd like to apologize for not having been present for the minister's leadoff.

Mr. Nixon: Does he provide you with a plane so that you can go back and forth?

Mr. Wildman: As the minister may be aware, when these on-again, off-again estimates were started I was up to my waist in water with a number of other people in the village of Iron Bridge and we were kind of busy trying to bail the minister out in that area.

I'd like to talk about a number of things in this debate on the estimates. I have had some difficulty putting them into a real semblance of order, since the ministry tends to be going off in all directions at once. However, there are a number of things I want to bring to the attention of the House and I hope the minister can respond to them.

During the week when the estimates began, I also attended a number of meetings—one in Searchmont and one in Batchawana—with regard to the proposed local services boards legislation, and I will be talking in detail about that later on.

I noticed in the minister's leadoff that he stated this is the third time we have debated the estimates of this ministry and how proud he is of its progress. I participated in all three of those debates and, frankly, this is the first time I have led off for our party in these estimates as the critic. As a northerner who perhaps has the least experience of northerners in our caucus, I am proud that my leader has asked me to represent our party in this debate. It is an important portfolio assignment, since our party places a great deal of importance on the need for planned rational development in the north.

Before I go on any further, I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate the newly appointed deputy minister, Mr. Herridge, of this ministry. We all know of his work in the Ministry of Natural Resources, and those of us in the north who have had dealings with that ministry and with Mr. Herridge know the kind of work he does. I am sure we are all looking forward to the contribution he can make to these estimates and to the development of this ministry, and I congratulate him on his appointment.

The minister mentioned in his leadoff statement the value of having government functions in the north co-ordinated by a single ministry. There is no question that we accept and support that view. However, the real questions arise when it comes to the crunch; that is, what does the ministry do in facing particular problems and dealing with particular issues of northern development and in responding to the needs of northerners?

The minister, I will admit, does state in his leadoff statement that he has not solved all the problems and deficiencies in northern Ontario yet. We certainly agree with him on that point. But what I am talking about in terms of the crunch is, what does this ministry do in terms of co-ordination? I will use the last two or three weeks as an example, where we have faced serious flood problems throughout the northeast and now, as the minister probably is aware, it seems to be spreading to the northwest, with a serious flood in White River over the weekend, with water in the White River flowing into the town and flooding many homes. A number of homes and apartments have been evacuated, a number of businesses have closed, the Hudson's Bay Company store has merchandise floating all over the place, the liquor store has closed—which is a major catastrophe—and a number of other businesses have been affected. I just wonder what this ministry has been doing in facing this problem and in co-ordinating the government's response to it.

When I asked the question of the minister about one of these floods, the flood in the Searchmont and Goulais River area, he referred me to the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), who has been designated over the years as the lead minister in dealing with flood emergencies. So that really has not changed even with the development of this new ministry for the north.

Yet during the debate on the establishment of the ministry in July 1977, the minister stated that one of the main co-ordinating functions of this new Ministry of Northern Affairs would be "developing and implementing contingency plans in natural disasters." I tell the minister that this ministry just has been completely absent in relation to the floods in the past two or three weeks.

I would refer to that debate, as reported at page 470 of Hansard for July 6, 1977, where the minister says that one new section of the bill establishing his ministry "is designed to provide the government with a reasonable amount of flexibility in responding to emergencies in the north, such as natural disasters and fires which threaten the lives and property of residents. The wisdom of giving the new ministry this capability to respond swiftly and effectively in such emergencies was demonstrated rather dramatically at the time of the disastrous fire which destroyed 152 homes in the town of Cobalt and left 450 persons homeless."

There is no question that the ministry was involved, and very actively involved, in responding to the problems people faced in Cobalt at the time of that very serious fire. Not only the government, but also many other municipalities, individuals and organizations across the north contributed to the rehabilitation of Cobalt to help people get going and so on after the fire, and to get them on their feet again. What will happen with the flood situation? This ministry has not been involved. When I ask the minister, he refers me to the Minister of Natural Resources. Let's look at what happened with the Ministry of Natural Resources in terms of the flooding in my area.

There certainly is no question that Natural Resources is responsible for monitoring rivers and lakes throughout the province, but my experience in the situations in Iron Bridge, Searchmont and Goulais River indicated there really was a need for co-ordination, real co-ordination, in facing these kinds of emergencies for small communities in the north.

The Ministry of Natural Resources officials worked very hard, I'll admit, and I've had many consultations with them over the few weeks we've been facing this very serious problem in my area. They've worked overtime. They've worked long hours in monitoring water levels and so on, but when the situation first developed, Natural Resources appeared not to have any special plans for dealing with the emergencies.

They didn't seem to have plans to deal with such simple things as sandbagging or evacuation. The plans seemed to be absent. As a matter of fact, the Searchmont volunteer fire brigade, and I want to pay special tribute to them, did most of the work in terms of evacuation, pumping basements and so on in that emergency in that community, with the assistance of the Sault Search and Rescue rather than ministry officials. Certainly the Ministry of Natural Resources and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications and the Ontario Provincial Police were all involved, but it was the local community people themselves who really got on the ball and got things going.

In terms of Iron Bridge, one of the residents, a business man, requested some sandbags because water had already flooded a number of cabins he owned and was threatening his home. I first phoned MTC to request sandbags. They referred me to the Ministry of Natural Resources, so I phoned the Ministry of Natural Resources. In the meantime, the reeve of the village of Iron Bridge also contacted the Ministry of Natural Resources and requested sandbags. Two hours after my initial phone call, the bags were delivered to the individual who had requested them.

In the two hours that had elapsed, the water had risen substantially. The individual's place was surrounded by water and he got a number of empty sandbags delivered to him. I don't know how many of you realize what it was like in Iron Bridge, but it was rather difficult to get sand in the middle of a flood situation to fill up these bags two hours after they had been first requested. The individual, when I was talking to him afterward, indicated to me he hadn't used the sandbags because he didn't think they were particularly useful if he had to fill them with water, and that's all he had. He had lots of that.

In an area just east of Iron Bridge, in the unorganized township of Cobden, a community known as the Eastman subdivision was flooded. Thompson township and the rest of Cobden township avoided most of the flooding because highway 17 in most places acted as a sort of a dike against the overflowing waters of the Mississagi River.

Just across in the Eastman subdivision, there was a culvert underneath the highway which is designed to empty a ditch into the river. Of course, it backed up and the ditch overflowed and the subdivision was flooded. When I visited the Eastman subdivision during the flood on a Saturday evening, I was met by a young man who works for the Ministry of Natural Resources. He was sitting there in a truck and he was monitoring the water levels. He had a stake and he was measuring how high the water was rising, at what rate it was rising and so on. It wasn't until two days later the ministry decided it might be a good idea to sandbag that culvert and prevent more water from coming in.

I really wonder what kind of contingency plan the Ministry of Natural Resources had. If it is the lead ministry, I really wonder. With respect to this ministry, I just didn't see any evidence of Northern Affairs being involved in any kind of co-ordination or having developed any kind of contingency plan to deal with these situations.

Mr. Laughren: The minister of red tape.

Mr. Wildman: The Ministry of Natural Resources officials reacted and worked very hard, but they didn't seem to know the procedure for requesting provincial aid for the property owners who had sustained damage, or whom to ask for. This was especially true in the unorganized communities. A number of those communities organized committees on their own to try to get things going, to organize donations and collect moneys and so on, but until much later no one advised them that they should be contacting the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. Only after I had a number of phone calls did they get involved.

I appreciate the commitment made by the government last week for assistance to those communities, as well as to Field and northeastern Ontario. Four to one is a much more adequate response, and I congratulate the government for making that response. My only problem is that the people in the field, that is, in Natural Resources, didn't seem to know—and I am not blaming them since we don't have these kinds of situations every day, thank God—who had the right to make the decision and who was supposed to be doing it. It was only after they did a lot of phone calling and research and after I and the local people did that we got the situation in hand.

Mr. Trewin and his assistant, Mr. Dupas, from the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs got involved. I must congratulate those two individuals who have shown a genuine interest in trying to assist the communities in the area. But where was this ministry? I just don't know what role it had and what role the minister had in the decision that was made, first, to assist Field and then to extend that assistance to other north-eastern Ontario communities.

I wonder what role the minister will have in determining whether or not assistance should be extended to other communities in the North Bay area or, for that matter, to communities in the northwest that are now experiencing flooding, such as White River, as I mentioned.

Mr. Laughren: He organizes the red tape.

Mr. Wildman: During the 1977 debate that I referred to, the minister stated that the establishment of this ministry indicated a renewed commitment to overcome the obstacles faced by northerners in dealing with government. I just haven't seen evidence of that in this situation. The minister indicated the establishment of the ministry would mean more easy access for northerners to government and to assistance from various ministries. Frankly, by watching this ministry as I have and being quite involved in my own area with some programs, as the minister knows, I wonder sometimes whether or not the ministry has the capability to fulfil the aims that were proposed in that debate in 1977.

I will give one example of this. A few months ago, the ministry made a great to-do about the publication of a directory that was going to list all of the communities in northern Ontario. It's a three-volume directory. I am sure the minister is familiar with it. One volume is on organized communities, another volume is about unorganized communities and I think the third one deals with Indian communities in the north. This directory was very nicely bound with a soft-cover binding. It came in a package of cellophane with an accompanying letter asking for comments.

I would like to refer to some comments that were made about this directory and what they may indicate about the ministry's capability. In the Sault Star of Thursday, January 25, there was a front page headline: "You Can Get Lost Reading Northern Affairs Guide." It starts off by asking, "What weighs four and a half pounds, is 1951 pages long, comes in three volumes and is a crock full of information, much of it wrong?"

Mr. Foulds: That was from an official ministry press release.

Mr. Wildman: And then it goes on and says, "It is the Directory 1978, a guide to communities in the north brought to you by the Ontario Ministry of Northern Affairs."

It tells you, for instance, that White River is 320 kilometres west of Sault Ste. Marie, which would put it in Michigan, somewhere near Wisconsin. It then says that to get from Garden River to the neighbouring city of Sault Ste. Marie, you take highway 11, which would lengthen the 10-minute drive by three or four days.

It puts Aweres township, a small, unorganized area north of Sault Ste. Marie, in volume one with the part for incorporated townships. It should be in volume three because it is not incorporated. Perhaps that is why it says information is not available on Aweres, under the heading of "Local Administration."

The folks at Great Lakes Power Corporation will be happy to know—at least according to the directory—Ontario Hydro, and not they, supply electricity to the Sault. Most surrounding communities are supplied by Great Lakes Power, but Hilton township gets its electricity from a company called Great Lakes Power and Paper. It goes on and lists a number of radio stations that no longer exist and so on.

Then it says, "For you 2,000 or so people in the Goulais Bay-Goulais River area, you will be happy to know that you don't exist at all," according to the directory anyway. Most of the two or three dozen townships surrounding Aweres are not listed. But the directory dedicates whole pages to places like Casummit Lake, stating only the location and the fact that no one lives there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You don't know where Casummit Lake is.

Mr. Wildman: Well, no one lives there.

It is interesting to hear the explanation given by Peter Jackman, who is the ministry director of information services. When asked by the Sault Star about this lovely directory he said it cost $18,000 to produce and it was put together by information supplied by ministry officers.

Then he says the ministry ordered 1,500 copies of the three-volume set and distributed them to MPPs, Northern Affairs officers, municipal clerks, other ministries and news editors. It is on sale in the government bookstore in Toronto for $10 a set.

When told of some of the obvious errors, Mr. Jackman said he was surprised they were so numerous. But then, get this, he says, "But that is the purpose of the exercise. The aim is to produce by next fall one concise volume with all of the right information."

I would like to refer to an editorial that followed this article in the Sault Star. This is from Friday, January 26, and was entitled,

"A Waste of $18,000?" It says: "On occasion there has been some question as to the value of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. One of the latest projects in this ministry, Directory 1978, can only inspire more questions. The cost of the project was $18,000"—

Mr. Laughren: The same amount as the minister's salary.

Mr. Wildman:—"yet the directory contains numerous inaccuracies and errors that can only have northerners wondering just where this Ontario ministry gathered its information.

[3:45]

"Peter Jackman, ministry director of information services, said the purpose of circulating 1,500 copies of the directory, with all its errors, was to use the feedback to compile a concise, corrected directory next fall. Mr. Jackman must be kidding. The fact is that for a small cost the communities concerned could have been sent a single sheet containing the material on their communities and be asked to return the sheet with corrections. That wouldn't cost anywhere near $18,000 and would not have left 1,500 three-volume sets sitting around all over the place, with all sorts of silly and erroneous information.

"If this is the best the Ministry of Northern Affairs can do for the north, it appears that some of the criticism about its limited value to northern Ontario is fully justified."

That is from a newspaper which has not made a crusade against the ministry and has not indicated that it generally looks askance at the activities of the ministry. When one considers the kind of explanation given for this obvious error in judgement by whoever was in charge, whether it was Mr. Jackman or someone else, one wonders how this ministry justifies that kind of expenditure.

Frankly, this is the reason for some of the scepticism that many northerners have about the ministry. I will refer to an example of this kind of thing. In February, I received a letter from a lady in Blind River in which she asked if I could give her some information about the activities of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. I will read a portion of the letter:

"Having tried to keep an eye on that spanking new NA baby that was going to do great things for the north and her people since its conception, its first labour pains and its birth in 1977, and its subsequent stunted growth, if not actual deformity (that is, judging from information available on the local level via media, et cetera), I am being forced to conclude that where we northerners at least are concerned it might have been better had that particular government baby aborted."

Mr. T. P. Reid: Pretty strong words.

Mr. Wildman: This is from a 75-year-old lady, I might add.

"Needless to say, you will note from the above paragraph my feeling of frustration over the inability to learn what NA has accomplished, if anything, beneficial for the North Shore. Or could one consider the ability to pass the buck from one ministry to another at an increasingly dizzy rate of speed an accomplishment?"

"Do we have 29 Northern Affairs officers spread over the wide territory, or do we not? I am beginning to wonder if they aren't another form of placebo-soother, if you like—to make the public feel good. Certainly they," the officers, "haven't one iota of authority. Therefore, one can only assume their office was created as an intermediary seeker of governmental information as and when requested by John and Mary Public.

"Actually, despite their nice salaries, I feel sorry for the men and women employed in the capacity of Northern Affairs officers, as they carry no weight other than a data gatherer which they then parrot; that is, utter in accordance with their job regulations. Poor souls."

I will admit that is a rather extreme letter from a lady who has experienced some frustration in dealing with government and trying to get responses from government. But I must also admit that she makes a point. What authority do the Ministry of Northern Affairs officers have? Most of them work very hard in dealing with people's problems with government, whether it be provincial ministries or federal departments and so on. But in terms of actually getting across to their superiors the overall, wider needs of the community, rather than the particular needs of individuals who have problems, I wonder what their authority is.

One of the reasons we have differences about this ministry is that our two parties have very different concepts of what the ministry should be doing. We do not want to have a ministry that puts out a lot of press releases about what other ministries are doing, and really doesn't do a lot of substantial encouragement of rational, planned, northern development.

I looked at the information that was given to us beforehand and frankly I was impressed with the accomplishments listed in relation to Atikokan. But, what does that all mean in terms of the overall future economic stability of that community and how is that related to the economic development of that area and of northwestern Ontario in general? It seems to me that the problems we have experienced with a boom-bust cycle must be solved if we are to have any kind of stability in the north. I wonder what is being done in Elliot Lake. Unlike some other communities, Elliot Lake is booming; there's no concern at this point about the kinds of problems that Elliot Lake faced a few years ago. It is expanding at a tremendous rate.

Mr. Williams: Thanks to the uranium contract.

Mr. Laughren: The biggest giveaway in Canadian history.

Mr. Wildman: That's certainly true, but I wonder what this government and this ministry are doing to try to assist the community in its very rapid expansion and all of the problems that result from that.

As the minister, I hope, is aware, the interim report of the environmental assessment board came out and it listed a number of problems. I will just quote a few of them here that are reported in the press. It refers to Elliot Lake's housing crisis and it states that this is sure to create soaring taxes and may cause unexpected social disruptions. It says the hospital in the town will soon be too small to service the town. There won't be enough permanent classrooms. Even the town's garbage dump is too small.

Elliot Lake will face almost $2 million in interest charges on rising municipal debts until 1986, because of the extra services they will have to build to meet the population boom. There's housing in the town but most of it is being developed for the mining companies' employees and it's almost impossible for people in other sectors of the economy, the service sector especially, to get housing in the area. The interim report warns that Elliot Lake's proposed water supply system from the lake previously contaminated with radiation—what is the minister doing about that?—could be poisoned again unless special protection and an emergency supply system are developed.

It also says that early estimates of population growth by mining companies were exaggerated to exert pressure on the town and the provincial government to speed up development proposals. Some problems may be controllable but subsidies from the provincial government and major mining companies will be needed.

The final environmental assessment report is expected in June and it will deal, of course, with the radiation problem from the radioactive mine wastes that have been dumped into the lakes and millions of tons of new waste that are expected from those contracts that have been referred to.

We have a serious problem, serious even if we don't refer to the problems of industrial health and safety, mining safety and the problems of industrial disease that have occurred in Elliot Lake. Let's just look at the community itself. I would really like to hear what this government is doing to deal with the problem of an emergency water supply system and the tremendous needs of expanded hard services for that town.

One of the difficulties we have had to face for years is that Tories never seem to understand that a booming economy of a resource-based town, such as Elliot Lake, is as economically unstable as a busting town. Surely the history of Elliot Lake should have shown that to this government. I'd like to know what the role of this ministry is in the planning for communities like Elliot Lake and how that planning for that particular community is related to the area around it. Obviously, the expansion of Elliot Lake has a tremendous effect on the North Shore and the communities on the North Shore.

Blind River, for instance, has been trying to get the Granary Lake Road built for years. I have raised this in every Ministry of Transportation and Communications estimate and every Northern Affairs estimate since 1975, so much so that the Minister of Transportation and Communications came into Blind River two days prior to the June 8 election in 1977 and said he was going to review the whole problem of the need for a shorter route between Blind River and Elliot Lake that would ease the housing problems in Elliot Lake and make a shorter commuting route to the mining community for those who live in Blind River. But after June 8, 1977, we never heard anything more about that from the minister except when I raised it with him.

I've raised it with this minister. I've written letters to him. The community has written letters to him. The chambers of commerce of both Elliot Lake and Blind River have written to the minister.

Mr. Ruston: It's like the Brampton charter.

Mr. Wildman: And we get lots of very nice replies saying, "We'll take that into account. We'll consider your views," but that seems to be as far as it goes.

For that matter, what is being done by this ministry to help Blind River in its planning in relation to what is happening in Elliot Lake, in relation to the proposed developments on the North Shore?

I recently attended a Porter commission hearing in Blind River where the mayor of Blind River appeared before the commission and said he didn't think their community was getting enough assistance, especially from Ontario Hydro, in planning for the kind of expansion that is already starting to take place in Blind River as a result of what is happening in Elliot Lake. And they certainly aren't getting any help from the mining companies in Elliot Lake. They won't even look at the North Shore communities. I'd like to know what's happening there.

I realize that the mayor, Mayor Gallagher, met with the minister back in late January.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We didn't see the local member there either.

Mr. Wildman: That's right. The minister knows the background of that. I was quite willing to go and the minister was quite willing to have me, I'm sure he was—I hope.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That speaks well for the local member.

Mr. Wildman: But I was talking to the mayor a couple of weeks ago and I asked him if he had received a response from the ministry on the need to upgrade the town sewer system to make it possible to have the expansion that is anticipated in Blind River.

There was an article published in the local weekly newspaper on the North Shore after that meeting, with a nice picture, in which the headline was, "Bernier Pledges Support to Town." It talked about the town's plans for sewer upgrading and how important it was for the expansion. This, by the way, was supported by the Ministry of Housing which has put out an interim report on the development of Blind River and the need for the improvement of the sewer system there to make it possible. In this article, to quote, "Mr. Bernier told the delegation that he would ask his staff to review the proposal with all the government agencies concerned to explore financial assistance."

The minister knows that in the past the Ministry of the Environment has denied assistance to Blind River for upgrading its sewer systems to allow for expansion.

Two weeks ago I spoke to the mayor and he said that as yet he hadn't received any kind of firm response from the minister. I understand that the mayor spoke to the minister at the FONOM conference—the Federation of Northern Ontario Municipalities conference—and the minister indicated he hoped to have a response for him in a week or two. I'd like the minister to tell us here what his ministry is going to do, specifically for Blind River in relation to this particular problem and, in general, for Blind River and the other North Shore communities that are expanding and feeling the pressures as a spinoff of the development in Elliot Lake.

It's of utmost importance that the minister make clear that his ministry is able, if it has the power—and here's a great chance to show that it does—to co-ordinate what the various ministries are doing for the development of the North Shore and make that kind of commitment for co-ordinated development, which he has indicated is the major purpose of his ministry.

One of the problems we as northern members face—certainly on this side of the House anyway, as we see it—is, as my colleague from Nickel Belt has said, that this government never seems to direct development in the north. All it seems to do is direct development grants to the north. I'd like to know what the ministry is doing to involve the North Shore communities themselves and their municipal officials in a co-ordinated planning exercise for that whole area.

For that matter, I'd like to know the status of the proposed North Shore economic development committee. I attended a meeting in January in Blind River with a member of the ministry, along with members of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism and municipal officials from the North Shore, to discuss the development of such an economic development committee and what kind of grant or assistance might be available from the provincial government. I would like to know what is happening with that. Also, it would be interesting if the minister could indicate what progress the Manitoulin committee, which has received funding, is making in its efforts for the development of Manitoulin Island.

In talking about the problems of a community like Elliot Lake and the spinoff for other communities, I think it would be even more important this afternoon if the minister could explain to us what really is the role of this ministry in the so-called cabinet committee on the economic future of mining communities, which was announced by the Premier (Mr. Davis) in November 1977.

Mr. Bolan: It's a joke.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He had to say something then.

Mr. Bolan: That's a smokescreen.

Mr. Wildman: The member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) raised this question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The member for Rainy River raised it two weeks before that.

Mr. Bolan: Where were you?

Mr. Wildman: I was up sloshing around in water.

He raised that with the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), I believe. The Treasurer was the Minister of Natural Resources at the time this committee was supposedly set up. The Minister of Natural Resources was supposed to be the chairman of the committee and I believe the then Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs was supposed to be the secretary of the committee. I would hope Art Herridge knows more about this committee and its activities than the Treasurer indicated he knew. He didn't even know who the chairman was. He went rushing over to talk to the present Minister of Natural Resources to ask him if he knew anything about this committee.

Mr. T. P. Reid: And he didn't.

Mr. Wildman: He didn't. He was unaware of it.

Mr. Bolan: He's the minister of falls.

Mr. Wildman: That was one of the worst examples of stumbling around looking for answers I have ever seen in this House. Obviously, if this committee has met—and the Treasurer indicated that it had met and had dealt with a number of particular communities—it is now moribund. It has done nothing. If it has done anything in terms of a general policy for development in mining communities and for assistance to those communities, I'd like to know about it. I hope the minister, whose deputy is supposed to be the secretary of the committee, can indicate.

As a matter of fact, as far as I can see, this minister is the only minister of all the ministers who were appointed to that committee who still has the same portfolio. That's an example of how fast we shift portfolios around in this government because we have such a difficult time finding the personnel to carry on the job.

Mr. Bolan: Wait until he's Minister of Energy. How would you like Energy?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No thanks.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's a shift in responsibility too.

Mr. Wildman: We need overall planning to bring stable economic development to the various regions of the north. It must be integrated into an overall economic plan designed to utilize the wealth generated in the north by our resources to diversify the economy and provide jobs. If we can do this and provide stable economic growth with the jobs that will produce, then we will be able to provide the kinds of services I have been talking about that we need.

If we use Ontario's wealth and look at how it is used now, the direction in which it is used and what is done with our wealth it is right now directed by multinationals. We all know the main purpose multinationals have is to maximize profits. Quite often, as we have seen—certainly in the example of Sudbury, and the member for Nickel Belt can testify to this much better than I—the maximization of profits in many cases works against the diversification of the economy in northern Ontario and against the development of the jobs that we need. I would like to know what this government and what this ministry are doing to deal with that situation. I don't really see it doing very much.

If we are going to have the kind of employment we need and stop the out-migration of population we have in northern Ontario then we have got to develop secondary manufacturing. Without that kind of stimulus we are not going to be able to turn our large communities, even places like Sudbury, into much more than mining camps.

A year or two ago I was at a meeting in Timmins. We think of Timmins as a community of about 50,000 people, a long-established community. We met with a number of miners there to discuss problems. There was an elderly man close to retirement and he kept referring to Timmins as a camp. He would say: "We do this in this camp and the mayor of this camp does that," and so on. When you really think about it, he was right. Communities like that are camps. Once the resource has run out, everybody is going to have to pull up stakes and leave, unless we develop something in the interim that is going to maintain the community as an economically viable unit.

Mr. Bolan: That's the colonial syndrome.

Mr. Wildman: Yes. Right now it is more profitable to extract and export our raw materials for the private corporation than it is to fabricate them into products in the north. It has been that way ever since we started development in northern Ontario and it is still that way. The only large exception we have in Ontario is the steel industry and that is the exception.

Investment in Ontario is put into mining and the concentrating of ores and into the harvesting and pulping of timber. The private exploitation of our natural resources means that our human resources are not fully developed and not fully employed and as a result we have unemployment and out-migration.

We import our extractive machinery. The member for Sudbury East has been trying for years to persuade this government that it makes sense to develop a mining machinery industry in northern Ontario. We are one of the largest mining countries in the world, and yet we import most of our mining machinery. I would like to know what this ministry has done in looking at that problem and in trying to encourage that kind of development in northern Ontario.

If we don't have it, we are going to continue to have one industry towns in the north where survival depends on the vagaries of international competition. That has been shown in Sudbury so many times that you can understand the frustration of those workers that led to the rejection of that contract proposal.

The other problem we have, and I referred to this when I was dealing with Elliot Lake, is that often the developments in northern Ontario, these kinds of mining developments especially, but also pulp and paper developments, produce massive pollution. For some reason this government has decided that when extraction produces profit that profit will go to the private companies, but when extraction produces pollution the cost of cleaning up that pollution goes to the public sector.

I wonder what this ministry is doing to try to deal with situations such as we have throughout the north in terms of dealing with our pollution problems. Our economy is cyclical, it has remained cyclical, and apparently nothing is going to be done about it. This ministry doesn't seem to be doing very much about it.

In dealing with the problems we have in the economy in northern Ontario I'd like to refer to a paper prepared by the director of long-range planning in the regional municipality of Sudbury and presented to our caucus when we held a mini-caucus in Sudbury in February. It refers to the cyclical economy of the Sudbury area but I think it really relates to all of northern Ontario. He, at one point, tries to determine whether or not you should describe the cyclical economy as a yo-yo or a roller-coaster. He comes to the conclusion, a roller-coaster is perhaps more accurate, since a yo-yo is expected to come back up, but a roller-coaster does not necessarily climb the next hill if the ride has ended and the price for a new trip has to be paid. That's really where we're at in northern Ontario.

If we look at the record of this government in the past number of years in trying to deal with this problem, it doesn't give us much encouragement. We've got little diversification in the economy. We're still mining- and forestry-based and subject to the economic swings in those sectors.

The jobs creation carried on by the government has been spotty and we continue to lag behind the rest of the province in terms of occupational choices. Of course, as I mentioned, this leads to the outflow of our young people who are seeking jobs.

I'd go on with this, but I probably know the minister's response. He's going to call me doom and gloom, which seems to be a line which is used whenever someone talks about the realities in northern Ontario. Before I go on with it, I can only say to the minister, if he wants to bring up doom and gloom, I'm going to refer to a letter I received from him about Missanabie. It is the first time I ever heard a realistic assessment of the future of a community that is threatened, from this minister. I didn't stoop to calling him gloom and doom. I would like to hear at some point what's going to be done about Missanabie.

The northern Ontario economy is declining relative to that of the province and the country as a whole. If the present trends continue, it will become an absolute decline. Between 1961 and 1971, Canada's population grew by 18.3 per cent. Ontario's population grew by 23.5 per cent. Northern Ontario's population grew by 7.5 per cent, about one third those of the province and the country as a whole. Between 1971 and 1976, Canada's population grew by 6.6 per cent, Ontario's population by 7.3 per cent, and northern Ontario's population by one per cent, about one seventh of the province and the country as a whole.

In 1966, 27,000 workers were employed to produce 42 million tons of ore in northern Ontario mines. In 1973, only seven years later, 24,000 workers were employed in producing 60 million tons of ore for those same mines. This, of course, relates to the capital intensive nature of mining but it also indicates the number of job opportunities is dwindling in the north.

Between 1967 and 1978, in forestry, the sawmill worker's output per mill doubled. Output per logger rose by over 50 per cent. This is a very interesting point dealing with the female participation rate: In 1971, the percentage of females 15 years of age and over who were in the labour force stood at 44.3 per cent in Ontario. For northeastern Ontario, it was only 35.6 per cent, which is a direct reflection of the lack of job opportunities for females in the north.

Between 1961 and 1971, immigrants contributed 24 per cent of the growth of Ontario's population. Only in northern Ontario, of five Ontario planning regions, was the net contribution of immigrants negative. Nineteen thousand more foreign-born persons left the region over this 10-year period than entered it.

If that is gloom and doom, then I am afraid I am gloomy, because those are not statistics I made up; they deal with the job opportunities and the realities in northern Ontario. The minister says in his opening statement that he is struggling with the problems of the north. Well there are some problems he should be struggling with, and I wonder what is being done.

With the exploitation by private industry of our natural resources, we have not succeeded in creating long-term development and, frankly, there is little evidence we ever will. It is too easy for a large resource corporation to do as it pleases and to invest elsewhere. We continue to be dependent on them, and they continue to export. My impression of the minister is that he is in favour of that kind of export. Concessions have been made in the past to companies that wish to continue exporting, and I just do not think this minister is committed to any alternative route.

This party is determined, if we become the government, to build an increasingly self-reliant economy so that we do not face this kind of situation. I would like to see the minister get up some time and say that he is in favour of us controlling and developing our own natural resources in the way that they have done in Saskatchewan. Otherwise, we are going to continue to face the problems that I have listed.

We have to recover from our resource taxation adequate capital to expand the economic infrastructure and to stimulate diversification; only that can give long-term economic stability to our communities. That is why, during the debate on the bill creating the ministry, we suggested the establishment of a Tomorrow Fund for northern Ontario. If we can use the income that should be derived from our resource sector for the development of an expanding manufacturing sector in the north, then we will have a bright future to look forward to. But once the resource is depleted, there is nothing, as things stand now, to prevent single-industry towns from collapsing; absolutely nothing.

If one looks at the record of the ministers of this government, they seem to accept that. Certainly the former Treasurer accepted it. As we all know, during the 1977 election campaign, he went to Sudbury and said that, as far as he was concerned, we could not expect secondary manufacturing in northern Ontario for 20 years; at one point he even said within his lifetime. I do not know whether he felt his lifetime was equivalent to 20 years but, at any rate, his lifetime in this government was not particularly long after he said it. If that is the attitude of the government, then we have nothing to hope for.

I really hope that the minister in his reply will get up and say that he is repentant, that he has changed his views and that he is going to use all of his power to try to develop the resources for northerners and for the whole province.

I do not like to be gloomy. I do not like to speak of gloom and doom, as he says. I am very optimistic that we can persuade the minister to change his position. I would like to see the minister get up and say that he really means it when he talks about the need for expansion and exploration development of new mines in the north. I would like him to say that he is willing to set up a crown corporation to carry out that exploration.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Laughren: John White promised it in 1975.

Mr. Wildman: Yes; and when the bill was introduced in July 1977, the minister said he was going to embark on a three-year program of mineral exploration and development that would produce stability and source of supply for the mining industry. I would like to know what is happening with that three-year program. We are getting close to the end of the three years, and I hope the minister will give us some report on what is happening with it. I hope he is not referring to the Northern Affairs geological survey program which deals, as far as I know, simply with aggregates. If that is what he is talking about, that is hardly the kind of exploration and development for new mines that we hope for. It is completely inadequate.

We need more primary development. We would like to know what you are doing with the Ministry of Natural Resources to try to encourage this. We need to force the companies, if we have to, to use their profits to diversify the economy of the north, and I just haven't heard the minister talking about these kinds of things.

For that matter, I fail to see how this really can be the main ministry charged with developing the economy of the north when it doesn't even control the Northern Ontario

Development Corporation. For some strange reason NODC still is under the aegis of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism. Not that I think that NODC's record is particularly effective; certainly on the North Shore it hasn't been in terms of industrial development. It has had some success in the tourist sector.

Mr. Bolan: They have a good bankruptcy record.

Mr. Wildman: Yes, they have quite a bankruptcy record. The problem with NODC, of course, is it takes a passive stance in the development loan game and, frankly, I think that is a guarantee for failure. The amounts of money that it puts into development are trivial when compared to the task that is required.

The northeastern Ontario regional strategy proposed that NODC should be broadened and strengthened. What has happened with that? Nothing. It also proposed, as a matter of fact, a regional office for NODC in Sault Ste. Marie, and we haven't seen anything of that. But that is not that unusual, because a lot of these reports that we have had over the years, away back to the 1950s, and studies that have been done by this government on the north, really very seldom lead to anything. They all sit somewhere, I suppose in the Ministry of Government Services, gathering dust.

I would really like to know what the minister is doing in terms of specific programs. If we look at the record of the minister when it comes to the wild rice development in northwestern Ontario one has to wonder. I would like to know what is happening with the serious complaints that have been raised by Treaty No. 3 in relation to the proposed changes in policy of the government on wild rice development, and what commitment this ministry has to the co-ordinated development in that area so that the native people and the other people of the region will benefit equally.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Say that again.

Mr. Wildman: I would like to know what the ministry is doing to co-ordinate that kind of development in that industry in the area so that both the native people and the other people in the area will benefit.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You are in favour of that?

Mr. Wildman: I am in favour of that, but I am in favour of it only if it is agreed to by all concerned, and the traditional rights of the natives have to be respected and there cannot be any—I hesitate to say it, but I will—favouritism involved in any kind of development in that area. Not only must there not be any favouritism, there must be seen to be no favouritism in the area. I really mean that; I think that is very important.

I would like to turn away from directly discussing the economy of the north and deal with some of the service problems we have in northern Ontario. Obviously they are related, because we have to have planned economic development in order to be able to provide northerners with the services that southerners take for granted. With me and with this party, one of our highest priorities is health care, and I would like to talk a little bit about the underserved areas program of the Ministry of Health.

Again, I am a little mystified as to this ministry's role, other than putting out press releases, in the underserved areas program and I would like to have some information about that. We have between 40 and 50 vacancies for doctors in northern Ontario, some of them in communities where we have actually built clinics to try to attract doctors. We still have those vacancies. We have vacancies for 15 dentists in northern Ontario.

My own area of Hornepayne is short one doctor; White River has a doctor but is still short of care; Wawa is experiencing serious shortages; and Dubreuilville, of course, does not have any doctor, and it took us a long time to even get a nurse practitioner there. I admit that Dubreuilville has extra problems in that it needs a bilingual person in order to deal adequately with the community and it is not easy to attract one. I would like to know what this ministry is doing in general about that problem—the problem of providing francophone medical practitioners in northeastern Ontario where they are needed. There is a tremendous shortage.

As a matter of interest I would like to know what the cycle is for the dental van. How often does it get back to a community once it has served it, or does it just arrive and then one does not see it for years? I would like to see what the minister's role is in that, or is that all covered by the Ministry of Health?

That is also true of the optical services carried out under that program. As the minister probably is aware, the Ministry of Health at one point suggested it would not extend further funding to that program. Through a number of pressures from various groups throughout the province it was extended, but I would like to know what your ministry's role was in that, because I really do not know.

I realize the minister has announced he is reinstating the bursary program to try and attract more young doctors and dentists to northern Ontario. I would like to know why he thinks it is going to be more effective now than when it was in effect before.

Generally, all these questions relate to the central one: What is the role of the Ministry of Northern Affairs in planning for health care in northern Ontario?

When I raised the question of the commitment for northern Ontario hospitals in the House with the minister, he referred me to the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell). Again, an example of the minister referring me to the lead ministry. Obviously the Ministry of Health is involved, but what role if any does the Minister of Northern Affairs have in advising and requesting the Ministry of Health to respond to the needs we perceive in northern Ontario?

Mr. Laughren: Passes the buck.

Mr. Foulds: Beat him about the head.

Mr. Wildman: When we did finally go to the Minister of Health and later to the Premier (Mr. Davis) for some assurance that we would have assistance for northern Ontario hospitals we got absolutely nowhere. The northern Ontario hospitals are threatened by the Minister of Health's arbitrary edict to ration to 4.5 beds per 1,000 of population in northern Ontario. I would like to know where on earth that 4.5 or the previous ratio came from. They seem completely arbitrary.

Mr. Foulds: They are.

Mr. Wildman: There is no justification, no explanation of why that is adequate or isn't adequate or anything. What input did this ministry have in coming up with 4.5?

When we raised that with the Premier we asked him if he could commit the government to extend the 10-bed cushion that has been given to hospitals with fewer than 100 beds, and also to ensure that a minimum of funding for the bare minimum of 4.5 beds per thousand for all communities in the north would be provided. Frankly, the Premier treated the whole matter frivolously. He did not give us a serious response. For some reason he got up and started referring to Algoma. I had not asked him about Algoma; I asked him about northern Ontario. As a matter of fact, except for Hornepayne, most of the hospitals in Algoma with the 10-bed cushion are not hurt too much by this edict by the Minister of Health, but there are certainly a lot of other hospitals in other parts of the north that are.

One cannot expect small hospitals in isolated communities to cut hospital beds without seriously undermining the health-care system for those areas, because these hospitals provide a wide range of services for large areas. We have to have flexibility. This minister just does not seem to have been too effective in getting that kind of flexibility from the Minister of Health.

I have some examples. In Hornepayne, for instance, seven beds may be cut from the present total of 13 beds in the Hornepayne Community Hospital, unless the temporary 10-bed cushion is extended beyond the end of this year. It is the same story in other hospitals: Bingham Memorial in Matheson could lose 55 per cent of its beds; Smooth Rock Falls, 42 per cent of its beds; Lady Minto in Cochrane, 38 per cent; Anson General in Iroquois Falls, 38 per cent; Notre Dame in Hearst, 36 per cent; St. Joseph's in Blind River, 25 per cent; St. Joseph's in Little Current, 38 per cent; Chapleau General, 35 per cent; Lady Dunn in Wawa, 24 per cent; Mattawa General, 39 per cent; Englehart, 35 per cent, Haileybury, 38 per cent and Kapuskasing 23 per cent.

In the northwest, Manitouwadge could lose 54 per cent of its hospital beds; Geraldton, 38 per cent; Nipigon, 33 per cent; Red Lake, 32 per cent; LaVerendrye in Fort Frances, 18 per cent.

Mr. Laughren: I thought the Minister of Northern Affairs was going to improve services in the north.

Mr. Wildman: I would like to know what input the minister had in these kinds of decisions.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You guys forced a $9 million reduction over the next year.

Mr. Wildman: Are you trying to tell us that if you had got $9 million you would have given it to the Ministry of Health to carry out the services we need for these beds in northern Ontario? Is that what you're saying? Come off it!

Mr. Laughren: What a weak minister!

Mr. Wildman: I would like to know how, if the minister takes this seriously, he expects these small hospitals to continue to operate when they face such massive bed and consequent staff cuts. A small hospital just can't cut out a ward like some urban facility might be able to do, because often we only have one ward in the first place. The thing that really is most galling is that the Minister of Health made a commitment, when he made his announcement this year, that hospitals with less than 50 beds would have a minimum increase in budget of 5.3 per cent; and yet the northern Ontario hospitals will receive an average of 3.6 per cent this year, which comes nowhere near keeping up with inflation.

The Minister of Health is reneging on his commitment to give the hospitals with less than 50 beds a minimum increase of 5.3 per cent this year. In fact, Bingham Memorial, Anson General, Geraldton District and Manitowadge hospitals, which all have less than 50 beds, are not getting any budget increase in 1979 and 1980, not one cent; so much for the commitment of the Minister of Health.

I don't hear this minister getting up anywhere in this House or in the north and saying: "We can't put up with this. We don't want it"; or saying he's going to go to the Ministry of Health and ensure that at least he lives up to his commitment for the 4.5 beds. If I seem somewhat frustrated with the ministry in that regard I am.

How does the ministry expect to be able to attract doctors to the north through its underserviced area program unless it is willing to fund the medical facilities they operate in? In relation to the list I gave you, I'd like to know what happens to those hospitals when the 10-bed cushion expires at the end of this year. How do you expect Hornepayne to operate with seven less beds when they have only 13 now? I'd like to know that.

In terms of other health-care services, let us turn to psychiatric services in the north. I read an article recently from the Medical Post of February 27 which was really alarming. It dealt with the suicide rate among young people in Ontario. The headline was "Suicide Rate Among Young up 32 Per Cent in Ontario." That's alarming enough, but then when one goes on through the article it points out that the suicide rate in northern Ontario is three to four times as high as the provincial average of nine suicides to 100,000 population.

I would like to know what we're doing to try to provide the kind of psychiatric and social services needed to deal with the social problems that contribute to this kind of statistic. Cutbacks certainly aren't going to provide new services where we don't have any now. In the area where I live, east of Sault Ste. Marie, there are absolutely no family counselling services; there are no children's counselling services. The only thing you can do is go to Sault Ste. Marie and get on the waiting list, and maybe get accepted in the Sault; maybe.

Mr. Laughren: How does the minister hold up his head in northern Ontario?

Mr. Wildman: I mentioned the problem of francophones and the need for francophone service. Imagine the problems of a francophone if he has a psychological or psychiatric problem, wants to get that treated and can't speak the same language as the practitioner; how on earth is that dealt with? If you're a francophone from Dubreuilville in my riding and you go to Sault Ste. Marie for treatment you're pretty well out of luck. You're probably a lot more likely to get treatment if you can speak Italian than you are if you can speak French.

Mr. Laughren: The minister doesn't look too concerned.

Mr. Wildman: There is a need for many other services in the north. We need group homes for the mentally and physically handicapped. We've got a group home which just started in Sault Ste. Marie to provide a few spaces for Algoma district, but there are none for the physically handicapped.

I wrote to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) about this problem and the need for a home for the physically handicapped in Algoma district. He wrote back and said he understood the need and pointed out they were going to develop one in Thunder Bay. The problem we have and the thing I wish you were doing as a minister is explaining to people and ministries in southern Ontario that it is as far from Sault Ste. Marie to Thunder Bay as it is from Sault Ste. Marie to Toronto.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's where they're putting all their northern offices.

Mr. Wildman: I'd like to know why providing service in Thunder Bay is going to help us in Algoma any more than putting service in Toronto. Some of those families can't look after their own children. You are forcing young people, especially when they get to be young adults, to separate. You're forcing those individuals to be moved away from friends and relatives. I just hope you're trying to impress upon your colleague that the distances in northern Ontario just don't relate to the formulas the Minister of Health and the Minister of Community and Social Services deal in; they just don't apply.

The same goes for care of the elderly. We have inadequate services for them. If you're from White River and Wawa in my riding and if you're an elderly couple and need institutional care, the closest home is in Sault Ste. Marie, which is 140 miles away. That means you're going to divide that couple.

When you go to the Ministry of Community and Social Services and ask them for assistance and point out the need for an institution in the north end of Algoma, they say, "We've got enough beds for 1,000 population in Algoma already." According to their formula, they do; there is no question, they do; but they're all in the southern part of Algoma.

I think one of the biggest mistakes we made in this province was dividing the road map in half and putting northern Ontario on the back.

Mr. Bolan: They still don't know where it is.

Mr. Wildman: The problem is they are drawn to two different scales. When the people in the south look at the northern part of the map they don't realize what the distances really are.

I think in ministries like the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Community and Social Services we have a rather slow-moving bureaucracy which I would hope the Ministry of Northern Affairs is doing something to speed up. However, I'm not too encouraged when I read an article in a magazine called NorAct. I don't know how many of you have seen NorAct; it's a new magazine published in Hearst and Kapuskasing. It deals with northern Ontario problems in development, and certainly its editorial stance is not New Democrat. There's an article here that deals with homes for the aged.

It starts off: "Every letter we've had from the Ministry (of Community and Social Services) is a stall," claims the administrator for the Cochrane District Homes for the Aged for funding a third such home, proposed for Hearst.

"And previous announcements by the ministry about provincial aid to help deinstitutionalize residential care for the aged are more and more looking like 'false promises,' the official, Ken Wollan, also the board's secretary-treasurer, said.

"The Hearst home, part of a package proposal initiated last fall by the homes board of management, would be unique: a regional 12-bed satellite home attached to the Sisters of Providence-owned Notre Dame Hospital. Its location would be the modern two-storey vacated Sisters' residence at the hospital's south side."

What we are talking about here basically is that the facility is already there; it won't cost the ministry any capital funds to provide this facility, it's being donated; yet they don't seem to be getting anywhere.

"A yearly operating budget of $80,250 is sought from the ministry to operate the proposed Hearst home. Of this, $12,825 would come from the 12 participating municipalities, all of whom have agreed to provide funds based on an equalized assessment formula.

"Remaining funds are to come from the residents and the province, the latter's share being $30,000." The Cochrane District Health Council has approved it and has endorsed both the Hearst and Smooth Rock Falls project.

What we're talking about is an operating cost of $30,000 for a new facility. It's just not getting anywhere.

They say: "In addition, the board has asked the minister"—that being Rene Brunelle, and Keith Norton—"to approach Northern Affairs for a contingency capital fund in case of 'minor capital expenditures of an unforeseen nature,' Mr. Wollan said. So far there has been no reply from Leo Bernier's ministry."

If this is an example of how responsive this ministry is going to be in trying to get through the red tape that is produced by other ministries in southern Ontario, it's not very encouraging.

This article finishes off by saying: "Keeping senior citizens in their home community, providing community projects, and deinstitutionalizing services have since 1975 been goals emphasized by Community and Social Services, he said, referring to former minister James Taylor's announcement at the McIntyre Community Centre in Schumacher that year to fund such non-institutional residential care. Mr. Wollan says: 'So far, nothing has materialized. Maybe these are all false promises.'

"In the meantime, Mr. Wollan and the homes board await a reply from Mr. Norton's ministry. 'If the province will not approve the regional satellite home for the aged in Hearst or the elderly persons centre in Smooth Rock Falls—then we feel that they (the ministry) are not really concerned for the needs of the elderly in northern Ontario.'"

It's the same case in Wawa, as far as I'm concerned. The Ministry of Health, to be fair to it, has expressed some interest in providing institutionalized care for those who need it in Wawa, but we're getting absolutely nowhere with the Ministry of Community and Social Services. I don't think it's because the minister is some kind of ogre or he just isn't interested; frankly, it's because of the Treasurer and the fact that the ministry just isn't being given the funds. There is nothing, as far as I can see, that the Minister of Northern Affairs is doing to try to get those funds.

When we talk about the problems of services in organized communities in the north, we have serious difficulties, but when we look at the unorganized communities and the lack of response from government, then we really are discouraged.

In unorganized communities we lack proper water and sewage facilities, garbage and waste disposal, fire protection, street lighting, recreation and so on. In some areas it is particularly a problem. My colleague the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) can talk about the problems of Gogama and the water problems there.

We have the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund. When it was first announced the then Treasurer, Darcy McKeough, said it was going to deal with fire protection problems and also water problems. But when you look at the amount of money that has been given to this fund over the years it is absolutely ridiculous to say it would deal with water problems. There just isn't enough money there.

That program, the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund, was really disorganized when it started out. I think it was an admirable attempt to deal with fire protection problems in the unorganized communities, but it was announced prior to the planning. The announcement was made, funds were distributed and then they started thinking about how they could put the program together and what guidelines they should have for it. Because of the confusion which resulted, some communities were hurt.

Many communities have really benefited under the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund, and I congratulate the ministry for the work they have done on that. A number of communities have received fire equipment and training and so on, but a number that had gone ahead on their own before seem to have been penalized because of that. In other words, the communities that didn't have any fire protection and hadn't really taken the initiative to try to provide it on their own, in some cases did receive fire protection equipment. Others that had proceeded on their own through private donations, volunteer help and so on, when they applied either didn't get what they applied for or got just a portion of it because they already had some equipment, even if that equipment was inadequate.

I know the deputy minister and officials of the ministry know the community I am thinking about. I am talking specifically about Searchmont in my riding. That community went ahead and worked very hard on its own to obtain a pumper truck and so on. It applied for and got some assistance from the ministry when the program was first developed. But that pumper is inadequate; it can't make the hills in the wintertime, it doesn't carry enough water. When they get going and actually get a fire under control they run out of water and have to leave to get more water; when they come back the house has burned down.

This government and this ministry won't give them the equipment they asked for. The excuse they used at one point was that there was a study for a municipal organization being carried on by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs in the area. The fact is they got equipment even though that study was going on at the time; to argue they can't get more equipment now I think is somewhat ridiculous.

I know the minister has been carrying on meetings throughout northern Ontario, and I have attended a number of them, to deal with the establishment of the local services board the Unorganized Communities Association of Northern Ontario has proposed. I think I have already told the minister, but I want to put on the record that we will support the principle of the proposal, especially because it is permissive. It is not something that is being imposed, as was proposed in Bill 102.

But I think the flood situation and the government's response to the problems of flooding in northern Ontario have proved that a one-for-one matching is completely inadequate. The government itself has realized that in terms of the flood situation and gone to four to one for northern Ontario. One to one is something we just cannot accept and will not accept. It is important for us to put that on the record prior to the government introducing the legislation. We support the principle, we think it gives the community the option if they want it, it gives them the ability if they wish to take the initiative to do it, to provide services they deem necessary for the community, but one for one is just not acceptable.

The whole bill as it is proposed seems to be patterned after the local roads boards legislation, right up until we get to the funding portion. The local roads boards get two for one; but suddenly, when he got to that portion of the local roads board legislation the minister reverted and said, "We'd better look at what the municipalities get." He averaged it out and came to the conclusion that municipalities on average get about one for one, or 50 per cent; somewhere in that range. Therefore, he said, that is what we will give to the unorganized communities that organize local services boards. It would have been a lot more sensible, since he is patterning the legislation after the local roads boards legislation and it's designed to deal with the problems of unorganized communities that have small populations, low tax bases and difficulty in raising money, to have gone all the way with the local roads boards legislation at least.

Mr. Laughren: The minister will probably cut back the local roads boards grant to make them even; that's his style.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Who spends the money on local roads boards?

Mr. Wildman: MTC does a lot of that work.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's right; they do it all.

Mr. Wildman: MTC does a lot of the work for the small municipalities on their roads too; that is immaterial. And the municipalities do not get two for one.

I have some questions that have resulted from the meetings I have attended on the local services boards proposal. First off, from what the officials have said at these meetings, it seems unclear whether the ministry will help to fund the difference between what are standard grants from a lead ministry on a particular project and the total cost of the project.

For instance, under the new program of the Ministry of the Environment for assistance in rehabilitating wells, I believe they will fund up to 75 per cent of the cost of improving private water supply in rural communities; the other 25 per cent has to be raised locally.

My question is this: If there is a local services board that applies for funding under that program, will it be eligible for 12.5 per cent funding from the Ministry of Northern Affairs over and above the 75 per cent when the proposed one-for-one funding is taken into account? In other words, will the one-for-one that the minister is proposing apply over and above the standard grant from the lead ministry? I would hope that is the case.

I have some very serious problems about the suggestions made for how the local services boards should raise funds. It seems to me that user fees are not particularly fair for some services; it would make more sense to relate them to assessment. It would seem fairer if the whole thing were based on the local roads boards proposal, since local roads boards use that system. But I do not particularly like the other proposals either. For instance, in terms of bake sales and bingos, I really wonder how much money can be raised by bake sales and bingos. It seems to me that the minister here is trying to have his cake and eat it too. Really, it must be two for one, and we have to make more funding available.

There are a couple of other things that I found a little alarming in some of the meetings. It was suggested at one point, for instance, that there might be a local services board but a particular service might not be needed for the whole area; so services could be provided in specific areas and, if they were using user fees, for instance, the people using that service then would pay for it and the others would not. That seems rather complex; I know it relates to some of the things that municipalities do in terms of service areas and so on, but it does seem complex.

The other thing that worried me is there was a suggestion that at the annual meeting of these proposed boards they could change and adjust their boundaries if they wished. It seems to me that in order to have some kind of stability in terms of raising funds and providing services, you are going to have to set the boundaries for a certain period of time, five years or something like that, so you would have some stability and the ability to plan ahead.

I won't make any further comments on the local services board proposal except to reiterate we support the principle, especially since it's permissive, but we are unhappy about the proposed funding.

Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this I said I felt the Ministry of Northern Affairs is an important portfolio, but in order for it to be important and to carry out an important role it must develop an active planning, co-ordinating and development function. It must really have real influence on the government and on government policy and be able to demonstrate that it does. Our party has a great deal of confidence in northern Ontario. We have unparalleled natural resources, and we have the human resources; if we were to have the will we could have economic development that would surpass most of the countries of this world.

Mr. Laughren: Hear, hear; we are all set.

Mr. Wildman: But we face great problems. We have high unemployment. We export capital, we have dwindling population, and we lack basic hard services. When you put that with the cutbacks in already inadequate health and social services, the picture becomes far more bleak than it should be in northern Ontario.

I don't think we need any more studies of the north. What we need is real development. There's a need for change, a real change in policies of this government. Before our resources run out, the present pattern must be changed to build a diversified economy. We have got to use the profits generated by our resources to develop processing and manufacturing that will assist in paying for our services. If the Ministry of Northern Affairs can do that in changing government policy it will have our support.

Thank you Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Does the honourable minister have any comments in reply to the members for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) and Algoma?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think I have a few comments to make. I appreciate the input of both members, the member for Nipissing and the member for Algoma. We would hope, as northerners, the attendance in the House today is not any indication of what other members think of our problems in northern Ontario.

I think they are very real problems. I think it's fair to say we are solving some of them, but we are not going to solve all the problems overnight as some people seem to think we can. I can tell you the challenges are there and we are meeting those challenges head on.

I want to go back. The member for Nipissing raised a number of points in his opening comments concerning the funds underspent in any one particular year and how they are carried over into the next. If he's not aware, the process is we get the approval of the Ontario Legislature for one fiscal year, from April 1 to March 31. Unspent funds lapse automatically at the end of that period so there's no carryover past March 31 of the funds you approve today.

However, there is commitment for expenditures that extend on. Highway contracts are typical examples of contracts that have been called in this fiscal year and are carried over into the succeeding year. Airport construction is another typical example of contracts called in one fiscal year and carried over into the next.

In connection with the actual budget, vis-à-vis the budget and the actual expenditures from last year, those figures are being pulled together right now. Before we have finished our estimates I hope to have a detailed, unaudited report for both members so they can compare what we passed last year.

[5:00]

Members will recall that last year we approved something like $139 million. There were some changes, of course, with the $9 million reduction in our budget because of the OHIP request and the OHIP problems we ran across at that time. Also there was the operation of norOntair. For example, because of improvements in the service their request was reduced by $374,000, which made some specific changes in overall actual expenditures. I hope to have those by Friday, if we can pull them together by that time. I will get them to you just as soon as I can.

The member made comments on payments to other ministries, inquiring how we block out our funding. I would point out to the honourable member that about $95 million of the $141 million we are debating and discussing during these estimates is actually transferred to other ministries which actually do the work.

Highways are a good example; or community or regional priority budgets through the Ministry of the Environment or the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. That is the amount transferred, but in transferring those funds we just don't transfer them at their request. The priorities are established within the Ministry of Northern Affairs. As members well know, we work very closely with all ministries in carrying out our responsibility for co-ordination; and it is through this process that we are able to pressure or force or twist or level, I suppose—you use any word you want—to ensure the northern input is recognized, because the dollars follow those priorities we establish within the Ministry of Northern Affairs. It is a way of keeping administrative costs to a minimum, and of course avoiding duplication of any worthwhile programs that we may want to implement and to push forward in that fiscal year.

The member for Nipissing raised a question with respect to the general manager of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. I just want to read a short statement into the record. I know that when I do the member will understand my reason for it.

In his remarks, the member for Nipissing raised a number of questions which related to the dismissal of the former general manager of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission. As lawyers for the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission and the former general manager of the commission are presently discussing this matter, any remarks that I could make could be—

Mr. Wildman: Prejudicial.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I just can't pronounce that word—prejudicial; I can't get my tongue around it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You mean he is going to get a golden handshake too, like Passmore did?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Any remarks I make might be prejudicial to the interest of either party involved in these discussions. So I think it would be very inappropriate for me at this time, of course, to make any statements along these lines and somewhere down the road—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Do you make the statement when you pay them off?

Mr. Bolan: And how much?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I wouldn't mind doing that certainly; and advising members just what we agreed to, because there are certain problems that arise when any severance of this kind takes place. If it is before the courts; I think members realize that I could prejudice anything that may occur at that particular time, so I hope you will bear with me when I make those comments.

I wanted just to follow up on the discussions that the members did touch on. They were very numerous, indeed. Some were helpful, for which I express my appreciation.

There was a comment from the honourable member with regard to the Bell Telephone takeover of the communications section of the ONTC. I am certainly not aware of any move in this direction.

We hear rumours surfacing in northeastern Ontario once in a while that Bell Telephone is interested. I think we all agree that the communications arm of the ONTC is very profitable. It is well run and one must compliment the commission on the way they handle that particular function. I am not aware of any overtures by Bell Telephone. In fact I suspect the commission would violently oppose any takeover by that particular company. It may well be, I suppose, that since ONTC is so successful in this area, it should be taking over the Bell Telephone section in northeastern Ontario, I don't know.

Mr. Wildman: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am sure you like that comment.

Mr. Foulds: You expropriated the Parry Sound-Muskoka—

Mr. Wildman: The socialist from Parry Sound persuaded the government

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. I have to say that was outside the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission's area of jurisdiction. It would have been too difficult for the ONTC to really operate that.

Mr. Wildman: Is Parry Sound in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, we look at Parry Sound as being a part of the area we serve with many of our programs.

You mentioned Via Rail. I have to say we have had some very preliminary discussions with Via Rail, in a very general way. I think they made it very clear to us their first responsibility is to make sure the major routes of the CNR and the CPR are properly in place from a passenger point of view. The transcontinental and the other routes they have, such as Montreal to Windsor, are their first priority. They would deal with the provincially-run passenger routes somewhere down the road, and there are a number of those across Canada.

There was no commitment on either side as to what would happen. It was just a very general discussion. I think I will just leave it at that point; if something comes of those discussions it will be somewhere down the road. Certainly from my own point of view I do not see any major changes.

I have to say, however, my own assumption and my own calculations are that Via is embarked in the right direction. I am hearing some very complimentary remarks in northern Ontario about the services being offered by Via Rail. I think the attitude of getting Canadians back on the rails is a good one. Even the attitude of the running crews has improved tremendously. Hopefully, this will encourage more Canadians to get back to the rails and to move across Canada using that particular mode of transportation.

Mr. Wildman: I would like to see the ministry on the rails.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Once in a while we are. Moosonee Lodge: I think one should look at the factual data from Moosonee Lodge. I guess I can put it very simply. Bishop McGarity from Moosonee said to me just a couple of weeks ago in a discussion about the Moosonee-Moose Factory area that Moosonee Lodge is really a husband-and-wife operation. It is not that large; although it is certainly one that could be improved and built upon. He agreed the private sector route we have taken is the right one. The ONTC is certainly in the transportation business, but the private sector should be directly involved in a small lodge at Moosonee. There was no disruption of the service, nor any desire on behalf of the ONTC to diminish services in selling Moosonee Lodge.

The Chief Commanda ferry is another operation we are looking at very carefully and very cautiously, particularly when one thinks that last year alone the loss was about $80,000. It does an excellent job in promoting tourism in the North Bay area; there is no question about that and we realize that. The chairman, in his remarks to the North Bay Chamber of Commerce, made it very clear that in no way would we disband our involvement with the Chief Commanda if we could not get the private sector to take it over and operate it with equal or improved service to what we are offering now; but I have to tell the members when I look at other such tourist boats across the province of Ontario that are operating outside the public sector. I see they are all making money. I have to question and I did question the ONTC, as to why, just because it is in the public sector, it is losing money. The little operation at Parry Sound has gone out to buy another boat. They have two boats on now and they are making money.

In my own area of Kenora we have the Argyle Second operated by the private sector. It does a tremendous job and it operates at a profit. I can assure the member for Nipissing we are not going to abandon the Chief Commanda in any way, shape or form. We would just like to get out from under the deficit. Again, I suppose because of our political philosophy, we think the private sector has a role to play. We want to make sure that however and whenever this occurs, it is done in a way that maintains the excellent service and the attraction we have in the North Bay area. It is not a high priority with the ONTC, or even myself or the Ministry of Northern Affairs, but it is something that we have to keep looking at all the time because, if those valuable resources can be channelled in some other way to the benefit of northeastern Ontario, then I think they should, rather than going for a complete loss; it is something that perhaps the private sector can operate at a profit.

I do not know whether the member is fully aware, but norOntair has moved ahead rapidly. It has already become the transportation success story of the last decade. There is no question about that when one looks at the steady increase in passenger volume in the past few years. Last year we carried more than 100,000 passengers, and this year we hope to exceed that. In fact, as I said on Friday in Atikokan, to the Northern Ontario Municipal Association, last month we exceeded all expectations and came out of the red. We are in the black now for the first time; there was no subsidy last month for norOntair. I think that speaks well for that organization, which has expanded rapidly across northern Ontario.

In fact, on May 30 I, along with the Speaker of this House, will be in northwestern Ontario to inaugurate flights from Sault Ste. Marie and Wawa to Terrace Bay and Geraldton. We will add those two communities; they are already on now, but we are going up to the inaugural ceremony on May 30. Later this year, we will be tying Hornepayne into that run, which will bring to 20 the total number of communities where norOntair is providing service to the people of northern Ontario.

As a third-level carrier, it is meeting with a tremendous amount of acceptance; in fact, so much so that already we are looking at at least one area, and maybe two, where we could put on an aircraft larger than the Twin Otter. I do not want to identify any routes for fear of raising hopes and expectations, but we are looking at the entire area. I will simply say that the one route that has the best possibility of succeeding at this time is in the northeastern part of the province, and not in the northwest.

Regarding local services boards, the member for Nipissing did make some comments and raised some questions which I will try to answer in my brief remarks. I believe he stated that there was one adverse reaction to the taxation feature. I would have to say to him that, as he knows, we have been holding meetings right across northern Ontario—we have had something like 33 public meetings to date—and communities, I have to say with a great deal of pride, are generally enthusiastic about our proposal. They welcome the provision that would leave the method of fund raising up to them so that they can shape for themselves the type of program and the type of community they want; it is not left to the provincial government to decide how they will do it.

I think the member for Algoma pointed out that the permissive aspect of it is something that is very acceptable to people living in unorganized areas. They have a great fear of government, and I guess they sometimes look at government as a threat, rather than as a help, to them.

There are three different fund-raising options. One is the status quo or voluntary option. The second is the user-pay option, where people actually will get services from the local services board, and they will pay. The third is the taxation or assessment option, which would be tied to the provincial land tax and which would be collected by the Ministry of Revenue and passed to the Ministry of Northern Affairs; we would add our subsidy to it and return it to the community.

I just want to make one point in this connection. It is going to take a period of time to get the system working. The computer system in the Ministry of Revenue has to be brought into line, because there will be an addition to their assessment. I am confident that with the enthusiastic support of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs and the Ministry of Revenue in this new proposal, which is a little different from what normal governments are used to—it is not a rigid type of proposal but something that is a little foreign to some ministries and to some people in government. We would assist on a 50-50 basis as has been discussed on a number of occasions.

The comment that we should be tied to the local roads boards is an interesting one. I would point out that local roads boards do get two-for-one assistance, but those funds are spent totally by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. In other words, they collect their $1 and the ministry puts $2 with it and actually spends it. There's not much autonomy in the local roads board. There is with the statute of labour board. The statute of labour board gets one for one. They collect it and, if they don't want to hire MTC graders or snow ploughs, they don't have to. They can get out and contract on their own. It gives a little more autonomy and we follow the statute of labour board for that reason.

Mr. Wildman: Do you agree with MTC's position that it would like to get rid of the statute of labour boards that are left?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't know. I don't think that's the feeling. You will recall some time ago I suggested we piggyback on the local roads board and the statute of labour board, and MTC officials strongly felt that after all these years they had got both of these organizations and programs operating very effectively and efficiently in unorganized areas and didn't want to upset them. They said: "Go your own route. It's working well. It's taken us years to get this far and we'd like to let it run the way it is because it's now operating on all six cylinders." I compliment them for that.

Mr. Foulds: Six?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Six, yes; we don't have eight cylinders any more. They're too costly and energy-consuming; we've all gone on to six cylinders.

Mr. B. Newman: Dinosaurs.

Mr. Foulds: Are all Ontario government ministers' limousines six cylinders?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Wildman: They're all diesels.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: About the provincial land tax, there were some interesting comments about its use. I believe the member for Nipissing suggested that maybe those funds should form a portion of the local services board. In other words, they shouldn't have to contribute further, but that we should be using their funds.

Many people in northern Ontario don't accept the fact they are getting anything in return for the provincial land tax. I don't think it's ever been pointed out to them just what the province does on their behalf. I've been doing it more and more. After they're told I think they accept it. It's not a large tax.

Mr. Wildman: What does it do on their behalf?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: At least there is something coming back.

Mr. Wildman: What?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As an example the provincial police service.

Mr. Bolan: The same thing applies to the provincial police on Highway 400. Is there a provincial land tax on Highway 400? Come on now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: But this is community. If you're in an organized community, if you're in North Bay, part of your tax goes to your town police.

Mr. Bolan: That's right, and I see it.

Mr. Wildman: But if you're in a rural municipality you don't pay towards the OPP.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As Joe Clark would say, "Now let me finish."

Mr. Foulds: I wouldn't use him as your model.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: A week from tomorrow we will.

Mr. Foulds: No matter what the results are a week from tomorrow, I wouldn't take him as your model. In northern Ontario he ain't a big winner.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Another item that is fully borne by the province on behalf of people in unorganized areas is the cost of welfare.

If you're in an unorganized municipality 20 per cent of those welfare costs are borne by the municipality, but that is totally borne by the province in an unorganized community. Payments for the homes for the aged are borne by the province; the costs of children's aid societies are borne by an organized municipality, but there is no direct cost to the people of unorganized areas.

Another area that was pointed out to me just the other day was hospitals. Hospital construction in northern Ontario is funded five sixths to one sixth. In southern Ontario, it's two thirds to one third. Those people in the unorganized areas do get help.

Mr. Wildman: There aren't too many hospitals in unorganized areas.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know, but the province does pay their share by that extra funding. If you look at all those things, you will see there are benefits coming back. Maybe they are not as direct as you and I would like to see them, but nevertheless they are there.

I would like to make one correction. The member for Nipissing mentioned that about $15 million was raised by provincial land taxes. It's $1.5 million.

Mr. Bolan: I lost a zero.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, you lost a zero. The decimal point was just moved over.

Mr. Foulds: That's Liberal economics.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: When you think that the provincial land tax is $1.5 million while our ICAF fund is a half a million dollars, the balance is reasonable.

Those are a few of the points I would just like to put on the record for the benefit of the members.

To the member for Algoma I say that I certainly share his concern and I appreciate his concern for northern Ontario. I think he expresses a point of view that in some instances many northerners have, a concern about where we're going. It's fair to say we are making progress as we go into our third year of operation; and I say that with a great deal of pride.

I am pleased he accepts the role of the Ministry of Northern Affairs as a co-ordinating one. It's not easy. It's a new role for a ministry to be a co-ordinating agency to move around other ministries and to lean on them in a number of different ways. That role is slowly evolving.

Mr. Wildman: Lean a little harder.

Mr. Foulds: You've got the weight, lean a little harder.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Of course the lever is in the budget, there's no question about that; but it's coming.

I have to look at our role in the Cobalt fire disaster. That's an area where we moved in very quickly. While it was a fire and as such was the responsibility of the Ministry of Natural Resources under the lead ministry concept and under the emergency measures planning we have, we moved in because the Ministry of Housing was involved, and the Ministry of the Environment was involved with regard to the sewer and water problems. It was obvious this was a place we could move in and co-ordinate, which we did very effectively.

Mr. Wildman: That's true of a flood too, though.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'll get to that point. Kashechewan was another area where there were a number of ministries involved in operations directly relating to a flood, but here there were housing problems and transportation problems so it was a natural for us to assist in co-ordinating the effort.

With regard to the flooding at Field; we were there, as you well know, we were there in full force. In fact the reeve's first contact was the Northern Affairs officer. The latter carried the ball and made immediate contact with other ministries, carrying out in a small way at the start a co-ordinating responsibility to get the thing rolling.

Mr. Wildman: You weren't there at Iron Bridge or Searchmont.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In fact the military was called in from North Bay with the co-operation of the Ministry of Natural Resources and our ministry. Once that is done, of course, Natural Resources, which has the expertise, the equipment, the staff and the knowledge to deal with these kinds of problems moved in very quickly. In fact the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) was there. I'm particularly pleased the Premier (Mr. Davis) saw the hardship that was caused, and he too, made a point of visiting the scene. It's that kind of concern we in the Ministry of Northern Affairs can express to our colleagues and bring to the attention of people such as the Premier.

I agree with you that the four-to-one kind of assistance is realistic in these times. Sure I know how difficult it is to raise funds, even on a one-to-one basis. Field, as well as the other communities, will have difficulty raising its share. I would suggest they embark on a very ambitious campaign, such as Cobalt did and Sudbury did a few years ago, and get other municipalities to help. They will contribute. I know if a very strong letter went out to the people in northwestern Ontario there would be a response. There was a good response for a small disaster up there. People are very human and very receptive to that type of a request.

The member for Algoma dealt with the Northern Affairs officers. In one sense there was some question about their role and their decision-making responsibilities. They are there to assist northerners in a very real way. I was particularly pleased that the member for Algoma recognized the thousands of people they have helped and the thousands of problems they have solved over the course of a year. There is no question about it, they are adept in dealing with not only provincial matters but federal matters as well.

As we move into new programs, such as the local services board, there will be a much greater role for the Northern Affairs officers to play, because they will be going into those unorganized communities, giving them leadership and guidance and help to bring their areas together, to make that contact with our ministry that we require and so they will be very, very valuable. They have been valuable already in setting up these meetings we have had right across the north.

I see down the road a greater role for the Northern Affairs officers than we ever had before—not just what they have been doing in the past, although they have been doing it very, very well—to assist them with all kinds of information in resolving all kinds of problems in which they are so experienced. So I have to say to you there will be a much greater role for those people to play in the months and years ahead as we go to these very ambitious programs for northern Ontario.

You questioned what we are doing for such places as Atikokan, and I am glad—

Mr. Wildman: I didn't question it; I just wanted to make sure you were aware of it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is a situation where we had a resource industry in a single-resource community; we were very much aware the resources were fast coming to an end, the resources were being depleted, and there would be a finite time to the life of that community.

There were all kinds of rumours floating around that those 6,000 people would be reduced to 2,000; it would be just a tourist community; and nothing would happen, we would walk away and leave it. That has not been the case. I was in Atikokan on Friday and I was elated to see the attitude of that community. My ministry is playing a very major role in assisting them.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Good people.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, they are. The member for Rainy River agrees with me. The attitude there is nothing less than fantastic, really. They know they have a problem, they have known it for a number of years and they are dealing with it and they are dealing with it themselves.

Mr. Foulds: You've known it for a number of years and you've done nothing.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That is not true. The development of a Hydro station at Atikokan didn't happen by accident. Those things just don't happen. They are part of a long-term concern.

Mr. Foulds: In 1971 they wanted to put it in Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We could be down here 1,200 miles away from Atikokan, but it is the local attitude that really counts. I take my hat off to the reeve of Atikokan and, indeed, to his council and all the people in Atikokan for taking a very positive attitude to their problems.

We are in there and we are in there in a big way. There is no question about it. My ministry is working very, very closely with their new industrial development officer, assisting him not only with financial resources but with the expertise to walk through the various levels of government and to get answers to some of their questions. I think that is an excellent example of what we can do as a ministry in a co-ordinating role.

Elliot Lake is a different situation. As the honourable member knows there is a boomtown attitude there—a very positive one, one where they can fall into the various Ontario government programs, the housing program, the Ministry of the Environment—

Mr. Wildman: Your own Northern Affairs officer can't find a place to live in Elliot Lake.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, but there is a normal growth, maybe an accelerated growth, of a community so that they can apply and get attention and assistance under these various normal government programs, which they are doing, and are doing very, very effectively.

Now the spillover is what happens at Blind River? That is a concern.

Mr. Wildman: Are you going to tell me today?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes—well, I can tell you we are working very, very closely with the mayor of Blind River and his council and I am hoping to have something positive in the not too distant future in that regard. We have been in there in a big way. That treatment plant that is in Blind River; Northern Affairs saw the need for that. It is completed now, I believe. But there are problems, of course, with storm sewers; the infiltration into their system is a very real one.

Mr. Haggerty: They're looking for a fire truck, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We think Blind River has a role to play, but how big a role as it relates to the Elliot Lake development? So those are things that we are working on.

On the matter of the Granary Lake road I don't want to lead the member for Algoma down the garden path, but at this point in time I have to say to you the cost benefits are not there. I put it very squarely to the people of Blind River, "If you had $12 million to spend in your area, where would you spend it?" The immediate response was, "Sewers and water. The road is somewhere down the way; we accept that." Those are the kinds of decisions that have to be made; they are difficult ones.

[5:30]

Mr. Wildman: You've been talking about it for 20 years though.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I know. Sure we'd like to make decisions immediately; and if the funds were available we would, there's no question about that.

The member for Algoma brought up the question about the overall northeastern Ontario strategy, where we're going in industrial development. I'm sure you're aware we're working very closely with the Municipal Advisory Committee. They are a very active group and we've recognized them formally. We'll be giving them, I think, in excess of $50,000 this year. We have an office established in Sault Ste. Marie, we have office space for them. I believe the furniture is there now, and in co-operation with my ministry they are now looking for an executive director to work right in Sault Ste. Marie and to be their key person for northeastern Ontario in pulling together the needs, on an industrial and regional basis. That's a very positive step through which we will get input from the various communities. It's not something we're doing. The executive director will not be a civil servant; he will be a representative of MAC. The Municipal Advisory Committee, as you know, is made up of municipal politicians, and they will have control of that executive director. Of course in our role as the interface with government, we'll be working very closely with them.

I'm glad the honourable member for Algoma brought forward his concerns about health matters in northern Ontario. They are areas we have identified early in our existence as members will recognize.

We brought back the bursary program. It was in place several years ago, but was cancelled for reasons of which I'm not aware. At that time it was $3,000 for the last two years of schooling for a dentist or a doctor. We've increased that to $5,000. They receive $5,000 for the last two years of their studies on the express understanding they enter into a contract with us to spend two years somewhere in northern Ontario.

We've had ongoing discussions with the Ministry of Health with regard to the needs for improved health services in northern Ontario. Dr. Copeman informed me the other day if he had 25 doctors he could fill all the needs of northern Ontario at this point in time. He doesn't have them, but he's looking right across this country and he's working very hard. In fact just the other day I think, he pulled two out of Saskatchewan, believe it or not. One of them is going into my own area of Deer Falls, for which I am very grateful.

I want to tell the honourable members that just a short time ago, I signed approximately 60 of those agreements with doctors and dentists. I think there were something like 47 doctors signed into the bursary program and the balance were dentists. We now have some 60 students in the dental schools and in the medical schools who will be going to northern Ontario when they graduate. I realize that's a couple of years down the road, but nevertheless it's a positive step forward.

We're going to keep that bursary program in place for a considerable period of time to make sure we do have a sufficient number of doctors and dentists. It may well be we'll expand it into other fields to make sure we get the other special services we require in northern Ontario.

Another area we've moved into in a very aggressive way has been in operation of our dental vans, as the honourable members know. I think one of the questions was who really has jurisdiction over the van itself. The Ministry of Health does that. Once we provide the hardware and have identified the problem, we turn the van over to them. They supply the dentists and closely monitor the communities they service. We have an arrangement with the Ontario Dental Association that we will not go within, I think it's 15 or 25 miles of a practising dentist. So they're on board too and are working very closely with us. In fact I met with the officers of the Ontario Dental Association just last week to share with them some of my own personal concerns with regard to practice in northern Ontario and how we can improve. They are anxious to do their part too. In fact, on this point, we have completed a recent study of the Rainy River area as it relates to dental requirements in the Kenora-Rainy River area.

Mr. T. P. Reid: When are we going to get some action?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That report is going to be released. I don't think it gives us anything that we are not aware of, but at least it documents further the problems that we have in our particular area that will be brought to the attention of the Ontario Dental Association and the Ministry of Health to respond to. Another area that we moved in again this year is the funding for the hearing van that is moving across northern Ontario, and if any of the members are interested I could give them a schedule for the next two years.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I would like one.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Okay, I will get you a schedule.

Mr. Foulds: What van is that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Hearing, hard of hearing, yes. It will move around northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Better hit Rainy River.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's a very elaborate and very efficient van, one that we felt strongly enough about to put up the necessary funds to make sure that it stays in northern Ontario for the next two years.

The member for Algoma asked what we are doing with the medical facilities, and here again we regarded that as a top priority. It is all right to have doctors and dentists but they have to have some place to practise, and if they are going to move up there for one or two years it's obvious they are not going to make a major investment in the facilities and then move on. That is one of our problems, the movement of these professional people.

We have moved in that direction in assisting such communities as Ignace, Nakina, Geraldton, and we have requests now before us from Red Lake and from Rainy River. The formula is not a fixed one. As an example, I think in Geraldton it was an 80-20 deal. In Ignace, I think it was a two-for-one deal. We respond to the community's needs. If they can raise a certain amount of funds themselves and make sure of course that those using the building will pay the going rent. We are not assisting in any way to give a free ride to the professional people, but they want some place decent to practise, so that's an area that we are moving in.

Mr. Foulds: Like good hospitals.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Like good hospitals. The question of housing for some of these professional people in some of our northern communities is before us. I have to say that my priority would be to get the medical facilities in place first. I think the community can look after the housing itself. Hopefully they could round up sufficient homes to look after those people, at least in the interim until we get the medical facilities firmly in place right across northern Ontario. I think we will have more requests for that type of assistance.

Health services generally is an area that we have been actively involved in. Our relationships with the Ministry of Health are excellent, since the former Deputy Minister of Northern Affairs is now the Deputy Minister of Health. He carries with him the concerns that he had when he was with my ministry—

Mr. Wildman: Did he carry the cutbacks too?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, he has responded to that very quickly in that there will be an overall review of all those hospitals that have 100 beds or less. All the hospital boards and the administrators are coming together to look at their specific problems and, of course, many of them are in northern Ontario. It's not a general problem in northern Ontario. Take North Bay—and I am sorry the member is not here—but there is no problem in North Bay. There are specific areas that have specific problems and certainly those will be dealt with.

Mr. Foulds: Thunder Bay?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I think that's being dealt with very effectively.

Mr. Wildman: What about the 10-bed cushion?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am sure the Minister of Health will have something to say about that. I have to assure members that those northern problems don't go by unnoticed. While we may not stand up in this Legislature and expound to any great lengths as to the specific and unique problems of northern Ontario, I can assure members that the staff of the Ministry of Northern Affairs, from the minister to the deputy, the assistant deputy right down through the executive directors are constantly working with their counterparts in bringing these problems to their attention and trying to resolve them and to change the direction in some instances.

Mr. Foulds: They don't look very active right now. They look like they're falling asleep.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They're a great bunch. They are all selected from this entire government, hand-picked as the best in the business, just to look after northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Too bad they didn't have a chance. I could make a couple of comments, but I like you too much.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The honourable member spent some time on the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund. I am pleased he accepted in a general way our thrust with regard to the local services board. I think the ICAF was a good start, at least to get fire protection requirements answered as a result of the co-operation of our ministry with the Solicitor General's office and the Ontario Fire Marshal's office. The training program going on throughout the north is something of which we are very proud and I want to publicly commend the fire marshal's office for the excellent job they are doing. They have been very sensitive. Sometimes we have been overzealous in getting something in place. They have a limited staff, a situation which we respect and regard; nevertheless they have responded, and I think today—

Mr. Haggerty: They need new fire trucks.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —the fire marshal's office has a much greater visibility in northern Ontario than it ever had in its history, and the respect that these fellows have is second to none.

We can thank them for their excellent co-operation in view of the fire protection. In fact, they designed those fire trucks especially for northern Ontario needs. The equipment is sitting on the front of the truck instead of being buried underneath. It is easily serviced; the package units are units that anybody who is mechanically inclined can look after.

Mr. Wildman: It is called the Bernier bundle.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Bernier bundles, yes. That is that kind of an approach you have to take to meet needs in northern Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: Front-end pump?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. Laughren: Are you wearing a Pierre Cardin belt?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I am.

Mr. Laughren: It doesn't seem right, somehow.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There is something wrong with it though, I have to take it back.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It keeps shrinking.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It keeps shrinking, yes.

Mr. Haggerty: How many fire trucks were bought last year?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Seven or eight. One of the problems that we had, getting back to our underexpenditure last year, was that we ordered a number of fire trucks but they were unable to deliver them before the first of the year.

Mr. Haggerty: Would the member for Algoma ride in one of them?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Apparently they got everything else but the chassis. They couldn't get the chassis, but they are coming on stream now and we will be delivering more of those fire trucks.

Mr. Bolan: What about the gold hat? Tell me, do you wear that, too?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The gold hat? I am pretty proud of that gold hat. I don't think I have had a letter from a member in northern Ontario complaining about a disastrous fire this year that affected the people in northern Ontario, and I hope it continues that way.

Mr. Wildman: You got a couple from me that were close to that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We haven't had a recurrence of a hurricane situation.

Mr. Haggerty: It is a good program, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is a combination of awareness by the public, through the co-operation of the fire marshal's office, the smoke detector program—which is very effective—and the fire package; I think it is that kind of combination.

Mr. Foulds: Did you forget Gogama?

Mr. Laughren: The radiation program.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The honourable member questioned the budget, the financial assistance for capital construction programs. He referred to the 75-25 aspect of some of these programs. I think it is fair to say at this stage we would have to look at the 25 per cent those people are allowed to carry. If it is a nominal sum then I think they should carry it, but there may be instances—and I refer to Gogama as perhaps being one of them—where the 25 per cent might be prohibitive.

Mr. Laughren: You keep referring to it; where is the money?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am concerned about Gogama; I really am. I am determined to do something about it. I was very impressed with that community and its very real desire to do something for itself.

I don't want to lock myself into a 75-25 at this point in time; I want to leave the door open and hopefully we can look at the individual needs. While we may be criticized somewhere down the road for maybe being a little ad hoc-ish overly flexible, I think when you are dealing with northern Ontario problems you have to be.

Mr. Wildman: Tell the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't want to be boxed into programs on which we can't be responsive.

Mr. Laughren: You have been around here longer than the Minister of Health, put him in his place.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I hope to be introducing that legislation some time within the next couple of weeks. I am not sure if we will be able to deal with it in this part of the session—I would like to if at all possible and time permits—but we will only find that out when I introduce it and see what reaction it gets.

Mr. Laughren: You promised it this session.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I did. It will be introduced and if you fellows want to sit here and join with me—

Mr. Laughren: Call for second reading.

Mr. Wildman: We already told the minister we would support it in principle.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Fine. I appreciate that support. As I said, it is permissive legislation, one can either opt in or opt out. It is self-help and one can shape their own communities to their own liking and their own desires.

With regard to major changes in boundaries, I would like to point out that the legislation is such that those boundaries would have to be approved not only by the Ministry of Northern Affairs but by Intergovernmental Affairs. We are working very closely with them and we have their co-operation and their assurance there will not be any great delays in designing a boundary. One step we are going to move into is the assistance of northern affairs officers. They will help us in identifying the area in which that group can service. We think that will be a major step forward in pushing it through on as fast a basis as possible.

Mr. Laughren: Is the minister not worried about red tape?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, that sums up and answers most of the questions I believe, at least as they were related to me. I want to thank both members for their contributions. It was very helpful, and I hope that as we go through various votes I can answer other questions that may come forward and be of benefit on an information basis to them and to outline the very constructive things we are doing in that part of the province. It is certainly in need of this very special attention.

Mr. Laughren: What about the reduction in the minister's salary?

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a couple of questions in relation to the minister's reply?

Mr. Acting Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Wildman: I thank the minister for his response. There are a couple of specific things I referred to that he had missed. I wonder if he could give us some indication of the progress that the Manitoulin Economic Development Committee is making, what funding the ministry has provided and where the ministry is at in terms of the North Shore Economic Development Committee as proposed by the municipalities along the North Shore? Could he also explain what, if any, relationship the Ministry of Northern Affairs has with NODC?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I do not have the specific success stories of the Manitoulin Economic Development Committee but I will get that for the member. I understand from my earlier discussions of some time ago it has been very successful in a number of areas. I will certainly get the factual information and deliver it to the member.

With regard to NODC, our relationship is one of not only a co-ordinating role but one of support, in that when there is a specific requirement or there is a specific need as to a specific problem and we are involved then the relationship and the information flows through. We are not directly involved with regard to the actual applications that come in to NODC, but we are there and we provide them with information as we see it from a northern Ontario point of view. This comes to us on a fairly regular basis.

On vote 701, ministry administration program; item 1, main office.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I always like to ask a question about money that so seldom gets asked about the estimates. Perhaps the minister could indicate where the million dollars for his main office is going; salaries and wages particularly, how many employees does that cover?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We don't have a main office, as the honorable member is aware, but we have offices in Toronto, Kenora and Sault Ste. Marie. These provide support services to myself in carrying out my duties and for an executive assistant and two secretaries. In those offices are the deputy minister, the assistant deputy ministers, the executive director of planning and administration and the co-ordinator of administration services.

Mr. T. P. Reid: These offices don't include the ones in Kenora and Sault Ste. Marie?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, they do. In 1979-80 salaries and wages have moved from $518,000 to $684,000; employee benefits from $80,000 to $103,000; transportation and communications, the movement of staff, from $90,000 to $165,000; services generally from $69,000 to $103,000; supplies and equipment from $45,000 to $41,000; and transfer payments from $50,000 to $53,000.

One of the things you will notice in this increase is that last year many of the vacant positions we had were not in place right across the entire system, for example, in Kenora and in Sault Ste. Marie. Many of them have been filled now with subsequent salary increases.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Does the increase represent simply the increase for salaries and so on?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: There are two questions I want to ask the minister. One is that I would like him to explain the relationship his ministry has with Intergovernmental Affairs. If I'm not mistaken, Intergovernmental Affairs is still the ministry that is establishing some criteria that you have to operate under, particularly with regard to the isolated communities assistance fund. Frankly, I find that repugnant.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would like to point out that we have been very actively involved in the co-operation aspect of IGA in setting up the local services boards. I have to point out to you that the local services board is not a municipal structure. It's a service structure, so it doesn't fall under the Municipal Act per se. Their advice has been very helpful in putting together this piece of legislation. They have expressed a concern about our movement into this field for fear that, as we improve the services in unorganized areas, there would not be the desire and the same interest in becoming organized.

Also they have singled out a number of areas where they are doing municipal studies as to annexation or amalgamation. They have asked us to consider that very carefully when we're moving into local services boards. Aweres township in Sault north is a typical example. It's large enough, in their opinion, to be organized under our municipal structure. That is why as we move down the road to—

Mr. Wildman: The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs isn't as eager to have it as your Mr. Jackman says he is.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —set up local services boards, we will be working very closely with Intergovernmental Affairs, not only in the areas that we select on application from local areas but in defining the boundaries. We will make sure that we have their co-operation and their assistance as these boards and these communities come under the Local Services Boards Act.

Mr. Foulds: If I could just pursue that, I have a particular case I want to discuss with the minister but it's lengthy. I'll do that when we have a little bit more time than we have at present. Surely the Minister of Northern Affairs has a responsibility to protect the northernness of certain communities and not allow Intergovernmental Affairs sometimes to push small communities into an organizational structure that they cannot sustain. I'm afraid that even when those communities are located near a large centre the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs' attitude is to push them into an amalgamation with a large centre that the community itself doesn't want, or to push them into the kind of municipal structure that, in some cases—not all I say; not all, but in some cases—may be too heavy for them to bear. I think it is your job to be very vigilant and very tough about protecting the interests of small northern communities in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate those comments and I have to say to the member I share his views. This has come forward in our discussions to date, as we're pulling the act together. The one thing I have to make very clear to the people in that ministry is that many of the small communities in the unorganized areas are not going to grow. There are people in some levels of government who think that as soon as you get a structure there there is going to be a massive development. You and I know that this is not going to occur. I live in one. My God, I've been there since—

Mr. Foulds: Since Moses was a baby.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Pretty near. But that community hasn't grown. Sure, the services have improved; the quality of life has improved; people have rebuilt their homes, it's home to them. But there has been no massive development, no great influx. Sure, you've had places like Ear Falls and Ignace that are on the border of a major industrial development, but that will always occur. But, in the norm, the Savant Lakes will grow slowly, the Nakinas, but Armstrong is a typical example.

People will improve their houses. The quality of life will improve. They will want better services than they are getting now.

This point was sometimes difficult to get across to people who are totally working with organized municipalities in southern Ontario. But I think it's fair to say that we have been successful. We have been successful in getting their co-operation and understanding their very unique problems. I guess they're tired of hearing me say that in northern Ontario we have special, unique problems. In fact, my colleagues will say, "There goes Bernier again. It's always special, always unique." But, nevertheless it is.

Mr. Wildman: Unique certainly.

Mr. Laughren: So is Bernier.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is unique. It is different. I think we're getting our message across slowly but surely.

Mr. Foulds: I just wanted to ask, Mr. Chairman, if I might just before we wind up—I apologize to my colleague from Algoma—what worries me a bit about the discussion we have had today so far is that it does not seem to me that you, as Minister of Northern Affairs, consider that your ministry should be the lead ministry in every single activity that takes place in northern Ontario. I think it should be.

I think that if you had a ministry that was really worth its salt—

Mr. Laughren: That's right.

Mr. Foulds:—this ministry should be the one that is telling the Ministry of Health what should be happening with the small hospitals that my colleague from Algoma referred to. This ministry should be telling the Ministry of Natural Resources what it should be doing in developing the single-industry towns in northern Ontario, because it is your ministry that has the overall view and the capability and should have the will to really develop the north as we all know the north should be developed.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, is your reply brief?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

I don't share those views, let me put it very clearly.

Mr. Foulds: You don't?

Mr. Laughren: You don't?

Mr. Wildman: You don't?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, I don't share the view that we should be the Northern Affairs kingpins. I don't think we should be that. We have a co-ordinating role. We have a role to bring to the attention of other ministries that have programs and policies in place. Our job is to change some of those policies to reflect the northern attitudes.

Saskatchewan has what you're saying—and they've come into problems. There are problems you wouldn't believe, because I was there to look at their problems.

Mr. Foulds: And you don't think that Health has problems in the north?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Manitoba didn't go that way, and Alberta is certainly not going that way. I think if the Saskatchewan government had its druthers they would revert to the co-ordinating role that we're adopting today. We think that, with the policies and programs in place in other ministries, it's our responsibility to deal directly with them, at the high level and even at the lower level, to get our input in there and get those attitudes and policies changed to reflect truly our northern needs.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier the committee of supply reported progress.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

WIRETAPS

169. Mr. Ziembra: How many wiretaps were installed each and every year for the past five years? How many subjects of a wiretap were so advised, when the wiretap was removed, during this same period? [Tabled April 30, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The protection of privacy provisions of the Criminal Code became effective July 1, 1974. Annual reports appeared in the Ontario Gazette in 1974, 1975, 1976 and 1977. These reports should be considered for further detail.

The following figures are taken from these reports. Figures for 1978 will not be available until the summer when interrelated investigations have been completed and some renewals have terminated.

1974: (July 1 to December 31) authorizations granted, 30.

1975: (January 1 to December 31) authorizations granted, 125.

1976: (January 1 to December 31) authorizations granted, 147.

1977: (January 1 to December 31) authorizations granted) 203.

The marked increase in the number of authorizations granted in 1977 over 1976 is attributed to two factors. Firstly, the decision of the courts that a renewal would not be granted if it contained any alteration from the original authorization even though it was the same investigation; and secondly, the inclusion of 14 new offences for which an authorization might be obtained.

In answer to the second part of the question, every person who has been the object of an interception is notified within 90 days of the termination of the interception. The only exception is where it is not possible to locate the person and/or if he has left the country. In the latter case if the person's whereabouts are known registered mail is used instead of personal service.

DAYCARE CENTRES

170. Mr. Blundy: Would the Minister of Community and Social Services list the names and locations of provincially-approved day-care centres that are currently operating with conditional licences? Would the minister give reasons in each case for withholding full licence approval? For each of the above, would the minister also note the number of times the conditional licences have been renewed or extended and for what duration in the history of the centre as a licensed facility of the ministry? [Tabled May 1, 1979.]

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 15, 1979

The House met at 2:05 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

INCOME SUPPLEMENTS

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, in an article on pensions in Victoria, British Columbia, which appeared in today's Globe and Mail, the following statement was made with respect to guaranteed income levels for senior citizens of British Columbia as compared to Ontario: "Provincial income supplements guarantee minimum monthly incomes for a single senior of $349 and $698 for a couple. An Ontario supplement guarantees a single $349 and a couple $678."

This did not agree with figures I had received from my staff, so I asked them to look into the matter and report back to me. My staff have reconfirmed this morning with the controller's office of the BC Department of Human Resources that the income supplement for a pensioner couple in British Columbia is in fact $673 per month and not the $698 amount reported in the Globe and Mail. In other words, the income guarantee provided to the pensioner couple in Ontario is $5 per month higher than the income guarantee in British Columbia, not $20 per month lower as reported.

Mr. McClellan: It is still below the poverty line.

Mr. S. Smith: Is the minister going to make a statement every time there is something wrong in British Columbia? Write a letter to the editor.

FUNDING OF HOMES FOR HANDICAPPED

Hon. Mr. Norton: I wish to respond on behalf of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) to a question asked by the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on Friday, April 20, regarding the proposed Participation House in Ottawa, which would provide specialized residential services to persons who have cerebral palsy.

I believe it is essential to clarify my ministry's position on services for handicapped persons since the specific proposal has to be related to our overall policy thrust. Since 1974, the ministry has been actively involved in a process of deinstitutionalization and has been emphasizing community living opportunities for handicapped persons.

My ministry has encouraged service to handicapped persons which emphasizes a variety of accommodation alternatives and, where possible, utilizes existing community services. It is our intention to support the normalization principle. This means that to the fullest extent possible opportunities will be opened up so that handicapped individuals may reach their potential with a lifestyle as near as possible to that of other citizens of our province.

In keeping with this philosophy, my ministry has in recent years helped to establish a range of group homes across the province for developmentally handicapped persons. These homes are augmented by a variety of support services to help these persons make full use of their communities. In the last fiscal year we established 757 community residential places for the developmentally handicapped and this year we will continue this program through the establishment of an additional 500 residential places.

With respect to the particular needs of persons with cerebral palsy, my ministry is funding Participation Houses in Markham, Brantford, and Hamilton. I recognize that some persons with cerebral palsy require specialized residential services and the three Participation House projects are responding to these needs. These projects were made possible as a result of the special efforts and fund-raising capabilities of local Participation House groups and the Ontario Federation for the Cerebral Palsied. I would like to commend them on their efforts.

I must emphasize that we proceeded with the Hamilton and Brantford projects during a period of financial constraint when almost all other capital expenditures for institutional care have been suspended. The financial limitation on that aspect of our ministry programs is continuing and very little money is provided for capital expansion for the foreseeable future for institutional care. These financial limitations have required the re-examination of many programs.

In addition to the limitations imposed on capital funding, I am concerned, as minister, that the Participation House type of service may not be entirely consistent with our philosophy of community living. Through the provision of high quality support services, however, it may be possible to assist many of these individuals, including those residing in Participation Houses, to take part more fully in the community and to live in a range of accommodation alternatives, such as group homes or apartments.

As announced in the speech from the throne, "The government will move toward a modest expansion of several pilot projects which were launched recently to provide special accommodation and necessary attendant care for the young physically disabled. These projects have been remarkably successful in enabling these young people to maintain a life in the community, in many cases going to work or school and working toward being self-supporting."

We are funding four pilot projects in housing and support services for physically handicapped individuals. Two of these projects involve apartment style living and two involve a combination of apartment and group home, living under the same roof with support services.

Mr. McClellan: Does that include Clarendon?

Hon. Mr. Norton: That's one of them, yes.

Also, as transportation is a special problem for some cerebral palsied individuals, the speech from the throne indicated our government is committed to improving transportation for handicapped individuals. The five community transportation pilot projects will become permanent programs and further expansion of these services will begin in other communities.

Participation Apartments, an affiliate of the Ontario Federation for the Cerebral Palsied, has recently submitted an application for support services in an apartment-style project. It is my opinion we should further explore this type of approach and take an opportunity to apply the normalization principle more vigorously for persons who have cerebral palsy. Because of the nature of their disability, persons with cerebral palsy may require a high component of personal care and treatment or training and day time programs. The focus of each of the three existing Participation Houses, however, has been to provide the majority of these required services within one location.

Again, I must emphasize this ministry has encouraged services which provide a variety of accommodation alternatives and, where possible, utilize existing community services. This approach provides persons with special needs the best opportunity to reach their potential through a lifestyle as near to normal as possible. Therefore, funding of any additional institutional-type Participation House projects will be deferred until we have had an opportunity to evaluate existing projects and determine the range of needs for all physically handicapped persons, including those persons with cerebral palsy.

We shall invite representatives of the Participation House associations to work with us in this evaluation of existing projects and our examination of alternatives.

My staff will work with all interested community groups in this assessment process. Limited additional funds are available and not yet designated to specific projects in this fiscal year for some alternative forms of residential services such as group homes, apartment programs and support services which would assist physically handicapped adults to live in the community. Community groups which have contacted us for funding for services to physically handicapped persons and for Participation House projects will be notified of our willingness to assist them with the development of these alternative services and of the availability of financial support.

I hope the Participation House committee in Ottawa and all Participation House groups throughout the province will be flexible and interested in pursuing these alternatives. I hope the energies and funds of the cerebral palsy associations will be increasingly directed toward developing alternatives that make greater use of existing community services. Through this process, it should be possible to encourage greater integration of persons with cerebral palsy into the community.

Mr. Speaker: Will all honourable members please keep their private conversations down? It's extremely difficult for a minister to be making a statement.

CHILD TAX CREDIT

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the honourable members that the council of the city of Chatham, at its meeting yesterday afternoon, reconsidered its position with respect to the treatment of the child tax credit and agreed—

Mr. McClellan: Well, what do you know? Sometimes it's worth raising things in here, isn't it?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —to review all general welfare assistance cases where eligibility had been adversely affected by receipt of the tax credit.

Mr. Warner: It is the member for Bellwoods who has accomplished this.

Hon. Mr. Norton: A review of the situation by officials of my ministry revealed 18 recipients had their assistance discontinued as a result of receipt of the tax credit. We found it necessary to issue emergency assistance directly in two cases.

Following the review, I wrote to the mayor requesting the city review and reconsider all such cases. It is the view of both the Ontario and federal governments that the recipients of public assistance should be allowed to utilize tax credits on items that are not normally covered by their social assistance budgets. It's therefore not appropriate to suspend the case due to inadequate transfer of assets if the recipient received fair material return from their assets.

Mr. Bolan: How about more specificity?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Thus, the purchase of a freezer, a stove or other appliances, the payments of debts, car or house insurance and other similar expenditures are within the meaning of the regulations and should not affect eligibility. Since the administration of general assistance serves both short-term and long-term recipients, it is necessary that municipalities continue to maintain their existing discretion in the administration of the program.

An hon. member: Is that the totality of it?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Such discretion, however, must be exercised both prudently and within the provisions of the Ontario law. We found it necessary to intervene at the point where the actions of this municipality were not consistent with the relevant regulations. To the knowledge of my officials, this problem has arisen only in this one municipality and yesterday's decision by Chatham city council will ensure that all social assistance recipients in Ontario will benefit from the child tax credit without exception.

This problem arose due to the fact that the federal government was not able to provide the new child tax credit once a month or once every three months; accordingly, families receive a lump sum payment once a year, which is the equivalent of 12 monthly payments. We have asked the federal government, once again, to modify their tax credits to provide monthly or quarterly payments, and I might add that prior to the announcement of the child tax credit system all of the provinces urged, in fact, pleaded with the federal minister to sort out the administration of the tax credits before proceeding. The provinces, at one point, offered to handle the administration through their monthly distribution system, to avoid the very kind of problem that has developed in the city of Chatham.

I trust that following the election the federal government, having gained the maximum credit that it could during this particularly crucial period, will be able to introduce the necessary changes to the system so that these problems will not continue in the future.

NOISE CONTROL GUIDELINES

Hon. Mr. Bennett: In February 1977 the Ministries of Transportation and Communications and Housing announced that "where feasible" noise barriers would be provided by the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for new construction work on major freeways through existing residential areas. It was also stated that developers of new residential units near freeways would have to include similar measures to reduce noise impact.

We are now able to introduce guidelines to control the noise in outdoor areas of new residential developments near freeways. I am pleased to announce a new policy which has been formulated in consultation with the Ministries of the Environment and Transportation and Communications.

Briefly, this new policy sets an objective of 55 decibels as an outdoor noise level in residential developments adjacent to freeways. Where the outdoor noise level is likely to be excessive, the developer must demonstrate that measures will be taken to get as close as possible to this objective level of 55 decibels. In those cases where the attenuated outdoor noise level exceeds 70 decibels, residential development will be prohibited because this is the level where extensive community dissatisfaction occurs.

My ministry, in co-operation with the Ministries of the Environment and Transportation and Communications, will be forwarding guidelines on outdoor noise levels for new residential development to all municipalities. This material also indicates some techniques which could be used to reduce the noise impact. Copies of these guidelines will also be provided to all members.

Noise control guidelines are also being prepared relative to the indoor sound environment and these should be ready in the very near future.

TRUCKING POLICY

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to take this opportunity to bring the Legislature up to date on the work my ministry has been doing with respect to trucking policy and regulation in Ontario.

Ever since the select committee on the highway transportation of goods submitted its report, we have been concentrating on reviewing and implementing as many of the recommendations as possible. However, as the members are aware, it is an ongoing process, designed to keep pace with the changing requirements of the trucking industry. In the work we have been doing, our broad goal has been to ensure that Ontario enjoys a safe, efficient and responsive transportation system for the highway movement of goods.

One of the major areas of concern, as expressed not only in the select committee report but since I became Minister of Transportation and Communications, is to provide a specific way of clearly defining and developing this goal and of transmitting it in the form of government policy to the Ontario Highway Transport Board. To date, legislation has not been explicit on this. Therefore, this is one of the major changes I am proposing in the new legislation.

As a first step towards a more coherent policy direction, the government has established the following principles to govern all truck operations on the highway:

The safe operation of trucks on highways is of primary importance and will continue to be promoted through all appropriate means.

The conservation of energy is vital to the economic well-being of the province and will be a primary consideration.

The best possible for-hire system will be encouraged, consistent with the right to private carriage of goods.

Economic regulation will be a continuing component of public policy and will be applied to control the suppliers of for-hire trucking services as appropriate. Economic regulation shall be applied in such a manner as to foster as high a degree of competition as possible, considering the characteristics of the suppliers and the nature of the markets to be served.

Mr. S. Smith: Are any of those new?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Flowing from these principles, the government has developed policy guidelines for the use of the OHTB. These guidelines, which will be embodied in an order in council, once the government has the legislative authority to issue policy statements to the board under the PCV Act, will include the following directions:

When applying the test of public necessity and convenience, the Ontario Highway Transport Board shall take into consideration, together with other appropriate matters, the need for an efficient and viable transportation industry which, given the characteristics of the suppliers and the nature of the market to be served, will support Ontario's general economic productivity; use capital, equipment and manpower resources efficiently; promote the efficient use of energy and minimize empty movements; be responsive to existing market demand and changes thereto in terms both of the level and type of service; offer service at the lowest cost in the long run; be characterized by effective competition both within the trucking industry and between other modes; be innovative in service levels, equipment design and utilization, administration and freight-handling procedures; take advantage where possible of intra-modal and inter-modal co-ordination; and be provided by an appropriate mixture of small, medium and large operators.

The guidelines to the OHTB will of course be added to when and if necessary.

We have developed extensive legislation in response to the select committee's recommendations, legislation which I introduced last year as Bill 78 to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act. As everyone is aware, Bill 78 was not proceeded with because of the strong objections that were received regarding the one section of the bill that dealt with exemption of commodities. The new bill I am introducing today encompasses much of the legislation contained in Bill 78 and takes into consideration the discussion and representations that have been made since the former bill was first introduced.

One of the areas of proposed exemption related to certain kinds of agricultural supplies and products. When the former bill was introduced, it received mixed reactions. In reviewing the reactions, it became apparent that the issue of agricultural supplies and products had not been dealt with extensively enough by the select committee. Therefore, members will note I have made no reference in the new bill to the exemption of the transportation of agricultural commodities as it relates to the Ontario farmer. Rather, I have asked for a review of the whole question of farm-related trucking in order to get a better idea of the ramifications of change within this segment of the trucking industry.

The review will be carried out by Mr. Everett Biggs of Everett Biggs and Associates Limited, Brampton. Mr. Biggs, as a former Deputy Minister of Agriculture and Food, is especially well qualified to carry out this review. It is expected that there will be input from such groups as the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Grain and Feed Dealers' Association, the Ontario Trucking Association, the National Farmers' Union, farmers' co-ops, individual farmers, milk haulers, marketing boards and other concerned groups and individuals. Mr. Biggs will be coming back at the end of this year with a report which will enable me to respond to the needs of the agricultural community.

Another area of concern which has received a great deal of attention is the Bill 78 proposal to exempt lumber and related products. To meet the concerns of the northern and eastern lumber producers, while maintaining the principle of entry control, we propose to establish a new class of licence for the haulage of lumber and related products. This will permit the transport of lumber and related products from the region of origin specified in the licence to any location in Ontario.

For this purpose, three regions have been established—northwestern, northeastern and eastern. I will be proposing to the Ontario Highway Traffic Board that it hold hearings in these three regions for the purpose of granting these licences based on local needs.

I do not intend to go into all aspects of the new bill, but, at this point, I would like to mention some of the new initiatives. In order to be responsive to patterns of urban growth and facilitate local cartage trucking, we propose to define commercial cartage zones which will be exempt from PCV licensing, in line with the select committee recommendations.

The new legislation will also contain the authority to vary the system of PCV licensing of vehicles by issuing the plates to the holder of the operating authority rather than specifically to the vehicle. Other sections of the bill which will be of interest are the measures to simplify administrative procedures with respect to closed-door corridor movements, forms and the refiling of tariffs.

Although not part of the legislation, but of significant interest and benefit, especially to the operators of large fleets, is a regulation under the Highway Traffic Act which will provide for the one-time registration of all trailers. Commencing in the 1980 registration year, there will be a general reissue of a reflectorized trailer plate.

One further item; I have received some strong representation to amend section 17 of the Public Commercial Vehicle Act. This amendment would place other persons or organizations, in addition to the Ontario Provincial Police and Ministry of Transportation and Communications enforcement officers, in a position to carry out prosecutions. The proposal deserves consideration, but it requires analysis of the potential impacts of private prosecutions on the court system, OHTB, and the problem of evidence. I have asked my officials to look at this problem and report back to me within the next few months.

I am convinced that the legislation we propose goes a long way towards meeting the needs of Ontario manufacturers, shippers and the trucking industry as a whole, and I can assure the members that my staff will continue to work with industry representatives to ensure that legislation meets ever-changing conditions and guarantees not only access for the shippers to carriers, but also a viable trucking industry geared to meet the needs of the people of Ontario.

DREE AGREEMENT

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer of Ontario (Mr. F. S. Miller) confirmed recently that negotiations with the federal government for a new DREE agreement in eastern Ontario had broken down. This morning, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture made public a letter in which OFA president, Peter Hannam, expressed eastern Ontario's urgent need for a new agreement.

Mr. Hannam is pretty angry, and I don't blame him. The province of Ontario has been ready to sign a new agreement for months. We should have had one by last January.

The history of the federal cabinet's actions since last September can lead us to only one conclusion: they don't want a new agreement and have no intention of signing one.

The whole sorry mess began on September 8, 1979, when the federal government on their own, without consulting anyone, terminated the Agricultural and Rural Development Agreement. Most of the shared-cost drainage programs ended abruptly in December, nearly four months before ARDA was due to expire. Between December and March, therefore, numerous projects went into limbo.

We had been led to expect that there would be a new DREE agreement to start when ARDA ended. In fact, we had actually been negotiating with the federal officials since the previous June.

Mr. Nixon: I'll bet you are not going to vote Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What is interesting is are you going to.

Mr. Nixon: I am, but I am not going to lose my vote.

Mr. Speaker: Would you like me to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food to sit down for a few minutes while you complete your private conversation? Surely this is just common courtesy to a minister of the crown.

Mr. Nixon: It is an irresponsible political attack from the minister.

Hon. W. Newman: What we didn't know then was that the federal government had no intention whatever of entering into a new agreement. But they haven't had the courage to tell us that and they don't have the courage to tell the municipalities and the farmers of eastern Ontario either.

Mr. Nixon: What did you do with that federal money for medicare?

Hon. W. Newman: I am just telling the facts as they are. Last November the minister responsible for DREE, Marcel Lessard, met with the Ontario Treasurer, several other Ontario ministers and myself, and said that a new agreement for eastern Ontario was a high priority item.

Mr. Roy: Joe Clark needs all the help he can get.

Hon. W. Newman: Consequently, in January the province forwarded to Ontario proposals for such an agreement. We asked that Peterborough, Victoria, Haliburton, Muskoka, Bruce and Grey counties be allowed to remain in the agreement area, together with the northern part of Simcoe county.

Mr. Wildman: What about Algoma?

Hon. W. Newman: We suggested a 15 per cent overrun clause to cover inflation during the life of the agreement. This would have given us a $57-million agreement, half to be provided by the federal government and half by the province.

Mr. Bradley: You would have to have a stimulative deficit to finance that.

Mr. Sterling: Take some of it away from Quebec.

Hon. W. Newman: However, in a dazzling flash of logic, the federal government ruled that Victoria, Peterborough, Bruce, Grey and northern Simcoe were guilty of being too close to Toronto, and they took them out. They argued, therefore, that these counties don't deserve a new agreement.

Mr. S. Smith: They were too close to Brampton. That was the exact reason.

Hon. W. Newman: Then they chopped the $57 million back to $50 million, leaving the effects of inflation to fall on the heads of the municipalities and people of eastern Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: Just like the Treasurer's budget.

Hon. W. Newman: To top it off, they demanded that Ottawa-Carleton be excluded from the small business assistance programs of the proposed agreement.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: While Montreal stays in.

Hon. W. Newman: By this time the end of March was approaching. The province of Ontario very reluctantly decided to grant these concessions so that we could get an agreement before the March 31 expiry date. However, we made it perfectly clear to the federal government we would be raising these issues again.

Mr. Bradley: The Tory hatchet man.

Hon. W. Newman: We got Management Board approval and we got the necessary order in council. We were all ready to sign.

Mr. Kerrio: But you kicked the pail over.

Hon. W. Newman: But the March deadline came and went without word from the federal government. In April Mr. Lessard told us why. He had discovered that Muskoka and Haliburton were as unworthy as Victoria and Peterborough under the other old ARDA agreements. He refused to sign unless these two areas were removed as well.

Mr. Ruston: Who wrote that?

Hon. W. Newman: I worked pretty late on it myself.

Faced with the threat that the federal government wouldn't sign at all, Ontario agreed very, very reluctantly. But Mr. Lessard still wasn't satisfied, having kicked Ottawa-Carleton out of the small business assistance program, and he decided to throw the rest of eastern Ontario out of this program too.

Mr. S. Smith: You've got a future as a speechwriter, Bill, but not as a minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the Leader of the Opposition try to set an example? That's the least he can do.

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, the $10 million small business assistance program is vital to the economic health of eastern Ontario. The previous ARDA agreement contributed enormously to job creation and resource utilization in eastern Ontario. That program, which we shared 50-50 with the federal government, built or renovated everything from sawmills to cheese plants. It not only made jobs for the people employed directly by the assisted companies, but it stimulated the construction industry, the trucking industry, the dairy industry, and retail firms in the towns of eastern Ontario, to name only a few secondary beneficiaries.

For the future, we had envisioned the small business assistance program taking up where ARDA left off and helping to establish production facilities, for example, to stimulate agriculture and the marketing of agricultural products.

But all this federal backtracking is by no means the whole story. Not by a long shot.

Interjections.

Mr. Bradley: It's the whole story, but it's not the real story.

Hon. W. Newman: Two of the most critical components of the ARDA agreement were drainage and flood control. When the federal government axed ARDA, they said they would pay their one-third share for drainage projects on which commitments had been made. There were 70 such projects, for which engineering contracts had been let. Some of these go back two or three years; one even goes back to 1973.

In December, the federal government finally agreed to pay their one-third share of projects for which construction contracts had already been let. That decision has left a lot of projects hanging, projects on which all the engineering has been done. I personally made a vigorous protest to Mr. Lessard that he at least agree to include a few of these outstanding projects.

Mr. Eakins: I'll bet you did.

Hon. W. Newman: That still leaves dozens of projects hanging. If this agreement had been ready by the end of March, as we had hoped, these projects would have been well under way today. However, here it is May, and there is still no agreement. I'm beginning to wonder if the federal government intended those projects ever to be built.

Interjections.

Hon. W. Newman: There are municipalities and individual farmers left, not only without long awaited drainage facilities, but holding the bag for the federal government's committed, promised, share of the costs. Engineering costs already incurred run into very large sums. These municipalities are faced with finding money to pay the federal government's share from their narrow tax bases. Individual farmers face the prospect of meeting Ottawa's obligations from their own pockets.

As for flood control and land reclamation projects, we were all ready to go ahead with some vitally needed work on the Chesterville and Plantagenet channelizations in the South Nation watershed project, but, now, with negotiations stalled, this program is in abeyance. This project is vitally important. Thousands of dollars are lost by area farmers every year in the spring floods.

Mr. Bradley: Tell us about Joe.

Mr. Nixon: Political baloney.

Hon. W. Newman: Political—who is playing politics? You're defending your kissing cousins and you say you want to separate from them. That's what you're doing.

Interjections.

Hon. W. Newman: In fact, the situation was so serious the province authorized some work to begin, because we had been assured—

Mr. Peterson: We should have got you on the debate the other night.

Hon. W. Newman: —repeatedly by federal representatives that this project had high priority in the federal government.

Interjections.

Hon. W. Newman: This behaviour by the federal cabinet displays a callous disregard for the welfare of the people of eastern Ontario, but I would go further and say a government which reneges on promises of many years' standing, and has the gall to do so in the middle of an election campaign, is showing contempt for the people it has betrayed.

Interjections.

Hon. W. Newman: The people of eastern Ontario have been betrayed. There is no other word to describe the federal government's behaviour in this sorry affair.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order, order.

CONDUCT OF MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: First of all, I would like to apologize on behalf of all members of this Legislature for their conduct to our visitors in the galleries today. If we can now get back to ministerial statements, I will hear the Minister of Education.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, sir, I'd like to bring to your attention, sir—

Mr. Speaker: There is nothing out of order. It is my responsibility to see that we maintain order in this House. I have failed to do so in the last 15 minutes. There is nothing out of order except the members of this House.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce an improvement in the level of funding—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order.

Mr. Warner: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: What is your point of order?

Mr. Nixon: My point of order, sir, is that I do not find it necessary for you to apologize for me. As a member of this House, I have the right to say what I choose, and that is what I have done.

Mr. Speaker: Within the rules of this House. It's my responsibility to maintain order and decorum, and I have failed to do it. If I don't apologize on behalf of the members of this House, I do so on my own behalf to the members up here.

Interjections.

Mr. Warner: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. members: Resign.

Mr. Warner: Am I correct that it is normal procedure for us to allow a maximum of 30 minutes for statements? Are there many more statements to follow?

Mr. Speaker: That only applies on days when we have private members' public business.

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce an improvement in the level of funding for the heritage languages program, effective September 1, 1979. This will replace the funding provisions in the 1979 general legislative grant regulation. The improvement is a reflection of our continued commitment to the broadest possible principles of a multicultural society as a unique part of our Canadian heritage.

The government believes strongly in the value of the heritage languages program. The changes are being introduced in order to reassert that commitment and to ensure that the program is fully viable and that all children in Ontario whose parents are interested in the objectives of the program will have an opportunity to participate in it.

As of September 1, 1979, a grant of $13.50 per instructional hour will be provided where a school board provides heritage language classes whose size averages 10 pupils. This will be increased by 50 cents per pupil where the average is more than 10 pupils per class, to a maximum of $21 per instructional hour where the average class size is 25 or more pupils. These amounts represent the provincial contribution and do not include a local share.

An analysis of the actual costs incurred by school boards offering the program indicates that in the vast majority of cases the cost of providing heritage language classes will be equal to or less than the level of the provincial grant. School boards should, therefore, be able to provide these classes without imposing a mill rate burden on local taxpayers and without imposing a fee on participating pupils.

These changes mean, in effect, that the provincial government is assuming the full cost of the heritage languages program and will be funding it in a way that ensures there will be no decrease in the general provincial funding available to school boards that is otherwise provided in the 1979 general legislative grants regulation.

Our province and its people are inordinately enriched by the many cultures and languages which have been brought to our shores. This enrichment must and will be sustained through this program's activities.

Mr. Foulds: Now do it for special education.

Mr. Swart: Finally. Congratulations to the member for Oakwood (Mr. Grande).

ORAL QUESTIONS

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. S. Smith: I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of Health on this continuing matter of X-ray exposure of patients. Since, as I said earlier, the only thing the ministry is required to do to protect those of us who are patients is to make sure the people using the X-ray equipment are properly licensed and able, and to make sure the equipment itself is the best available to reduce exposure, why are we continuing to read that the minister refused to make registration mandatory for those who use the equipment and, now, that his inspection team was allowed to wither, according to this morning's Globe and Mail?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, let me deal with the last part. As to why the member continues to read about this, he may well have to ask some of the people who are writing it.

Let me deal with the question of the size of the X-ray inspection service, and let me take members back to 1972. I got these figures this morning. In 1972, there was a total of 12 complement for the X-ray inspection service which consisted of one manager, eight technical staff—for "technical staff," read "inspectors"—and three clerical support.

By 1976, that had changed to a total complement of 11: one manager, seven technical staff and three clerical support. It was at that point that one inspector had been transferred to the Ministry of Labour with the associated work with veterinarians, research, education and so forth; that person was responsible for about 500 units. So that made 11.

By 1977, that was reduced to 10: one manager, seven technical staff and two clerical support, the reduction being in the clerical support.

Currently we are running at one manager; seven technical staff, including one vacancy, and one clerical support, for a total of nine. I hardly think that would be classified as withering.

Regarding the earlier part of the honourable member's question, with respect, I believe I answered that yesterday. In my reply to the society, which recently wrote to me, I certainly did not dismiss any of their suggestions. I indicated in my reply that we had started into this work with the Ontario Medical Association in developing this program to which relates the research project of Drs. Johns and Taylor, and which we are funding to a very great extent, and that we wanted them involved in the process. One of the answers to that may well be registration, but that will come out as we move along the way through this overall effort.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: The record given by the minister is certainly one that I would classify as withering, even if he does not—from 12 down to eight in a time when we are learning more and more about X-rays and their dangers.

But to ask a precise question, which I want to ask now, is the minister familiar with the fact that Dr. Taylor's study shows that the screen-film combinations and the presence or absence of a filter can make a difference of a factor of 10 in the amount of radiation to which people are exposed?

In this circumstance, why does the minister not act immediately, and why did he not act when he first knew about these matters, to make sure that only the fast film and screen combinations are installed in Ontario equipment and that there are proper filters in all the equipment being used on patients?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This is the type of thing that was referred to in the statement last week as well as the report of the kinds of things they have learned from the research which has been done to date, funded by the ministry, various foundations, PSI and so forth. It is an educative problem of applying this.

One of the other things that I indicated yesterday we are hoping will come out of the early stages of this next project, this $600,000 project, is something we can mail to all operators and use to check regularly—more regularly than manual inspection would do, no matter how many inspectors were involved.

The Leader of the Opposition suggested that the service is withering. The part that is most important is the technical staff component, which has gone from eight to seven. Admittedly, there is a vacancy right now—we are running at six—but we have gone from eight to seven. That is hardly withering.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since it is a matter of public record that Dr. Taylor's program of reducing hazardous X-ray exposures can be accelerated if there are additional funds, does the minister consider the problem sufficiently urgent to provide the extra funds, and when has his staff met with Dr. Taylor to establish how much additional funding will be required?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me make clear that in the $300,000 grant over three years we granted everything that had been asked for. Everything. Since this matter arose as a publication in the last week, apparently Dr. Taylor has said to a reporter that he thinks there might be some way to do it faster.

What I have indicated—and my staff are aware of this; I know some of them talked with Dr. Taylor last week, but he was away for the weekend, and I am not sure he is back yet—is that if they got a proposal that in their judgement, since it is a matter for the scientists to work out between them, will bring about a staged resolution of this matter faster, then we are certainly prepared to put more money and more staff into it. We are committed, now, to the $86,000 for research over 1978-79 and 1979-80; to the $300,000 to this latest evolution of their work along with providing two additional staff. If they can propose to us more that will bring it about faster, we'll commit it.

Mr. S. Smith: So the minister would have us know there are six inspectors on staff at the moment. Can he tell us how many inspections they make; how many machines there are to be inspected; why it is that some machines appear not to have been inspected in as long as 12 and 22 years, and how many defective machines have been found? Can we have access to the inspection certificates to see the results of these inspections and what it is they've been inspecting?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Let me go back. The member asked these kinds of questions yesterday and I said I'd be more than willing, be anxious to discuss this during our estimates so that we can review all these matters. But, I want to go right back to the statement issued last week by the gentlemen who prepared this research. Let me remind the member again of the closing sentences of their statement:

"It is tempting to suggest that dose reduction can be achieved by government regulation and inspection. This is far from the truth, since we are dealing with very sophisticated pieces of equipment and many disciplines with different levels of knowledge. The only real solution to the problem is a co-operative one between the various groups mentioned above, and the eventual creation of inhouse capabilities in radiation control."

I wish he would acknowledge and recognize the fact that in launching into this effort over the last 18 months, and in particular this project which we are supporting through the Ontario Medical Association, with Drs. Johns and Taylor, we are further ahead than any other jurisdiction in eradicating a very serious problem.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The minister says that apparently Dr. Taylor is now saying he could use more money. In view of the urgency and in view of the needless exposure to excess X-ray radiation, why haven't the ministry's officials already contacted Dr. Taylor to find out by how quickly this can be accelerated and to ensure that the decision to speed up is made and funded right away?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The matter of public record to which the member for Ottawa Centre refers was embodied in an article in the Globe and Mail on Saturday morning, and my staff tried to contact the gentleman, but as I've already said, he was away for the weekend. Certainly, once contact is made we'll make it clear to him directly. I want to repeat that we granted every single penny that had been asked for in the original proposal. If there is a modified proposal they want to put forward that will bring about a faster resolution, we're quite prepared to support it.

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Labour about X-ray hazards. In view of the piling up of evidence of serious health effects resulting from low levels of radiation, including radiation below the present allowable standard of five rems per year, will the minister make a commitment to expand the ministry's funding of research on the possible health hazards to X-ray technicians in Ontario, and will he also consider the hazards that may be undergone by people who are X-ray technicians in industry?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as the member for Ottawa Centre knows, when the new occupational health and safety bill is promulgated in the near future it will bring the X-ray technicians throughout the province under the sphere of that legislation under this ministry. I can assure him that the funding that's available for research within my ministry, for which there is an awards grant committee, will continue to be available and I would certainly hope that as the months go by that funding will remain as broad as it is and hopefully even expand.

I wouldn't be prepared to give him a definite commitment, but I do want to assure him that priorities are placed on areas where priorities should be and if that does continue to be a problem that one should be concerned with, and I am concerned about it, then it will undoubtedly receive some priority in line with others.

Mr. Peterson: What did you just say again?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I said I want to go to London and visit you.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware that a number of scientists have recommended lowering the current allowable exposure for people exposed to X-ray radiation to one tenth of the present level? Does the minister not think that it's of the utmost importance to find out what the facts are about the health hazards to X-ray technicians, particularly since many of them will be women of childbearing age and therefore of the age and sex running the greatest possible hazard from this kind of radiation?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Certainly we do, Mr. Speaker, and the member well knows that all areas of concern with regard to health and safety are being reviewed at all times within the ministry and that's another area that will be reviewed and with greater intensity once that particular matter becomes part of my ministry under the new occupational health and safety legislation.

Mr. B. Newman: Supplementary: May I suggest to the minister that he consider providing the individual who is X-rayed with some type of a log so he would have a permanent record and could show it to another medical practitioner as to the frequency and the intensity of the X-rays that he has been subjected to?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As someone who has worked in the area where one gets exposed to X-rays, I may tell the member, in case he wasn't aware of it, that we are required already to wear little indicators on our lapels when we are exposed to radiation and those records are kept and tabulated through Ministry of Health records. So that is already being done.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the minister has confirmed that the protection of X-ray technicians is presently in limbo because Bill 70 has yet to be proclaimed and that authority has yet to be taken on by the ministry, can he say when the relevant portions of the act will be in force so that X-ray technicians can start to get adequate protection of their health from the Ministry of Labour?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The implication is that they are not receiving adequate protection now, and I question that. But as to when the bill will be promulgated, the member well knows we are working diligently on all the regulations and—

Mr. Cassidy: You promised it for April.

Hon. Mr. Elgie:—promulgation of the act automatically rescinds all other legislation dealing with occupational health and safety. It would certainly be inappropriate to do that until all of the regulations involved in all of the areas are prepared.

Mr. Bounsall: When's it coming?

Mr. Conway: To the degree that the Minister of Labour can inform us in a way the Minister of Health indicates an unwillingness to do, can he indicate what it is inspectors are inspecting or are likely to inspect and what specific qualifications they have for what is clearly a very important mandate in terms of public safety?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I don't have that information at present available, but if the staff have documented and itemized the particular information the member wants, I will be pleased to provide it for him.

STUDENT HEALTH QUESTIONNAIRES

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Education: Can the minister give us her view of the form being used by the board of education in Toronto in which parents are asked to sign a routine consent, so that information can be given from the board of health to the board of education? The matter was described by Justice Krever as an abuse of authority. What is the view of the minister and what action is she planning to take?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have not, as yet, had an opportunity to see the form suggested specifically by the Toronto board, but the reports I have had about some of the requested information would lead me to believe that Mr. Justice Krever has a point which should be considered very seriously. It would appear to me, that while it is necessary for teachers and those responsible for developing program to have the essential, relevant information about the kind of illness or impediment which a child may suffer, some of the questions which are being asked on that form may be a severe and intensive intrusion into the medical privacy of the children involved.

I would wish to have some very prolonged discussions, not only with those who are considering this from the point of view of the medical record, but also with those who are considering this from the point of view of teacher requirements. I think that that is essential and I don't think that any board should develop unilaterally, the kind of document which may indeed intrude upon the medical privacy of the children they are supposed to serve.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, if I may ask a brief two-part supplementary: Will the minister look into this matter and make sure that all school boards are informed that a formal consent should only be sought when there is an understandable reason for such consent? Similarly, can she tell us what the situation is at the community colleges and universities? Is she aware of any instances in which people are asked to sign such consent forms to obtain medical information and this information is made available to the university or to the community college on a routine basis with regard to students who are studying there?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the Leader of the Opposition that we had begun the exploration of this specific problem much earlier than when the statement was released by the Toronto board. I had discussed it earlier with some former members of the Toronto board as well, because of their specific concern about it, but it is a matter which must be examined by those who have some knowledge and some responsibility for the maintenance of the security of medical privacy of individuals within this province.

I am not aware of any specific indications that questions in relation to medical information are being asked of those students at community colleges or universities who are not yet deemed adults. I have been informed that upon occasion, for specific reasons, the medical officer or the person involved in the health care of university students has made information available to the administrative staff of the university, I presume for faculty use.

In those instances about which I am aware, I thought it was for a very good medical reason, for the protection of the individual student himself or herself, and I am not aware of any widespread activity in this area. I shall certainly be willing to investigate to see whether there is.

Mr. S. Smith: A final, brief supplementary: Would the minister not agree that consent should be obtained in these instances from the student involved, since some cases have come to my attention, and possibly to hers, where the student felt that perhaps this information was then used in a discriminatory way? As long as this consent is always obtained, I am sure we would have no objections.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Education. Would the minister care to comment on a survey which people in my office have just done of 10 industrial firms employing over 6,000 workers in Ontario, which showed they have only 67 apprentices? Does the minister think the government is meeting the needs of industry when these firms have only 67 apprentices for 1,513 skilled workers, giving a ratio of one apprentice to every 22.6 skilled workers?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In response to a question last week, I think I made it very clear we were attempting to encourage industrial establishments of all sizes, beyond those which are very small, to become involved in the apprenticeship program or employer-sponsored training program.

We have indications from a very large number of firms that they are interested, and we are moving as rapidly as possible towards the involvement of such firms. I would respond by saying those firms obviously have not perceived the need in the past to be as involved in industrial training as they should be. It would seem to me there would need to be a great deal of encouragement provided for such firms, in order to persuade them they should become involved with such a program.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Can the minister explain why it is these 10 firms, which she says have not perceived the need to train skilled workers in this country, should be 10 of the firms that were allowed to seek workers abroad under the selective placement service of the Ministry of Industry and Tourism? Can she explain why those firms with only 67 apprentices were allowed to seek 119 skilled workers abroad? Doesn't the minister think it is time for more than just persuasion in order to ensure that industry is training here in Canada the skilled workers that Ontario needs?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There are different forms of persuasion. I am much more attuned, I suppose, to those which are not related to the Neanderthal position of a very large club with a very large nail in it, as the honourable leader of the third party seems to be suggesting.

Mr. Sweeney: Can the minister explain how it is that firms like Ford and International Harvester, who have none or very few apprentices in Ontario, have a substantial number of apprentices in European countries like West Germany, France, Sweden and England?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Yes, I can. It is because of a number of factors: the traditional status of the individual who has a skill training within that society, the activity which has been taken by the employers and the trade unions in those countries to be actively involved in the development of programs; the role of the government in legislating certain kinds of arrangements related specifically to educational streaming of young people at a very early age into apprenticeship programs.

Mr. Martel: That was the Bill Davis scheme, streaming kids.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: All of these factors have had some bearing upon the numbers which are obviously participating in such programs, particularly in West Germany and in Great Britain. Mr. Speaker, those are models which have been looked at as far as North American jurisdictions are concerned. They have, in fact, been rejected by almost all North American jurisdictions in terms of the development of apprenticeship programs. We are looking at other methods which hopefully will produce the same kinds of results.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since the ratio of one apprentice to every 22.6 skilled workers is clearly inadequate to meet Ontario's need for skilled manpower in the 1980s, can the minister say when Ontario's programs will ensure there is one apprentice for every eight skilled workers, as recommended by the UAW, or when we will achieve the level of one per every three skilled workers, as is permitted under Ontario's apprenticeship regulations?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, we would be delighted, in many instances, to develop programs which would permit one apprentice for every three workers. That was the purpose of the legislation being drafted in that manner. There are certain impediments to reaching that goal of which I am sure the honourable member is aware, including some negotiated contracts which do not permit that kind of relationship or that kind of ratio. But, Mr. Speaker, we are working as diligently as possible in the direction of improving the ratio of apprentices to employees within a number of establishments. We have selected priorities because of the specific concerns that have been expressed by employers and trainers and young people looking for jobs. We are moving in those areas in which the priority has been established and we will be very happy to expand as rapidly as possible once we have the program launched as well as it should be.

Mr. Sweeney: Can the minister explain why the employer-sponsored training program which is supposed to be the flagship of this government's new approach—and we were advised a year ago there would be several thousands of people involved in this—at this point in time has only 750 involved?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I promised the honourable members I would bring in all of the figures related to apprenticeships and to employer-sponsored training and that I shall do. I am sorry they have not been made ready for today.

CHILD SUPPORT PAYMENTS

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services: In view of the need for increased income for single welfare mothers, but mindful of the government's financial constraints, would the minister take steps to vastly improve methods for collecting child support orders? As yet unpublished information I have from statistics provided by Chief Judge Andrews shows in 1978 over $38 million in child support payments were in arrears in Ontario alone.

Mr. Mancini: Shame!

Mr. Blundy: In view of this huge amount of uncollected moneys, representing 70 per cent of all accounts, and in view of a rather dismal collection rate of 43 per cent in 1977-78; will the minister take immediate action to improve his ministry's success in collecting child support orders?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more with the point the honourable member is making with respect to the rather dismal performance of spouses in terms of supporting their families in this province once they have deserted. I have on occasion in the past discussed that with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry).

I have not seen the data the honourable member quotes, but if the figures are accurate I must say it is even more alarming than I thought. I assure the honourable member I will discuss it further with the Attorney General immediately.

Mr. Blundy: In view of the many inadequacies and inequities written into the Family Benefits Act and its regulations—inequities I think the minister acknowledges—and in view of the well-documented concern expressed by the family benefits work group that not only are allowances too low but are designed to discourage remunerative work and job training opportunities, would the minister now commit himself to rewriting this legislation in a fair and sensitive manner?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, there is probably nothing that I would like to see done more than a major overhaul of the total income distribution system in this country. I would point out that in any given year, according to the analysts in my ministry, the total amount of income transferred in various types of income-support programs in the country—not just in Ontario—is about $16 billion. The bulk of that would be at the federal level and the remainder with the other governments, including municipal governments.

I believe a much more effective distribution of $16 billion can be made to see that those people in the lower economic groups can receive a better and fairer share. That major overhaul is something which the province would find very difficult to undertake alone, because of the need to comply with federal legislation and the need to qualify for cost-sharing.

In the earlier part of this decade, for four and a half years there were discussions between the provinces and the federal government which were intended to lead to a major overhaul of social services in this country. That culminated, about a year and a half ago, with the federal government unilaterally announcing that it was not going to continue with that. It substituted for it a proposal for block funding of social services which would allow the provinces to get out from under the Canada Assistance Plan and have greater flexibility in providing services to people in the province. That proposal was unilaterally withdrawn last fall, along with the $55-million commitment for increased funding this year.

Mr. Peterson: He didn't ask for a speech on everything you do.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am answering the member's question as fully, as honestly and as completely as possible, if my friend will just give me an opportunity.

Mr. S. Smith: He's asking for a revision of the act. That's all he is asking.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Although I would like to see done what the honourable member is suggesting, it is simply not possible for a single province to do a major overhaul alone—

Mr. S. Smith: You can revise your own act.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—when the bulk of the money is being transferred at the federal level from one fairly high-wage earner to other fairly high-wage earners, and the poor are being forgotten by the federal government.

Mr. McClellan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: I want to ask the minister whether he is aware that, for a mother with three children on family benefits, the allowance in 1971 was $2,948 and the allowance in 1979, $5,469, which translates into 1971 dollars at $2,954, for a net gain of $6.

Mr. Speaker: How do you relate that to the original question?

Mr. McClellan: The original question had to do with the adequacy of allowances.

Interjections.

Mr. McClellan: I want to ask the minister how he can pretend that those allowances are adequate when there has been no net gain in seven years—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I recall, the question dealt with the inability or the ability to collect. Final supplementary?

Mr. Roy: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since the proclamation of the Family Law Reform Act some time around April 1, 1978, and with the provisions in that act for attachment orders against salaries and for penalties for absconding or for delinquent payments on support orders, can the minister advise whether that act and its provisions have assisted his ministry in the collection of these orders, and is his ministry making full use of the tools given under the Family Law Reform Act for the collection of these delinquent payments?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I do not have current figures on the rate of recovery and what the changes might be at this point. I will try to get that information for the honourable member.

AUTO INDUSTRY

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Treasurer: Is the minister aware that in the first quarter of this year the auto trade deficit with the United States was $478 million, compared with $84 million in the comparable period last year? Does this not demonstrate that serious problems with the auto pact still exist? What is his government doing to resolve them?

Further, is the minister aware that Chrysler Corporation purchases all its four-cylinder engines from Volkswagen and from a Japanese company and claims it cannot build its own four-cylinder engine plant because of lack of financial resources? Would the government be willing to talk to Chrysler and enter into a joint venture—quite different from the $68-million grant that the government gave—sharing ownership, sharing profits and providing jobs for the people of Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member got in quite a few questions in one period of time. I'm not sure I'll get them all in order.

The auto trade pact was negotiated by the federal government. We feel that it has had a very thorough review recently. I'm sure the member has seen the results of that review.

What are we doing about it? First, in spite of the member's objections in his own riding, we helped the Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited. We got $500 million worth of their money for $28 million worth of ours to create 7,000 jobs in the community, which does appreciate this government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They like it down there.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Doesn't the minister realize that, despite the $28 million and the $68 million given by the provincial and federal governments respectively the export of parts from Canada to the United States has increased by only 26 per cent while imports have increased by 36 per cent and the deficit in parts will be $1.2 billion in 1979? Can the minister tell us how many jobs will be lost in Canada as a result of the deterioration of our trade deficit, and what he is going to do?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Premier, the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) and I very recently had a very enjoyable discussion with a number of auto parts manufacturers. I can assure the member there is a great deal of interest in building more plants in Ontario. We only had to assure them that we would win the next election and the opposition wouldn't, and they said they were willing to put the money here.

Interjections.

CHILD TAX CREDIT

Mr. Watson: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services. Will the minister meet with representatives of the city of Chatham to discuss the welfare payment program in this province and specifically to discuss the payments to the welfare family that the council ruled invalid and which the minister subsequently overruled, in view of the fact that there is considerable concern in Chatham and, I expect, in other cities that didn't catch on to the fact that some of the people are receiving these large payments from the federal government all at once and maybe the municipalities should demand that the system be changed?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would be pleased through the member to arrange to meet the representatives from that municipality and hear their views. I would remind them though that we are all bound by the law of the province.

EASTERN ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Treasurer (Mr. Grossman). I might also ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) to listen closely because it has to do with the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation. When he was describing DREE, I thought he was talking about the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation.

I would like to ask the Treasurer for some comments and answers concerning the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation. Funds ended abruptly at the beginning of this year. In the words of the Minister of Agriculture and Food, everything went into limbo. No one had the courage to tell us what was going on, yet we were told it was high priority.

Mr. Speaker: What is the question though?

Mr. O'Neil: The question is this: I would like to ask the minister what additional funds have been allotted to eastern Ontario? I would also like to ask him why so many small businesses and industries are being turned down left and right, while large funds are being given to multinational companies in this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Minister of Industry and Tourism is away. He is in Japan helping us get some sales.

Mr. Warner: It's part of your buy Canada program.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would suggest that he is better qualified to answer for OEDC than I am. I can only say that the slowdown was because of the outstanding success we had had in obtaining applications. In fact, there were so many applications that the entire budget for the year was going to be over-subscribed. Until the minister made his statement about a week and a half or two weeks ago clarifying the issue, there was no use taking on more than we currently had money to provide.

Mr. Conway: That's never stopped you before. That's your modus operandi.

Hon. F. S. Miller: However, we have seen ways. We are going to be using banks a little more so that there are more guarantees and so that the government's money will go further. I can assure the member, just as we have noted last week that the Smiths Falls project had been approved by the Employment Development Board, he will see a good deal of action in those areas where we have applications that, in our opinion, are able to stand on their own feet.

Mr. O'Neil: A supplementary: I wonder if the minister is aware then of the feeling that exists in eastern Ontario where they feel he is only interested in the large multinational companies and that these small companies which are being turned down are the companies that really need the assistance? Who is really letting down the people in eastern Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think one needs to be specific. I would say if anything has destroyed the confidence of eastern Ontario it's been the actions of the federal government in the last while by refusing to sign the DREE agreement with us.

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Why does the Treasurer attach such a low importance to tourism loans through the development corporation? In past years, about 25 per cent of the approved loans have gone to tourism. In 1977-78, out of 398 loans only 52 went to tourism, which is 7.5 per cent. How does he account for that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I personally attach a very high importance to tourism for obvious reasons. It's the largest industry. It supplies 410,000 jobs in this province.

Mr. Eakins: Give us the answer to the question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would like to have the minister tell the member how many applications there were rather than how many approvals there were.

Mr. Eakins: There were 398.

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Education. Is the minister aware that the improvement in the heritage languages program she announced today will mean a 48 per cent cutback in September 1979 instead of the 50 per cent cutback which she originally announced in February? Is this two per cent solution all the concern her government can muster to show "continued commitment," as she put it in her release, "to the broadest possible principles of a multicultural society as a unique part of our Canadian heritage"? Will the minister, once and for all, rescind the 50 per cent cutback?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The announcement today, in fact, means no cutback but an increase to the entire heritage languages program. I would be delighted to hear the circuitous mathematics the member went through to come to the very erroneous conclusion he just presented.

Mr. Grande: A supplementary: Is the minister not aware that the February legislative grant to the heritage languages program announced by her was—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Would the member kindly read today's statement which superseded the February announcement?

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the question and the minister can answer it? Is the minister not aware that the February legislative grants she announced were $20 per instructional hour for the heritage languages program, which meant a 50 per cent cutback from last year, and now she is changing it to $21 per instructional hour? Does this not represent a two per cent solution? If not, answer.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly obvious that the member has neither read nor listened to the statement. The statement specifically said, and I would remind the member that the total funding for the heritage languages program in the province of Ontario is provincial funding, and that it is at the level of $21 per instructional hour where the class is 25 or more; $13.50 per instructional hour where the class is 10 pupils, with a gradation in between. The funding will come entirely from the province.

It will mean a very slight reduction, I would presume, in the amount of money made available to the Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board and that is the only group which will have a slight reduction, but in the cost estimates of the provision of their program, $21 is what the cost is to provide the program for the Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, it is a reduction over what they received last year—

Interjections.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —because of the fact it was provided at a rate of grants for the Metropolitan Toronto School Board which permitted that school board to develop a profit related to the heritage languages program.

Mr. Bradley: Shame.

Mr. Sweeney: Given the history of this government's starting programs or encouraging boards to start programs and then, at a later date, withdrawing some of the funds, for the record will the minister tell me exactly what she means by the last sentence, "This enrichment must and will be sustained"? Exactly for how long, and by whom will it be sustained?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It means precisely what it says.

Mr. Conway: At least until the next election.

Mr. di Santo: Last year, the Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board lost $1 million in grants.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In grants?

Mr. di Santo: Yes, because of the reduction in grants. In 1979, I mean. This forced the board either to put a fee on the students or to shut down the courses. Does the minister's announcement mean that in 1980 they will lose only $800,000?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The allotment which is granted to each school board will cover the cost of providing the program, including that of the Metropolitan Toronto Separate School Board.

FRENCH LANGUAGE EDUCATION

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Education: Today there appeared in front of Queen's Park some citizens from the Penetanguishene area requesting the building of a separate French-language high school in that area. What was the minister's approach to that and what was her answer to the people making that request today?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, in response to a letter sent by the French-Language Action Committee in January, we suggested about two months ago that a meeting be arranged between the French-Language Action Committee and the school board. Such a meeting was held and although it was felt after that meeting there was a majority of both groups in support of the decision taken, that support has since been eroded and there has been a disagreement.

There was a request to my office about two weeks ago to arrange a meeting with the French-Language Action Committee, and I felt very strongly this was a matter which had to be resolved between the two bodies involved in this problem in the Penetanguishene area. I made a strong suggestion to them that there be a meeting again with ministry participation.

That meeting has been arranged by the ministry. It will be held at 8 p.m. on Monday, June 4, in order to accommodate the concerns of some of the French-Language Action Committee's members that they could not afford to miss any time at work. We recognize that. It will be held in Barrie, on neutral ground—

Mr. Conway: What neutral ground?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —with the executive members of the staff of the Ministry of Education serving as chairman and mediators, in order to try to resolve the difficulties which have arisen in this matter.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: Accepting the minister's answer to my colleague's question about the meeting and the possibility of negotiating this matter at the local level, would the minister give her assurance to the people of Penetanguishene, and more specifically to those who were here protesting this morning, that if a decision is not made, if agreement is not reached at the local level, they will not find themselves in a situation which unfortunately has happened in other areas of the province, where they have had to wait, five, six and seven years for a decision to be made and for their school to be built?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I'm sure the honourable member recognizes that one who is going to act as a mediator does not in fact impose preconditions to the potential results of the mediated exercise. I have assured the people of Penetanguishene, particularly the French-Language Action Committee, that we are very much aware of their concern and very sympathetic to the concerns which they have expressed, but we would feel very strongly that this matter should be resolved at the local level and we will do everything we can to help that happen.

[3:30]

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Has the minister yet made it very clear to the board of education what the degree of capital funding will be for that school, and if it is at the 95 per cent level it might well be accepted and proceeded with quite expeditiously, the way it would have been some year and a half prior to requiring the bill to be brought in in the Essex county French school?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We have a strong suspicion that the members of the regional board in that area are aware of the level of funding which will be available to them. I am sorry I do not have the percentage. I couldn't tell the member accurately at the moment.

AUTO REPAIRS

Mr. Bradley: I have a question of the Minister of Revenue, a question which the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) will no doubt be interested in.

Is the minister aware that in the province, specifically within the automotive repair and maintenance business, and more specifically within the muffler replacement and repair business, retail sales tax is being charged not only for parts but also for labour? If the minister is aware of this would he inform the House whether or not this is contrary to regulations under legislation governing his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member was good enough to send me over a copy of an invoice for, I presume, the complaint that he is talking about. I don't see any labour marked on this invoice, so maybe he could give me some clarification if he is referring to this particular invoice.

Mr. Bradley: In consultation with members of the Ministry of Revenue and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, it is substantiated that this practice is indeed allowed in the province of Ontario and that legislation does not seem to govern it, not only in this specific instance but in other instances. One would presume from this bill that the labour costs and the installation costs are within the costs shown beside the parts as well.

If the minister determines that this is indeed the case, that sales tax is being charged on labour for the installation of these parts, would he undertake to change this particular provision, either through regulation or through legislation, in order the consumers in the province can avoid paying the retail sales tax unnecessarily?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will certainly look into it.

MINES INSPECTION

Mr. Martel: Is the Minister of Labour aware that the Atomic Energy Control Board has a policy of notifying Eldorado Nuclear Limited of Port Hope of impending inspections? While I am aware it is not within our jurisdiction totally, would the minister be willing to advise the Atomic Energy Control Board that in Ontario the government will not tolerate the practice to continue whereby the company can clean up the conditions before the inspection occurs?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As the member knows, that is a matter that is solely within the jurisdiction of the federal government, but I would be pleased to convey our own views on the matter.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Will the minister at the same time find out whether the Atomic Energy Control Board is in fact giving notice to Denison and to Rio Algoma as to impending inspections, particularly in view of the fact it is our inspectors who are under contract to do the work on behalf of the AECB, to ensure that the same thing is not occurring there and thus spoiling the benefits of an unannounced inspection?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: When I visited the Denison mine last November I did inquire into that very point and was assured by the inspector who was present, and indeed by the other members of the union I spoke to, that any notice that was given was reasonably necessary in order to get the people involved available, but there was nothing in the way of a day or two days' notice; it was a matter of hours and, where possible, the same morning. If the member wishes me to examine it in more detail and report to him, I will.

DISCOUNT PRACTICES

Mr. McGuigan: My question is to the honourable Minister of Agriculture and Food. Is the minister aware of the report in the May 8 issue of the publication Farm and Country in which the president of M. Loeb was reported as telling the inquiry into discounts and allowances that no store owner need pay the full legal minimum price for apples between September 1 and November? Has the minister referred this to the Farm Products Marketing Board, and are they investigating the allegation?

Mr. Conway: I hear he doesn't read; he is generally read to.

Hon. W. Newman: The royal commission is going on. I've said repeatedly we are monitoring the royal commission hearings and that if there was anything that broke my ministry's regulations or legislation we would look into it. Yes, I did know about that, and yet I have asked the Farm Products Marketing Board to look into it.

Mr. McGuigan: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of a past practice in the packing industry whereby the packer gave no credit to the producer for the apples that were taken out for juice purposes? In the past these sold for about $30 a ton and there was some justification for the packer keeping these to offset his costs in grading, but this past winter those juice apples sold for as high as $185 per ton rather than $30. Is the minister aware of this and is he looking into whether or not producers will be given some compensation for those apples?

Hon. W. Newman: I'm not exactly clear on the member's question so if I may take it as notice, I'll look into it. I know juice apple prices were high and I know there were certain supposedly discount practices going on, but I'd like to take the question as notice so I can get all the wording and details back to the member.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Isaacs: I'd like to ask the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs whether he is able to make an announcement in response to the request from the city of Hamilton for funds to assist with the phasing in and the implementation of the assessment equalization program we talked about in this House last on April 27? Can the minister explain why it's taken so long to come to a decision on that matter?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It took a while because we seriously considered all the ramifications. It's a program which has some ramifications and some large money figures attached to it.

I talked to the mayor of Hamilton today and I told him I was very much in favour of a phasing-in program for those whose taxes will go up because of a section 86 reassessment. I said I certainly hoped Hamilton would implement some kind of phasing-in program but that I was sorry the province couldn't provide any financial assistance for that program. I didn't believe provincial money should be used for that.

There are two ways the city can provide for this phase-in program. One is to provide for those whose assessments will go down to phase in the reductions over a period of three, four or five years, whichever the city wishes. Or they can let those assessments go down fully in one year and phase in those whose assessments and taxes would go up by putting the costs on the mill rate. I think that's a fair way.

I also indicated we would bring in an amendment to section 505 of the act within the next week to allow for much more flexibility on the part of a city like Hamilton to devise a phasing-in program. We're presently drafting that amendment. We're going to work with the treasurer of Hamilton to make sure it does take into account the kind of things they might want, and it will no longer require the approval of the minister to effect that phase-in program.

I was very impressed with one of the other members from Hamilton who thought the taxpayers of Ontario shouldn't help the people in Hamilton with the program. He thought the phasing in should occur but it should be handled by Hamilton.

Mr. Cunningham: I'd like to ask if the minister is aware that some of the increases are going to be in the area of 500 per cent, both in the commercial sector and in the residential sector. Notwithstanding the phasing-in proposition, does he feel that is fair?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is for me to decide whether it's fair or not fair. The facts of the matter are that the city of Hamilton, by resolution, asked for a section 86 reassessment. It was explained to them what this meant. It means there are winners and losers. Well over 55 per cent of the people who had their assessment changed had their assessment dropped. Almost 45 per cent, I guess, had an increase in their assessment. A lot of those increases were minimal. There are some very outstanding cases where the assessments of businesses and some homes have gone up. I think the city of Hamilton should take care of that in some manner, and the amendments to 505 will allow them to do that.

Mr. Swart: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Might I ask the minister if he has any plans for revisions in the assessment program other than section 86 of the act?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for the assessment program. As the honourable member knows, the assessment program, section 86 reassessments and so on, are taken care of by the Ministry of Revenue; he would have to ask the minister responsible for the act if he has any amendments to the Assessment Act in mind.

What I would say to the honourable member is that section 86, the new equalization factors that will be announced, other things that the Treasurer will announce, programs that we all announce and measures that the Minister of Revenue will announce over the next year or year and a half, all will bring about property tax reform and added impetus in this province—

Mr. Conway: Darcy McKeough will be in an old age home before you get to that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, it will all happen in an ordered, equitable way that will be acceptable to the members opposite and to us.

BARRIE JAIL

Mr. G. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) I address this question to either the Premier or the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry).

In view of the fact that statements have been made before a grievance committee hearing into the suspension and dismissal of a guard at the Barrie Jail, is anything going to be done concerning the inmates and their safety, considering that the statements have been to the effect that the jail is a fire trap?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the honourable member was anxious for me to answer this, or the Solicitor General. In fact, we both might take a crack at answering it. I thought initially that the—

Mr. T. P. Reid: We still won't get an answer.

An hon. member: Flip a coin.

An hon. member: Why don't we have a contest?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now, listen. Mr. Speaker, I have been very quiet this question period. I have not provoked anyone, and here they are interrupting me.

Mr. Speaker: Why start now?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am trying to think of some way to start now.

Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is quite properly concerned about the Barrie Jail, and I will certainly discuss it with the Minister of Correctional Services to see what assistance can be given to rectifying the problem.

I was a little concerned that the member was going to ask me to comment on some of the observations or the grievance procedure itself, in which case I would have said that I did not think it would be appro-appropriate for me so to do. But, in terms of the jail itself, certainly I will discuss it with the minister.

Mr. Peterson: Why doesn't the Premier answer the four questions that weren't asked while he is at it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for London Centre has asked his typical question. He has asked me why I do not answer more questions like the ones he asked, which are irrelevant. My answer to that is, "Okay."

Mr. Peterson: The Premier's problem is he doesn't know when people are making fun of us.

Mr. McClellan: Order. How many rules of order are there in this House?

MOTION

SITTINGS OF HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the House will not sit on Monday, May 21, or Tuesday, May 22.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The committees will meet as usual on Wednesday, May 23, and sittings in the House will resume at two o'clock on Thursday, May 24.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 87, An Act to amend the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act.

Motion agreed to.

[3:45]

Hon. Mr. Drea: Section 37 of this bill was amended in 1975 to cover lessees from Ontario Housing Corporation who subsequently bought their property. This is a housekeeping bill that brings about a further amendment to section 37. It takes into account the fact that Ontario Housing Corporation is transferring the home ownership part over to the Ontario Land Corporation. It also takes into account the fact that crown land in northern Ontario, once traditionally leased, is now being sold.

ONTARIO HIGHWAY TRANSPORT BOARD AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 88, An Act to amend the Ontario Highway Transport Board Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: These amendments reflect changes recommended as a result of an ongoing internal review of the board's procedures. In effect, they are designed to clarify or improve some of the board's procedures. I think they are self-explanatory.

PUBLIC COMMERCIAL VEHICLES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 89, An Act to amend the Public Commercial Vehicles Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have no further explanation on that bill, other than the statement I made earlier today.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 90, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I have just introduced a bill to amend the Highway Traffic Act. There are 13 separate amendments in this bill. Some are designed to clarify existing sections of the act and others are new.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to review briefly the highlights, particularly the exemption for emergency vehicles at red signal lights.

After much discussion and an in-depth examination of applicable legislation in other Canadian jurisdictions, it was agreed there are legitimate circumstances where emergency vehicles should be exempted from some rules of the road—when proceeding to fires, pursuing criminals, et cetera. This bill, therefore, proposes that such emergency vehicles should be given the right to proceed against a red signal light when adequate warning is being given by a continuously sounding siren and an intermittent flashing red light and the vehicle has been brought to a full stop before proceeding through the intersection.

Another amendment concerns reciprocity for bus safety inspections, exempting those vehicles that meet comparable standards for programs administered by other provinces or states, providing such jurisdictions reciprocate in a similar manner. This will allow bus operators with inspection facilities already established outside Ontario to avoid unnecessary duplication of safety inspections. Ontario companies should enjoy similar benefits, particularly those with routes to the United States.

The bill also pertains to the securing of loads for all vehicles. This amendment will extend the legislation covering the proper securing of loads, making it apply to all motor vehicles including passenger cars. This is aimed at drivers we have all seen on the highway attempting to move goods such as lumber, furniture and boats without taking proper precautions to ensure what they are carrying is properly tied and secured to the car.

The bill also proposed to more clearly define "a driver" to include a person who drives any type of vehicle, not just a motor vehicle. This would underline the fact that the rules of the road contained in the Highway Traffic Act apply to bicyclists, for example, as well as motorists.

As I mentioned, this bill contains several clarification amendments such as a new definition of "road-building machine." A further amendment will permit school bus operators to use their own log books to provide data required by the ministry.

Another amendment changes the words "produce a driver's licence" to "surrender a driver's licence" to remedy situations where a motorist has kept possession of his licence without giving the investigating police officer time to record necessary information. With this amendment every driver will now have to actually give his or her licence to the investigating officer when asked.

Also contained in this bill is an amendment concerning axle-unit weight and axle-group weight. When a vehicle's weight exceeds the allowable weight the driver may be required by the inspecting officer to remove the additional weight. In many circumstances all that may be required is that the load may be redistributed to comply with existing axle-weight standards.

In another amendment we are introducing the use of portable lane-control devices, units displaying red, green or amber traffic signals controlled by radio. These will be used mainly to alternate the streams of traffic when a two-lane highway is restricted to one lane. These units will be in operation mainly at road construction or repair sites, and these portable traffic signals must be obeyed just as permanently-installed signals are.

Finally, the Highway Traffic Act would be amended by a section stipulating that no person shall deposit snow or ice on a roadway without permission in writing to do so from my ministry or the road authority responsible for the maintenance of the road. This would eliminate the common practice where snow ploughs or snow removal devices dump snow from driveways and parking lots directly onto an adjacent roadway. That is presenting a potential danger to passing motorists. We realize such a bylaw now exists in some communities but this amendment would make for uniform coverage to include rural as well as municipal roads.

In addition I also intend, on second reading of the bill or in committee stage, to introduce an amendment to section 120 of the act to reflect the resolution of the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) regarding the use of flashing warning lights when transporting the mentally retarded on school buses. This resolution was debated in the House a few days ago.

I have touched briefly upon the proposed amendments contained in the bill which I have introduced and which is described in the accompanying compendium.

CITY OF TORONTO ACT

Ms. Bryden, on behalf of Mr. Renwick, moved first reading of Bill Pr5, An Act respecting the City of Toronto.

Motion agreed to.

HALDIMAND BOARD OF EDUCATION AND TEACHERS' DISPUTE ACT

Mr. G. I. Miller moved first reading of Bill 91, An Act respecting the Haldimand Board of Education and Teachers' Dispute.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. G. I. Miller: The purpose of this bill is to resolve the dispute between the Haldimand Board of Education and the secondary school teachers who are employees of the board. The bill orders an end to the strike that commenced March 29, 1979, and establishes a final offer selection procedure as a means of settling the matters in dispute between the parties.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answer to question 114 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1968.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

HURONIA DISTRICT HOSPITAL ACT

Mr. G. Taylor, on behalf of Mr. G. E. Smith, moved second reading of Bill Pr4, An Act respecting the Financing of the Huronia District Hospital.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

VILLAGE OF COOKSTOWN ACT

Mr. G. Taylor moved second reading of Bill Pr6, An Act respecting the Village of Cookstown.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Parrott moved second reading of Bill 24, An Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening comment?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, I don't, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gaunt: I want to make a few comments with respect to what I consider to be major environmental legislation. I certainly welcome this bill. I think the opposition parties in this House can take a great deal of credit for this legislation. It was only because of opposition questioning and opposition badgering, in some cases, of the ministry—

Mr. Nixon: I never badgered; it was the member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: —that we got this bill in its present form. To be fair, I think the minister has taken a great deal of interest in this problem. He has undertaken a new thrust within the ministry for which I congratulate him. But, I point out that there are questions on Port Loring and Dowling. I suggest the whole matter of the liquid industrial waste hearings have certainly pushed the minister—

Mr. Nixon: Brought him to his knees.

Mr. Gaunt: —into areas of good environmental legislation, of which this piece is one.

Having said that, I think the minister can determine that we welcome and endorse the main thrust of this particular bill, and even, for the most part, specific provisions within the bill. There are some concerns, but I want to come to those later on. I don't want to take a lot of time, but I think I should review some of the provisions of the bill with which we agree. One of those provisions is a rather contentious provision and I want to deal with that in a moment.

[4:00]

I think the provisions having to do with requiring persons responsible for a spill to immediately notify the minister, the municipality or the regional municipality, the owner and person in control that a spill has occurred, the circumstances surrounding the spill and the action the person intends to take or has taken is a laudable requirement.

The bill imposes clear responsibility for control, cleanup and restoration of the natural environment on owners and persons in control of pollutants, and this includes those who may not necessarily be the owners but are in the business of manufacturing, transporting, storing and marketing pollutants. We certainly agree with that.

The bill broadens the power of the minister to order the owner or person in control to clean up and restore the natural environment and, where necessary, the bill authorizes the minister to order persons other than the owner or person in control to clean up and restore the natural environment.

The bill enables the minister to take immediate action to ensure cleanup and restoration of an area and to pursue the question of liability for costs of cleanup and damages later. That is certainly supportable from our point of view.

This is the contentious one, or perhaps the most contentious part as far as we are concerned: The bill establishes the absolute liability of the owner or person in control for damages resulting from a spill and the costs entailed in cleaning up and restoring the environment. In our view this is very important in ensuring that the burden of a loss does not fall on the victim of pollution or on the public purse and adheres to the principle that the polluter pays. Regardless of whether the spill resulted from no fault of the owner or person having control, the risk of spills is inherent in their business and they should be responsible as a reasonable part of their business for the costs of control, cleanup, restoration and damages resulting from spills.

I said this was contentious and it is contentious from the point of view of transporters, of manufacturers of chemicals, from the point of view of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. To be fair, I think there are some of them who can see the advantage of this kind of legislation, but at the same time of course it could very well put heavy additional financial requirements on some of those companies.

None the less, environmental groups and those who are concerned in this particular area have strongly supported this particular clause of the bill, and I do and my party does as well. I think it is legislation which is absolutely necessary in this day and age and I want to make it clear to the minister that we support this provision.

I acknowledge some of the concerns which have been expressed to me privately and publicly, but none the less, on balance I see no other way to go in this area. I think the absolute liability embodied in Bill 24 on the positive side should give industry the incentive to take precautions against many of the unforeseeable risks.

To transport hazardous wastes, the nuclear industry, for example, uses trucks whose tanks will withstand a 100-mile-an-hour collision. I think it is possible in this day and age, although it will obviously incur some costs on the part of the owners or the transporters of such pollutants, to technologically develop some systems and some equipment that will lower the risk of transporting some of these very hazardous and dangerous materials.

I think that because of this industry will have a much greater incentive to prevent some of the spills which have occurred.

As I understand it, there were slightly over 1,000 spills in Ontario last year. I guess that averages out. It runs around 1,000 spills per year in Ontario, many of which are preventable. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, industry will certainly have a lot more incentive to improve their technology which, in effect, will prevent a good many of these spills. I repeat again, we are in support of the provision of absolute liability.

Further, the bill authorizes control and cleanup of spills and restoration of the natural environment by designated persons and municipalities and provides them with the right to recover their reasonable expenses from the owner or person in control.

The bill gives persons who are authorized, or ordered to do cleanup, the right to enter on private land for the purposes of cleanup. The bill enables a person other than those responsible for the spill, who have been ordered to clean up a spill, to recover his reasonable expenses from the ministry.

I think those are most of the main provisions of the bill. Those are provisions with which we agree.

In respect to some of the flaws in the bill, there are several points I would like to mention.

In terms of the industry itself, insurance is available. I'm assured insurance is available to companies to cover them under the terms of this absolute liability requirement. I believe insurance is available to a maximum of $20 million for an aggregate number of spills in the province per year with a maximum of $10 million per spill for any one year.

I think a Swiss company offers that kind of insurance. I believe they have an office here in the city of Toronto. Presumably most of the companies would take on that kind of insurance since it would be in their best interests to do so. It would offer them the kind of insurance protection which I presume most will feel they should have.

There is one matter that was raised with me and that was the fact that in the chemical industry particularly there are a lot of smaller producers which, perhaps, could not afford this kind of insurance at the rates at which it's provided. I don't know whether that's the case or not. All I can say to the minister is if that is the case, perhaps industry should be encouraged to set up a fund of its own, a fund which would allow all companies to contribute, perhaps, a half a cent per gallon for insurance coverage which wouldn't be sought by some of the smaller companies. Those companies could then be secured, or at least protected, and could draw from this fund should the need arise.

The minister should certainly promote the setting up of such a fund to allow these smaller companies some protection in the event they really don't feel they can afford the normal insurance coverage but might, for one reason or the other, incur a fairly large liability bill in the event of a spill.

Another problem I would draw to the minister's attention is the matter of the two-year limitation. Previously it was six years. A six-year period is really a normal limitation period from the date the cause of action arose. I think two years is rather limited and too short. In many of these cases—and I cite Port Loring as one—the effects of that pollution do not become apparent to their fullest extent within a two-year period. The pollution of the wells in those areas did not become apparent until after a two-year period.

I suggest to the minister that a two-year period is too limiting and too restrictive. I think that particular limitation period should be extended beyond the two years it currently is in the bill.

The other point on which I want to make some comments is the matter of payment or liability as the direct result of a spill. That has caused some concern. It is a new wording from Bill 209. Some concern has been expressed to the extent one would have to prove causation. Sometimes that is very difficult to prove and sometimes it is even insurmountable. Under those conditions, the public would therefore fail to obtain compensation.

It has been suggested that the section be broadened to include both direct and indirect damage. I don't know whether the minister would feel comfortable with that or not, but

I suggest it is worth looking at and worth considering. If the minister views the pros and cons of inserting indirect damage as well as direct damage, hopefully he will come to the conclusion that both direct and indirect damage should be included under the terms of the bill.

Another point which is perhaps not a big point, although it could be, has to do with the proclamation of the bill. As we know, some bills around here receive royal assent but aren't proclaimed for months, and in some cases years, after the bill has been passed in the Legislature. The minister should give some consideration to changing the bill and making it effective on royal assent, rather than on proclamation.

I can understand there may be some aspects of the bill which the minister may not have in place on royal assent. My fear is of a very powerful lobby moving in on the minister's office after royal assent or after committee hearings, which I presume will take place in the weeks ahead. Whether that happens before the summer break or not, if not completed before the summer break, presumably it will extend over the summer break period to be completed by the fall. If the bill becomes law on royal assent, I think it foregoes any possibility that the ministry could stall in the event of a very powerful lobby.

What I am saying to the minister is that this is good legislation. We want to get it into place as quickly as we can and we don't want to be sitting here one year hence saying, "Why haven't you proclaimed Bill 24?"

There is some concern that the minister's power under the terms of this bill, in section 3(e) amending section 94 of the act is very broad. In this section, the minister has the power to exempt any spill or any class of spill. I think that's very broad power and it does alarm some people who feel that exemption power could be and may be misused in the years ahead.

I don't think it's necessary under the terms of this bill to have that broad, wide-ranging power of exemption. If the minister wants a power given to him under the terms of this bill to exempt a specific class where he considers there may be a problem, then I think it should be spelled out in much clearer terms than it is. All I'm saying is that the power for broad exemption is there and that's worrisome.

My final point—and we'll be dealing with this undoubtedly in clause-by-clause—is that the definition of "pollutant" is seen to be "a contaminant other than heat, sound, vibration, or radiation." I can see the definition could extend to the first three, but I'm wondering about radiation. Is that an appropriate inclusion there or should it be excluded from the pollutant definition? I pose that question to the minister. It did raise some flags as far as I was concerned.

We've been listening to the effects of radiation from our nuclear plants and from X-ray machines and it's consumed a lot of time in this House and in committee. It's becoming a greater and greater problem in our society. Perhaps the minister would like to comment on it.

In short, we support the legislation; we think it will make Ontario a safe place in which to live, and in general terms I think it will enhance environmental quality in this province. For those reasons we will support it.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, this is very important legislation and I'm a little surprised the minister did not have a fuller statement on second reading than he gave on first reading, in order to establish clearly what are the principles of this rather ground-breaking kind of legislation.

This bill is an attempt to answer the problems created by a series of environmental incidents over the years—spills of oils and other hazardous substances, contamination of water, air and soil, and so on. These were incidents which have caused serious injury to people or communities in this province and where it was found difficult to establish liability or obtain any justice for the victims under existing legislation and common law.

As the previous speaker mentioned, it also provides for a no-fault obligation, which is a fairly new concept in liability legislation. It imposes this on both the person who owns the pollutant and the person in control. It imposes on them also a liability not only to clean up but to rehabilitate the affected area and to compensate the victims. In addition, it allows the ministry and the municipality or persons designated by the ministry in the regulations to undertake the cleanup and restoration of the natural environment on their own, in the event that the polluter fails to act or cannot be identified.

This is all, as I say, ground-breaking legislation and I commend the minister for having the courage to bring it in. It is long overdue. We have been waiting eight years, since the Environmental Protection Act was passed in 1971, to get legislation that would really make the polluter pay. I think it has taken a long time to convince the government the polluter has not been paying, that he has been shifting the costs to the victims of pollution or to the public bodies which are left to clean up the mess afterwards.

I hope the minister will not water this legislation down and that it will also be an indication we can expect other legislative improvements from him in other areas of our environmental legislation, such as provisions for class actions on a more adequate basis.

While the legislation is good, it is not without its weaknesses, as the member for Huron-Bruce has pointed out, in some areas. We hope to correct those weaknesses in the committee stage but in the meantime, with that hope, we intend to support the principle of the legislation on second reading.

The need for this kind of legislation has become more and more evident. The growing use of chemicals and petroleum products, many of them highly toxic, imposes a liability on the users of those substances and products to see that they do not adversely affect either the health of people or the environment in which we live.

As the member for Huron-Bruce said, there are about 1,000 spills annually. Many of those, in my opinion, are preventable if there was sufficient incentive for the polluter to see they were prevented, and to redesign his equipment so his transportation equipment is virtually fail-safe and leak-proof and as close to being unbreakable as possible. The other equipment could also be designed to ensure leakages in the environment or spills of any kind would not occur.

We have only to look at the many cases which I think, we, in the opposition, have brought to the minister's attention where the legislation failed to provide either adequate cleanup or adequate compensation to the victims, in order to realize how important it is to pass this kind of legislation and to make sure it is not watered down.

We think of the attempt to get at Dow Chemical of Canada Limited through the law courts and the absolutely pitiful amount of compensation obtained for the fishermen whose livelihoods were destroyed by the company's discharge of mercury into the St. Clair River. We have to look at the Dowling case up near Sudbury where a PCB spill has not yet been cleaned up six years after the event. We do not know the effect of those PCBs on the soil there, still contaminated with PCBs.

Just this year, we read about a spill of 8,000 gallons of gasoline in North York. Five thousand people had to be evacuated. Think of the inconvenience to those 5,000 people, not to mention the fear of what might happen if they had stayed.

We read about the family whose home was completely impermeated with odour from a fuel oil discharge; the family lives in High Park in Toronto. A fuel oil delivery truck backed into a garage and a fence behind them, and for months they have been living with an incredible odour which has completely disrupted the living conditions in their home.

I would just like to read you one or two comments from the people concerned. Mrs. Wegierski, who is one of the persons affected, said, "We've been living in the agony of offensive odours and suffered the inconveniences of a damaged home," Mrs. Wegierski said at breakfast Tuesday, breaking into tears. She also said, "The oil spill has not only ruined our home, but seriously disrupted our routine and affected our health and stability."

They were unable to keep anything in their basement after the spill, because it all got contaminated by the terrible odour. Her husband used to do sculpturing down there, and they kept fruits and vegetables, as most people do, and she did some of her teacher preparation work down there. That was all completely eliminated. They still have not got compensation because it is going through various insurance claims and the actual spill, or the removal of the odour, has not been cleaned up yet. They even suffered from the problem of the insurance adjuster going on a holiday, which delayed further action on the claim.

This sort of suffering and injury to individuals cannot be tolerated in our society, and the experience in these kinds of cases, including the Port Loring case that the member for Huron-Bruce mentioned, has indicated that the present law, the Environmental Protection Act and the common law are inadequate to deal with this kind of environmental disaster.

The Port Loring situation, for those who don't recall the details, is that for three years the water supply in the wells of the people in this area was contaminated with gasoline from a Gulf station, but the liability of the Gulf station was difficult to establish because they only leased the property on which the station was located. So for three years, people had to bring in water from elsewhere, and no one paid them for that, in addition to which, no one compensated them for the disadvantage of having a polluted water supply.

The important thing in this legislation is that it establishes a new concept of liability, to be placed on the user of our dangerous chemicals and other substances, and I think the 1976 legal decision in the case of Regina versus Power Tank-Lines underlines the court's concept of that liability, a concept which I think should be accepted today, which is, that the users of these substances have an obligation to see that risks are minimized. If there are any accidents, regardless of the establishment of direct fault, those users are to be responsible for compensating the victims and for the cleanup and for restoration of the environment.

As the learned judge in the court case commented, you need prompt action in a situation of this sort, and if there are inhibitions about who is responsible and who is liable, you will not get prompt action. Therefore, you do not get adequate remedial action or compensation for the victims. Also, the industries using these products are the ones with the capability not only to prevent the spills but also to clean up after them.

The member for Huron-Bruce discussed the question of whether their liability should be covered by insurance, by a public fund or by a fund set up by the various industries. There are arguments in favour of each of these routes. I understand that the costs for the largest spill in this area affecting the St. Lawrence River were $9 million in recent years. That was a spill on the other side of the international border, but it did affect our waters.

One can get insurance right now for $10 million per spill or a total of $20 million for all the spills in one year. So insurance is available. I am sure that if this legislation is passed additional companies will move into the field.

The trouble with a fund is that if everybody puts in a small amount, so much per gallon, then they feel no responsibility for cutting down their own contribution to the danger of spills. There is no incentive except through the general rise and fall of the fund, but it becomes very remote and becomes really a sort of licence to pollute or licence to continue operating without looking at the risks and without trying to minimize them.

I realize there is a problem for small companies which may find some difficulty in financing insurance. They may have to group together and set up some sort of group insurance, but I think that is best done in the private sector. It may also be that we need something like an unsatisfied judgement fund in this field, because there may be cases where people are inadequately insured and are not able to meet their obligations under this legislation.

However, I hope that we will continue to maintain the principles of the bill, that the polluter must pay, that remedial action must be prompt, that the environment must be restored as far as possible to its original condition and that there must be compensation for the victims.

Looking at the legislation more specifically, this bill in effect adds a new part to the Environmental Protection Act dealing exclusively with spills and discharges. While I think the definition of spills and discharges is fairly broad, I do join with the member for Huron-Bruce in questioning why four items are excluded: heat, noise, sound and radiation.

I hope the minister will give us his explanation as to why those items are excluded from the definition of spills and discharges. It seems to me there can be a discharge of heat from a nuclear plant into a waterway which can have a very serious environmental effect on the fish life and the whole ecology of that waterway.

I also would like to see the definition of "leak," which was added to the new version of the bill from the December version, extended to include the latent contamination that comes from leachates in waste disposal sites, landfill sites, and any sort of continuous leakage which may be going into the environment and which may have a latent contamination rather than a sudden or abnormal spill. I think such leakages are abnormal, which is the word used in the act for classifying what spills are covered, because they shouldn't be coming out of any landfill sites and getting into any land or waterways.

The coverage of the bill is basically the same coverage as was in the Environmental Protection Act in the section on notification. There are six clauses there as to the kinds of spills and incidents where notification must be given and as to what kinds of adverse effects are to be covered by the legislation. Just to run through them, they involve impairment of the quality of the natural environment; injury or damage to property, plant or animal life; harm or material discomfort to any person; adversely affect the health of any person; impairment of the safety of any person; and the rendering of any property or plant or animal life unfit for use by man.

Those clauses are taken out of the present Environmental Protection Act, section 15, and re-enacted in this new part. I am glad they are retained. I am also glad the minister has added two new subclauses for notification of the effects of polluting the environment, which must be reported; they are, "loss of enjoyment of normal use of property" and "interference with normal conduct of business." I commend the minister for adding those two clauses to the Environmental Protection Act under this amendment.

Looking at the compensation section of the bill, I have some questions about the coverage. I share the concern of the member for Huron-Bruce about the insertion of the word "direct" into the phrase that it should cover loss or damage directly caused by the pollutant. The member for Huron-Bruce suggested we should add the words "direct or indirect." I would suggest we might just strike out the word "direct" and go back to the original version, so that the clause would then read "loss or damage caused by the pollutant."

On the compensation question, under the act it covers "loss of life, personal injury and pecuniary loss." I hope the minister will spell out to us what he means by "pecuniary loss." Does it cover, for example, loss of wages, inconvenience from evacuation or from situations such as experienced by the High Park family who lost the use of a large part of their home? Does it cover the provision of alternative services, such as the water supply for the Port Loring people? I think what is covered by pecuniary loss should perhaps be spelled out in greater detail. That would save considerable litigation perhaps by people making claims under the act.

Looking at the restoration section of the bill, the obligation is placed on the polluter to restore the natural environment. It doesn't say restore to what level. I think we should have a clause added saying something like "restore as close to its original condition as possible." At least we would like the minister to clarify what he means by restoration and rehabilitation of the natural environment. I think it is going to be very difficult in the Dowling case, as my colleague from Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) may tell us later, to restore that area to its original condition.

With regard to the cleanup actions which may be taken by the ministry or by municipalities or persons designated by the ministry, I would like to ask the minister why he dropped out of Bill 24 the provision that was in Bill 209 last December, under which he could order other ministries and disposal site operators to take remedial action over and above what they themselves were responsible for as direct polluters if they became so involved. Does he still have power under the act to order disposal site operators in particular to clean up in the case of any spills or leachates coming out? I am referring to the operators of both publicly operated and privately operated disposal sites.

As I mentioned, while we support the principle of the bill, we would like to see some of the clauses changed. We will certainly join with the other opposition party to restore the time limit to the six years that was in the original bill tabled last December. I understand six years is the common limitation period for most liability legislation.

I think the six years should extend from the date that the claimant knows, or ought to know, about the loss or damage which he has incurred or which he thinks he has incurred. It seems to me that there will be many cases where people will not be aware of their rights or of their losses soon enough to get their action going within the two years, and it seems unduly restrictive to cut the six years down to two.

On the regulations section, we certainly feel it is much too broad and that it reflects the trend of this government to try to bring in window-dressing regulation and then take it all out by the back door with exemptions which virtually make the legislation a nullity. We hope that will not happen in this legislation, but we would prefer if safeguards were put in the legislation to prevent that happening.

The first safeguard should be that any exemptions that are to be brought in should be notified to the Legislature and to the public so they can be aware of what is contemplated and have an opportunity to register objections. The minister should indicate to us before the legislation is passed what he has in mind for exemptions. Is he planning to exempt individual spills or only classes of spills—I would hope it would be the latter—if he does have an exemption power?

Also, with regard to regulations, I would commend to the minister a practice that is being increasingly adopted by the federal government and by United States agencies of prepublication of environmental regulations. This is such a sensitive area, and it affects the public so widely, that it is very advisable to have an opportunity for the public, as well as the companies affected—for all parties—to look at the regulations ahead of time and to have an opportunity to put in briefs, comments and so on about them before they are actually passed and gazetted.

We have a concern that has not yet been mentioned about the question of farm wastes and whether they will be covered by the act. The repeal of section 15 of the Environmental Protection Act, which is the notification section, also repeals a section of that act which exempted the disposal of animal wastes in accordance with normal farming practices from the notification requirements under the Environmental Protection Act.

In the re-enacting of section 15 in this new part, there is no reference to any exemption for farm wastes. I think that is something that should be considered, because if it was considered important under the previous legislation to exempt the disposal of animal wastes in accordance with normal farming practices, then it is still worth looking at the validity of that exemption.

I would like the minister to indicate whether he thinks he has power under his exemption powers in the act to exempt farm wastes and, if so, does he intend to exempt them? We think they probably should be exempt if they are disposed of in accordance with normal farming practices.

Those are the main points we would like to have the minister comment on or to see changed in committee, and we will be introducing some amendments to bring in those changes for the House to consider.

I would like to stress that this legislation does provide a very strong incentive for firms to prevent spills and to see that our environment is protected, and that is what we need. They will change their handling procedures, they will change their employee training, they will change the promptness with which they act and they will redesign their equipment if the onus is placed squarely on them to assume a liability for any environmental incident that happens.

The other thing that we are very pleased to have in the bill is the opportunity for the ministry to act promptly in the case of any environmental accident and to collect afterwards. We still believe in the principle that the polluter must pay, but we do not think the victim should have to wait, and we do not think the situation should be allowed to deteriorate to the extent where the environment is actually destroyed or the cost of cleanup becomes multiplied 100 times by delays. We would also point out that delays in compensation are really justice denied. Justice delayed is justice denied, so that is something that must be speeded up as well.

We hope the minister will continue to support the principles of this bill, and it is an indication we have a Minister of the Environment who really intends to change the legislation and make it effective.

Mr. Haggerty: I rise to speak on Bill 24, An Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act. Like my colleague from Huron-Bruce, I do agree with it in principle and support it.

I have some concerns about some of the interpretations of the bill. I am looking at the explanatory notes where it says: "The act also authorizes a municipality to take action for prevention, cleanup and restoration and to obtain compensation."

That puts quite an onus onto a municipality. The reason I bring that to the minister's attention as it relates to section 16 of the bill is that I think there is a lesson to be learned from the difficulties that have arisen in the United States. I refer particularly to New York state around the Niagara area, and the Love Canal incident. All these sites were originally approved by the federal environmental authorities and by the state. I'm thinking of the seriousness of the incident involving hazardous wastes which surfaced recently, causing problems to the health and welfare of the residents.

This bill will put the onus on the municipality the same as it has done on the American side. There the public—concerned citizens—are now taking civil action against the local municipalities. The blame is put on the municipalities, although they did not originally approve these sites. In a sense, many approvals were given behind closed doors by upper governmental authorities.

I would suggest this bill will mean the minister perhaps is going to saddle the municipality with tremendous legal costs in cleaning up waste disposal areas we may not be aware of here. There have been reports there are in Ontario certain disposal sites that receive large quantities of hazardous waste—those creating the radiation in Port Hope, for example. There are other sites that have not received such large quantities of hazardous materials and perhaps the problem there is not as serious as at some disposal sites.

The Environment Canada Report completed in 1974 indicated Fort Erie was considered a hazardous municipal disposal site. Until this day those people are sitting on edge. They don't know what the minister means by "hazardous," or what materials are in there. Apparently investigations have been carried out and we still don't know what hazardous materials have been dumped in that site, or what effect they will have in 10 or 15 years or perhaps in a much shorter time than that. The bill definitely indicates the minister is putting the onus on the municipality and the legal costs today, if I can relate it to the American side, are going to be very high. Compensation is talked about in here. Sure the municipality may be compensated for cleanup work, but there is going to be a legal cost involved. I can relate it to the cost of the Dow Chemical lawsuit the province was involved in—the heavy cost of legal fees for that alone. This can come about through the municipality taking action to have the matter cleaned up.

I can think of another instance close by; that is, the acid spill in 1972 in the town of Pelham. That was seven years ago now and it's still not settled. People have not been compensated for the damage to private land. The municipalities were compensated for the damage to roads, but the private land owners have never had a settlement. They're dealing with a railroad. I think it is the TH and B Railway. There's a question of which is responsible, the railroad or the firm that manufactured the tank car.

I suggest to the minister that on this particular area relating to moving hazardous material on railroads his staff should be looking at some of the obsolete railroad beds in Ontario. I think again of a particular railroad, Penn Central. It may belong to Amtrak now. It runs from Fort Erie to the other side of Welland into Wainfleet township. They have a speed control order on that particular railbed. I think it's down to about 20 miles per hour. That bed isn't safe enough even to carry passengers. There's some concern about freight that may be carried there. One sees a number of tank cars being carried over that railroad track. I suggest that that's an area the minister should be looking at.

My colleague from Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) has brought to the minister's attention the situation where American railroads are using railroads from Fort Erie to Windsor that are owned across the border from Niagara Falls. There have been some areas where they have not maintained the roadbeds to sufficient safety standards. I suggest that the minister should be looking at that particular area.

I'm rather disappointed about section 2(f) of the bill on spills where it says: "pollutant means a contaminant other than heat, sound, vibration or radiation." My colleague from Huron-Bruce brought to the minister's attention the carrying of nuclear waste from Pickering to Douglas Point by road transport. That is used for spent fuel storage at Douglas Point. Spent fuel is one of the most deadly toxic chemicals on earth. I've questioned it during the MTC estimates and I find that they're not well informed on what material is being carried. The government has taken a short-term measure here for storage of radioactive waste. They have not come to some conclusion on long-term storage yet.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We don't license it in Ontario. You should know that.

Mr. Haggerty: That's no excuse whether you license it or not.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It's a good reason.

Mr. Haggerty: It is hazardous material and somebody has to show some responsibility in this area. I'm sure the minister will show responsibility in that area. The fuel has been used by Ontario Hydro, which is an arm of the government of Ontario. I suggest to the minister we should be moving in the direction of long-term storage. Don't leave it to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Can't you trust your government?

Mr. Haggerty: It's a crown agency like Ontario Hydro. It is up to the elected representatives to be the watchdogs in this particular area because it's a dangerous area.

I suggest that short-term measures are not good enough. The minister and his ministry will have to be involved in it. I suggest that the minister should be looking at this particular area. We're looking for long-term solutions. It's his responsibility, just like setting out these hydro sites right now. Somebody is going to have to take some responsibility.

When I look at the section on exemptions, that bothers me to some extent. I've seen the minister bring in control orders for certain industries in Ontario. They may not meet certain requirements, but he removes the control orders without even having a public hearing. I suggest, when the minister gives exemptions like this that relate to hazardous material or whatever, it allows them to pollute.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You are nine months out of date on that one.

[5:00]

Mr. Haggerty: I may be, but for example, the minister, I might say, has exempted Inco. He removed part of that control order to allow them to pollute the atmosphere. Of course, as they are shut down now. I don't know what the studies would indicate for the Sudbury basin's air quality. It would be interesting for his ministry to give us that up-to-date information on the Sudbury basin so we could see how clean the air is there now.

As I said, I am concerned about the exemptions because they could undermine the whole principle of the bill. I hope the minister is going to give some serious consideration to the exemptions he may want to bring about.

It has been suggested I think by previous speakers that there should be something in the bill that can go back to some of these older sites that have been used for liquid waste disposal in Ontario, so whoever dumped or permitted dumping will be responsible for this particular contamination of the air, water and soil in this area. Perhaps it's something that was permitted 10 or 15 years ago, but I think somebody has the responsibility in this area.

In the matter of compensation, I would like to see something in the bill that gives the individual person who has his land or property damaged by a hazardous spill some right to legal assistance. For example, there is a Compensation for Victims of Crime Act which provides compensation to a person, who through some unnecessary action by some individual, has been injured. There's no doubt about it, it's an area at which we could look. When I look at the property owners in the town of Pelham who have had to go out and hire lawyers to fight their battle in the courts, I feel there must be some financial assistance or funds available to permit them to take legal action against the person who was found responsible for an acid spill or a chemical spill or hazardous waste spill, or whatever we want to call it. I suggest there should be some type of fund. I think my colleague from Huron-Bruce mentioned there should be a charge to the industry in this particular area.

I hope the minister is going to have a regulation in the bill that trucking firms carrying waste for disposal must be bonded. I was listening to the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) this afternoon, and he indicated they are moving in the area of deregulation. He was putting the onus on the person running the tractor vehicle, not on the person who owns the trailer.

I suggest there should be some measures to protect the public in a sense to solve the legal question of who is responsible for a truck towing a trailer and whether the broker is responsible for part of the acid spill or the industrial waste spill or hazardous waste spill. I suggest there's an area at which we should be looking. The minister had better talk to his colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications, because this may put the onus on the person owning the vehicle, not on the person owning the tractor.

I think the bill is an improvement over the other bill. I support it in principle but these are some of my concerns and perhaps the minister will take a look at them.

Mr. Laughren: As others have done, I rise to support the principle of this bill. As I understand the bill, there are basically four principles, namely: the polluter must pay; there must be prompt action taken when there is a spill; there must be restoration of the environment; and, finally, there must be compensation for the victim. Those are what I understand the principles of this bill to be, and one would be foolhardy to disagree with them.

What bothers me a great deal is that the minister's actions do not match his words. The minister did not have to bring in this bill to have had these principles run throughout the actions of his ministry when it had the authority to do so, and I think the minister knows full well what I am talking about.

Keeping in mind what those four principles of the bill are, I would like to relate them to an incident that happened in November 1973, when 1,000 gallons of askerol oil spilled in Dowling, not far from Sudbury. The oil was allowed to remain there and percolate through the soil.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment that it was some of the oil—a very small fraction of the oil.

Mr. Laughren: Sufficient oil to be a serious problem was allowed to percolate through the soil. A number of tests were done over a period of time, and there was even some partial removal of the contaminated soil. That took us up to 1975 and 1976, and all the time the minister's predecessor and the officials of the ministry did not take any serious action. Then in June 1976, lo and behold, a ministerial order was issued against CP Rail. The ministerial order stated:

"You are hereby ordered, commencing within 25 days of the date of service of this order"—this is to CP Rail—" (1) to remove all soils contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyl material to a landfill site or facility approved for polychlorinated biphenyl disposal, or (2) to transfer all contaminated material stockpiled from the 1975 excavation program, and all such additional contaminated material as can be excavated by providing shoring of the railway tracks, to a landfill site or facility approved for polychlorinated biphenyl disposal, and to implement a course of action suitable to the Ministry of the Environment designed to arrest the migration of polychlorinated biphenyl material from the railway right of way, along with a compatible monitoring program."

That, basically, was the content of the order issued by the ministry and signed by the northeastern region director of the Ministry of the Environment; that was on March 21, 1977.

First of all, CP appealed that order, and since that time not much has happened. CP appealed it, and the contaminated soil is still there. The order is very specific: "Remove the contaminated soil."

I know the minister will say, "One reason this bill is coming in is to allow the ministry to make sure that this is done," but some strange things have happened.

Since that time, the ratepayers of the town of Onaping Falls, in the particular community of Dowling, have formed a subcommittee consisting of three engineers, all of whom know what they are talking about. They formed a subcommittee of the ratepayers' association and they said to the minister, "You have to excavate that soil," and they documented their case extremely well.

The town council of Onaping Falls passed a motion saying: "You have to excavate this soil; it is percolating down to our water table."

The council of the regional municipality passed a motion saying that they should remove the contaminated soil.

Last, but not least, the local MPP said to the minister, "You must remove the contaminated soil."

With that kind of opposition, all of it reasonable, knowledgeable and well-intentioned, the minister still took the position that he would not remove the soil. So the ratepayers put together a very thoughtful and very reasonable brief, in which they documented their wishes, and sent it to the Minister of the Environment.

All the time the minister is saying, "No, no. We are going to have a hydrodynamic containment well. We will draw off water; we will develop a cone of depression, suck the water into that cone, pump it up and test it and see if it is contaminated with PCBs."

The ratepayers put together a good brief; sent it to the ministry and the ministry said, "We will send it to our consultants, Geocon." Geocon were the people who recommended the hydrodynamic containment well. They sent it out to the same people. I don't know what they expected. Perhaps the minister, with some kind of strange logic, thought the Geocon people would contradict their first reports when they had already said they wanted to have the hydrodynamic well and that excavation wasn't the answer. The minister sent it back to the same people who made the original recommendations. That did not seem to make sense to me.

Mr. Gaunt: The mayor wasn't very happy.

Mr. Laughren: No. The mayor of Onaping Falls was rather disturbed at the minister. At least now when the minister goes into Onaping Falls he tells the mayor he is there, which is an improvement over what happened previously.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The honourable member cannot be sure of that.

Mr. Laughren: That is right, one cannot be sure that he will always tell the mayor.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I'm liable to pop up anywhere in this province, any time.

Mr. Laughren: If the mayor finds out, the minister is in trouble.

Anyway, Geocon submitted its report back to the ministry just in the past week or so and said: "Do you know what, Mr. Minister of the Environment? We were right in the first place. We really must build that hydrodynamic containment well, and excavation is not the answer."

I don't know, I guess nobody was terribly surprised, but I think an injustice was done to a very good subcommittee of the Dowling Ratepayers' Association, people who had put in a lot of work. The minister's people ignored the recommendations of the ratepayers' group.

What really gets me in this whole scenario is that when one goes back to March 21, 1977 the minister told Canadian Pacific: "Excavate the contaminated soil." Now, when the onus is upon his ministry to get rid of it, they do not have the same requirement for themselves. What is good enough for CP should surely be good enough for the Ministry of the Environment. But no; the minister said earlier: "CP, you must remove the soil"; now, when the onus is upon them to do it, they back off and say: "No, we are not going to remove it; it is too expensive. We are going to put in a well and get the contaminated material out that way."

That is not right, to decide it will be done in a second class way because the ministry is doing it. That is really what the minister is doing. We think he is gambling where he should not be gambling.

Look at the principle of this bill: the polluter must pay. The spill occurred because a train hit a truck at a level crossing. Two private sectors were the characters which caused the spill. One of the principles of the bill with which the minister agreed is that the polluter must pay, whoever caused the pollution.

The second principle is there must be prompt action. That spill was in November, 1973. A known carcinogen was in the soil and percolating down through to the water table. That is not prompt action.

The third principle is restoration of the environment. The contaminated soil is still there so it has not been restored to its original form.

The fourth principle: compensation for victims. There have been no known victims to this point and there won't be. Even if it was into the water table it would take a long period of time for damage to be done. But the dangers of PCBs in a water supply is well documented. I don't think the minister questions that. There is no safe level of PCB contamination, no safe level at all. The minister can say there are acceptable levels, but he surely would not disagree with me that there are no safe levels in PCBs in a water supply. In terms of compensation for the victims; if that municipality has problems in the future, there will have to be compensation. If individuals have problems in the future there could have to be compensation.

We have those four principles of the bill, on the first three of which the Minister of the Environment has been, quite frankly, negligent. I know this bill was not in effect, I understand that, but the minister could have proceeded with the cleanup faster than he has. The minister could have recommended that contaminated soil be now removed, using the same reasoning with which he recommended the well be used. He had a choice. He could say remove the soil or we'll put in a containment well.

There are other choices too, but basically those are two fundamental choices; and the minister chose to put in the containment well. So it doesn't make sense to say we don't have the authority to remove the soil but we have the authority to remove the contaminated material by use of a containment well. It doesn't make sense. The minister was proceeding anyway without this legislation, he was prepared to proceed, so it doesn't make sense for him to argue now he couldn't proceed because this bill was not in place.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There is a big difference. Who pays for it? Who is responsible?

Mr. Laughren: I would ask the minister whether in a situation like this, where the principles are clearly outlined in the bill and they apply to a situation such as the PCB spill at Dowling, he now intends to extract the costs of excavation or cleanup from the people who caused the spill? When he responds perhaps he would address himself to that.

I have my suspicions about the situation in the Sudbury community; namely I suspect the Ministry of the Environment is partially responsible for the current state of contamination of the soil. I suspect that if the Minister of the Environment was to take the CPR to court to clean up, the CPR could establish that the ministry, because of the responsibilities they have, are partially responsible for the costs because they knew the spill had occurred and did not take action promptly. I would suspect this ministry would have enormous difficulty having a successful court action against the CPR. That's why I believe the ministry is not proceeding against the CPR to pay for the cleanup.

I hope the minister will respond to that in his remarks. Basically what has happened is that the matter has been allowed to drag on from 1973 to 1979, five and a half years. The contaminated soil is still there, the PCBs are still in the soil and indeed percolating their way down and spreading, always spreading yet nothing really has happened; all sorts of studies but nothing has happened. Surely the minister wouldn't defend elapse of a five and a half year period from the time of the spill to the time when any kind of solution is even attempted. That's a long time.

By attempted I don't mean a study, I mean excavation or his containment well. It hasn't started yet. They haven't begun constructing the well and they haven't begun excavating the soil. So nothing has been done as yet except some removal of the surface oil from the spill site. Surely the minister, if he is defensive about it, will not attempt to defend that kind of time lag between a spill and the cleanup process.

So while we support the principle of this bill we would feel much more comfortable about it if we felt the minister was going to be more aggressive, and if his actions in the past, when he could have taken actions, indicated he had a sense of urgency about a spill like this. There's no reason that delay should have gone from the fall of 1973 to the spring and now into the summer of 1979; and still nothing has been done.

I would just remind the minister there are serious problems with his containment-well proposal. The Dowling ratepayers have indicated it; namely: "The ground water flow is known only in a general sense and the drawdown is based on purely theoretical data. In order to achieve the drawdown of five feet it may require a much higher rate of pumping than 50 gallons a minute. Even at 25 gallons per minute the total quantity of water will exceed 13 million gallons per year. It is reasonable to assume that all this water will have to be treated.

"3. The pumping would have to go on indefinitely, bringing the costs sky high.

"4. The method is subject to failure, as pointed out in the report by the following statements on page 25:

"This alternative represents a positive approach provided that pump water from the well does not have a sustained PCB concentration of greater than three parts per billion. The length of operation is not known and could be of very long duration so that ultimately the cost could exceed that of other alternatives."

That is also in the Geocon report, as is this:

"Frequent maintenance may be required with perhaps also replacement of the well one or more times." And quoting finally from the Geocon report: "Additional remedial measures may be required in the future."

Those are some of the problems attached to the containment well, as admitted by Geocon.

I would urge the minister, even at this late date, to reconsider his decision to proceed with the hydrodynamic containment well. I think he is wrong. The ratepayers think he is wrong. The town council thinks he is wrong. The regional council thinks he is wrong. Only he and his officials think they are right, and it is based on cost reasons; that is the reason they are proceeding in the way they are. We say that is not fair. Both the Onaping and Vermilion rivers meet in that community and proceed to other communities downstream, and the whole system could be badly contaminated.

We support the principle of this bill, but I wish very much that the minister had given us assurances by his actions that he will be more aggressive when the legislation is finally in place.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on Bill 24 and to speak in relation to how the bill could affect my own community.

The minister and the members are quite aware that the major portion of the pollutants that come into the city of Windsor are primarily from across the river, from the industrial complex at Zug Island, and are of US origin. I was just wondering how this legislation would affect the citizens in my given area.

The minister is aware that at one time the electrical complex Detroit-Edison did have a serious soot fallout, and it was left entirely up to the citizens in the area to institute action against Detroit-Edison, which eventually settled out of court. But I think those citizens should have had some protection, whether it be by way of legal assistance or otherwise, not only from the government of Canada but also from the Ministry of the Environment.

I am fairly certain that the industry on the American side does not give notice to either the provincial ministry or the federal department when they have some of these problems, and we find out about them only after they actually take place. We think there should be much closer liaison between US officials and US industry and this ministry as well as the federal department.

While I am concerned about this transboundary pollution that we suffer from, I likewise accept that in certain border municipalities we are the ones that are responsible for the pollutants that go on to our American friends. But, speaking for the Windsor-Essex county area, it is essentially the Detroiters and the industry in and around Detroit that do contaminate our environment.

I am also wondering how this legislation will affect the boats that still ply up and down the Detroit River, those that have not been converted to oil-burning, and still seem to belch out pollution from the stacks of the vessels.

Another area that concerns me is the transportation of some of these cargoes through Ontario to disposal sites in the state of New York. I did raise the issue of hazardous cargo that I understood from the article I read in the Detroit News originated in a nuclear plant on Lake Michigan. It crossed the state of Michigan on an interstate highway and the last point where they seemed to have any information about it was the Ambassador Bridge. I think that cargo was transported across the bridge, across Ontario highways and into the state of New York.

One of the unfortunate things is when cargo goes in transit in bond I understand there are no records kept, so we don't even know. From what I understand, the truck goes right through on the American side of the bridge. It is not inspected when it comes through customs on the Canadian side, because the cargo is in transit in bond; it goes right on to the destination where they will eventually dispose of the cargo. That vehicle could be involved in any type of accident on our Ontario highways and could leave citizens in Ontario in grave peril.

From what I understood of the incident I did relate, the cargo was contaminated hazardous waste from a nuclear plant. I also think when it comes to an incident like this, the ministry officials in my community should have some type of a lab or some method of analysing some of the wastes as they are coming through in case they are not identified on a manifest, so they would know just exactly what to do to either neutralize or to take care of the waste so there would be no danger either to themselves or to the citizens as a result of a spill.

I raise these issues with the minister hoping he can give us some answers and alleviate the fears of many in the Windsor area who think, and I believe they are correct, that some of the hazardous wastes may be going through our area to disposal sites in other parts of the United States.

There is another issue I would like to raise with the minister. The polluter is going to be responsible, but when the pollution is of a fairly short duration yet does contaminate the area what do the citizens do? How do they get the minister to close down the facility or stop it from operation as soon as they find there is some sort of malfunction?

The minister kindly gave me a letter on the issue to which I am actually referring. I won't mention it by name, but the minister is quite familiar with the problem.

Those are the few concerns I have and I thought I would like to raise them at this time hoping to elicit some type of response.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of the principle of this bill. I would like to take the opportunity to bring to the minister's attention some of the problems facing residents of my riding in relation to an issue which has been dealt with in this Legislature several times in the past. I am making particular reference to the problem of lead pollution.

I would like to find out from the minister, when Bill 24 is passed by the Legislature, what kind of approach he will use to solve this problem which affects several communities, especially here in Metropolitan Toronto.

This issue has been raised in the past by several members sitting on this side of the House. I'm sure the minister recalls when my colleague the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) raised the issue of Canada Metal, located at Eastern Avenue, a company which is also affecting the lives of people living close by.

In my particular area, I would like to raise the frustration of residents living in Dovercourt in relation to particular problems affecting the environmental structure of my riding. I remember in 1975 when I was first elected I was supposed to deal with a particular problem which was related to Castle Spring Products Limited, located on Chandos Street on the west side of Dufferin, which was creating problems in relation to the environment. There were noise and pollution problems.

By way of history, it took myself and the residents two years to solve this particular problem and to raise the issue on the floor of the Legislature before the government took some particular action. By the way, I would like to inform you, Mr. Speaker, that the action was taken by the residents because they took the company before the court and they were told that the Ministry of the Environment was producing a violation notice to the company. It took two years before the residents were able to deal with this particular issue before the court and put enough pressure on the company so that the company decided to leave the area completely.

Then there was the case of Wilkinson Foundry, in which there was a spill into the environment last year, around April or May. I'm not particularly sure about the date in 1978. There was a spill of a particular chemical product which is called bentonite, which has spread around the neighbourhood in the residential area located beside the particular company.

I raised the issue in the Legislature until the Minister of the Environment was able to produce another violation notice, but without any concrete results. What happened was that this particular company, Wilkinson Foundry, which is located on the east side of Florence, acquired some land from the CNR to expand its operation. This particular company is located again—and I want to emphasize this—in a residential area. It creates a lot of noise and environmental problems in relation to pollution.

The Prestolite company is located on Dupont and Dufferin. I'm sure the minister very well remembers the spill of sulphuric acid which took place in 1978. I raised the particular issue on the floor of the Legislature in order that the minister would investigate all of the plants located in Dovercourt to find out if there was a particular hazard to people beside the plants; after that warning to the minister to investigate the plants, two months later there was this spill of sulphuric acid.

Some of the people living and working beside the plants were particularly affected by this spill. What was the reaction of the Minister of the Environment? He sent some officials of his ministry to investigate the particular problem. Then there was an official statement made in the Legislature that the problem was finalized and so on.

But we still have the problem, Mr. Speaker, of lead pollution coming from this Prestolite company. I was completely surprised when, a few days ago, I read an article in the Globe and Mail, dated May 4, 1979. The headline of this article, and I want to quote it, is: "Province Will Not Replace Soil with High Lead Level." For the record, I would like to read part of it. It shows the position taken by this government and the Minister of the Environment in relation to people affected by this particular environmental problem.

To quote from this article, Mr. Speaker: "The land surrounding railway tracks near a west end battery company where children often play contains lead levels up to seven times what the province considers acceptable, the provincial environment ministry says." It is a shocking statement. The minister recognizes the problem and yet there is no action to cure or treat this particular problem, even when there are people living around this plant and affected by the pollution coming from it. It's a shock to me and it indicates that if the minister is really serious about the introduction of Bill 24—even though this side of this House endorses the principle of the bill—to get the best results in solving the problems which are caused by factories or plants located in the province of Ontario this government has to change its attitude and approach to the problem.

A few months ago, four or five months ago, I sent out my Queen's Park report to my constituents. On the questionnaire there was a question as to what the residents thought about the whole approach used by this government in relation to the environment. The other question was: "Is the government too lax in relation to the enforcement of environmental problems?" Almost 90 per cent of the constituents who replied to my questionnaire stated that the government's attitude was too lax in relation to the whole approach of environmental problems. Even though this party endorses the principle of this bill, I think that the whole attitude of the government, as I stated before, has to change if we are really serious about solving this modern problem of pollution in the environment.

Continuing on through the same article, it says:

"Despite a major soil removal project two years ago in the area around the Prestolite Battery Division of Eltra of Canada Limited, the contaminated soil will not be replaced because it is on private property where children shouldn't be playing, John Steele, a ministry information officer said in a recent interview." Such a statement is absurd, because even though it was private property the owner of the private property didn't go and look for pollution. Of course the problem was created by the company. Why is the government making such statements and raising the matter of children playing on private property? What is the government looking for? Are people supposed to sell their own property to the private company which is just beside them? I really don't understand.

Through this speech I would like to convey the frustration of my constituents to the minister. The effect of the government's attitude is to force residents to sell their properties and to move out of the area. I don't think that is the best approach to use in a period when inflation is high and mortgages have been increased. It is not right to force the residents, who are workers, to sell their houses and to move out and buy a new house where they don't have this environmental problem.

The minister should take strong steps to prevent this happening. If the government and the minister are serious about solving this lead problem, we need action to ensure the emission of lead will be reduced at least to the level decided by this government. If the company doesn't want to follow the guidelines of the Minister of the Environment, then the minister has to take action so the lives of the people, especially of the children, won't be jeopardized by this problem.

I would like to continue with this article just to emphasize the problem and to emphasize also the attitude of this government: "But the fence between the railway land and the plant's parking lot, which children can easily reach from the street, is low enough for them to climb over, with a section broken down completely; and further west there is no fence at all."

Why do we have a Minister of the Environment? If this is the attitude coming from the government, we might as well do without the legislation. The companies are following their own whims and there is no law enforcement process which forces them to follow the guidelines of the Ministry of the Environment.

I would like to state as a principle that if we are serious about the legislation we need a law enforcement structure which makes the company follow the guidelines and the clauses and the sections of the bill enacted by this Legislature.

"The patch of land around the railway tracks was referred to at a recent Toronto Board of Health meeting, where members were asking provincial officials about problems involving lead contamination lingering in areas surrounding three Toronto lead companies." The article continues later: "The board has been concerned since the early 1970s about the health risk that lead contamination can cause, especially to younger children who sometimes eat the soil they play in. Acute lead poisoning led to drowsiness, irritability, abdominal pain and vomiting.

"Mr. Steele said there were about 17,000 parts per million of lead in the soil in this area." I hope the minister is paying attention to this figure; it is well above the accepted 3,000 ppm standard. "David Pinkus, the vice-chairman of the health board, produced documents which showed that one parcel of land in the area had a lead count of 20,750 parts per million.

"In a later interview, Paul Cockburn, central regional director for the ministry, explained that the results of the lead tests can vary like this from one patch of land to another on a site where counts are so high."

Further along: "Bill Henry, director of the manufacturing of Prestolite, said in a recent interview that he felt there was no danger because asphalt and stones covered the area around the tracks. But a visit yesterday showed that soil was clearly visible in the area."

This is the attitude of the company: There is no problem. Leave us alone; we have to make our own profits. If the health of the people living beside the plant is in danger, there is no problem; the profits are more important than the health of the people. I say it is time for the Minister of the Environment and this government to put the health of the people above the profits.

If we have a law in this province that governs everybody equally, then the companies should be bound by the same regulations and the same laws by which individuals are bound. We cannot have different law enforcement structures for people and for companies because production or profits are more important than people.

It is time for the Minister of the Environment to take a look at the situations involving the plants of Prestolite at Dupont and Dufferin, and of Wilkinson Foundry, which is going to expand its operation. The owner of Wilkinson has acquired some land from the CNR to expand its operation, and he has done it with the blessing of the municipalities. If the Minister of the Environment is particularly concerned about this situation, he should appeal the decision of the municipalities before the Ontario Municipal Board. It is just amazing; people are so frustrated they have to take action. They were supposed to look for a lawyer to defend the residents. Why is the Minister of the Environment not taking action against the company? I need an answer to that question.

In addition, there must be an overall review of this problem as it affects people living beside these particular plants. I hope that, after years and years of frustration for the residents, the minister will take some action to alleviate the problem instead of aggravating it by letting the companies pollute the environment and forcing people to leave the area. This particular attitude is irresponsible, and I think the minister has to take action.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, there have been a lot of comments—more than I anticipated—on this particular bill, but I am glad to see that. I am glad, of course, to see the amount of praise from almost everyone who spoke, suggesting this is an excellent bill. I have to concur. I think I should give credit where credit is due on the drafting of this bill. I would like to so name Dr. Landis for having done an excellent piece of drafting on a very significant piece of legislation. Although I have heard a fair amount of rhetoric about why this bill came forward, I think I should put it on the record that it was—I would not say at the insistence, but I would say at the prodding of our general counsel.

Just so there is no doubt about it, this was drafted before I became minister, so I can't take any of that credit. Indeed, it was long before Port Loring was an issue on the front page of any particular newspaper. Again, I think the facts would indicate general counsel is responsible for this legislation, and I am glad to have the honour of bringing it forward.

I do want more dialogue on this bill in standing committee, and I look forward to that. I will, in committee, have three amendments, and I will send over these copies. They are very minor amendments and I don't think they will affect the principle of the bill. I would like to serve notice so that you may have them.

Several points were considered by each speaker, and I am not sure I will cover all of them in chronological order. I will at least try to be finished before 6 p.m.

With reference to the remarks of the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt), his suggestion was, I believe, that a company set up a fund. Well obviously they are at liberty to do so and we couldn't stop them, but there are some real problems with setting up a fund. One of them that comes quickly to mind is it is not likely it could be done on a gallonage basis. If you charged a half a cent or a cent, or whatever it happened to be, per gallon, I think it would not likely result in justice.

I think the member would agree some of our most hazardous wastes, the ones that are most difficult to control, would be in very small quantities. If we charged half a cent a gallon, that would be a fantastic amount of money if it were for gasoline but you could clean up 20 gallons of gasoline rather easily. If you had the same rate on a gallonage basis for some much more hazardous materials it would be unfair. I guess the extreme would be a gallon of dioxin. Even at a dollar, a hundred times the rate, it would certainly be unbelievable the damage one gallon could do and the cost to clean it up. I think there are some problems with putting on a gallonage charge. It is something we can perhaps talk about in committee.

There was a comment about a two-year limitation being too short. I think there are two rebuttals to that. First of all it is two years after the person knew or ought to have known, and I think that is a pretty significant time. Frankly, I feel to go to six years is too long, I think it leaves it in jeopardy far too long. I think two years after the person ought to have known, not necessarily at the time of the spill, is long enough. On a matter of general principle, it does sort of fit with other policies of government at this time.

Payment for indirect damages; again I am not sure we won't want to talk about this more in committee, it presents some problems. I think there must be a limit to the amount of damage one would really believe should be the responsibility of the company that owned or was in control of the material. I think common law has always respected compensation for certain consequences, even though they are remote. To put in "indirect" rather than "direct" I think makes it so broad that perhaps the courts would be filled with cases to determine what is indirect damage. I think you can do a better job of compensating if we leave it as direct damage.

For proclamation, we need the regulations in place before we do proclaim the act. This was a thread that ran through many of the responses, the hope we are serious; of course we are serious. We wouldn't have it here if we weren't serious.

I am only going to deal momentarily with the last speaker's comments. As did several others, he talked not about the principle of the bill, Mr. Speaker, but about illustrations of how nice it would have been had this bill been in place at the time the incident took place. I am rather amazed they should criticize the government for bringing in a bill they want so badly and which is so needed in this province—

Mr. Laughren: We talked about your negligence. It was your negligence; you didn't need this bill.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —and would have stopped the very things they complained about. They didn't speak on the principle of the bill, not at all. They used it as an opportunity to put on the record, and God bless them, those things that they felt would make good reading as they sent out Hansard.

Mr. Laughren: That's nonsense. That's misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I understand that protest. The fact is they distorted the record somewhat.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lupusella: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: The Minister of the Environment is accusing me of not applying myself to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That's not a point of order.

Mr. Laughren: The minister has been negligent and he knows it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No; that's not so and the member knows it. I think there has been a bill with the language more broad in the definition section than in this particular bill. It will give us an excellent opportunity to look after the concerns that members opposite have.

Mr. Lupusella: You didn't pay attention to those concerns in the past.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: As to why we left out atomic energy, I really feel that would complicate the administration of this bill. I think it should be left with the Atomic Energy Control Board to deal with uranium. It's considered a national resource. I think including it would complicate it.

With regard to heat, that's another problem. It is very hard to recover heat. It's done instantly; it's into the environment, it's dissipated and how does one assess that situation? Again, we may want to talk about that. The effects are usually short term.

The member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) did indicate that it's possible to have some measurable effect of a spill that would be the result of heat. It could have some real effect, and I think we can get at that. But heat in itself would be extremely hard either to restore or whatever. I think there's logic in leaving out heat and there's justification in leaving out atomic energy; but we may want to talk about those at a little greater length.

Turning again to the member for Beaches-Woodbine, I think her words were we were watering down the bill. If we weren't serious about this bill we wouldn't have it here. It was put on the record, as members know, last fall. We have had a lot of comment about it and indeed we have had some who oppose it. One can well imagine there are many who have opposed the bill.

Notwithstanding that, we think the principle of this bill is so sound and so valuable to the people of this province and that it will so remedy many of the problems we have seen in the past that we are adamant about the principle of this bill. That is why it's here. Let me put members' fears to rest. There will be no watering down of this bill in committee unless they do it. There will be no less determination on our part to make sure that the value of this bill is fulfilled in its total.

Ms. Bryden: What about the limitation period?

Mr. Laughren: You've already watered it down to two years.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, we won't.

Mr. Laughren: You have already.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I have covered some of the other issues. I feel that the six years is just too long and it wouldn't be fair.

With regard to pecuniary loss, perhaps in some instances the courts will have to decide. Of course such things as wages, loss of the use of a home and all of those things obviously would be included. I suspect that when we get to some of the more subtle things the courts will eventually make those decisions.

Very briefly, the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) wanted to make a case that if we license, then we have a responsibility. I find that difficult to understand. Surely when we license an automotive vehicle we do not have the responsibility for that automotive vehicle if it does damage to persons or property. I think that case had the member a little bit confused.

After this bill comes into effect, we will have the opportunity to hold responsible those who pollute, if I can use that word, or emit into our environment, but surely not retroactively. I think the case the member for Erie made was that we should apply it retroactively. That's a very unsound principle in this democratic government of ours. I am sure that we should not accept that. Any discharge that might be going on now on a continuing basis, and therefore will be discharging after the bill comes into force, is of course subject to the terms. But in no circumstances would we make it retroactive.

In conclusion on that particular item, yes, we do have many studies on the Inco situation both during and before the strike, and we will have them after the strike is over. We have all kinds of information that we can and will supply to the member if that is what he wishes.

With regard to the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), it is hard not to respond, and time does not give me that privilege right at the moment. We have seen and will continue to see that that is looked after. I think a lot has been done in a very short period of time since August. I want to put it very clearly on the record for the member that the proposal by the citizens' group will be looked at very carefully. I know the member felt that it was wrong to give it to Geocon. However, they are the experts, and the terms of reference that I personally gave to that company were simply this: "I want you to look at that proposal as objectively as you possibly can. If there is merit in it, if it is logical, we'll do it." They are not under any misapprehension that they have to go to the old method which we had previously agreed to, and it will be amended if there is logic in doing so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the minister has further comments, it is six of the clock.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I think the balance of this discussion could very well take place during clause-by-clause consideration of this bill in standing committee. I would only say to the members opposite that I hope they will put a great emphasis on this particular piece of legislation when it comes to committee. I want it very clearly understood that I want this bill as soon as possible, and I hope the committee members will order their priorities in such a manner that we will have this important legislation as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for standing resources development committee.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

HERITAGE LANGUAGES PROGRAM

114. Mr. Bounsall: As the provisions in the 1979 general legislative grants will generate a significantly reduced amount of provincial funding per classroom hour of instruction in heritage language programs, is it the intention of the ministry that local school boards pay their increased share of the costs by raising property taxes? If this was not the intent of the ministry, outline other specific courses of action open to school boards. [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have just recently announced a change in the level of funding for the heritage languages program, effective September 1, 1979, from that originally announced in the 1979 GLG. This change is being introduced to reconfirm the government's commitment to the heritage languages program so that all children in Ontario whose parents are interested in the objectives of the program have the opportunity of participating in it.

Effective September 1, 1979, a grant of $13.50 per instructional hour will be provided where a school board provides a heritage languages program for an average of 10 pupils. The $13.50 per instructional hour will be increased by 50 cents per pupil where the average is more than 10 pupils to a maximum of $21 per hour where the average is 25 or more pupils. For example, $13.50 in grant will be provided where the average class size is 10 pupils; $16 where the average class size is 15 pupils; and $21 where the average class size is 25 or more pupils.

In the vast majority of the cases, the cost of providing heritage language classes will be equal to or less than the grant being provided for such programs, therefore school boards should be able to provide heritage language classes without imposing a mill rate burden on the local taxpayers. In effect the full cost of the heritage languages program will be funded by the provincial government.

As a result of the change, there is no need for school boards to impose a fee on pupils participating in the heritage languages program.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 15, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 49, An Act respecting Small Business Development Corporations.

Hon. F. S. Miller: This bill, I am sure, will invite some discussion. The bill is, by my own admission, not necessarily proven to work. I say that before the discussion begins. I believe it will. I am, also, not totally opposed to amendments to it that will make it work. I say that in all honesty too. I would only have to mention that any proposed amendments were useful and in keeping with the safeguards we may consider are within whatever political philosophy our party may have as opposed to others.

I can safely say the purpose of the bill is to stimulate investment by Canadians in equity rather than in savings and, in order to stimulate this investment, we felt some kind of tax advantage, not necessarily equal to that given in other savings plans like the registered retirement savings plans or some of the other variations, but some kind of tax incentive was necessary.

For us to parallel the federal government rules for income tax calculations, it was not particularly easy to find a simple credit system that would be put through the income tax system, so Ontario decided to grant a cash refund of 30 per cent of the value of the investment in the small business development corporations that are properly registered. We feel this kind of incentive is enough to attract investment.

We put a number of other limitations on it, in principle. One is that no less than $250,000 must be subscribed in any one corporation nor no more than $5 million in one corporation. We also said the corporations could not control any corporation in which they invested; therefore they couldn't own more than 49 per cent of the total voting shares of all classes of a company in which they made an investment.

Also, we have limited in the bill the right to invest in corporations that are associated—where the owners have control of them indirectly. These we believe are safeguards to prevent an abuse of our principle—that is, that one should get a credit for taking a risk. We really didn't want to give people a mechanism for loaning money to themselves and getting a provincial credit in the process of so doing—or putting equity in their own companies and getting the credit.

I will have some minor amendments. I think copies of those—

Mr. Peterson: Could I ask about the taxation of the SBDC?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The taxation?

Mr. Peterson: How will the SBDC be treated?

Hon. F. S. Miller: On the federal scene?

Mr. Peterson: Federally and provincially.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The SBDC I would assume would be entitled to receive income from its investments as any other corporation would. That would be in the form of dividends, I would think, whether they are on preferred shares or on common shares.

Mr. Peterson: Not necessarily.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'd be glad to listen to the arguments on that. Certainly they aren't lending the money in the sense that one would normally give a loan to another corporation.

Mr. Peterson: They earn interest on a trust fund.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That could be so. They could have income from a number of sources because not all of their moneys have to be invested at one time.

But I would assume their taxation on income does not differ from any other corporation. I think where the taxation differences will apply is on the capital gains taxes that may apply on the sale of the shares by the first shareholders of an SBDC. When we started this out, we were assuming that if you purchased a share for $100 your net cost would be $70, after your $30 refund. We assumed that if you sold that share eventually to a second owner of the share for $150, you would have to pay a capital gains tax on $50. We had reason to believe the federal government would not collect tax on the $30 Ontario returned to the investor.

Since my latest comments on this publicly, federal government staff—not politicians, but staff—have made us wonder whether they are still willing to live by that. So we can't conclusively agree they won't tax the $30 at the federal level. They may say: "Look, that $30 is subject to tax when the shares are sold." That's something I think will have to be discussed at a political level once the election is over with the powers-that-be in Ottawa at the time. So I can only say federal staff currently are leaning towards taxing that $30 as a capital gain and we are arguing it should not be taxed as capital gain on disposal of shares. I think that's our latest position on that.

Mr. Peterson: Does one pay income tax on the $30 grant?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, my understanding is there's no income tax on the $30 grant. My staff have just confirmed that by the proper nodding of heads over there.

Mr. Peterson: Where is the exemption?

Hon. F. S. Miller: In other words, how do they treat it as income? I suppose the answer there is that we don't give any T-4, T-5, T-6 or whatever it would have to be, to show it was income. It was simply a grant from the province that was non-taxable on that basis. In any case, we recognize it is experimental legislation. We recognize with experience it may have to suffer amendments as time goes on, but I would like to point out we have received more than 500 inquiries to date about SBDCs. A lot of that interest is obviously coming from professionals who are advising investors rather than the investors themselves, but a good number of the inquiries, I am told, have come directly from people interested in receiving or purchasing an SBDC.

Let me try to put in plain English the way I could see it work. I have used examples from my own riding because I think I can see the kinds of opportunities in my town and I am sure you could see the kinds of opportunities in your town or city. In my town of Bracebridge, there are a number of very small manufacturing concerns. I will use an actual example. This one has not applied for assistance; I am just using it as a kind of example.

It's a small steel fabricating plant which employs about 15 to 20 people, I would guess. It has recently received a very large order from the telephone company of Northern Telecom, which is really stretching its ability to produce. They really need to expand the plant a bit and like so many small companies, they're looking around for the available money to do so. The banks will look at them and say: "We think you have all the money you could really borrow from us. You do not have enough equity in it." Therefore, they would go around looking for equity rather than loans.

An SBDC would be able to move in, purchase preferred shares or common shares as long as they voted, put the money into that company, and allow that company to expand. Later on, if they were preferred shares and they were redeemable, of course they could be redeemed. If they were voting common, they would stay in existence until such time as either the corporation bought them back or they were sold to other shareholders. Either one could take place according to the charter of the corporation and the conditions of the charter.

You could do the same with a tourist resort operation. Again, tourist resort operations, from my experience, have great trouble getting mortgage money. One large operator in my riding, who's as good an operator as we have, recently was saying that after 22 calls to mortgage companies he finally got one who would lend him two thirds of the current value of his lodge at 16 per cent. When he is faced with that kind of difficulty in getting money, you can understand he is looking for other routes. Again, the preferred share route might be one where the coupon rates would be lower. The advantage to the investor would give them a higher yield than the coupon rate. It would have the advantage of being redeemable if they wished to have that kind of condition attached to it. I think we have mechanisms by which we can find ways to assist a number of small companies in the province. Of course, there are limitations. A company has to have fewer than 100 employees at the time of the investment. Let's hope some of them grow well beyond that with success, but the conditions would be determined when the investment is made in it.

I am fairly enthusiastic about this legislation. Maybe I am being unduly optimistic. I truly feel, and I hope the Liberal Party agrees and I think even the NDP may agree, we do need to stimulate Canadian ownership of Canadian companies by individuals. Let's leave aside any other routes. Just looking at those routes which encourage people to invest in their country and to take some of the risks in their country, this is one mechanism by which I hope we can do just some of that.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say at the outset I have great sympathy for what the government is trying to do. There is no question about that. I am sure even my friends to the left have that particular point of view, although I can't speak for them. We all want to assist small business, particularly manufacturing processing, and the tourist industries. We want to make it as easy as we can for them and we want to boost Canadian ownership. In all of those intentions, I am 100 per cent with the government.

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, we have talked about this subject until we are blue in the face on this side of the House. We have suggested alternative proposals of our own to solve some of these kinds of situations, so philosophically, let me say at the outset we have no problem whatsoever with what the government is trying to do. Number two, let me say I recognize the frustrations of the Treasurer's position. He is saying it would be so much easier to have the co-operation of the federal government in this matter.

Clearly, in my judgement, the proper solution to some kind of a venture capital program would necessarily involve the federal government. If that could ever be arranged, it could be done simply and probably workably. I would ask the minister to continue to press the federal government, whoever that happens to be after May 22, to try to come up with a better plan than the one I think he has got here.

That being said, I am kind of unhappy with this legislation, principally because I don't think it is going to work. I hope desperately I am wrong; I hope my instincts are wrong; I hope the people I talk to are wrong; I hope the judgements they are collectively bringing to bear are wrong. However, the minister has said himself that he is not at all sure it is going to work.

In fact, he has been so pessimistic that he hasn't even budgeted for this bill to work. If one looks at his budget recently tabled in this House, one will find out that he is not sure himself because he has not allocated any funds. When his ministry officials were asked, "Where are you going to get your budget allocation for this particular program?" they said, "We are just not too sure about that."

I remember during the lockup we had six or seven of the officials in. We asked about this, and they weren't exactly sure. We asked them about provisions of the act, and they weren't too sure. They thought maybe the minister dreamed this up over the weekend up in Muskoka. That is a nice place to relax for a weekend. It clears the head and allows all the full powers of his magnificent mind to be focused on one particular issue. I guess this is what came out of it.

Mr. Laughren: That is not a compliment.

Mr. Peterson: We are going to have to assess maybe a year or six months from now whether this is working. But it seems to me—and I say it very sincerely—that not an awful lot of thought has gone into this.

I know that the Canadian Federation of Independent Business are terribly proud of themselves with this particular piece of legislation. They feel they created it. They are heralding it as a new wave of their influence in the legislative process in the province and across the country. I hope they are right too. If it works, I say to the Treasurer very sincerely that he deserves the credit, and I will give him all of that credit. He can share that with the Canadian Federation of Independent Business if he wants to. If he doesn't want to, he need not feel obliged to.

However, we had a similar experience, as I recall, in the 1977 budget when Mr. McKeough announced the magnificent new venture investment corporations program. There were big headlines then and there are big headlines now. It is a magnificent new program to help small business, but when it all cuts down there isn't much there. Perhaps the political object has been achieved, that being to indicate or register some kind of sensitivity or feeling for small business.

I want to say this very sincerely because it bothers me. We are collectively involved in a process right now of turning off the small businessman. I get calls daily from small businessmen saying, "What is all this stuff I read in the paper? Everybody is talking about small business. The federal government, provincial government and everybody have got this new concern and sensitivity for us."

Then they say, "Here is my particular problem." I go through it with them and I say; "I hate to tell you this, but there is nothing for you." Then I say to the next one and the next one and the next one, or "There is nothing for you," and "There is nothing for you," and "There is nothing for you."

We are creating a great number of false hopes and expectations in this particular entrepreneurial small business class, which I regard as important and sacrosanct to this country. We are collectively turning them off. It's not the Treasurer alone. I think all of us are probably involved in this because all of us have indicated our thoughts on this matter. We are collectively turning them off and we are turning them into a disgruntled, disillusioned bunch of people, because all of this talk and all of these legislative programs are so narrow and are so ill-conceived in some respects that we are not able to effect the purposes of helping them. That is a real problem that we collectively have. We have collectively made the error of getting their expectations to a point where they don't realistically belong.

I think this piece of legislation is going to contribute to that. I know the Treasurer has had 500 inquiries. I am surprised he hasn't had more. Personally, I have had a goodly number of inquiries. Many of my colleagues have come to me for information. My colleague the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) came to me last week and described a particular program of one of his constituents. I had to say, "You have to phone him back and tell him there is no way he can qualify." There is one more disillusioned person and my colleague can attest to that.

All of my colleagues have come to me about particular cases because it sounded so terribly exciting and we saw so many headlines. When it was all cut down there was really nothing there. I hope I am wrong; I pray I am wrong, but I am not sure I am. Therefore, I want to register a number of specific problems I have. Included therein are going to be a lot of questions and I would be most grateful if the Treasurer would clear them up, perhaps when he responds at the end of the dissertations from this side of the House.

Perhaps some of my questions and some of the reservations I have are ill-founded and I hope they are. I must say I have done a very careful reading of the act. I have consulted a number of experts, be they venture capitalists, big shooters, little shooters or individual businessmen. I can say, with the exception of the people I talked to from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business who figure they wrote this act anyway, and who did not have a complete comprehension of it, most people were very pessimistic. I guess the Treasurer has registered that problem himself.

Let me quote a letter I received from a particular person who gives me advice. He is in the money business. He is lining up Multiple Unit Residential Buildings and using various tax shelters to assist his clients—a very sophisticated operator with a good view of the marketplace who understands what attracts money, what moves money and what gets good deals made. I guess when it comes down to it, we have not recognized the realities of the marketplace in this bill and that is principally why it will not work.

The letter reads: "Dear David:

"First of all, I should give you my general opinion on whether the act will achieve its purpose in raising funds for Ontario ventures. I do not believe that it will. There are too many roadblocks that have been put in the way of giving the money to the venturers. I think the legislation is politically high profile, but from an investment strategy viewpoint not many investment people will take advantage of it." It goes on in four or five pages to document some of the specific things. I will certainly be sharing some of those opinions with the Treasurer as I deal a little more specifically.

The primary object of this bill clearly has to be jobs in Ontario—new jobs being created by new ventures. That means we have to be particularly sensitive to the question of how money is to be attracted to a new venture. How do we get new creative capital to those people with ideas, those entrepreneurs, those people who can do something for that particular proposition.

At that point it is not a question of how we attract money from the investor to the Small Business Development Corporation; that is easy. It is how we get money from the SBDC to the small business. Members will have to follow my chain of logic here. I think that although we have made it attractive to get money into the SBDC, we have not made it particularly attractive to get money from the SBDC into the presumably high-risk kinds of propositions that we want to.

The way it has been framed, it probably is going to become a very conservative kind of mechanism that is only going to become an alternative source of financing to the kinds of financing available. Probably it is not going to bring any new money. Probably any small business that can get money from an SBDC could have got it anyway, because the money managers by definition are going to be fairly conservative. I will get into this in a little more detail later because there are various ways these particular SBDCs can function but I want to make that first point.

The other problem we have is that only private companies qualify. This is a bit of a risk. Only equity positions qualify, as I understand it, although there is a section I do not understand and I will get to that later, because one of the eligible investments is certain debt instruments. The Treasurer will be obliged to explain this to me at some point.

It is my view that certain kinds of debt should be allowable for an SBDC to hold. I think if we only make classes of preferred shares or common shares eligible investments, then we have necessarily put a restriction on the free flow of capital. Lots of money does not go into companies by way of equity only; lots of it goes in by way of mixed packages—some debt, some equity, preferred, common, or various other forms. We should let the marketplace run in those areas and not try to put legislative restrictions on the kind of capital that should be going into these eligible kinds of small business.

But back to my point: Only private shares are eligible; so a company can only buy shares in a private company. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that some people I have talked to—and these are sophisticated investors; if I told you their names, you would know them—have told me that under no circumstances would they ever take a minority position in a private company. There are far too many ways to be taken advantage of. A share in a private company is not a liquid one; there is no available market for it unless you have tied it up with contracts, buy-sells and various other kinds of things. It is a highly questionable kind of investment at best.

The majority shareholder at any point has no securities regulations to comply with. He can pay himself any kind of salary. He can bleed the company. He can do almost anything he wants to. So what kind of protection has an investor got? It is a question that has got to be asked. We are asking a person to take a percentage of a private company, the small business development corporation, which takes another percentage of another private company; so he is two removed from the investment.

What is the marketability of these particular shares? Who is going to buy from me the shares of an SBDC that I have bought for $100, less $30? Where do I sell these things? There is no market for them. Perhaps the intention is that some sort of secondary market will develop; that we are going to develop an over-the-counter exchange here in this province. I have no idea.

In addition, supposing an SBDC has made an investment, how do you get the money out? Who are they going to sell the shares to? It is so tight, with very little liquidity or no market, that sophisticated investors are going to say: "I don't care if you give me $50 or even $70, back from my $100; it really is a dumb investment." If there is not some degree of liquidity or security, it is not all that good.

The Treasurer has framed the thing so tightly that he is driving people away. At the end of my dissertation tonight, I will take him back to what our proposals were; we think we have covered these in the kinds of ideas that we have.

Those are some of the market realities that exist, and for those reasons it is not going to be as attractive as the Treasurer possibly thinks.

There are three possible scenarios when someone invests money in an SBDC. It can be a failure, in which event he loses his money. It can be a nonperformer, in which event he will probably hold tight and take his $30 to the bank. Or if it is successful, by definition he will be forced out; if it gets more than 100 employees, or if there is a material change in the nature of the eligible investment, notice of which is filed with the minister, at that point he has two years to divest himself of that particular kind of investment.

The restriction on 100 employees is wrong, I say very succinctly to the Treasurer. To go back to my original point, they were here to create jobs. There are certain kinds of companies, all different, in this province that are decidedly labour-intensive. Supposing it is an assembly operation—we are not all that successful internationally with assembly operations, but supposing we did have one—mostly they are labour-intensive, and presumably it would qualify. But we would just drive this capital—assuming it came in the first place—out of the company by virtue of the fact that it becomes successful.

That's something the Treasurer should look at fairly seriously, because I am not sure it is a correct restriction.

Another general concern I have is about the very high degree of ministerial discretion in this bill. The Treasurer has almost put the ministry on the board of every SBDC as well as every small business in this country. Every time they move they have to file, as the Treasurer indicates, with the Ministry of Revenue; so it is going to be the obligation of the member for Parry Sound to administer this. Believe me, the minister is walking into a most difficult one.

I have no idea what kind of turnaround time the government expects to have in the bureaucracy with this thing; I have no idea how it plans to administer it. But the Treasurer has taken on a tremendous number of judgements that he will have to make. Almost every time there is a change in the corporation, whether it is an investment or a payout or a dividend or when it does something new, they have to get the government's permission. That is another impediment to the free flow of capital naturally seeking places of higher reward.

I think the idea was a good one, but I think so many impediments have been put into it along the way I doubt that collectively we're going to achieve the desired result. I don't recall ever reading a piece of legislation in this House that has more ministerial discretion, or more places at more times that the eligible person has to check with the ministry. I think that is one of the other reasons why people who may look at this are going to say, "Gee, I'm not sure about this."

I don't think we're going to be in the high-risk situations here. There is an incentive to go into the SBDC, which is locked up in a bunch of rules, but there's not the incentive for the SBDC to invest in the high-risk propositions.

The Treasurer said earlier that all the relationships have to be at arm's length. As I read the legislation—perhaps he can correct me if I'm wrong—there is a provision whereby someone could invest in their own company if they were not a majority shareholder in an SBDC—that is, they had to have less than 10 per cent—so with a consortium of 10 or 11 other shareholders they could possibly reroute some money back into their own company. So it's to prevent abuses.

I am not sure, if we really want to develop high-risk propositions, that we shouldn't let the entrepreneur have a tax advantage if he is creating jobs here. Why are we so anxious to exclude him? That's another question I want to ask the Treasurer, because I'm not sure we've seen the realities of the marketplace in that case either.

I want to discuss for a minute the taxation aspect of this thing. I want the minister, perhaps when he comes back to his seat, to explain some of the taxation aspects of this situation to me, or maybe his officials can, because I see a number of problems.

First of all, when one is looking for a return, any small business is going to be taxable—presumably at small business rates but not necessarily, if it's on an expansion or something like that. So it's going to be taxable. Then there will either be a dividend or some sort of payment out to the Small Business Development Corporation. I'll get back to that in a minute but I understand that doesn't necessarily have to be a dividend out. Those flow through to the Small Business Development Corporation; but then the SBDC is taxable under the Corporations Act. So they've already paid tax; dividends are after-tax money, they are not tax-deductible money. So investors come out after tax and they go into a small business development corporation which again pays tax. The Treasurer should think about this and respond to me because he's shaking his head.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm listening to you.

Mr. Peterson: I would like to know the answer to this because I suspect it hasn't been thought through. Maybe the Treasury officials can help me.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The dividends will flow through.

Mr. Peterson: But not all of the investments are dividends.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's right, but they're not pre-taxed.

Mr. Peterson: They're deductible in the hands of the small business but they're taxable in the hands of the Small Business Development Corporation.

So the SBDC pays tax on at least some of its securities. It's going to pay tax on its trust fund moneys—the 30 per cent it's holding on to waiting to give back to the government when it winds up. There is going to be some tax payable there. Then how does that money flow from the SBDC to the investor? Does that go by way of dividends. I have no idea. Presumably it does go by way of dividends.

The other problem is—and it's something the Treasurer hasn't recognized and I address this to the staff sitting here to have them explain it to me—when the small business pays a dividend to the Small Business Development Corporation, it cannot pay a preferential dividend, it has to pay all shareholders. There are a lot of little companies that don't want to pay out a dividend. They might want to pay out only a certain percentage but they have to pay everyone equally.

I assume the minister's response would be they can use preferential shares. They will have had to go to their lawyer for supplementary letters patent to create this new class of share which can omit a dividend. If they don't do that, and if they sell common shares, he is forcing them to get rid of some of the capital they should presumably use to grow. I am saying I don't think there is enough flexibility in the situation. I don't think the SBDC should be a taxable corporation. I think it should be a wash vehicle the same way the Multiple Unit Residential Buildings syndicate is a wash vehicle. It should be just a way for washing through to the original investor. I think we should remove that impediment because of the different kinds of situations that can be created and allow more flexibility for money to earn money and money to find the right place to be in the marketplace.

The minister has said when the grant from the provincial government goes out it is not going to be taxable. I would be very interested in knowing his tax advice on that particular situation. When we send out a baby bonus, it is taxable. All other forms of social security are taxable. Everything including OHIP premium assistance by a company is taxable. In other words, what I am saying is all forms of government assistance now are taxable.

Why wouldn't this be taxable? Does the minister have a special exemption from the federal government? Maybe he has. I have no idea, but it is a gift and I would like to know about that. I would like to make sure that in fact the guy is not going to be hit with some kind of new form.

Just because the minister doesn't send out a T-4 or a T-5 does not mean he is right. It doesn't mean the federal government couldn't come along in two years and reassess all these people because it is a gift. It is no different from any other government transfer payment. It is only to a privileged class of people. I would like to know the answer to that.

We have seen a change. As I recall when the budget talked about this act, it said it was for capital gains purposes. The minister was going to come under the agreement and he was not going to include that original $30 or the rebate back to the investor. Tonight he has told us that may not be the case and the federal government may be backing off under that thick legislation.

Does the minister see what I am telling him? I have told him six or seven or eight things already that are going to cause sophisticated investors to say, "Holy smokes! I'm not sure this is worth anything at all when I have to go through all of those things." What is going to happen if that doesn't work is it is going to attract only the unsophisticated investors and they are going to be taken advantage of. He has to gear this legislation for sophisticated investors. His intention is to deal in size. He has no limits on this. A person could put in $1 million or $2 million. The member for Nickel Belt could put his entire material wealth of $3 million or $4 million into a situation like this and get a big tax write-off.

So those people with that kind of money, like my friend from Nickel Belt who is a sophisticated and shrewd fellow, are going to say: "This isn't for me. This just isn't going to pay dividends down the road." We have to look at that flow-through situation. The minister has to look at the taxation between the various companies and I would like to hear some reasonable explanation for it.

We suggested our own alternatives, and I don't plan to go into great detail about those. One is a very conservative venture capital proposition. The investor we were aiming at was perhaps the person who puts his money into Canada Savings Bonds or guaranteed income certificates or that kind of conservative investment. We thought, let's have an alternative for that, which is government-run. He or she can contribute to the capital stock of this country, and with government protection and government organization. It would try to generate some new venture propositions in this province.

Hon. Mr. Snow: That's not a conservative approach.

Mr. Peterson: Well, conservative with a small "c." There would be tax advantages in so doing. It would assist that particular person, but it would provide a fairly conservative fund for so doing.

The other one, which is more attractive to me particularly, I must say, and which is one that would be more worthwhile, would be to remove as many government impediments as possible. One of the things we would have done is have a ceiling of $5,000. There would have been a tax credit for the Ontario portion of the taxes. We would have not allowed an unlimited contribution because that opens itself to the sharpies and the tax evaders. It would be $5,000 a person with only individuals qualified. It would be a deduction of 200 per cent on the Ontario portion. The minister talked at budget time of creating a nursery for capitalists. This is no more closer to creating a nursery for capitalists than any of the other propositions he has. It creates as much capitalism as handing out $200 million worth of grants.

First of all, the Treasurer has framed this legislation in such a way that the principal beneficiaries, if it works at all, will be the large companies. I suspect even they won't take advantage of it very much. The benefit is framed for the banks or the large investors. But even if he wants large investors to be involved, which seems to be his purpose, the Treasurer has put a $5 million limit on it. It is probably too small to syndicate and probably too small to get sophisticated investment dealers working it. He's left it to sort of a middle range. It's too big on one hand and too small on the other hand. I'll get to that in a minute. Those are a number of reservations and questions that I have which I hope the minister can explain at some point.

I want to deal with two or three of the sections if I can. Section 7 refers to a minimum capitalization of $250,000 and $5 million maximum. I have no idea nor do I understand—and I would be grateful if the minister could explain to me—where he found those numbers. If we're going to really have a populist capitalist system, which I happen to think is the most attractive, where we get the butcher investing in the baker or the chap who wants to invest down his street, where we get rid of the government impediments to the best that we can, why does the minister have a minimum of $250,000 on it? I see no advantage to that.

I think the system that should be built is one that liberates $1,000 here and $2,000 there and has a more direct relationship between the investor and the small business. He has so obfuscated it with ministers and with vehicles in the middle that he isn't ever going to achieve that desired result. All that person with $1,000 can do is become part of a SBDC of minuscule percentage of a $250,000 minimum capitalized company.

I think it's wrong and I would like the Treasurer to look at that very seriously. On the other hand, $5 million probably is too small, as I said earlier, for big investment dealers to handle. He will have a mid-range of investment dealers finding these things out. But then he has all these restrictions on them. By the first year, they have to have 40 per cent of their money out; by the second year they have to have 70 per cent of their money out.

I foresee ads in the local paper: "Are you looking to get a tax write-off? Invest your money with us." Then these people are going to put another ad in another column saying: "Are you looking for money? We will give it to you. We will buy shares in your company up to 49 per cent. We have all this money available."

Those arbitrary distinctions of 40 and 70 per cent in the first year and the second year don't necessarily conform to the realities of the marketplace. They don't necessarily conform to when the good deals are coming along. Who knows if one is an entrepreneur in this business? I think there should be room for entrepreneurs, money finders and money brokers to get involved in this. That's fine. Sometimes they are the most efficient allocators of capital. But why do we put these restrictions on them, maybe forcing them into deals that aren't particularly good, when we could be a little more lenient and probably make the system work a little bit better?

Then we have a deal where we have to keep 30 per cent in trust. As I read the legislation, it's 30 per cent until 70 per cent is invested. After the 70 per cent is invested, then they can invest the other 30 per cent. I must say I'm having some difficulty with that section.

Presumably then, as the minister understands it, after the 70 per cent has been spent in eligible investments, then they can get ministerial permission to invest the 30 per cent they held in trust up to that time in another eligible investment. That's fair enough, and I approve of that. Some people were reading the section as if that money had to be kept in perpetuity and, in effect, would be got back from the SBDC on its winding up or if it was deregistered.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Do you understand why that clause is there?

Mr. Peterson: Sure, I understand why the clause is there but it should be removed. I was under the impression as I read the act and here is what it says, Mr. Speaker. Section 7(3): "After the end of its second year of registration under this act, a small business development corporation shall at all times maintain an average of at least 70 per cent, calculated in the prescribed manner." I guess that doesn't preclude the final 30 per cent being invested, which, of course, is as it should be.

Let me talk about eligible investments. I think the minister has solved my problem in that, which I appreciate. Eligible investments are in companies with 100 employees. I think that's fairly arbitrary. I think you should probably change that as we discussed earlier. A successful company will necessarily be precluded from being in the investee category. Then, 75 per cent have to be in the province or two years to divest. I certainly understand that at the beginning but it necessarily puts some squeeze on a company if, in fact, they get the money at a later time and it limits their investment options.

With regard to the 49 per cent share limit; a number of people, outside investors, have spoken to me and said they think that is not a particularly intelligent section. I realize you want to keep control in the hands of the entrepreneur and I think that's a valid criterion in many ways. On the other hand, it again encumbers the natures of the financing and there are certain deals that may come along which necessarily need either a new management, new kinds of people to be involved or new help or the percentage that the new investors are putting in is totally disproportionate to a 49 per cent interest. So, that is something you may want to allow some degree of flexibility on.

Section 9(1)(g) does not make any sense to me. It says: "An investment shall be an eligible investment if the small business is not of a type prescribed by the regulations." I assume that's a typographical error or perhaps the minister can explain that to me at a later point. Maybe we will discuss that if we go into committee of the whole House tonight.

There is one question I have with respect to section 10(1): "A small business development corporation shall maintain its assets in, (a) eligible investments; (b) liquid reserves; (c) equity shares that were eligible investments at the time they were acquired by such small business development corporation; (d) debt obligations of any small business that is an eligible investment." Does that mean that the SBDC can take a debenture in a company or can lend money and take back a promissory note?

Hon. Mr. Snow: How about a mortgage?

Mr. Peterson: Or a mortgage. What does it mean?

An hon. member: A mortgage can only be on land.

Mr. Peterson: I have no idea what it means because certainly the premise that a number of people are acting on is, "No, it can only be shares, be they common or preferred." If the Minister of Transportation and Communications knows, I would be delighted if he would tell me. What does it mean?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will give you my interpretation when I stand up.

Mr. Peterson: I think it's fairly critical. There are certainly—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, do you want me to give that answer now?

Mr. Peterson: I have searched through this thing in section 9(1). Perhaps I am being unfair because it's not really the kind of discussion we should be having on second reading and I would appreciate your indulgence in this matter, Mr. Speaker, but it's a very difficult bill. We are all involved in exercising a judgement about what's happening and we all want to make it work, although a lot of us have specific reservations. I don't know how to read that clause. There are other sections that deal with the same issue but let me tell you my opinion. The Treasurer should give them the flexibility to invest in debt instruments, or a package thereof. He should not be too restrictive; he should not force the entrepreneur to give up his shares.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They can make such an investment.

Mr. Peterson: The Treasurer is telling me they can

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's my reading of it, but I will get that verified.

Mr. Peterson: Well, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business does not exactly know what it means, and several other people do not know what it means. I hope the Treasurer is right; I have been pleading for it. Let him check with his staff; I hope that is the answer. But let me put in my own three cents' worth: I desperately hope it means they can invest in debt instruments; that they can take promissory notes or whatever.

There is a good reason for saying that. A number of entrepreneurs who put their blood, their sweat and their life into their own business would gladly pay more money for debt than for equity. Sometimes, in certain circumstances, if you ask a man to give up equity, you are asking him to give up part of his soul. It is like giving up one of his members, his left leg or his right arm. People work all their lives for their own businesses. I know that the Minister of Transportation and Communications would agree with me. I know that in his soul, as a young man when he was developing his own business, he would much rather have paid much more to borrow the money than to give away part of what he is.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I never sold a share.

Mr. Peterson: That is why he is a successful guy.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I always sell shares.

Mr. Peterson: Well, there are different approaches to this kind of situation. I know of very successful entrepreneurs who have sold shares that turned out to be highly expensive after the fact because they were successful. I also know of others who would never sell a share to anybody; they would rather borrow the money because it was theirs. There are both ways. I say to the Treasurer, allow for some flexibility there, but please do not force him to give away shares in his company if he does not want to. Be flexible. Do not force him to give away preferred shares—nothing. Do not force him to go and take supplementary letters patent.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No one forces him.

Mr. Peterson: Of course they do, under this kind of legislation. But the Treasurer has become so restrictive and so dictatorial with this kind of legislation that he is defeating its primary purposes. That is why I had to ask the Treasurer about section 1(d). He has changed his mind about its interpretation, I assume from his interjection of two minutes ago. Can you or can you not invest in debt instruments? The Treasurer indicates you can. So that means an SBDC can lend money on a promissory note to an eligible—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Provided 70 per cent is in eligible equity investments; the other 30 per cent can be in debt.

Mr. Peterson: Why do we have this silly 70-30 rule? I do not understand any reasons for it as long as we are achieving our fundamental object of lending money to high-risk propositions that would not ordinarily get the money and we are helping create employment here in this country.

I am very serious about these things, I say to the Treasurer. Frankly, I hope we do not go into committee of the whole on this bill tonight; I hope the Treasurer can go back and discuss this with his staff and with some other advisers I know he has had on this issue, because I think there is more to this bill than has met the collective eye so far.

I know I am taking a disproportionate share of the time here, Mr. Speaker, but we have another situation in this bill. Section 12 talks about arm's-length relationship, and I am not sure that is a good situation either. There are provisions here whereby a person could take about nine per cent in an SBDC and funnel it back into his own company, but by that point his share would be so watered down in his company that presumably that is the protection of being at arm's length. I am not sure that is worthwhile. Why should we not give a person an opportunity to invest in his own company with some kind of a tax benefit?

Again, we have been so restrictive about whom we can lend to and whom we cannot lend to; I refer the Treasurer to section 12. One of the people, a strong advocate of this bill, came to me today and said: "It is a wonderful bill. We have had so many inquiries about this bill; we have already had people coming to us saying they are going to finance their suppliers." But section 12(2) says you cannot finance a supplier, because it is a non-arm's-length relationship; it says you cannot finance the purchase or sale of goods or services provided to the small business. This necessarily precludes one company which has had a supplier relationship with another one from getting involved with each other.

I think this is unnecessarily restrictive. If we are going to create a nursery for capitalists, let us create a nursery for capitalists. Let's not be half pregnant, let's help them. We have created a nursery for bureaucrats with this particular bill.

I would commend to the Treasurer all of the reasons I have discussed so far—

Mr. Lawlor: You are advancing collusive practices.

Mr. Peterson: —I could go on for another hour on some of the things that disturb me about this bill—about the new letters patent, the taxation aspects of it, the ministerial discretion, the arm's-length stuff, the real rate of return, how we are interfering with the business functioning.

The Treasurer has this dream that everybody is going to run out and create these new preferred shares in order to make the taxing aspects work so he won't lose control, but I think he is dreaming. I don't think he is conforming to the realities of the marketplace. I don't think he can view the whole world the way he can view the creation of Santa's Village in Bracebridge.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Remember the national dream?

Mr. Peterson: I would say if the Treasurer is going to do it—and I would support it and our party would support it—then take the lid off. Simplify it. Let's see capital really moving. If the Treasurer believes in the free marketplace, in the allocation of capital at least—which I do—then let it work. Take out these restrictions. We might have the odd little scheme there. Let it really compete with the other tax shelters, the MURBs—

Mr. Lawlor: He makes the Treasurer look left wing, doesn't he? Adam Smith is speaking. "Take off the lid. Open the drawer."

Mr. Laughren: The invisible hand will look after it.

Mr. Peterson: My little friend here has something he wants to say and he is quite welcome to.

Mr. Lawlor: He wants to set up every collusive practice that has undermined the market. They can have price rigging, they can make deals and then they get a tax rebate. Isn't it terrific?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, the realities are—and I don't expect any particularly worthwhile contribution from my socialist friends—

Mr. Lawlor: Jim wouldn't say that.

Mr. Peterson: Sure he would.

Let me say, the Treasurer is competing for this money with the MURBs, with the RRSPs, with the film corporations and all of that kind of thing. I think when one looks in detail that is the kind of money we are competing for. I think when one looks at this deal compared to those it is disturbingly less attractive and as a result it is not going to work.

I hope this plan works. I really do hope it attracts some capital and solves the stated social purpose. I have very serious reservations that it is going to work. I have no alternative but to vote for it because I hope it does work. Frankly, I don't think it can be cleaned up by amendment—a little one here and a little one there could be changed. I think structurally it is created by some people who really don't have a good feel for the marketplace.

Mr. O'Neil: They don't understand.

Mr. Peterson: I really feel the Treasurer has taken a shot at it; he has probably accomplished the stated political purpose, i.e., everybody thinks he is sensitive to small business. In the process he has disillusioned a lot of businesses. When they come to apply—these 500 inquiries—and they find out that probably 495 of them don't qualify anyway, they will run away disgruntled and the Treasurer will have alienated another sector in society.

If the Treasurer is going to do it, then let him do it right. If he is not going to do it then he shouldn't touch it at all.

I hope I am wrong. I hope I can stand up a year from now and say, "I was wrong." But I can tell the Treasurer I wasn't wrong on the venture investment corporations proposal in 1977. I stood in this House and said it would never work and it hasn't worked. There has not been one registration from it.

Mr. Haggerty: That's why he made the amendment to it.

Mr. Peterson: Unfortunately, in politics there are very few points for saying, "I told you so." I guess that is my biggest single frustration in politics, because I love to stand up and say, "I told you so." But nobody really gives a damn and it is very sad, let me tell you, Mr. Speaker.

I think we are right on this. We have given this a great deal of thought—probably, I say with respect, more than the minister has. I would ask the Treasurer to go back and talk to his ministry. We will even give him the benefit of our good advice on this thing to clean it up and bring a better bill back to the House. If it is forced through the House, we will vote for it. Why wouldn't we? It is like voting for motherhood. But it is really not going to solve the essential problems.

That is my general message, Mr. Speaker. I have given you a number of specifics as to why I think what I am saying is correct.

[9:00]

Mr. Speakers: Before I recognize the next speaker, the Minister of Education has some offshore guests in the gallery.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, tonight in the west gallery we have the honour of having with us a number of representatives, Canadian and Swedish, who are attending the Ontario universities program for instructional development. I think it would be appropriate if the members of the House were to welcome specifically our Swedish guests with the usual warm welcome which the legislators of Ontario provide.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter a few comments on the bill. I must admit one of the reasons I am speaking on the bill is, as the member for London Centre said, that when the budget came out, there were a lot of people out in the world, that's the world that is outside the Legislature, who thought there really was something available for them to try to help finance their business or to help in their expansions, and so on. They came to the office and we looked at the legislation. We explained what was available and what the circumstances are expected to be, and they generally went away feeling rather disappointed about the whole thing.

Earlier today the minister mentioned his friend who is in the resort business, and the fact he had difficulty raising capital and that it eventually cost him 16 per cent after 23 calls or whatever it was, in order to get the mortgages. Similar situations are still going to persist. That is not going to change because of this legislation or because of the small business development corporations.

I think we have to recognize that although the thing sounds good you are going to get $13 for $10, or something of this nature. You also have to recognize that for the people who invest large sums of money, when you are talking about tens of thousands of dollars or hundreds of thousands of dollars it is not a Wintario proposition. With Wintario or the Provincial you are quite prepared to invest your $1, $2 or $5, but when you get into large sums of money, you make darn sure you get your money back plus a return on that money.

Although that 30 per cent in this legislation is going to provide some kind of a cushion, the facts are when an SBDC invests, or provides money for a small businessman, it will want an arm and a leg. Although they are limited by the legislation in the book by the amount in terms of shares, et cetera, it seems to me, and the minister will be able to correct me, the options are still open to them in terms of management agreements. They will be prepared to provide the management agreements, and I think that is a laudable part of this legislation. As well, they will be able to provide management services to the firm. They will still insist very much on how that business operates and on all aspects of its internal management.

One of the things a small businessman these days wants is to be independent. He doesn't want to have to go through various boardrooms making his phone calls, having his interviews, having accountants and various other sods and bods and sundry going through his books and business. He will sit there, after he has gone through this procedure for about six, seven or eight weeks, until he gets notified: "Well, I don't think we can advance you the money." The hopes go up, the hopes go down. He goes like a yo-yo in the operation.

I have a feeling the people who will put the funds into the development corporation will want a great deal of control which will be resented by the small businessman. The argument boils down to whether the small businessman is prepared to go this way or not. As I understand it, a similar operation in Quebec known as SODEC, I think, has been subscribed to and does seem to work to a point. Perhaps that is an indication the government is moving in the right direction. Also, where Quebec provides only 25 or 20 per cent credit, this bill provides a 30 per cent grant. It may inspire the people at the top to take some larger chances.

I think if the government was really interested in supporting the small businesses there are so many other areas into which it could move—research and development, new technology, funding for the Ontario Research Foundation, for example, particularly in the fields of productivity. We are anxious in Canada to increase the productivity of small businesses. It's a very necessary thing.

At one of the public accounts committee meetings we had the Ontario Research Foundation and they gave us an example of the assistance provided for research by the various governments in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sure the honourable member would like to be reminded that he should stick to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Makarchuk: In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it's right on the principle of the bill—the type of provisions made for small businesses. It would show how the government should have moved to provide meaningful funding.

But anyway, in comparison, of a figure of 200 Ontario provides six; Quebec 21; New Brunswick, 36; Nova Scotia, 42; Alberta, 162; and Saskatchewan provides 194. Let me point out, the socialists provide 194 to Ontario's six on a per capita basis; which does say something about the commitment to small business that the various provincial governments have.

If the government was interested in assisting small business, it would have tried to provide some protection to small businesses right now that are being manipulated or put out of business by larger corporations. Some of the more serious situations developing right now are in the oil business. Major corporations like Texaco—in an example that was brought to my attention just recently—Sun Oil and Gulf are putting some of the small businesses out of operation because they are denying them supplies, they're charging them exorbitant prices, they're not extending them credit and everything else. This is after a period of years when these small businesses have been working.

Most small businessmen would like to be able to go to some agency of government or a private lender. Of course, as was pointed out by the member for London South, you don't allow debt in this thing. I would agree; it is wrong. The idea of taking some type of promissory note on the business is a laudable idea.

But at this time it's difficult for the small businessman to raise capital for his operations. He would be extremely happy if he—on the basis of his good name, on the basis of his reputation, and not on the basis of the amount of stock or the amount of property he has that can be tied by a bank—would be able to raise some funding so he can operate his business as he would like to.

The bill does not provide any kind of control in terms of whether it is a foreign-owned corporation or not. Section 9(1)(a) says an investment is made in small business and 75 per cent or more of the wages and salaries of the small business are paid in respect of operations in Ontario. This then becomes an eligible corporation to operate under the SBDC. This is of concern. I think the minister should look at it. It is 9(1)(a).

Hon. F. S. Miller: There is another section to deal with that:

Mr. Makarchuk: There is another section, but what concerns me is that a firm can be set up by a foreign corporation acting as a front, really. Those who own the business are Canadian nationals; the operation of the business ostensibly or in appearance is Canadian; but the point is the firm can be so tied up in franchise fees, licensing fees, royalties, management fees and everything else, that in effect they would be allowing a fair amount of money to move across the border to the detriment of Canadian corporations.

If the minister feels somewhere in this legislation this can be prevented, I would like to hear about it. If not, I would suggest perhaps—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Section 9(1) (f).

Mr. Makarchuk: It still doesn't cover the fact that besides taking the money out of the firm in dividends, one can take the money out of the firm in royalties, patent rights, licensing fees and that sort of thing.

I think the intent is to provide legislation that would encourage small Ontario businesses. At the same time it does leave open that loophole where a group from Ontario can be set up more or less as a front for a foreign corporation. They will no doubt receive certain benefits from the operation of that corporation, but at the same time a great deal of money can be milked from that corporation by these other methods I mentioned. Some protection should be provided in the legislation to ensure that this doesn't happen.

Most businessmen these days are really tired of spending their lives working and at the end of the fiscal year particularly when they get the accountant's report they find out they have been working for IAC, UAC, GMAC and everybody else. All those major lending institutions have made an unreasonable amount of money out of their operations and the businessman himself finds he has the crumbs at the end of the year.

Although this legislation may help and we will certainly support it, it doesn't provide that kind of freedom and that kind of accessibility to funding that businessmen want. That basically is the situation right now.

In the past I have argued that this government should, besides expanding Ontario Development Corporation, beside, as we have said on this side of the House, being involved in public and private ventures—and again I admit there may be a reluctance on small businesses to get involved in those kinds of situations; however, it has been done in Manitoba with a great deal of success under the NDP government—at the same time the government should really seriously try to expand the Province of Ontario Savings Office, to make it a fully fledged banking institution. This has been discussed before and the Minister of Revenue said perhaps it was a good idea.

The minister earlier mentioned the gentleman who had to phone 23 places in order to get a mortgage on his property. The reason for that is that there really is no competition in the banking institutions or in the lending institutions. When one has a fair amount of equity, when they are sure they are not going to lose money, then they will be most anxious, in fact happy, to lend one the money and collect the interest. But the small businessman is looking for some other avenues where somebody is prepared to take some chances on his good name and his past reputation.

There is another matter which is of some concern. That is whether the 30 per cent is taxable when the individual files his income tax. However, Mr. Speaker, when you look at it, it is not a bad deal for the first year. If he goes ahead and borrows the money, he can charge the cost of borrowing the money against his investment. If he borrows at 11 or 12 per cent, assuming he borrows $100,000, that costs him about $12,000. But the minister will be very happy to give him $30,000, so that's a net of about $18,000. The problem is what is he going to do the second year or the third year? If he kept this up every year, he would have quite an influx of capital. I'm not sure what's going to happen to it, I think there would be quite a few people who would be very happy to invest into those kinds of situations.

In general, there are problems with regard to ministerial discretion. There are certain such areas in sections 9(b), 9(g) and 10(e) referring to "such other form that may be prescribed", "the small business is not of a type prescribed by regulations", "any other prescribed business activity." All these things, as was pointed out, are matters that are left in the air. They are up to the discretion of the minister. They again bring in the heavy hand of bureaucracy. If there ever is a heavy bureaucracy, it's the Tory bureaucracy.

The businessman who tries to sort it out finds that he runs around in circles. He really doesn't know where to go or whom to contact. Generally, when he starts contacting the man, he finds he has been moved or has been fired or something of that nature. This is what happens right now. Why carry this on? I would like to see something a little bit more loose in this situation where this kind of leeway isn't left all over the place and where a decision will be made eventually while the businessman sits and hopes to God that they will decide in his favour. He really wants to know where he is, that all the cards are on the table and that he can go ahead and do what he wants to do. He wants to know what he's dealing with.

The other matter of concern in the bill is the two sevenths of the 30 per cent that is supposed to be held in a trust fund. The banks have a reserve of eight per cent or it might be 11 per cent. It varies from year to year. For the small business developing the SBDC, it could be a problem. Considering the fact that if they are going to have 30 per cent of their funding in a trust fund, they can get 10 per cent at the Province of Ontario Savings Office or some other bank or on short-term notes for probably less, it still is not a good investment if one relates that to present-day inflation rates or to what is possibly available in mortgages at 16 per cent or second mortgages that can go to higher amounts.

That is one argument. They have this large sum that they have to let sit. I understand that the minister is concerned that he has to protect himself so that after the first year they don't all pull out and he's lost his money but they've collected their money and are having holidays down in the Bahamas or in Switzerland with his money. Therefore, he put that into effect, but it creates some difficulties or imposes some restraints on the operation of those corporations.

Then there is the two sevenths that the minister is going to allow them to take up in shares or lend or have as equity in the business. That brings it back to that kind of a bureaucratic hassle where the government says it will look at it and then eventually make a decision. All the investor has to do is sit there and wait and somewhere the minister will decide.

The other factor that is a concern is the 40 per cent that has to be invested that has to go out in the first year of the corporation's operation. Assuming one is starting to set up the corporation, he has got 12 months, it will take a period of time to set it up. The legal work alone will probably take two or three months.

Then to get the various people, if you are going to have some people to tie it together and everything else, is going to take you a few more months. Then you have got possibly six months or less left to go ahead and invest 40 per cent of that portion in a sensible way, and in the second year you should go up to 70 per cent. In that area, there should be some leeway or some discretion available, but not necessarily ministerial discretion. I think those figures should be changed, and perhaps lessened. In the first year perhaps it should be 25 per cent, in the second year 50 per cent and in the third year 70 per cent, at which point the development corporation has the option to look at the operations. They can make wise decisions and reasonable choices based on a fair amount of research that they are going to do before they do invest. As I said earlier, the people who have the money and who are dealing in large sums of money are not going to take chances, despite the fact that we are going to give them a 30 per cent cushion.

I have to mention the fact that in general the bill is a vague step in the right direction. It has its problems. We will certainly discuss specific paragraphs or items in the bill on the basis of whether some changes are needed, or perhaps the minister can explain many of the points we raised earlier. But I wish to tell the minister that this is not the answer to what the businessmen want out there in the world. There is a reluctance, particularly on the part of the small operators, for them to get involved with the various boardrooms; to get involved with the so-called money men. They look at that as a different world; it's a world that's outside of the circle. It may be closer to people in Toronto, but in Brantford or Cambridge—or even London, for that matter—outside of the world of Toronto, these people do not have the opportunity to travel within these circles or to know the influential people or the people who are in charge; nor do they have the connections as to where they should go.

If the minister were really serious, if he had a real commitment to small business, he would provide expansion of the Ontario Development Corporation, and he would make sure that the Province of Ontario Savings Office became a full-fledged banking institution with some aggressiveness to provide real competition in the banking field. In that way I think he would provide much more assistance, and the small businessmen in Ontario would be a lot happier. Basically, what they want is to be able to walk into a branch of the savings office and have somebody who is prepared to listen to them, who has an understanding and who is prepared to take a chance. They do not want to go through this great big rigmarole that the Treasurer is setting up here. Although it may help some of the larger operations—and by larger I mean manufacturing or other operations employing 50, 60 or 100 people—it is not going to help the little guy at the bottom. That is one of the areas of concern to myself and, I think, to my party; it is an area that I think the minister does not address himself to by this type of legislation or, for that matter, by anything else that the government has brought in up to this time.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Quinte.

Mr. O'Neil: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bradley: Where is the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) now?

Mr. O'Neil: I noticed that the minister was going to stand, and maybe I could add my comments to the discussion when he is summing up afterwards.

This morning at caucus I mentioned to the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) that I would like to say a few words during the discussion of this bill this evening, and he said to me, "What do you know about it?" I had to say to him, after looking at the bill, "I know very little about it." But I must say to the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) I may know very little about it, but when I see him turning around to his staff and I hear some of the questions that have been asked by the member for London Centre, I understand a lot of the members in this Legislature must know very little about what the bill means, too.

This means that when this bill goes out the Treasurer is going to get a lot of calls—he mentioned he has had about 500, but those are going to be either from lawyers or from accountants, and he is going to be giving them all kinds of work.

I have to agree with the statement made by the member from London, that unless they have legal minds they are not going to understand it. I don't think the people who drew this bill up for the Treasurer have an understanding of the business world either.

This afternoon in the Legislature I asked the Treasurer a question concerning the Eastern Ontario Development Corporation. At that time one of his comments was, "We ran out of money and that is one of the reasons that we had to turn off the tap. We weren't able to deal with a lot of these applications. We couldn't help out these people in small manufacturing or in small business."

I say to the Treasurer that I would rather have seen a simplified bill of one or two pages that said, "If you put your money with us"—in other words, hand it over to the Ontario government which in turn hands it over to EODC or the Ontario Development Corporation—"we will give you a higher interest rate for investing with us. We will give you a return on it, and EODC or the Ontario Development Corporation will put it out to the small business people or the small industries throughout this province."

I see the Treasurer shaking his head, but to me that is a heck of a lot simpler.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What about the banks?

Mr. O'Neil: Okay, but the banks aren't going to give them the incentive the Treasurer could give them; they aren't going to give them the lower interest rate.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You want the state to take over.

Mr. O'Neil: Well, let's put it this way. I have more trust in some of the staff who work for EODC or the Ontario Development Corporation than maybe the Treasurer or the officials in his ministry or government have. They are very qualified people, and I am sure that if the Treasurer were to say to the people of this province, "You invest your money with us. Give us this money, and we will give you a higher interest rate in return," it would give him the money he says he ran out of earlier this year. It is because of this these small businesses and these small manufacturing people throughout the whole province are suffering. We need money.

I know the honourable member for Brantford mentioned that we have business people calling us every day. They are looking for money. They can't really get it from the federal people, and they can't get it from the provincial people either because, as I say, the government doesn't have the money to lend, or it has lent it out to the larger corporations.

Why couldn't the ministry staff, at the time the Treasurer was drawing up his budget, have drawn up in one or two pages, something along that line to bring these funds in, to use, to lend out to these people? The Treasurer has the facilities to check out a lot of the credit ratings and to see whether these businesses would be successful if he was to give them some incentive. As I say, this hasn't been done.

Now I don't understand the bill; it is too complicated for me and likely a lot of other people in this province and mainly because, as the member for London Centre mentioned, the Treasurer just won't get applications. It will be like the bill we had last year.

An hon. member: You should have brought in my private member's bill.

Mr. O'Neil: We in eastern Ontario, as well as people from throughout this province, are looking for assistance to our people in small business, whether they be in the business or the manufacturing sector. This bill is not going to give it to them and I worry about that.

Next year, when the Treasurer brings down his budget, nothing really will have been done. We won't have the money in eastern Ontario to help these people, and because of that many jobs will be lost, many new businesses that could have been started or expanded won't be. Many businesses will go out of business because this help is lacking.

And as a small businessman, when something was presented like this from his staff, from his people, the Treasurer should have seen that it was just too complicated, too involved, for the ordinary person to take part. I do feel he is interested, and sincerely interested, in seeing that something is done for this type of people. I do not believe that this is it.

Mr. Eakins: You cut down the tourist industry to seven and a half per cent.

[9:30]

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer is anxious to respond. I don't understand that; it is not like him.

Mr. Conway: After a long career in the business community, the member for Nickel Belt is about to tell us.

Mr. Laughren: As a matter of fact, I did have a six-year career in the private sector.

Mr. Conway: Tell us all about it.

Mr. Laughren: A very successful career.

Mr. Conway: Six years where, Floyd?

Mr. Laughren: Toronto, Moose Jaw, Vancouver, Thunder Bay, and Winnipeg; I did have to keep on the move.

Mr. Conway: Selling snake oil?

Mr. Van Horne: A used car salesman.

Mr. Sterling: The member never should have gotten up.

Mr. Conway: Who said he got up?

Mr. Laughren: May I say at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I understand this bill. The reason I understand it is because of the excellent briefing I received from the minister's staff. They were very helpful to us when we went over to find out some of the finer points we did not understand in the bill. I had a meeting on the weekend with some businessmen in the riding of Nickel Belt who were interested in this bill. It was 300 miles north of Sudbury. As a matter of fact, it was the community where the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) keeps wanting to go with me, the fine community of Chapleau. There were some businessmen there who were very interested in forming a small business development corporation and I felt I should have had more expertise on it than I had before I went up there.

The needs of the small business sector are primarily twofold: First, the need for equity capital; and second, the need for management expertise. This bill provides the potential for one of those only, namely the equity capital. I suppose there will be management people, such as consultants, who will assist in formation of these SBDCs and who will, in effect, play two roles: One, to establish the pool of equity capital that can then go out to the small businesses; and two, to provide the expertise or advice to the businesses to which they lend the money. I could see that tying in quite neatly with the pool of equity capital. There is no requirement that this happen, of course, but I could see it would be possible it would do just that.

The member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) mentioned the need for loans tying in with perhaps a package of assistance to small business and I agree with him.

Mr. Peterson: Excuse me, I must be wrong.

Mr. Laughren: I do understand there is a possibility for loans above the 70 per cent that must be invested in equity in the small business enterprises. I would say, though, that I am concerned that the small businessman who has built up his business will be a little reluctant to divest himself of control, even if it is only 10, 20, or up to 49 per cent. Small businessmen are very reluctant to give up control of even a portion of their business. I can imagine that might be a problem, except for those people who have to give up control. If they cannot get any loans and they cannot get financing from the traditional financial institutions they are going to have to give up some equity participation in their company in order to get financing. I can see where businesses which really do want to expand will do that.

It is strange, is it not, that the greatest free enterprisers in the Tory party are the ones who most undermine that pure free enterprise philosophy of the business community standing on its own and competing out there, knowing full well that the invisible hand of the marketplace will look after things and the fittest will survive? That is what the Treasurer would have us believe, yet at the same time he brings in a bill which provides a return of 30 per cent right off the top to people who will take a risk. I always thought, in my limited study of economics, that the reason one justified profit was because of the element of risk. I didn't know there was any other justification for profit; the element of risk is what makes profit legitimate. Yet here, the minister is taking away that element. If he keeps it up, he is going to have trouble justifying the profit factor. Then you fellows will be upset, won't you, when he can no longer justify the taking of profits because there is no element of risk left.

I warn the minister that he is going to be undermining his own argument, that the rhetoric in his budget speeches is going to be rather hollow when he has done that to himself. I would just warn the minister of the direction in which he is heading.

The other thing that bothers me is that the Treasurer is always on to us about being free-spending socialists. I don't know what this bill is going to cost, although I'd like to know. What is this bill going to cost? What will that 30 per cent write-off to everyone who puts money into a small business development corporation cost the province of Ontario? Surely, the minister isn't going to stand in his place later and tell us that he has gone into this with his eyes closed, that he has no concept of what it is going to cost?

I understand that the minister has had an enormous number—I think he used the figure 500—of phone calls asking for information about this; and he is not the only one, I have had calls myself.

Mr. Lawlor: He's got a cut-off figure, hasn't he?

Mr. Laughren: He's got a cut-off figure, but he doesn't know what the total cost to Ontario is going to be.

Mr. Lawlor: When he reaches a certain figure he is going to cut it all off.

Mr. Laughren: It's like employment incentive; if it's successful he will cut it off. That's what he did with the job creation—at least that's what his predecessor did a couple of years ago.

Another thing that is bothering me about what the Treasurer is doing is the whole question of dividing up the allocation of assistance in Ontario. He now has the small business development corporation approach, and whether he wants to admit it or not the hand of government is going to have to be there. Despite the wishes of the member for London Centre, there must be close supervision over this bill, there simply must be. Otherwise I could imagine the kinds of games that are potentially there for investors to play.

My mind isn't capable of knowing what they are, or of knowing the loopholes that would be closed already by his staff, but I can imagine someone investing $1 million in an SBDC, getting his $300,000 cheque back and that investment going to a rather successful company which then invests it in another SBDC or in another business enterprise and has a 30 per cent write-down on its profits for that year. I can see this thing building over a number of companies, with basically the same number of people benefiting from it. The Treasurer is going to have to keep a close eye on it; that's why the bill has to be as complex as it is.

Another thing that bothers me is that we now have the Ontario Development Corporation, the Employment Development Fund and the small business development corporations, all with government input. I wonder how they are going to keep them all straight over there. Already there is confusion between the Employment Development Fund and the development corporations. The minister is doing a cut-off and saying above $250,000 is the Employment Development Fund, below that are the development corporations. He has the staffs of the Ontario Development Corporation running around not knowing who has what responsibility; there is going to be trouble there. In fact, there already is trouble. Perhaps three bureaucracies are being created where before there was one. That is something that the minister would be very quick to condemn us for if we did it; yet he does it himself all in the name of free enterprise. It is a strange contradiction in this minister.

Mr. Peterson: They are very cunning that way.

Mr. Laughren: They are very cunning that way; but they are very contradictory that way too.

The Treasurer, I hope, will respond to some of the questions that have been raised. Perhaps some of the more specific ones can be raised when the bill goes to committee. The Canadian Federation of Independent Businessmen is concerned about some of the things in it; namely, the maximum limit of $5 million, which is the limit on the size of an SBDC.

There is another thing that bothers them, and I think they have a point. Since the government is proceeding with this bill and the whole concept of SBDCs anyway, it might want to think about the requirement that at the end of the first year 40 per cent of the investment in SBDCs must be out there in equity in businesses. At the end of the second year, 70 per cent must be invested in small businesses. The ministry might think about changing that so that it's escalated over a four-year period rather than two years. Let it grow from 25 per cent, 50, 75, 100 or whatever, in specific numbers. There may be a problem by the end of the second year getting 70 per cent of the money in the SBDC out there into the small business sector. The minister might want to think about changing that after he has seen it in operation awhile.

My own suspicion is that a year from now there will be a batch of amendments before this chamber because of some of the problems that are difficult to anticipate. I don't think that necessarily means it's wrong, but I do think amendments will be before us within the year, and that will be one of them.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise and speak on Bill 49 in support of my colleague from London Centre in his comments and reservations. I notice section 36 of the bill, which is my concern, repeals the Venture Investment Corporations Registration Act. If I recall correctly, that piece of legislation was brought in in 1977-1978 was when it was supposed to come into effect, I believe. The purpose of that act was to put new life into and to assist small business corporations. The same, I suppose, is the intent of this bill.

But looking at that bill its intent then was to spur the economy. An investment corporation investing in a venture would be able to deduct an amount equal to 250 per cent of its investment in a VIC at 12 per cent. In computing the income tax, the deduction is worth 30 per cent in terms of the tax rate to corporations; instead of 12 per cent which is the normal corporate rate of any kind of deduction in computing income they could actually claim a 30 per cent tax rate for their investment in the VIC. The bill before us—the Small Business Development Corporations Act—is similar legislation, but it has been changed around a little bit to make it look better to investors who want to invest in this enterprising proposal.

Along with my colleague from London Centre, I am concerned about the matter of the limits applied in the bill—the minimum of $250,000 and the maximum of $5 million; that bothers me to some extent too.

In speaking on this matter as critic of revenue back in 1977 I was quoting from the brief of the Association of Canadian Venture Capital Companies, which was presented on June 6, 1976. It said: "They should be encouraging a greater flow of capital to small- and medium-sized businesses, which requires changes in the present income tax structure. Corporations should be permitted to deduct from taxable income a certain percentage of their annual gross payroll—it is suggested between 10 to 15 per cent. If such funds are given to an employees' stock ownership trust used for the purchase of the corporation's common stock, this would improve the liquidity in private company share transactions and provide an alternative way of investment in small companies. It would enhance investment for such companies and provide the opportunity for the average person in industry to be a free enterpriser and key management to realize on their ownership interest." I think that was a good sound proposal and the government should perhaps move in this area.

When we look at the economy of Ontario and the rest of Canada and compare it to the European economy, particularly Germany, we find a similar proposal in their manufacturing process. Employees do have some input in financing a joint partnership with industry, government and the employees themselves.

I look at the capital invested in banks and personal savings. I can recall reading, I think it was from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce's yearly statement which provided an outlook on the Canadian economy for 1980 or 1979. I believe one of their quotes was there is $47 billion in savings in banks across Canada. Fifty per cent of that is generated in the province of Ontario. I suggest to the minister that here is an area we should be looking at to give a break to the small person who wants to invest in Ontario or invest in Canada. This is an area that should be tapped.

We look to our neighbours to the south, the United States. They have such a program for investment purposes to keep their economy on an even keel and to encourage new investment. They encourage the small investor to invest in the government for funding certain projects, and in fact even in small businesses. They are given a certain tax concession for their investment at a fair interest rate. For a period of maybe 10 years, there are no taxes on it. I suggest this is an area at which this government should be looking.

I look at the grant given to the automobile industry, the Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited. It was a substantial grant. It will create jobs; but in the long run what investment is there in it for the province of Ontario, besides perhaps corporation taxes? I suggest if the government were to invest in any more private sector industry we should become a shareholder in a sense, we should have some dividend return on taxpayers' money in this area.

Mr. Swart: You sound like a socialist.

Mr. Haggerty: No, that is just good, sound financial planning, I think. I have often thought if Mrs. Haggerty were in the Legislature she could run the government a lot better than any of us could.

I think it is good, sound planning. That is one of the credits I can give the Social Credit philosophy in government management. That is one of the reasons they have some good, sound planning in their philosophy.

The minister is giving away tax money. That is what it is. It is a tax deferral for large investors. As the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson) said, it is the big investor who is going to reap the benefits in this particular program I suggest there are areas we should be looking at to encourage the average person in the province of Ontario to become a responsible citizen and to say: "I do have some obligation to create further employment in the province of Ontario."

With those few comments, I think I can support the bill in principle and hope you have much better success with this proposal than you had with the Venture Investment Corporations Registration Act. We on this side do support it in principle.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the preamble I used in introducing the bill started with the statement that I would be glad to accept any reasonable amendments and that I would be pleased to see this bill adjusted as time went on or as experience proved it necessary. I thought I should say that in advance, because I've not tried to say this is right and I'm not trying to say this won't be amended or experience won't require some change.

Of all the things said and the comments made, the member for London Centre was perhaps kindest to me when he didn't think he was being kind. He said: "I think you're dreaming." Yes, I guess I am.

Mr. Peterson: Smoking Muskoka grass. That's what I said.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, maybe a little bit of grass or something caught up in my nostrils accidentally, but I have dreams. If I was as pessimistic as the honourable member is about the bill, I'd never invest a nickel in anything but a Canada Savings Bond. I'm saying to him that there are a lot of people who dream. There are a lot of people who are looking for some opportunity and I'm simply trying to find one route to assist them.

A number of comments were made in general by other speakers who said: "Do more for the ODCs. Do more for this or do more for that." None of those things is excluded by this bill.

Mr. O'Neil: You don't have any money there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'll get on to that later on. We're talking about this bill tonight. The honourable member started out by saying federal government co-operation is necessary after May 22 with this kind of bill. It would be nice to have federal paralleling of measures; I agree completely. It's something one can try for. If they paralleled our measures we'd probably be able to streamline a number of conditions and simplify things.

Mr. Peterson: That is why I was so critical.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. I can only say that whether we're the government, whether his party over there are the government, or God forbid whether members of the other party are the government, one way or another, if this turns out to be—

Mr. Makarchuk: The Lord works in strange ways, don't forget that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, I realize that.

Mr. Lawlor: You seem to think that is improvidential.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Improvidential? It would be disastrous.

Mr. Lawlor: Don't be such a pessimist.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In any case, there will be need for us to try to convince them, perhaps through the very success of the thing, that there should be parallel federal tax legislation to assist it to be more profitable. That was one of the basic reasons VICs never got off the ground I think the honourable member would agree. Apart from other structural problems, there wasn't a federal paralleling of the tax credit.

Mr. Peterson: You knew that at the beginning. I am saying there is more you could have done with what you had.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No argument, please. I'm not trying to say the member is wrong. What I'm trying to put across purely through this discussion is that there are some bills a minister brings into the House of which he says: "We've done all our homework. There's absolutely nothing more to be changed. Our pride and our reputation rests with this. If you put in an amendment, we have to withdraw the bill." This is not of that nature.

Mr. Peterson: You are getting smart slowly but surely.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The question is what kind of funds will be available. As Mr. Parizeau said in his budget when he introduced his credit for purchase of shares in companies with their head offices in the province of Quebec: "I hope this costs me a lot because if it costs me a lot it's a success. I don't know how much to put in my budget because I don't know if it will be a success." I'm now quoting Mr. Parizeau.

Mr. Peterson: It was a $15,000 limit but it turned out to be—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In any case, he was talking about the aggregate. I'm only saying in our minds we were using figures between $10 million and $20 million as a possible cost of this this year, and if necessary the Employment Development Fund could be used as a source of that money.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business deserves a lot of credit. They came into my prebudget hearings and made a number of comments to me. I'm sure they supported a number of the thoughts in it.

The honourable member tells me it will be hard to get suitable investments for SBDCs to find. I hope that is not true. I would look around my area and I would say that many potential investments lie there. He talked about minority shareholding. He said he wouldn't put his money into a company in which he doesn't have a control. When one buys Bell Telephone shares one is trusting somebody.

Mr. Peterson: Excuse me. Can I raise a point of privilege?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What's your point of privilege?

Mr. Peterson: I didn't say either one of those things. If the minister is going to quote me, I would appreciate it if he would quote me exactly. If I could clear them up, I did not say it would be hard to find people to invest in; I said it would be hard to find investors.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member said it would be hard to flow the money through.

Mr. Peterson: I said it would be hard to find people who wanted to run the money through that vehicle. That's what I said.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Correct me if I am wrong. I thought the member said it would not be too difficult to find people who would put money in SBDCs, but he is reasonably sure it would be difficult for the SBDCs in turn to find something to put their money in. That's the way I heard him talking. The record will show which one of us is right and I interpret that as meaning that there wouldn't be places for people to invest that money. That's all I was saying. Okay?

Mr. Peterson: I said no incentive to go that way into a high risk proposition.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Am I correct that he said that he would have some reluctance to put his money into a business he didn't control?

Mr. Peterson: Private business, not public business.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Private business, sure. I am only saying I have tried to point out—and maybe if I make my point; I am not trying to criticize, I am trying to make a point.

Mr. Peterson: Feel free.

Mr. F. S. Miller: I don't do that. The member knows that. That's his job.

Because someone has a minority, it doesn't mean someone else has a majority. The assumption that because an SBDC can only own 49 per cent means someone has 51 per cent isn't correct. No one person need control any company, but it can mean that a person can retain control of their company if they see fit. I think both of those parts are true. There can be two SBDCs owning up to 49 per cent and only two per cent in somebody else's shares. This can be in shares that can be redeemed under certain conditions, and these things can all be done to protect the person. Frankly, when we thought about all the constraints, or all the things one could do to put conditions on the shares—the kind of shares, the agreement, the management agreements and so on that were talked about—we came to the conclusion we were best not to interfere in the marketplace with those things but rather leave those kinds of agreements to be made between the investor and the company receiving the benefit, until we had some chance at least to see it working.

If the 100 employee limit is too low, as I think the member implied it might be, again I am not bound to it. It is something we could easily adjust as experience shows.

I have some notes on taxes. My understanding is that these corporations are taxed, as any other corporation, for investments.

Mr. Peterson: That was my point; that is what I said.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am sorry. If I misunderstood, I was reading it the wrong way.

Mr. Peterson: Double taxation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: My notes here, and I have copious notes, say this: that if an SBDC is a private corporation and holds 10 per cent or more of the shares of the company, then they are considered to be a connected corporation and aren't taxed when the money flows in. Is that correct? So that you would have that advantage, and in most cases I would think the SBDC would own at least 10 per cent of the shares.

Mr. Peterson: Dividends flow tax free.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't pretend to be an expert. My staff said that was covered; I am quite willing to look at it but I believe that—

Mr. Peterson: Dividends flow tax free, but my point is there are different forms of income.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Oh yes, but frankly, the very reason dividends flow tax free is because tax is paid on them but interest isn't; therefore if interest comes in it should be taxed. I think we both agree on that. Correct?

Mr. Peterson: Not twice.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't understand where it is taxed twice.

Mr. Peterson: In the SBDC's hands and the investor's hands.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, no; that's not true because—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would like to remind the honourable members that we are completing second reading of this bill; if it's the wish of the House for it to go to committee they will have ample time to ask further questions. Would the honourable minister continue?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Maybe it's the last time to get the answers.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was intrigued that at least two Liberal members talked about their alternative. I am not saying the alternative may not work, but I was intrigued that it was a variation of the Canadian Development Corporation or some such thing, where they were suggesting that investors put their money in the government and allow the government to make investments. I am not being facetious when I say I found that surprising from a party that I have learned to respect as being as free enterprise as the Liberals are. I really don't have that kind of confidence in government-run companies to make investments for me and I don't think many other investors would either.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Why are you taxing us at the rate you are? What do you call that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Listen, I was quiet all night long.

Mr. Sterling: The ODC is a loan corporation.

[10:00]

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are telling me that the figure of $250,000 is too high and the $5 million too low. Again, I put these in after a great deal of thought and discussion. I believe they are reasonable. I am not unwilling to change them even now, or better still after some experience has shown that they should be changed.

The other thing that two or three speakers talked about was the 40 per cent and 70 per cent requirements in the first and second years. There is a clause in the bill that does allow for exemption if those levels are not met; if we find consistently they are not being met, we can take steps. I find no trouble in extending those things that experience shows us should be changed.

If there is one thing I learned as an engineer, it is this: When you design your pilot, you start it out according to the design and then make adjustments as the experience shows those adjustments are needed. We could sit here all night and argue about the merits of whether $125,000, $5,000 or, as my staff would have believed, $750,000 is the required minimum amount of money in these companies before they will be viable, but none of us will be sure until we get out in the marketplace.

I think I will wait until we get to clause-by-clause consideration rather than answer the member's other points now; I will talk about the specific sections when we get to them. He mentioned two or three specific ones.

The member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) talked about the possibility that management agreements could be made, as well as equity being purchased. Of course they can be made, but in all kinds of agreements where one is borrowing money you may be required to enter into agreements or covenants. Strangely enough, we would see the right of a lender or a purchaser of equity to offer management expertise as one of the pluses not one of the minuses—of bringing the SBDC into contact with many of the small companies. It is to be hoped that they will do it. But if you have ever got into the hands of a bank when you are in trouble, you very often have a management partner. If you have ever been dealing with a big corporation like General Motors, you have a partner, whether you want it or not—and they may not even have lent you any money in the process.

I repeat, for the member for Brant, the fact that we are creating SBDCs does not rule out many of the other forms of governmental involvement that he was talking about—the Ontario Development Corporation, et cetera.

Somewhere along the line the member for Brant mentioned the trust account, the 30 per cent, and said it was something like a bank reserve. Well, the money a bank puts on reserve with the Bank of Canada is in effect to guarantee that the deposits are protected by some liquid assets. Also, they are a very useful tool in managing the money supply, as I understand it.

In this case, the 30 per cent clause—which is diminished, as the member said, once the 70 per cent investment is made—is there strictly to make sure we do not run into some con artists who take the 30 per cent and disappear without making any eligible investments. I think he would agree we need that kind of protection until we have seen that—

Mr. Makarchuk: I can understand the protection, but is it not a large sum to have lying about?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. But it is only until such time as that 70 per cent is purchased. If a company has the ability to invest the whole 100 per cent of its money right off the bat, it does not have to be lying around. So that, I think, overcomes the member's basic problem.

I must say the member for Quinte—that is you, isn't it?

Mr. O'Neil: It sure is.

Mr. Roy: And a great member at that. You should look at him closely. He will be around here a long time—even after you are gone.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well, that is not too hard. There are days when I think I should go home and form an SBDC and invest in Muskoka.

Mr. Sterling: I'll go into partnership with you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is one of my backbenchers ready to take my place. That is what keeps us ministers on our toes in the front ranks of this government.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is the only reason you are there: he is no better than you are.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We have so many competent young men like him—not only a lawyer, but an engineer—ready to take the place of the poor old engineer who is fighting with his antlers to retain his position here in the front row.

Mr. Conway: The member for Ottawa South will look after his ambition.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Now back to Bill 49.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I listened to a lot of guff tonight too. I have to have a chance once in a while.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Until the member for Quinte opened his mouth tonight I always thought of him as probably a little misdirected in that party over there, but essentially a Conservative, essentially a person of sound business judgement. Then tonight I heard him tell me he would rather have government act as the intermediary than banks—rather have government act as the intermediary than small business corporations dealing directly with the potential investors.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: When they see that in Quinte and realize he has sold out to the NDP—that he is following the socialist dogma—man, that is going to be a tough day in Quinte, Belleville, of all places, realizing they have elected a socialist acting as a capitalist. Isn't that right?

Mr. O'Neil: They elected a man of the people, a man who will fight for the small businessman and the small manufacturers.

Mr. Roy: They elected a flexible Liberal.

Hon. F. S. Miller: A flexible Liberal. You guys are so flexible one could make pretzels out of you.

Mr. O'Neil: You are way above the ordinary person.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Until you are half baked you are not stiff. No, no. Let me see—that's a pretzel.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: Only the Treasurer caught that joke.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have a mind that understands my own humour.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think I am really finished, Mr. Speaker. I could say much more but I think all the important points have been touched. I will be moving into committee. The House leader may direct me to go there now.

I take pleasure in moving second reading of the bill.

Mr. Nixon: That is not the direction he has in mind.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

ONTARIO MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES RETIREMENT SYSTEM AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 31, An Act to amend the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening statement?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, all three bills are housekeeping bills. I am quite prepared to discuss any parts of them the members wish, but they are minor in nature. I will only talk to this bill for a second. I have one bill that is historic, if we get to it tonight. Bill 33 is historic. We will keep the members in suspense until we get to it.

Mr. Peterson: Does the Treasurer have a statement on Bill 31?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I don't have a statement. I can read my notes to you.

Mr. Peterson: I will read the notes myself.

I want to say that I just think this is a terrific bill. I want to congratulate the minister because I have never been more fully in support of him on any previous occasion. He's a wonderful fellow and—

Mr. T. P. Reid: He is going to read the bill now!

Mr. Peterson: He probably has made a mistake. I am not sure he understands it, Mr. Speaker, but it is a very progressive piece of legislation.

What this bill does is allow the government to put more public pension funds—funds from the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System, i.e. OMERS—into the private marketplace. That is essentially what it is about.

Members will recall the experience of 1975 when the government originally liberated some of those pension funds and put $100 million out into the marketplace and generated a very high rate of return. As I recall in the first year the rate of return was 10½ per cent. For three years in a row they generated over a 10 per cent return on that fund. A very excellent performance for a public fund.

What this allows us to do in some respects at least, is to take this money away from government borrowings and put it back into the private marketplace where it belongs. Not only is it generating a higher rate of return, i.e. lessening the unfunded liabilities, but also it is building up capital stock in this country. People who are looking ahead in this country realize we are going to have to put a much higher percentage of our gross national product into savings, be they forced or unforced, in order to build the capital stock for this country; to build the energy projects, transportation and things like that. This allows some latitude to the government to increase the amount of money they can put in the private marketplace.

I have said before on many occasions, and I think I'll say it again, Mr. Speaker, that probably the greatest single corruption of government finances—in the Davis-McKeough-Miller and White regime—is through availability of all those internally-generated pension funds from which to spend. They have spent almost every available penny, every available year, to increase the deficit on an annual basis.

It has been a tragedy and a corruption of the financing practices of this province. Had that money not been available in the late 1960s when a number of these plans were created, I suggest respectfully we would not be in the deficit position we are in in this province today. At least here we have shown a progressive move. I would like to see the same thing done with the teachers' superannuation fund, from which the government borrowed, as I recall off the top of my head, about $554 million this year. I may be wrong; I may be out $100 million. They are borrowing another $980 million from the Canada Pension Plan, another source of easy money. They have no appreciation of what is going to happen with it in the future.

Here is a glimmering of hope for this government. They are, presumably, going to put this in the hands of private fund managers. They are going to generate a higher rate of return. As a result, we have probably the best administered retirement fund in this government in the Ontario Municipal Employees Retirement System. I congratulate the administrators of that particular fund.

It doesn't have the big unfunded liability of the teachers' superannuation fund. The unfunded liability there is close to $1.6 billion, on the latest actuarial notes taken in 1977. The latest actuarial review was really in 1975 when they had an unfunded liability of $1.4 billion. Had the teachers' superannuation fund been liberated and been loaned out in the private marketplace at competitive rates of interest, I respectfully submit the unfunded liability would have been far less. There would have been far more money in that fund, the teachers' pensions would have been more secure from that point of view; and more interestingly, we would not have to dip into the taxpayers' pockets in order to make up that unfunded liability over a period of years.

We are going to find that all of our children, the children of those people in this House and of all the people in this province, are going to have to pay for the legal commitments created by this government. It is a tragic situation.

I have talked about this question so many times I am blue in the face from it. If they had gone to the marketplace they would have been more responsible. I am glad to see it with OMERS; it is a progressive move. The fund is well managed; they have good managers from outside as well as inside government. Interestingly enough, this is not an indexed fund. The OMERS people have not indexed that fund, although historically there have been periodic adjustments. They have kept that fund, for a combination of reasons, in good control. It is well managed, competitive, and they are serving not only the taxpayers but they are serving the retirees fairly well in the circumstances.

By comparison, we see the dismal shape of the teachers' superannuation fund, which the government has raped continually over a period of years, paying below market rates. Twenty-eight per cent of that fund, and at the end of this year it will be about $3.5 billion, is returning six per cent. Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker? The return is six per cent. You can generate almost double that in the marketplace today. This is what is happening.

The former Minister of Education (Mr. Wells), who now has the Intergovernmental Affairs portfolio, had major reresponsibility for the disaster of that fund. He has left the government carrying the can and has now gone on to wreak havoc with other levels of government, hopefully not ours anymore.

Hon. Mr. Wells: That is not true.

[10:15]

Mr. Peterson: I like this act. I compliment the minister on it. I assume it was his idea. If it isn't, then let him take credit anyway because it's probably the only thing he's done so far that's particularly outstanding. We support it with enthusiasm and urge him, as part of the whole pension reform process and cleaning up the borrowing habits of this province, to adopt the same posture and stature with the other funds under his control.

Mr. Lawlor: After that speech the minister can withdraw the bill.

Mr. Peterson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I never thought I would see the day the Treasurer would stand up and say he was bringing in a housekeeping bill and the member for London Centre would say it was a historic bill and provoke me to lead a revolt and divide on a housekeeping bill. That's exactly what I feel like doing after that incredible speech by the member for London Centre.

Mr. Mackenzie: But we are going to support it.

Mr. Laughren: Surely there is nothing wrong with public sector pension funds being used for the good of the public. The money was going to have to come from some place. The member for London Centre would take it from taxes, I presume. I never heard such a silly speech in my life.

Mr. Conway: Did you hear Cassidy Saturday night? On chickens and wieners?

Mr. Laughren: The use of public pension funds is not something that should be determined entirely by the private sector. That's not exactly what we would regard as responsible pension fund management.

I regard this, as the Treasurer did, as a housekeeping bill and I was astounded to hear the accolades from the member for London Centre.

Mr. Roy: He's an objective member.

Mr. Laughren: We know the contributors to this fund wish, of course, that they would have total say over what use was made of the fund.

The other point I wanted to make was that in section 2 of the bill, since we're not going to committee I presume, it does indicate that an attachment can be made to recipients of the fund for support payments. That's something not only we think is right but the people who pay into it are in general agreement with as well. So we have no hesitation in supporting the bill.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

AUDIT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Audit Act, 1977.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, before I make my small and humble contribution, I wonder if, unlike the last bill, the Treasurer could explain why we're amending the Audit Act which we passed in 1977, just to see if he knows what he is talking about.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, of course I know what I'm talking about. This was really to catch certain crown agencies or corporations which had not been properly defined for the audit functions, and therefore the auditors did not feel they had the statutory right to go in and make certain requirements of those organizations. We are now including them.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Which ones were those?

Hon. F. S. Miller: They are the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry, the Ontario Cancer Institute, the Ontario Medical Health Foundation, the Ontario Parkway Commission and the Teachers' Superannuation Commission.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the reason this bill is before us is somewhat as the minister outlined. I was impressed that he knew what this bill was about, unlike the last one.

The fact remains this bill was before us for the simple reason the auditor went in to have a look at some of the books of these crown agencies and the agencies said to the provincial auditor of Ontario, "Get lost; you don't have the legislative authority to look into the financial accounts of this crown agency."

When I heard that in the first instance, I found it almost dumbfounding that an agency of this government, receiving a subsidy, grant or whatever the government of the day wants to call it—and, because of its particular bent, it prefers to call it something else—should say to the provincial auditor, after we had a thorough debate in 1977 which made the Audit Act, based on the federal act, one of the most progressive and comprehensive acts in Ontario, "Look, you have no legislative authority here." That is bewildering but quite in line with the fact that this government, along with the federal government and almost every government in Canada, has lost control of the public purse. Control of the moneys being given to these crown agencies, boards and commissions has been lost, in this case, by the provincial government, without any responsibility or accountability.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Control is in the Legislature. Don't be blaming the government; the Legislature has control.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Control is not in the Legislature, I say with due respect to the government House leader. A former minister of the crown, the member for Carleton

(Mr. Handleman), was quoted in the Globe and Mail as saying he was disappointed that the public accounts committee did not deal at length and in detail with the estimates or the spending of the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and that there was no accountability for the funds that were being spent and administered by that crown agency.

Mr. Conway: And the hosing they were giving the rest of us.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He did not really say that.

In view of the fact that the profit the province realized from the LCBO in the past year was $334 million and that the Treasurer has decreed in the next year it will be more than $400 million, it was very startling that the former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations would get up and say, "I was the minister and I didn't know what the hell was going on there." They are dealing with that kind of money, and yet one of those agencies had the temerity to say to the auditor: "You have no business in here. You can't ask us what we are doing. Why should we report to you what's going on?"

I would like to refer to the former minister for a moment. I will not go over the former minister's remarks about how he felt when he was the minister. As the minister of the crown—never mind as a member of the opposition or as a member of the public—as the minister he could not find out what was the relationship or the responsibility or the accountability between that particular board and the government of Ontario, even though we are dealing in a profit of $334 million, never mind the expenditures and everything else.

The Liquor Control Board is the most successful business corporation in Ontario, given its assets and everything else. Yet the then minister knew nothing about it.

Mr. Speaker, I recall to your mind the report of the Lambert commission, the thick book dealing with responsibility and accountability of taxpayers' money and asking who is responsible and where is the accountability?

Mr. Sterling: The public accounts committee.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It is not their responsibility. The public accounts committee has only undertaken in the last few weeks to deal with agencies, boards and commissions because the government of the day has lost control, has lost any idea of what's going on with those vast sums of money.

Applause.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Never mind the money that's given to them for operating grants or subsidies, but in the money they are dealing with and the money they are bringing in. They have no idea and they are condemned by the words out of the mouth of an ex-minister of theirs.

I was shocked, and I've seen a lot of hypocrisy in this Legislature—

Mr. Peterson: I've done a little myself.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The member for London Centre is speaking for himself, of course. But when the present Chairman of Management Board (Mr. McCague) got up with that pious statement about the Lambert commission in Ottawa, and he said, "There are 164 recommendations how we can give back responsibility and accountability to the House of Commons," the minister here got up and said—

Interjection.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Robert, you would know better than I. It's not the Pharisee. I'll find this out on June 9, I suppose, in these—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Is it June 9, I thought it was June 6.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well you see, Frank, you're not right. The Treasurer has no head for figures at all except the wrong kind, so we won't we go into that.

Mr. Conway: June 6 is D-Day.

Mr. T. P. Reid: But the piousness and the platitudes of the Chairman of Management Board who got up and said, "Those 164 recommendations—" Well, he said, in his statement—and I won't repeat it because that's against the rules—"We already have brought in most of those controls in the province of Ontario and isn't it a shame that our federal brethren, with all the large civil service they have, don't have the kind of controls we have in the province of Ontario?"

Interjections.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I mean, really, I was so astounded and dumbfounded that I was dumb in the sense that I was speechless, that the Chairman of Management Board, who should know better than anyone else that this government as well as the one in Ottawa has lost control over the public purse—

Mr. Ashe: That's the federal government.

Mr. T. P. Reid: —that the control of estimates in the province of Ontario is a sham; and that this government has no control over that myriad of agencies, boards and commissions that this government has set up, should say to this House. "We have much better control and we're in control and we know who is responsible, and we know who is accountable."

I'll tell the minister—well, I won't tell him what we'd say in the Rainy River district about that, but we have a large farming area and when I go on a farmer's farm, he says, "Pat, don't step over there. Don't step in the hazunga." Well I'll tell the Treasurer that statement was hazunga because he and his colleagues over there have lost control. They don't know who is responsible and they don't know who is accountable.

I've spent a couple of years on public accounts attempting to upgrade that committee with one view in mind—that we can find somewhere where we can say to the taxpayers of Ontario, because that's what it comes down to, "Look, we know who is responsible for the waste of money. We can pinpoint the persons who messed that up. We know who is accountable for what's gone on."

But I'll tell you, Mr. Speaker, we cannot do that because we have the people come before us week after week and they say, "We're not responsible. I'm not accountable." The minister should hear all these chairman of royal commissions, from Judy LaMarsh, who got up there and said, "God, I don't know anything about government spending. Do you mean there's limits? Do you mean you have to account for this sort of thing?"

We had Chief Justice Hartt who said, "They appointed me to the royal commission on the northern environment. I didn't know anything about Indians." I said to him, "That was a very expensive education on the part of the province of Ontario." But the point remains, you cannot pinpoint the fault to this government. I don't blame the cabinet for everything; these are very highly paid civil servants. But really, who makes the mistakes and who pays for them? We don't know who is responsible for the mistakes, we don't know who is accountable.

I have made speeches on ministerial accountability. Even I don't expect the Treasurer, who didn't know what was in the bill before this one, to know what's going on in his ministry. Given his particular talents and competence we expect even less than that from him; but the point remains we have very highly paid civil servants at the senior and middle management level who are not willing to accept accountability and responsibility for the funds they are administering.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable member find this a convenient point to adjourn the debate?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Actually I wouldn't, Mr. Speaker, but I will accept your admonition and I will now adjourn the debate.

On motion by Mr. T. P. Reid, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

DEATH OF DORA MAVOR MOORE

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment of the House's time to pay tribute to a remarkable woman who virtually created Canadian stage drama, Dora Mavor Moore, who died on Monday at the age of 91.

Mrs. Moore was an actress who felt that no one should be denied the pleasure of live theatre, and she set about activating Canadian theatre from her base in Toronto shortly after World War Two. She covered all bases: She launched a theatre company. She encouraged actors, cajoled directors and inspired playwrights. She played a part in establishing the Stratford festival in 1953, and she influenced the establishment of theatres across Canada.

Her legacy in terms of Canadian theatre is so wide as to defy measurement. What can be isolated is her specific legacy in the person of her son, playwright and actor Mavor Moore. Mr. Moore was recently appointed head of the Canada Council. There is also her granddaughter Terry Moore, a popular television and film actress.

The lesson of Mrs. Moore's impact on Canadian life is simple: It is not only forces that mould events in history; it is individuals. One person who set those forces in motion until they reached the dimensions which even the originator would never have dreamed possible was Mrs. Moore. Every Canadian with a concern for the cultural life of this country owes her a debt. That debt can best be acquitted by continuing the work she began and fostering in any way we can the development of the theatre and all the performing arts in Ontario and in Canada.

BUS INSPECTION PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, today I wish to announce that a new mandatory bus inspection program will become effective in Ontario on October 31, 1979.

A recent survey by my ministry has shown that the great majority of buses operating on provincial streets and highways are in good mechanical condition. But to ensure that all buses are safe, we are establishing a mandatory bus inspection program. I would like to outline briefly this new inspection program for the members. It's based on our highly successful school bus inspection program, which is one of the most comprehensive in North America.

Under the new regulations, a bus means any motor vehicle with dual wheels or tandem rear axles designed to carry 10 or more passengers, other than vehicles fitted with a truck or delivery body. It includes all buses operated by or under contract to a municipality or other transit authority; buses licensed as public vehicles under the Public Vehicles Act, and vehicles used for the transportation for compensation of persons in wheelchairs, regardless of the designed seating capacity of the vehicles.

In effect, the new inspection program covers nearly all bus categories, including buses privately owned and operated by colleges and universities, church and service groups, sports organizations and industry.

Incidentally, we have discussed our new regulations with several other jurisdictions, including New York state, which has the most stringent, universally accepted bus inspection program in the United States. I am pleased to report that they have all responded favourably to our new regulations. I am confident we will be able to negotiate reciprocal agreements with out-of-province authorities, thereby allowing Ontario buses to travel free and clear in other jurisdictions.

The inspections must be carried out by a registered licensed mechanic at one of the 9,000 licensed inspection stations in the province or at licensed, company-owned facilities. Owners of vehicles which meet the required standards will be issued two stickers: a safety inspection sticker valid for six months and a special brake inspection sticker valid for 12 months. Both of these stickers must be prominently displayed in full public view on the inner surface of the windshield.

Ministry inspectors will carry out random audit inspections of the 8,000 vehicles included in the program to ensure bus operators comply with the new regulations. Buses carrying passengers after October 31 of this year without valid safety and brake inspection stickers will be removed from service until such time as inspections are carried out.

In conclusion, the new regulations will effectively bring all Ontario buses under a regular safety inspection program, thus providing additional safety for Ontario travellers.

ROAD DEATHS

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much having to give this second statement, but I would like to bring to the attention of the members of the House the most recent statistics concerning motor vehicle accidents in our province. It is with a certain degree of alarm that I present them because they indicate that in the initial three months of this year driver-passenger fatalities have climbed a tragic 76.5 per cent.

I am alarmed because, in cold figures, 126 drivers and passengers died through the first three months of 1978 and 211 have been killed in the corresponding period of 1979.

In total, 270 people were killed in 47,329 accidents on Ontario highways and streets in the first three months of 1979, as against 198 in the first three months of 1978.

These grim statistics, particularly among drivers and passengers, represent a complete turnaround when they are related to the figures compiled since seatbelt legislation and lower speed limits came into effect on January 1, 1976. The reason for this complete and sudden turnaround is something that my ministry staff cannot give with any degree of accuracy. We do know, however, that accident-related figures are often cyclical in nature, meaning that three month's figures don't indicate a hard-and-fast trend for the entire year, but that's not very consoling when one considers the horrendous loss of life.

We are also aware that multiple-death accidents are becoming more numerous; that is, as many as six or eight people have died in a single accident. What kind of precise figures these kinds of accidents represent, we still don't know, but our collision data people are compiling them for further analysis.

Why so many multiple-death accidents are occurring is a key question. So far, we have only some inconclusive evidence that as the cost of gasoline climbs, there is a corresponding climb in the number of people per vehicle, particularly when vehicles are used for recreational purposes.

One thing is obvious and it is that these grim statistics point to Ontario's drivers as the culprits, especially when one considers that cars and trucks are generally safer than ever before—with collapsible steering columns, padded dashboards, radial tires, all designed to prevent serious injury or death in an accident.

Clearly, then, if these figures are to be reversed—and I am convinced they can be—it is up to the drivers to prevent accidents, through safe and careful driving habits. It is up to the drivers and their passengers to buckle up. It is up to the drivers to obey the posted speed limits.

Permit me to return to the use of seatbelts. Regardless of what you hear or read, I have some interesting statistics that merit attention. Through 1978, out of 27,275 unbelted drivers involved in accidents, 336 were killed. During the same period, out of 258,578 belted drivers involved in accidents, 154 were killed. Those figures indicate if you are driving and involved in an accident, you are 20 times safer if you are wearing your seatbelt. I don't believe further comment is necessary.

In conclusion, it is apparent to me that neither the latest safety features built into cars nor safety legislation deters the careless or inattentive drivers who cause most of our accidents, something like 90 per cent of them in any given year. How can we reach these people? How can we remind all drivers that it is their behaviour and driving attitudes that are critical in these regrettable statistics?

To begin with, we are planning a two-pronged approach, using radio and police enforcement. To this end, my ministry personnel have already met with the senior OPP officials and I have been assured that highway surveillance will be stepped up through the use of radar equipment in unmarked cars and the return of aircraft to patrol provincial highways.

As a backup operation, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications will kick off a two-week awareness radio campaign, beginning May 25, a campaign involving a series of commercials aimed at making drivers more aware of their own carelessness and the carelessness of other drivers.

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all members of the House would like to recognize a very distinguished visitor in our gallery, in the person of the Minister of Education for St. Vincent, the Honourable St. Clair Dacon, and Mrs. Dacon. Would you please welcome them.

COMMITTEE ADVERTISING

Mr. Sterling: On a point of order: on April 27, the subcommittee of the standing administration of justice committee met to consider the procedure of dealing with Bill 19. It was decided by the subcommittee there should be public hearings on the bill and advertisements should be placed in some 50 daily newspapers, at a cost of approximately $6,000.

Neither the procedure of dealing with the bill nor the specific expenditure was approved by the justice committee, nor was the committee ever given such a mandate to make these decisions. The clerk of the committee subsequently placed these advertisements.

Under section 92 of the standing orders, a committee is provided with the authority to strike subcommittees, but it is silent as to the powers of that subcommittee. The global budget for the justice committee permits a total advertising budget for this year in excess of the specific expenditure I have mentioned above.

I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to rule on whether these actions are within the jurisdiction of this particular subcommittee.

[2:15]

Mr. Speaker: As all honourable members know, there have been some changes in the standing orders dealing with subcommittees of standing committees. I will take your point of order under advisement, and I will report to you and the House later.

[Later (5:50):]

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon the member for Carleton-Grenville, on what he considered to be a point of order, requested a ruling on the question of the expenditure of funds by a subcommittee without the express authority of the standing committee from which it is composed. I must point out that it is an established rule of procedure that the Speaker and the House may not deal with matters originating in a committee unless they are properly brought to the House by a report of the committee presented by the chairman thereof.

I realize the member has raised an important question in view of the fact the provisions for subcommittees are now new in our standing orders and that the provisions of budgets to standing committees are a very recent development. I, therefore, suggest that this question should be properly considered by the procedural affairs committee, which might be inclined to bring in a report to the House proposing guidelines for the proceedings of subcommittees and generally for the expenditure of funds by standing committees and subcommittees thereof.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ROAD DEATHS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to question the Minister of Transportation and Communications concerning the statement on first-quarter highway statistics and the very alarming increase in the death toll, which may or may not be just a statistical abnormality, but it is certainly very disturbing. Can the minister tell the House what percentage of these fatal accidents were alcohol related? Can he tell the House anything with regard to the proportion of these accidents that involve people of any particular age group, that involve small cars, anything about the location of these particular accidents that might assist the House in placing the information in a more reasonable context?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, my ministry tabulates all these accident figures and submits a report annually, breaking them down into different types of vehicles. I am not sure at this moment whether small cars and large cars are separated but, certainly, in many of the other areas mentioned, those statistics are produced on an annual basis. I do not have the breakdown for the first three months at this time, as I have just received the total figures for those months, showing the large increase which I reported to the House today.

I think our preliminary information would tell us that most of these accidents appear to happen with vehicles that have no mechanical deficiencies, under normal driving conditions and, in most cases, with the drivers in normal, good condition as well. The weekend a few weeks ago was the black weekend, as far as I am concerned, with a large number of deaths on the highway. That was the weekend of March 23 to 25 which, I believe, was a clear weekend when the roads were bare and dry. I think there were 23 or 24 deaths on that particular weekend.

I have a preliminary report on those accidents; they are from varying causes. I cannot state the cause because in many cases the police reports or court actions are not completed. But certainly there were situations where the tentative report showed impaired driving. In some cases the driver was on the wrong side of the road, in some they crossed the centre line—the type of thing which is just hard to understand under good driving conditions. Speed was involved in some. Unfortunately, on looking through this report, several of these involved people who moved left of the centre line for no apparent reason.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Will the minister undertake to give us some further breakdown of the accidents that have happened in the first quarter so that we can judge what the trends appear to be? Since he concluded, on page four, that the real problems are careless or inattentive drivers, I think it is important for us to know on what those conclusions are based, whether there is information with regard to alcohol or to any defects in the automobiles and so on. If the minister would be kind enough to table all these data as soon as possible, I am sure we could share with him the prospect of examining it to make some decisions.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Let me answer one supplementary before another is asked, will you please?

Mr. Mancini: I just wanted to keep you on the ball.

Hon. Mr. Snow: You get so excited about jumping on your feet, you don't want answers, obviously.

Mr. Speaker, I certainly will provide all that information to the Leader of the Opposition as soon as we can get it together. I have my officials working on this particular matter.

The Leader of the Opposition, commented on my statement that obviously, a lot of these accidents are related to careless or inattentive drivers. I guess I draw my conclusion on that from the fact that in about 85 per cent of all accidents there is no apparent reason for the accident. They are not related to weather conditions or detectable mechanical condition of the vehicle. Eighty-five per cent of the accidents would appear to be caused by inattentiveness of the driver, or whatever one might wish to call it, causing him to make an error of some type. Only about 15 per cent of the accidents we have assessed involve mechanical deficiencies, liquor or bad weather conditions.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary to the minister: On page four of his speech the minister indicates he has met with the Ontario Provincial Police, and the use of radar equipment in marked cars and planes will be coming very shortly. Does he not think one of the very serious problems is the carelessness with which drivers swing in and out of lanes, and that we might move to less emphasis on radar and more on the police moving with the traffic to determine those who are driving in a careless fashion? Just primarily observing for speed is not going to eliminate the type of carelessness that leads to some or many of these accidents.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I won't disagree with the honourable member. I didn't say I had met with the OPP, as the member stated; I said my officials had. I think certain of those questions relating to enforcement and to the operations of the OPP and other police within the province should rightfully be asked of my colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurry).

I would have to agree a greater presence of the black and white cars on the road, not only observing for speed, would be useful. I agree speeding is only one of the offences that cause accidents. Certainly, a greater number of police on our highways would, I am sure, make it possible to apprehend drivers committing offences other than speeding that also contribute to accidents.

A recent article, which just happened to arrive on my desk this morning, was published in the bulletin of the American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators. This article makes a comparison on a 12-month basis, not on the basis of three months such as we do. Their recent statistics show a considerable increase as well in deaths in automobile accidents in the United States. I will read just one paragraph:

"The fatality increases have occurred predominately on highways that post a 55-miles-per-hour speed limit, and in the western and southwestern states, where failure to observe the 55-miles-per-hour limit is believed to be most widespread . . ."

It is just hard to understand. We have had such a tremendous record for the last two years, during 1977 and 1978, when the number of deaths and injuries in Ontario were the lowest, I believe, since 1962. Then, all of a sudden, in the first three months of 1979, we have had this horrendous increase. I hope it is not indicative of what we are going to experience for the whole of this year. We will be monitoring and I will report to honourable members on a quarterly basis.

Mr. G. Taylor: Supplementary: Has the minister any statistics on how many of those automobile accidents are related to the use of alcohol or alcohol involvement?

Mr. J. Reed: That question has already been asked.

Mr. G. Taylor: Has he any relationship to the change that we used in the age differentials this past year? Can he relate them to that?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what reference the member is making to age differentials.

Mr. G. Taylor: Can the minister show in his statistics whether the increase in age did or did not reduce the amount of accidents?

Mr. Ruston: The drinking age.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The drinking age, I'm sorry.

Mr. Speaker: I thought the honourable minister took that as notice.

Hon. Mr. Snow: We did not change the age of drivers, which I thought the member was referring to.

As I stated to the Leader of the Opposition, we are assessing the statistics and breaking them down into different categories, but I have just received the overall statistics for the three-month period. I do not have a breakdown. Certainly, alcohol is related in a number of accidents; there is no doubt about that. When I look at the March 23 weekend, five or six of the accidents that weekend were related to alcohol.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: I would like to ask the minister, when he has the opportunity, to check a little further into his statistics, which he probably should have done before he made his statement, to find out just how many of these accidents were caused by alcohol. When the minister does get this information, would he make a presentation to the cabinet to curb alcohol advertising and the lifestyle type of advertising that breweries are using on television to encourage the consumption of alcohol?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Part of that question is repetitive. I said we will be assessing and breaking down the figures we have. I would suggest to the member that I felt it important to bring the information I had to the members of this House.

Mr. Mancini: Will the minister make a presentation?

Hon. Mr. Snow: If the member had wanted me to wait until all the inquests—

Mr. Mancini: Will the minister make a presentation to cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Would the member please wait a minute while I answer his question?

Mr. Mancini: Don't twist my question around.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The member obviously doesn't want an answer.

Mr. Mancini: I want the answer. Don't twist the question.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would like to give it to him. I would like to say that I felt it my duty as the minister to bring the preliminary figures of the number of deaths, which I have, to the attention of the members of the House. I did not feel it appropriate to wait for several months until inquests and investigations into accidents are completed to be able to tell the members whether there was alcohol involved in particular accidents or not. We will be following up on that information.

Mr. Mancini: Is the minister going to make a presentation?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I wish the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) were here today. I know he is as concerned and as interested as I am. He is lead minister in the cabinet as far as the drinking-driving problem is concerned. He is holding both portfolios as Solicitor General and Attorney General. I know of his great concern in this area. We will certainly be looking at every possible way that we might be able to recommend to our cabinet colleagues to curb this. But I assure the member it is not an easy problem.

RADIATION FROM X-RAYS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Health concerning X-rays. Is the minister familiar with the data referred to by the so-called Dr. W. Gifford-Jones in the Globe and Mail, in which he says that in chiropractors' offices 90 per cent of patients receive a full trunk X-ray, which is alleged in an article in the Canadian Medical Association Journal to be a major radiation hazard?
[2:30]

Since the minister has said to the people of Ontario that patients should never refuse an X-ray for the reason that missing the diagnosis might be worse than the risk of radiation, what advice can the minister give to patients who attend chiropractors? Should they ever refuse such a full-body X-ray, or should the present practice continue whereby some 90 per cent of patients allegedly receive these X-rays?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, this morning I met with Drs. Hobbs, Taylor and Johns who are conducting the work through the Radiological Research Institute of the University of Toronto which has been discussed here in recent days. I didn't have a chance to read Dr. Walker's comments this morning in the Globe and Mail and, therefore, I'm not familiar with that aspect of it. I was assured, however, that the project which is under way will cover chiropractors, dentists and all applications. I will look into that particular aspect.

I'm sorry I haven't had a chance to read those comments. In all respects, they re-emphasized to me again this morning that when it comes to diagnosis the risks are much greater in refusing diagnostic radiology.

While I'm on my feet, I want to take some exception to a comment which was attributed to the Leader of the Opposition. He suggested there has been some secrecy about this matter, that the ministry or that I as minister somehow have not taken the matter seriously. I want to draw the member's attention to Hansard for the estimates of my ministry on November 21, 1977, at which time the matter was fully discussed.

Mr. Speaker: The answer should relate to the question that was asked.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Perhaps it could be counted as a point of privilege, because I think my privileges have been abused. The honourable member suggested there has been some secrecy and lack of concern. In point of fact, this was discussed at estimates in November 1977 and it was clearly set out what the ministry was doing and what our plans were. Perhaps the honourable member would at least afford me the privilege of an apology.

Mr. S. Smith: I'll certainly read the estimates and decide then exactly what action should be taken concerning the so-called point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I thought you decided what happens with points of privilege, not the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Breithaupt: We'll apologize if necessary, but not necessarily apologize.

Mr. S. Smith: The Speaker called on me, as I understood it, to ask a supplementary question. The supplementary goes back to the original question and that was: As Minister of Health, responsible to give advice to the people of Ontario, what does he advise the people of Ontario? Should they accept having X-rays done by chiropractors when they go into their offices—routine, full-trunk X-rays—or should they not? If the minister believes the risk of refusing is as great as or greater than the risk of accepting the X-ray, would he please outline for us what the risks on either side are? What is the risk of refusing such a chiropractic X-ray on a routine basis and what is the risk of accepting it? What is the average radiation exposure of such a full-length X-ray?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I want to tell the member why I had this meeting this morning.

Mr. S. Smith: That's not what I asked.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It's all part and parcel. The doctors in question were very concerned about the kinds of things that have been said and written about their report. In fact the purpose of the meeting was to bring me up to date on what they had said and to provide me with additional information.

When I came to the House today, I was also provided with a statement which the doctors have prepared and which they are apparently releasing. I have asked for some copies to be made to distribute here today. They deal with the question of comparable risks. I think this will answer in part what the member is asking.

Mr. S. Smith: I was asking what the minister is advising the patients of chiropractors. He is the minister. What is he telling them?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member asked me about risks, with respect, and that is why I want to tell him the expert advice I have had.

Mr. S. Smith: Chiropractors. C-h-i-r—chiropractors.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He can spell it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Can the member spell "cat?"

I think this will answer the honourable member's question in part, and I will get further information.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister is not prepared to advise the patients.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This is on the question of abdominal—let me quote from this paper. I'll be glad to send the member a copy when they arrive in the House.

"One abdominal X-ray procedure carries with it an average risk of 40 in one million of producing leukemia. This should be compared with the following equivalent risks. A person has the same risk of dying in: (a) travelling 16,000 miles by air; (b) travelling 2,400 miles by car; (c) smoking 32 cigarettes"—

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of order: The question period is difficult enough for you to manage, Mr. Speaker, and it is difficult enough for us to have to bear with the answers, but this answer has nothing whatever to do with the question I put. The answer must surely be somewhat pertinent to the question.

The question is whether the Minister of Health is able to give advice to patients of chiropractors, in his capacity as Minister of Health, as to whether or not they should accept a routine X-ray which is commonly offered to them, because of the risk-benefit ratio. Instead, we are hearing something about travelling by airplane or by car and so on. Would he not answer the question? If he can't answer it, why doesn't he simply admit he can't answer it?

Mr. Speaker: In all fairness I think the answer goes at least some way to answer, in an indirect way, the question that was asked. I don't think the Leader of the Opposition would want me to interfere with the way in which he asks a question, any more than he would want me to interfere in the way in which a minister answers it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the honourable member would go back to the original research work which was done by these eminent physicians and physicists; if the honourable member will look at the project which is at present under way, the latest aspect of their work; if the honourable member will look at the statement I read into the record a week ago; if he will look at this statement, once I send him a copy, he will realize these eminent scientists are saying that the problem is one of education of all professionals to inform them and ensure they apply the information that they can get as good diagnostic pictures with lower radiation dosages.

I don't have information here because I didn't read Dr. Walker's column this morning on that particular type. I wanted to give him this information because I think this puts it into perspective. This is the information we are getting from these gentlemen who have carried out and are carrying out the most comprehensive program in this area anywhere.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, since the issue relates as much to the competence of the people who are running X-ray equipment as to anything else, may I ask the minister if he is willing to provide to the House the number of people who work in public hospitals running X-ray equipment, and of these, the number who are registered radiological technicians? Secondly, how many people in the province who are employed as X-ray machine operators in all medical institutions, other than public hospitals, are registered radiological technicians?

I would assume the group referred to by the Leader of the Opposition would come within the latter group, so I would like the minister to obtain that information for us if he doesn't have it here.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I believe I answered that question the other day. If I remember correctly, the information I have is that 97 per cent of those technicians working in the hospitals are registered. I indicated that as far as the technicians in the ministry were concerned, a year and a half or more ago we decided, and conveyed to the society our decision that we would, henceforth, hire only registered technicians. We asked the society to give us its thoughts on how we could put together a program to upgrade those who are employed in the ministry and who are not registered, so that they could, in fact, become registered.

Let me say one final thing. I was concerned about one set of comments in one of the newspapers that was apparently attributed to these scientists which said that people were not qualified. They assured me that at no point had they said that and at no point had they said the inspection service, as such, was inefficient or not doing its appropriate role.

Mr. S. Smith: Dealing with chiropractors' offices, could the minister tell us what percentage of the X-rays taken in chiropractors' offices are taken by registered technicians? Could he tell us at what rate the machines in chiropractors' offices are inspected, and could he make the inspection reports public? Finally, could he tell us what the risks would be of refusing a routine chiropractic X-ray and could he tell us what the risks would be of taking the X-ray; what is the average exposure? What is he prepared to advise the people of Ontario to do when they are offered a chiropractic routine X-ray? Should they say yes or should they say no?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'm amazed that the Leader of the Opposition, who is himself apparently a physician, would ask that kind of a question. Clearly, he knows from all the evidence that has been prepared, particularly in the most recent studies, that the risk is much greater—and it has been documented by these scientists—in refusing what is advised as a diagnostic radiological or fluoroscopic procedure. I will try to get comparisons for that kind of an X-ray comparable to what these gentlemen have put into this statement they have issued today. Clearly, the risk is much greater in denying a prescribed diagnostic radiological procedure.

Mr. S. Smith: A routine chiropractic X-ray; is that what you're saying? Stop shilly-shallying. Give us the answer.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I simply ask the minister to provide us with the actual number of X-ray machine operators in the province in all institutions—the number, not a guess at the percentage—and, of that number, to tell us how many numerically are registered radiological technicians.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'll see if I can get those figures and how quickly. We are going to be discussing the matter at the social development committee at some point. I want to point out that under the existing regulations, for an individual to be in a position to operate a machine he or she must be registered or must be trained to a level satisfactory to the responsible individual, i.e., the physician, the dentist, the chiropractor or whomever.

Mr. S. Smith: The chiropractor runs the place.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I keep coming back to the basic point. What these gentlemen have found and what we are at present engaged in is a process whereby the results of their research to date are being applied right today. In the work which is at present under way, the $600,000 or so study, plus a couple of others that are also being completed, we will at each step along the way implement new techniques and apply new machinery as they are developed to address this particular problem.

CUSTODY OF PAQUETTE CHILDREN

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question, in the absence of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) for the Minister of Community and Social Services with respect to the Paquette case, which was the subject of a report to the House by the minister in March 1978. I want to ask the minister whether he recalls that Louise Paquette was sentenced to 21 months indefinite in March 1978 as a result of the death by hanging of her child Adrienne.

I want to ask him also if he can explain why Mrs. Paquette was released from reformatory some time last fall and particularly if he can explain why a family court judge, Judge G. Y. Goulard, in December 1978 awarded the custody of the four surviving Paquette children back to their mother and ordered the children returned to the custody of the same Louise Paquette?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I really don't think I ought to attempt to answer the first question. I simply don't know what matters were taken into consideration in the determination to return Mrs. Paquette to the community, but there are established procedures before boards of review that take those matters into consideration. I think it would be better if I were to refer that question to the Attorney General for a more complete answer when he returns to the House.

I would point out that to the best of my knowledge, first of all, the Paquette child was not hanged in the sense of the picture it conjures, but I believe it was suffocation as a result of a gag that caused the death. That was not particularly relevant to the question, but I think the image of hanging the child is quite different from what I understand took place. The matter of the return of the children to the family, which was ordered by a judge a few months ago, as I understand it, is the subject of an appeal before the courts.

I am aware of the fact that at least the official guardian is reputed to have commented on the case to the press, indicating an interest. As well, I have asked my staff to be in contact with the official guardian to pursue the matter. I must say, given the history of the family and the circumstances from which the children were originally removed, I would be very reluctant to intervene in any way so as to hasten their return.

The order, as I understand it, still stands subject to appeal that they be returned. If the report in the media is correct, I understand the official guardian feels that is an appropriate disposition. I must say, perhaps on the basis of more limited information than the official guardian has, I would be very reluctant to accept that it is the most appropriate one.

Mr. McClellan: The minister has anticipated my supplementary, which is this: How can he explain to us that the official guardian, or the person who is supposed to be the official guardian in this province, is quoted in Wednesday's Globe and Mail as saying he is convinced the children, that is to say the four surviving Paquette children, should be returned to their parents? Doesn't this remind him of the Ellis case?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, whenever a person is charged with the responsibility of exercising certain discretionary decision-making authority, as is the case with the official guardian, it is always difficult for someone to try to second guess. I don't know what information he took into consideration in expressing that position, if in fact it accurately reflects his position. I have not yet had an opportunity to discuss it with him personally, and of course he does report through the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) as opposed to through my ministry. I think, though, if we do entrust to persons certain independent decision-making authority on behalf of children in the province we have to be prepared, provided the appropriate information is available to them, to let them exercise that independent decision-making authority. Of course I realize if the honourable member opposite were in government perhaps he would let nobody but himself make decisions, I don't know, but all I am saying is—

Mr. Swart: The minister has the final responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —the official guardian has apparently expressed an opinion or a position. I am not prepared to say if he is right or wrong, because I don't know what information he had to take into consideration. I will say that perhaps on the basis of more superficial information that I have had over the period of this case, I would be reluctant to advocate the return of those children to their home, although I would keep my mind open on that subject to see whether there is additional information of which I am not aware.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary. I would like to ask the minister why the four surviving Paquette children were taken out of foster homes in September, 1978 and placed in the Ottawa Children's Aid Society assessment home where they have been kept for the last nine months? I gather the official guardian's representative in Ottawa has said it's a horrible setting, and I am again quoting from the Globe and Mail. Can the minister explain why they have been taken out of foster homes and put in the assessment home for nine months?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I can't explain that specifically other than to say I presume it was in response to the court order, and that in fact they were being prepared for return home. I cannot explain why they have been resident in the assessment home.

Mr. McClellan: How about finding out all these things and letting us know?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I will see if there is any particular explanation for that. I am not satisfied that is critical to the real issue the honourable member is attempting to address in his line of questioning.

CAS FUNDING

Mr. McClellan: I have a second question for the same minister, if I may Mr. Speaker. In March, the Minister of Community and Social Service announced a sum of money would be available to children's aid societies to implement the new standards and guidelines for the management of child abuse cases. I want to ask the minister whether he is aware that the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies did a survey of each of its 51 societies, and determined that, based on their estimates of the increased workload coming out of his ministry's standards, they would need a budget of $3.9 million in additional, brand-new money.

In the light of the fact that he has only allocated $2.4 million, one third of which is for staff training, I want to ask the minister how the children's aid societies are going to finance the work they are now required to do as a result of the new Child Welfare Act and the standards and guidelines for the management of child-abuse cases, where there is a huge shortfall in the amount of money that the minister is prepared to provide to them?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the results of any such survey—and I am not suggesting it has not been taken—but I would point out that there is a very big difference between saying to individuals or groups of individuals who are engaged in a specific area of service, "How much would you spend if you had no limits upon what was available?" That is one approach they could take, and I can imagine—in fact, you could come up with a figure much greater than $3.9 million.

Mr. McClellan: No. They are saying what their responsibilities are and how much they will cost.

Hon. Mr. Norton: All right. Even in the interpretation of that, I suggest there is a great range of assessments of what the dollar need might be.

I would also say that it is a different matter if one is going to plan responsibly in the area of human services, in any area of government services, because it seems to me that an essential and an integral part of responsible planning is an awareness of what resources are available and what it is you are planning for.

We believe those guidelines can be implemented for less than the figure the honourable member has quoted. Our staff will work with the children's aid societies in the implementation of that. It may well be that some of the societies will persist in the position there is not enough money. On the other hand, I reserve judgement upon that until such time as I can be satisfied that they cannot effectively plan, within the limitations of the $2.4 million new dollars available for this particular implementation, and meet the objectives that are established by those guidelines.

Mr. McClellan: By way of a supplementary question: Since it was not clear in the original announcement, but it is clear now, that the $2.4 million that the minister has made available is subject to a 20 per cent cost-sharing with the municipalities, how are children's aid societies, which are five months into their budget year, supposed to negotiate at this point in time with municipalities, which have already set their budgets and their mill rates, in order to obtain the 20 per cent cost-sharing to do the work that they are required to do once the act is proclaimed on June 1?

Hon. Mr. Norton: In so far as it is possible, we will work very closely with the municipalities and the societies in that respect. But I would point out that every year there are supplementary budgets submitted by children's aid societies across the province for far more money than that to take into consideration the growth in the case-load during the course of the year. That is something the municipalities, without any difficulty, have always managed to anticipate, and I do not expect any different problems this year.

Mr. McClellan: A final supplementary question: Will the minister give a commitment now that he is prepared to be flexible with respect to these amounts of money and, if it turns out that the financial burdens imposed on societies as a result of the new act and the new standards are in excess of what the minister has budgeted, that he will be prepared to provide the amount of money they need to do the job they are required to do under the law?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The honourable member knows that I am always a very flexible person. However, there may be some restrictions or limitations upon my flexibility; I cannot print money. There are certain limitations that we have to live with in terms of our planning; I have to expect children's aid societies and others to live within those same limitations.

COMPUTER SERVICES

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Government Services. Is the minister aware that his ministry is expanding its computerized services to municipalities in Ontario at a time when small computer companies are seeking business; and is the minister convinced that these services the government is offering are less expensive, as the government claims they are? Why is he expanding these services to municipalities when in fact he has given commitments to various private industries that his ministry will not expand its services?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I believe the honourable member is referring to the service we put out with respect to assessment rolls. Is that the service to which he is referring?

Mr. Epp: Tax bills.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, it is more the assessment notices than the tax bills. The tax bills are supplied to municipalities at their request and at our cost. I believe it is a good service to the municipalities. We do not go out looking for the business; the municipalities come and ask for the service.

Mr. Epp: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister convinced all the costs of the program—such as insurance, telephone, et cetera—are being plugged into the system when he is trying to determine the costs? Is this not an example of the government's having overbuilt computerized services within the provincial jurisdiction so that it is now seeking municipal customers at the expense of private enterprise?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, that is not correct. We have the necessary equipment to do the job; if the municipalities request it, we will supply it.

FOOD PRICES

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, with reference to report number one of the food prices monitoring program produced by his ministry. On page 15 it notes that in the first two months of this year the wholesale price of turkeys dropped four cents, from 40 to 36 cents. At the same time, the price spread between the wholesale and retail increased from 19 to 30 cents, which is an 11-cent spread. Is this not clearly a ripoff of the consumer? Does the minister conceive of any justification for it, and if so what? If there is no justification, what is he going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member will note the data on turkey prices was available for only the first two months. One of the reasons the price to wholesalers declined during that period of time, quite frankly, was the events of last November and December when the retail price rose and the consumption of turkey dropped dramatically. When the leader of the NDP asked me what I intended to do about the galloping price of turkey, I did something about it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Galloping?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It was very galloping, even for a turkey.

Mr. Speaker: traditionally there is an increase in the spread between the wholesale and the retail price in the sale of turkeys right after the Christmas period. One of the difficulties, for the producer of turkeys particularly, and it is one I am sympathetic to, is the sale of turkey peaks in the holiday season, at Christmas, and to a lesser extent at Easter. The rest of the year it is at a very low ebb. Suppliers have been trying to promote consumption on a more equitable basis. Those two are the recommendations. I do not think turkey is a ripoff at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the minister does not consider an increase in price to the consumers of 11 cents while the wholesale price was going down by four represents a ripoff and he rationalizes it, may I ask him another question in another area but in the same context? On page 17 the report says the wholesale price per hundredweight of Ontario pork dropped 28 per cent. At the same time, the retail price the minister monitored went up 5.35 per cent. How does the minister justify that; and what is he going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable member knew anything about the movement of pork through the system he would not ask a question like that. It takes much longer for a decrease in the wholesale price of pork to reach the retail level than it does beef or any other product. He knows that, he has been on the agriculture estimates.

[3:00]

Mr. Riddell: A supplementary to the minister: Inasmuch as turkeys lay eggs, although consumers are more inclined to eat hen eggs, would the minister look into the allegations we heard about so much in the news media yesterday that consumers are paying 20 cents a dozen more for their eggs because of the national supply management system? Could the minister look into that, or check with the Minister of Agriculture, to see if there is any truth in that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I can look into it. I have discussed the matter with the provincial Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman). One of the reasons I will look into it is that it may be my last occasion to talk with Mr. Whelan as Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, may I ask the minister whether he has looked closely enough at the 12 charts which gave the markups between wholesale and retail prices to realize that the markup on Canadian farm produce during the last three months has increased substantially, while the markup on imported produce has increased very little or not at all?

May I also ask the minister if he is prepared to permit food merchandisers to make excess profits? The profits are increasing very dramatically; doesn't the minister think it would be better that the profit be made on imported food rather than on our own, where it results in decreased consumption of our own food?

Hon. Mr. Drea: If the member would pause to think for a moment, he would realize the price spread on domestic produce increased. One reason is that virtually all of the produce from a very good year in Ontario was in great demand in the northeastern United States because of the failure of certain crops in the southwestern United States caused by poor climate conditions. When there is inability by the American or Mexican markets to deliver in the off-season here, the storage crop is in great demand in the United States.

Part of the reason, as well, was the very attractive discounts that Americans got based upon the rate of the dollar.

As I cautioned the other day, one of the things one must be aware of in terms of food prices, particularly with fresh produce, is not to have the naive impressions of the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) that because the Ontario growing season is coming in all will be well. A great deal depends on the growing season in the United States and the ability of the American government to solve the gasoline crisis. If that crisis is not solved in California and in the western states there is going to be great demand for Ontario produce in the northeastern United States, which will lead to a shortage of supply here, and inevitably to a rising gap between the producer's price and the final market price. That will be reflected at the consumer level.

Mr. Swart: The consumer is going to pay the price, and the supermarkets are going to make the profit.

FALSE INVOICING

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Is the minister aware that throughout the year businesses are inundated with solicitations for inclusion in some kind of classified directory? Examples of such are telex services suggesting that cheques be mailed to the Tribune Publishing Corporation Limited, Post Office Box 1036, 56 Leinster Road, Dublin, Ireland; and another example, which states, "Please return this with cheque," Classified Directory Publishers Incorporated, Post Office Box 1428, Downsview, Ontario. How does the minister plan to stop such business practices?

Hon. Mr. Drea: This type of false invoicing or phoney invoicing based on the purported insertion of an advertisement in a directory is, next to the "bank inspector" game, probably the oldest commercial racket in this country.

We are moving in two areas. We have joined with business groups, particularly the better business bureaus and chambers of commerce, in sending to their members strong warnings about this practice. One of the reasons it succeeds so often is that it is taken as an invoice and just flows through the business organization as though it was a legitimate one.

Secondly, although I don't recall the case exactly, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) has prosecuted such an operation and there was a very substantial penalty imposed. After discussing the matter with the minister I would be prepared to report back to the member on that matter.

Third, we were always in the position—although in the particular case I am talking about it was referred to the criminal division of the courts—through the Business Practices Act, where this is an unconscionable transaction, to bring in a cease-and-desist order as well as go for a prosecution in the courts. The difficulty is that, the moment we do that, they come up under another name and with another postal address.

We are in consultation with the crown. There has been a test case which was prosecuted very successfully. There is now a much more powerful deterrent out there in terms of criminal law, and we are stepping up our inquiries and our information in regard to aspects that are under our jurisdiction in terms of the Business Practices Act.

In addition, I may say we have had excellent co-operation from the postal authorities regarding our foreign imports.

Mr. Speaker: I may say that the minister's answers are far too long.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There was one from Ireland; I didn't want you to think I was going there to prosecute.

BURNING OF PCBs

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Now that the Environmental Assessment Board hearings on polychlorinated biphenyl burnings at the St. Lawrence Cement plant in Mississauga have been adjourned until June, will the minister respond to my open letter of last March requesting that he consider some public funding for ratepayers' organizations and other citizens' groups appearing at the hearings so that these groups can hire researchers and other experts to assist them in preparing their submissions over the next month in order that all points of view will be adequately presented to the board?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I suspect the member knows the answer to that question, but let me restate it. No, we will not specifically fund those people who are wanting to bring in experts on their own volition. But we have amended the terms of reference for those hearings so that evidence by experts will be a part of the submissions that are made to the Environmental Board hearings. We do so very willingly; we want as much information as possible at those hearings. We will be glad to see that those witnesses are there, but we will not fund the legal expenses of those who oppose.

Ms. Bryden: A supplementary question: Has the minister read the 1978 report prepared for the Environmental Assessment Board and entitled Public Participation Program Proposals? Has he considered its recommendations for funding of public interest groups and the fact that two thirds of the board members who were polled by the writers indicated support for the principle of funding public interveners?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am aware of that report, yes.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister has taken a consistent position with respect to public funding, would he reconsider additional funding within his own ministry to go towards further research in this matter of PCB burnings, since one of the key experts within the ministry is discouraged to the point that he is leaving and going to the United States?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any need to give more funding to anyone on this particular thing. We are prepared, as I said previously, to bring in witnesses, even if they are from the United States; as a matter of fact, I think one is coming from the United States. I do not think the reason for that particular member of staff to leave is related to the hearings in Mississauga.

VIOLENCE IN SCHOOLS

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, in the absence of the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), on violence in secondary schools; it follows up on questions I asked the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) on March 30 and the Minister of Education on April 20.

Now that we have yet another report outlining severe problems with violence, vandalism, arson, extortion, et cetera, in the secondary school system in one particular part of the province—and, one could conclude, throughout the province—would the minister not agree that there is a need for immediate action on the part of the Ministry of Education to ensure that administrators and teachers have the tools with which to deal with these difficult kinds of problems? Would she not agree that immediate action can be taken with regard to the Petty Trespass Act to deal with the most obvious problem, which is that of unwanted intruders into the secondary school system, which is causing most of these problems?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Education initiated a study in this general area. It's my understanding that the report has been finalized and the recommendations are being assessed at the moment. I'm sure the Minister of Education will be able to elaborate on that when she is in the House.

Mr. Bradley: As a supplementary, would the minister not agree that the view expressed by teachers that there is a creeping cynicism that affects teachers' attitudes to incidents of violence and vandalism, caused by the belief that very little gets done to really effect a change in students involved in such incidents, calls for some innovative approach to this problem? We recognize, of course, that there are social problems underlying the question—

Mr. Speaker: Question.

Mr. Bradley: —but there must be some immediate action before the new school year.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I don't agree there should be a separate school for children with those kinds of problems. I certainly do not agree with that. I think we should await the recommendations arising out of the report done by the ministry.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, supplementary: As a person who taught in the school system for a few years and who used the strap sparingly but as it would be used by a judicious parent, what is the minister's opinion and that of her government as to the more liberal use of the strap, under certain guidelines, on students on whom it might do some good?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I don't think I would like to give a government policy response to that question, but as a parent who believes in discipline I think I would agree with the member.

GAS COMPANY BILLINGS

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. It concerns the billing practices of Union Gas in Hamilton, Consumers' Gas in Toronto and Northern and Central Gas in North Bay; practices authorized by the Ontario Energy Board. These companies are currently charging a five per cent late payment fee, which is the equivalent of 60 per cent per annum interest. This is done even when the customer has a favourable credit balance under one of their equalized payment plans. Would the minister not agree this is a consumer ripoff and that he has a responsibility to protect the consumers of Ontario? Should he not be using his influence to stop this unfair practice?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I have an obligation under law to protect the consumers of Ontario. The member's customary adjective in describing virtually every business practice is "ripoff." I will look into the matter and I will report back to him tomorrow.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Supplementary: While he is looking into that matter, would he not agree that in view of the degree of monopoly power in this sector it might be a good idea if he would undertake a broader investigation to see if there are any other practices of these gas companies that are operating to the detriment of the consumer in the province?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'm always looking at things. I would draw to the attention of the member that the natural gas producers of this province have to go before the Ontario Energy Board. At that time, when the rates are established, certain of their collection and business practices are also taken into account. That is the place where it is established.

If the member is asking me, as the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, if I will intervene before the Ontario Energy Board the answer is no. The proper place for an intervention on that is before the energy board, and there are groups that do that.

HYDRO TRANSMISSION LINES

Mr. Stong: A question of the Minister of the Environment: Pursuant to the minister's undertaking to the clerk of the town of Markham, when can the people east of highway 48 expect environmental assessment hearings into the Nanticoke-Pickering transmission line?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't think I can answer that today. I would like to review that before I give the member an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The time for question period has expired.

[3:15]

LEGISLATIVE PAGES

Mr. Speaker: With the honourable members' leave, I know you would want me to read into the record the names of the pages who are serving with us at the present time and who will be leaving tomorrow. They are as follows:

Jeffrey Bell, Simcoe Centre; Elizabeth Burns, Wellington South; Daniel Burr, Windsor-Riverside; Laura Chapman, Hastings-Peterborough; Shawn Haggerty, Erie; Sarah Hall, Huron-Bruce; Kimberly Harris, Grey; Stephen Jolly, Mississauga North; Marily Koval, Lake Nipigon; Tannys Laughren, Nickel Belt; Finn Lovsted, St. Andrew-St. Patrick; Ronald Martin, Durham-York; Ilana McGrath, Kingston and the Islands; Diana Morrison, Ottawa Centre; Eliza Parkinson, St. George; Brian Shannon, Port Arthur; Matthew Snell, Eglinton; Martha Stong, York Centre; Peter Vanderheyden, York South; Sundar Viswanathan, Sudbury; Glen Watson, London North and Eileen Wood, Scarborough Centre.

I am sure all honourable members would like to thank them for their service while they were with us.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

RAILWAYS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Snow moved first reading of Bill 91, An Act to amend the Railways Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Snow: The purpose of this bill is to nationalize the CPR. No, I'm sorry. Please retract that.

The Railways Act applies in part to the operation of the Ontario Northland Railway and the Toronto Transit Commission. This amendment will meet the TTC request for increased penalties for interfering with mechanical equipment on its vehicles, committing any nuisances on its vehicles or the entering of its rapid transit system at other than designated passenger entrances.

The present penalties, with maximums of $20 and $25, date back to the mid-thirties and are no longer an effective deterrent. The requested and proposed increase allows for a maximum of $500 in a penalty.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS' LANDS ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 92, An Act to provide for the Holding of Land by Religious Organizations.

Motion agreed to.

ANGLICAN CHURCH OF CANADA ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved first reading of Bill 93, An Act respecting the Anglican Church of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Today I have reintroduced two bills which I introduced at the end of the last session of the House. The first bill, the Religious Organizations' Lands Act, is a replacement of the existing Religious Institutions Act. It permits religious congregations to hold lands for religious purposes in the name of trustees. The religious group does not have to go to the expense of incorporating. By the same token, when there is a change of trustee the group does not have to incur the expense of registering any new deed from the old trustees to the new trustees. This convenient method of landholding is retained in the new bill.

In addition, the bill extends this convenience to all recognized religions. This legislation is perhaps more important for its symbolic value than for its practical effects as it recognizes the equal standing of all religions in Ontario, whereas formerly only Christians and Jews had the benefit of the Religious Institutions Act.

The second piece of legislation, the Anglican Church of Canada Act, removes the specific provisions covering the Anglican Church from the Religious Institutions Act and places them in their own separate act. These bills result from the recommendations of the Ontario Law Reform Commission.

REGIONAL MUNICIPALITY OF HALDIMAND-NORFOLK AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved first reading of Bill 94, An Act to amend the Regional Municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk Act, 1973.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The purpose of this bill is to amend the quorum requirements of the regional council of the regional municipality of Haldimand-Norfolk. Under this amendment, 10 members of the regional council representing at least four area municipalities will be necessary to form a quorum. This bill is introduced at the request of the regional council chairman and many of the members of regional council.

PLANNING AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Parrott, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Bennett, moved first reading of Bill 95, An Act to amend the Planning Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: This amendment repeals and re-enacts section 35(a) which contains provisions enabling municipalities to pass by-laws to control certain detail features of new developments. The amendment is necessary because of a recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which declared a bylaw passed by the city of Toronto under section 35(a) to be invalid. The decision has implications beyond the city of Toronto, however, because there are at least 70 other municipalities in the province with similar bylaws.

INSURED HEALTH SERVICES ACT

Mr. Martel moved first reading of Bill 96, An Act respecting Insured Services under the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Martel: The purpose of the bill is to declare that surgical procedures for breast reconstruction are insured services under the Ontario Health Insurance Plan.

[Later (5:30):]

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) introduced a bill entitled, an Act respecting Insured Services under the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. At the time the member made his explanation of the bill's purpose, I felt that it was a money bill. However, I reserved a ruling on it until I could examine it more carefully.

Having done so, it is obvious to me that as the bill would increase the services under OHIP, it must of necessity increase the expenditure of public funds under the plan. I must rule that the bill is a money bill which can only be introduced by a minister of the crown supported by a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor.

The bill is therefore out of order and must be omitted from the order paper.

[Reverting (3:23):]

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I wish to table the answers to questions 14, 33, 38, 41, 59, 122, 171 and 172 standing on the Notice Paper, and the answer to a petition presented to the

House, sessional paper number 47. (See appendix, page 2042.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Pursuant to standing order number 13, I wish to indicate to the House the business for the remainder of this week and next week. This afternoon, we take into consideration ballot items numbers 13 and 14. This evening we will go to legislation, starting with Bill 49 in committee of the whole House, to be followed by a second reading and committee work if required, on Bills 32, and 33. Then we will consider second reading and committee work, if required, on Bills 22, 34, 72 and 73. Tomorrow morning, the House will sit in committee of supply to continue with the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On Monday, May 21, the House will not sit. On Tuesday, May 22, being Joe Clark day throughout Canada, this House will not sit.

Mr. Martel: Who?

Mr. Swart: Memorial Day, isn't it?

Mr. Wildman: Mordecai Richler calls Clark a little boy with the hollow laugh.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I just wanted to make sure you were listening. On Wednesday, May 23, the general government, resources development and justice committees may meet in the morning. On Thursday afternoon, we will consider ballot items numbers 15 and 16. In the evening on Thursday, May 24, we will take into consideration legislation, starting with any legislation not completed this evening, then turning to Bill 17. We will consider second reading and committee work, if there's time, with respect to Bills 43, 44, 45 and 46. On Friday, May 25, the House will be in committee of supply, carrying on with the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF RESOLUTION

Mr. J. A. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I have on the order paper a resolution for debate this afternoon. This resolution provides for the consideration by this House of legislation which would prohibit strikes and lockouts in certain enumerated essential public services, such as sewage treatment, water purification and garbage collection. I have learned the government I support is somewhat sensitive about the issue being debated at this time. I have also concluded a free expression of opinion would not necessarily emerge from the debate. Accordingly, I hereby withdraw the resolution.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable House leader.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The development, I must say, has caught the entire House by surprise. We were going to have two items and I simply indicate, Mr. Speaker, all of us have come this afternoon assuming those two ballot items would be discussed today. The first indication the House leaders had that one of the items would not be discussed was now, and I want that on the record. In view of the apportionment of time and the fact the rule calls for no vote until a quarter to six, I think the House might of its own want to make some arrangements with respect to time. We might want to decide whether or not this debate should take the full amount of time, or if we should fill in; or indeed that we might go to some other business and then resume at quarter to six for the voting of this item. I really haven't had a chance to consult with my colleagues in this matter, but I would suppose we might want to have some indication now.

Mr. Speaker: Our table officers are looking into it. It seems to me that the maximum time for any debate of this nature had been 90 minutes, but I understand that has been taken out of the standing orders and now equal time will be apportioned to the two balloted items on occasions such as this.

The chair will look for some guidance from the House leaders as to how they wish to proceed. We could use half of the available time between now and 5:50, and perhaps they could agree how we could use the time more profitably after half of the time has been spent. The chair looks for some direction in that regard.

Perhaps the member for Windsor-Sandwich can proceed. Since it has been procedural in nature, we will not deduct this amount of time from his presentation if he wants to take advantage of the full 20 minutes. But I will look for some direction from the House leaders as to how they might wish to spend the balance of the time between now and 5:50.

[3:30]

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Bounsall moved second reading of Bill 3, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes for his presentation and he may reserve any portion of it for the windup.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I introduce this bill with a great deal of enthusiasm and pride. The purpose of this bill is to establish in Ontario, equal pay for work of equal value.

Interruption.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind our visitors in the gallery that we do not allow any outbursts. They are perfectly welcome to be here to view and to listen to the proceedings, but they must remain quiet. I will ask them to respect that. The honourable member for Windsor-Sandwich.

Mr. Bounsall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That certainly was not organized by me. I would just make a comment at the beginning of my address, Mr. Speaker. Because of the very great importance to all the women in this province of the concept of equal pay for work of equal value—and to anyone in this province who cherishes justice—I would hope that the decision of the House leaders would be that we would spend the entire afternoon on the discussion of the principle of this very important bill.

I was surprised but delighted to see the enthusiasm of members in the gallery for the presentation of this bill, because I believe they feel very strongly, as I do, that the time has come, if it is not long overdue, for this legislation to be in the books of the province of Ontario.

This legislation would end any discrimination or differential in pay which exists on the basis of sex. The present Employment Standards Act would be replaced by the sections in this bill. The Present Employment Standards Act contains only the provision that there will be equal pay for men and women when performing substantially the same work. This did help, when it was introduced back in 1974, in equalizing the pay between men and women who were performing very nearly equal work, such as orderlies and nurses aides. However, it does absolutely nothing beyond that for the women-only jobs, which are traditionally paid, irrespective of their skill, effort or responsibility involved, at rates much lower than those for men-only jobs, although the same employer is involved.

There have been instances, which members of the government party may well quote and in which we rejoice when they occur, where there have been groups of men and women in which they are not necessarily performing substantially the same work—there are some minor differences—but in which equal pay has been achieved. I refer specifically to the public health nurses and the public health inspectors working for the city of Toronto. But let me assure the Speaker and the House that it was not the Employment Standards Act that brought this about; it was primarily because there was a group of very bright, very articulate and very well-organized women in that nursing sector in the city of Toronto, and because of their very strong efforts and presentations, that that equal pay situation came about. If they had had to follow only the protections under this act, they would not have achieved it.

This act must be changed to ensure that jobs across this province are valued in the nature of their worth to the company and that those jobs are then paid according to that value to that employer, irrespective of who fills that job, a man or a woman. Until that happens, we will not have any justice or any equality in pay, and it is based purely on a differential of sex only across Ontario.

The idea of equal pay for work of equal value is not a new one; it was first passed in 1971 by the International Labour Organization convention number 100 and ratified at that time by 83 countries. This convention was ratified in Canada in 1972 when it received approval in principle from all provinces, including Ontario, yet Ontario has to date done nothing to implement that commitment. There was an internal ministry report advocating equal pay for work of equal value some two years ago, which was rejected by ministry officials. There is absolutely no activity or consideration of equal pay for work of equal value taking place within the ministry now. As I understand it, that concept has been killed totally within the ministry, which is a disgrace and this gross discrimination against women continues in Ontario.

At this time may I just take some time to quote some of the figures from Statistics Canada for a variety of occupations. It is very clear that this discrimination continues to exist. These are 1975 statistics. The average income of full-time workers by occupation shows this breakdown: In managerial occupations, women's average salary was only $10,805; the men's average salary was $18,747. In the professional category, for women the average was $9,952; for men, $16,772. For clerical occupations, where women have historically dominated, the gap is clearly there and is clearly far too wide: for women, $7,157; for men, $11,045. In sales: for women, $5,545; for men, $13,758.

We can go on through a whole series of categories indicating the gross discrimination in gaps which exist between men's salaries and women's salaries. In the transport Industry, for example, women's average salary was $6,660; men's, $12,174. In the service industry, women again very much lower: $4,711, as compared to the men's average salary of $10,136.

The gap continues to widen over the years. The gap between women's wages and men's wages has grown over the past 10 years for which we have figures. In 1965, the gap was $2,694 on average for full-time wage earners; by 1975 the gap had widened to $6,060. So we are not achieving, by any of our efforts, any lessening of that gap, nor are we achieving any equality. We are in fact moving further away from it.

It is clear that the private sector, under the existing legislation in the province of Ontario, is not redressing nor is it interested in redressing these huge pay differentials. From the Ontario government's own women's bureau figures, in 1976 women's average earnings were only 53.5 per cent of male average earnings. Who are these women in the work force, one might ask? We have some attitudes from the federal government which wants to classify them as secondary wage earners. In changing the Unemployment Insurance Act the federal government wants to put them in a much more discriminated against situation.

But who are these women in the work force? Sixty-one per cent of these women in the work force are single, widowed, separated, divorced or married to men whose earnings are less than $10,000 a year. They all must work and most of these are sole supporters of either themselves or their families. They must and will continue to work and the compensation for their labour must reflect this.

The women's bureau newsletter of February 1979 cites that in 1976 the average income of male-headed families was $19,803 in Ontario, and of female-headed families only $10,327. A staggering 42 per cent of these female wage earners had family incomes which fell below the poverty line, as compared with only 9.2 per cent of the men. We have women in Ontario in a poverty situation in the work place.

In my bill, the only criterion to be applied in assessing the value of the job to an employer is a composite of the skill, effort and responsibility required in the performance of that work. I have had cause over the years to be in various plants, and when I am there have a look at some of the jobs that are performed. I was struck by the situation in one plant in particular that I visited a couple of years ago, a plant at which jeans are made, in which all of the sewing-machine operators who were doing very intricate work in stitching the seams and attaching the pockets were paid, on average, about slightly more than a dollar less than the man who loaded a stack of 12 pairs of jeans on to a cart and then wheeled the cart away.

If one evaluated the skill, effort and responsibility of the job performed by the man compared with the work done by the machine operators, it would be quite clear to anyone that in that company the women were performing with much greater skill and a much higher degree of responsibility, and at the rate at which they were working with much greater effort and output. It is that kind of imbalance which must be redressed by an evaluation system across Ontario.

The bill provides for evaluation to be done by an employment standard officer. If he finds that in a given company there exists an improper evaluation, he may order that correction, and in certain circumstances order back pay to make up the differential.

Mr. Speaker, it has been said to me occasionally that this would perhaps require the formation of an entire cadre of employment standards officers and that we would be expanding our bureaucracy to a great extent. The answer to that, I firmly believe, is no. When we put a law on the books of the province of Ontario, most people in Ontario respect and obey that law. Many employers would, therefore, start almost immediately to take that law and apply it within their own plants without urging, devising for themselves a system of evaluation of jobs and paying a rate for those jobs which would reflect the effort, responsibility and skill required.

It is only with certain employers that an employment standards officer would have to go in after receiving complaints that this was not being done. I do not envisage a whole cadre of additional officers needed for the employment standards branch if this bill passes to achieve the net positive result we all seek. But even if that were required, it would be a very worthwhile, necessary effort, and one which would bring justice to our system in Ontario.

I might say, through you Mr. Speaker to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), that this is a very necessary part of the work situation in Ontario. The Affirmative Action Program is not the answer; it is certainly not the answer in and of itself. Affirmative action, if successful, provides an opportunity only for a woman to get a job. But what kind of a job? What kind of a job and what kind of work? In the present situation, what are we providing for them if we only provide an opportunity to be ghettoized in these lower-paying jobs? Although it is a very necessary thing to have an Affirmative Action Program to provide the opportunity for women, it is virtually useless if it doesn't go hand-in-hand with equal pay for work of equal value so that in the jobs those women then get they are properly paid and properly remunerated for the skill, the effort and the responsibility they have in those positions. Affirmative action by itself is a very voluntary thing. Whenever any employer is visited by someone he can certainly appear to be agreeing to everything that is being said in terms of opportunities for women to be employed, but too easily he can just never accomplish it.

The appointment of the Advisory Council on Equal Employment Opportunities was the minister's reply on International Women's Day to questions as to what the ministry is doing this year. His reply to this effect in the House, when I asked him the following day if there was going to be any legislative activity in this coming year or would it be a big goose egg, as has been the situation for years now in this Legislature, is certainly not the answer. It's a group which intends to meet only three to four times a year and report upon what progress, if any, has taken place on the affirmative action side. It certainly does not at all speak to the pay that the women will be receiving out there in the work place, nor to the fairness of that pay for the skill, effort and responsibility which they are required to perform in that work.

Equal pay for work of equal value has been instituted by the government of Canada for its 10 per cent of the work force across Canada and by the province of Quebec. My bill closes some loopholes which exist in the government of Canada's bill, which would allow other factors to come in, and other factors will come into many situations. The only things which should be considered are skill, effort and responsibility; and the only differences allowed in this bill would be ones on seniority or the quantity of production.

I would personally prefer not to have quantity of production as one of the variables, but I can't reform the entire working place in the province of Ontario all in one bill, and at the same time get rid of the piecework situations that do occur.

Mr. Wildman: You'll have to do it; the minister won't.

Mr. Bounsall: I've had many groups across the province of Ontario send me telegrams and messages of support over the last couple of days. They include the Ontario Status of Women Council; the Ontario division of the Canadian Union of Public Employees; a group that's been working very hard to obtain equal pay for work of equal value called the Equal Pay Coalition; and the Ontario Federation of Students. A telegram was just handed to me from the Ontario Nurses Association; saying it was speaking on behalf of its 10,000 members across the province of Ontario urging this government to support this legislation.

The Ontario Federation of Labour representative and the CUPE representative on the minister's committee are very committed to equal pay for work of equal value. If this committee cannot move in that direction, they say they must very seriously consider their participation on that committee.

I've heard from the Association of Women Executives, the Business and Professional Women's Clubs of Canada, the Ontario Federation of University Women, federation des femmes canadiennes-françaises, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Ontario Council on the Status of Women, the Ontario NDP Women's Committee, the Ontario PC Association of Women, the Women's Liberal Commission and Women and the Law.

Mr. Warner: What about the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson); did she stand you up?

Mr. Bounsall: Virtually every women's group in this province that one can think of wants this bill passed, and nothing short of putting equal pay for work of equal value in legislation will be effective. Clearly, the time has come for justice to prevail in this province. Discrimination in pay and salaries on the basis of sex alone must end totally and now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has one minute remaining. Does he wish to reserve the one minute?

Mr. Bounsall: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, as the minister of this government bearing special responsibility for employment policies affecting women, I have a deep concern and determination that workable solutions be found to remove compensation inequities facing women in the work place.

Mrs. Campbell: In which year?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I hope the member for St. George is still around. I enjoy her company. I hope she doesn't go.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm not going.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I would remind members that, historically, Ontario has been a leader in the enactment of equal-pay legislation. The Female Employees Fair Remuneration

Act in 1951 was the first piece of legislation in Canada dealing with equal pay. Since that time, successive amendments to our legislation, and in response to a developing jurisprudence, have led to the enactment of the present section 33 of the Employment Standards Act, a section which provides substantial protection against discrimination in payment based upon sex.

While existing Ontario legislation compares favourably with that of most jurisdictions in North America and of those in western Europe, I do not for a moment suggest that we have achieved perfection.

Mr. Warner: That's why we've got a bill today.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Down, boy, down.

Aside altogether from the equal-value issue, to which I shall turn in a moment, there are aspects of the present section 33 which deserve serious consideration as well. For example, the existing protection extends only to employees employed in the same establishment, and I think it may legitimately be asked why a single employer having a number of establishments ought not to be required to maintain equal-pay provisions for all of them. Similarly, I am concerned that we do not permit the intent of the section to be evaded; for example, by allowing employers to lower the pay rates of male employees to achieve equality. I am confident that reforms of this kind can soon be achieved.

I would now like to turn to the bill introduced by my friend and colleague from Windsor-Sandwich. It is difficult to quarrel with equal pay for equal value as an abstract principle of equity. However, I think we all must be concerned about how that principle can be translated into practical, workable and enforceable legislation.

As members may recall, the Ministry of Labour published a discussion paper in late 1976 which raised a number of problems about the concept—problems relating to definition, measurement techniques, labour market implications, cost and enforceability. The paper was widely distributed, and recipients were invited to comment on the specific problems as identified.

As I think my friend knows, the response to that paper was rather discouraging; by that, I mean there were relatively few responses and those that have been received shed little light on the important issues raised in the discussion paper. I want to make it clear that my mind is far from closed on the issue of equal pay for work of equal value, and I am sincerely seeking assistance and guidance in assessing the very difficult issues raised in that discussion paper.

The paper points out, for example, that one of the threshold questions relates to the establishment of an appropriate and reliable test for determining relative value. If it is assumed that market-determined values may not be ethically fair, socially desirable or practically efficient in this area, which alternative criteria may be substituted for the market? The most common alternative proposed is some broadly based system of job evaluation. However, few would pretend that job evaluation is an exact science. Moreover, as the ministry's paper points out, the results of purportedly objective and scientific job evaluation can be influenced by many of the same factors which affect wages as they are determined now in the marketplace, either by collective bargaining or otherwise.

I do not suggest any of these problems are insuperable, but I merely point them out to show that job evaluation as a measurement technique does have its limitations. The United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, for example, has commissioned a $250,000 study to examine whether it is feasible to develop job evaluation methods that are fair, objective, comprehensive and bias-free. You can be sure that when the results of this study are released at the end of this year, we will examine them very carefully.

I wonder as well about the extent to which equality of value can be fairly and satisfactorily reflected in terms of pay alone. What about the significance of related matters having to do in general terms with the quality of working life? Should not the evaluation equation be affected by the environment?

I am troubled, as well, about the implications equal value has for the work force as a whole. Does the concept and the implications flowing from it not transcend the male-female equality problem that we are concerned about today? If one is to legislate equal pay for work of equal value, what about the comparisons where sex is not affected. Does the principle contained in the member's bill mean we must have a universal comprehensive job evaluation scheme covering the entire labour market eventually, so that the social value of a tool and die maker, for example, must be rated or evaluated in relation to other totally unrelated benchmark occupations? I raise this not frivolously or facetiously, but because I am genuinely concerned about the breadth of the proposal.

Mr. McClellan: You are concerned about everything.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I am concerned about you and I will get that dog of mine after you again.

In this connection I think we must be clear about the way in which the equal value concept can be reconciled with our collective bargaining system. It has been my observation that in bargaining, wage levels are determined by the realities of the work place and the priorities of the bargaining unit operating as a collective. Does the equal value principle mean that bargaining goals are to be circumscribed by an overriding government imposed concept of equal value? If so, where does the notion end? Does it inevitably lead to some sort of incomes policy, with everyone assigned and locked into some place in a wage hierarchy? That may be the logical end consequence of an equal value concept and that may be something we will want to look at some day in the future.

We are, I suggest, back to the original question that I raised: what are the criteria upon which relative values are to be based? Even more fundamentally, perhaps, who is to develop, impose and enforce these criteria?

I repeat that I don't ask these questions facetiously, but rather in a genuine effort to try and understand where the principle, which I have conceded on its face is a laudable one, leads us.

As I attempted to indicate, we are still looking for satisfactory answers. This is not to say that answers don't exist. The ministry discussion paper dealt with the experience of other jurisdictions, including the United States, the United Kingdom, New Zealand, France and the Netherlands.

Mr. Martel: Who wrote that, Genghis Khan?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: No, your son. You know what has happened to him, he's coming around.

I think it is accurate to say that only in the latter two jurisdictions does the equal value concept apply, at least nominally. The available literature does not cast much light on how evaluation problems to which I referred have been tackled in those countries.

Since the publication of the paper, the federal and Quebec human rights codes containing equal value provisions have come into force. We are monitoring the experience under those acts with great interest, but so far it is too early to tell what results will emerge.

I have purposely used the time allotted to me to share with members the concerns I have about the equal value notion. I could have spent much time on collateral but related matters concerning the activities which we have undertaken to enhance the prospects of equal opportunity for women in the labour market.

It has often been said that equal value is no substitute for equal opportunity, for example, and I think members know of the aggressive action this government has taken in the equal opportunity field. I believe we have set an example through our five-year-old program on equal opportunity within government, monitored by the women crown employees' office in my ministry. I also believe the equal opportunity advisory council confirms our commitment to this principle.

I am committed to the principle that this province must ensure equality for women. I will work for real solutions to the problems and removal of barriers which exist, in order that the legitimate work aspirations of women can be realized. Ultimately it may be that the equal value concept can be translated into legislation. However, as I have indicated, many questions remain to be answered before a sound and responsible legislative decision can be made. For that reason, I regret I cannot at this time support the honourable member's bill.

I assure him and other interested parties that the concept is not dead in this minister's mind, and I reiterate that. Let me assure him there is no more vocal spokesman about the issue of inequities facing women in the work place than this minister.

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, there are occasions when I have to rise in this House with a deep sense of humiliation. As a woman, I am, in the year 1979, once more trying to prove that women are people. That is really what the essence of this is all about. The minister is so concerned about equality. I knew what the minister was going to say before he said it.

I have written to the minister on a simple matter, something that shouldn't take years of study, and that was: "Why, if we are studying the quality of life in the work place, is it an all-male corporation?" Do you know what his answer was? I'm paraphrasing but I think he will correct me if in any way I misinterpret what he said. He said: "I am not trying to make decisions on the basis of sex. My deputy chose these people and we were looking for the best people," so therefore, of course, automatically the best people were all males.

He has assured me, however, that the committee, which is made up of labour and management, did not feel that they should enlarge that committee at this time, but if somebody retires or dies he's going to think about putting a woman on that committee.

What we have to remember is that this matter was debated in International Women's Year in the committee where the Liberals led the field in trying to get this amendment through. The minister of the day said that really the people of this province were not ready for that. I must confess that I was terribly disheartened when some of the spokesmen for labour stood and scolded women for asking for this on that occasion.

However, that is no longer a part of this debate. All I wanted to demonstrate is that this government has had all that time to give thought to this and we're still going to study it. Of course, on that occasion what we did to give equality to women basically, to make sure they were equal, was to eliminate for them, at a time when sexual violence was growing in the community, the right to be protected at night when they left on the graveyard shifts. So much for the philosophy of equality of this government.

Let me just say what this government is prepared to tolerate. Between 1974 and 1976, the gap in salaries and wages, in earnings, widened faster than it did between 1969 and 1971; but that's a hip, hip, hurray, with this government, that's why there's no urgency. It has already been stated a woman in a managerial position in 1969 was earning $5,216 less than her male colleagues and this minister is worried about inequality; nonsense.

In 1971 the difference was $5,762. By 1974 she was earning $7,794 less and in 1976 the gap was $10,846; and the minister wants to do more studies.

All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that so far as I am concerned, I will fight as long as there is breath in me for this principle. I am not afraid to tackle the difficulties which we all agree would be inherent in trying to work out the job classifications and qualifications. Nor do I for one moment, intend to cease to fight for job opportunities for women, so don't try to separate the two. What I am fighting for is a recognition by this government, a recognition I thought was legal years ago, that women in fact are people. I will fight against discrimination for people as long as I live.

Interruption.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would just like to remind our visitors in the gallery we cannot allow any demonstrations of any sort and I would ask them for the second time to govern themselves accordingly.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate my colleague, the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall), on introducing this important legislation. He has been putting forward similar bills for several sessions, but this time I hope the House will adopt his bill.

If the bill passes, Mr. Speaker, we will simply be catching up to the legislation which has been in effect in the United Kingdom since 1970, and to federal legislation which is almost two years old. We will also be implementing a United Nations convention supporting this principle of equal pay for work of equal value, a convention which was adopted as far back as 1951 and was ratified by Canada in 1972 after consultation with the provinces. Mr. Speaker, we will be adopting a principle which the New Democratic Party has been advocating for a great number of years.

Mr. Speaker, the equal pay legislation the minister boasts about, which has been on the Ontario statute books since 1951, has really been a dead letter ever since it was put on the books. Even after several changes in the wording, it is still far too restrictive to be effective in guaranteeing women parity in remuneration for work involving the same skill, the same effort and the same responsibility and performed under similar conditions.

Mr. Speaker, the figures speak for themselves. The present law simply says employees shall receive equal pay if they perform "substantially the same kind of work." The number of complaints and the amounts collected have been pitifully small. In the past fiscal year, only eight employers were assessed and 29 employees collected a total of $8,311. In the previous year, only nine employers were assessed and 20 employees collected a pitiful $6,672.

Women in the full-time work force are at present earning only 53 per cent of what men make, as my colleague pointed out, and the gap is widening not narrowing, despite our so-called equal pay laws on the statute books. Female heads of families made only 50 per cent of what male heads of families made in the last year.

While those differentials are partly due to attitudes and to discrimination, they are also, of course, due to the ghettoization of jobs for women. But we will never end the ghettoization of jobs until we have adopted the concept of equal pay for work of equal value.

Over 97 per cent of secretaries are women. Two thirds of women are clerks, waitresses, saleswomen and hairdressers. Even here the wage gap between male and female employees has been widening. In the past 10 years it has increased by 168 per cent. This seems to answer the claim, which the minister makes, that all we need is equal opportunity legislation.

The record in the public service seems to indicate that equal opportunity and affirmative action still does not close the gap between men's and women's salaries to any great extent. It would be nice to take the crown to court for violating a law that requires equal pay for work of equal value.

The legislation is simply not working. While the members opposite may say that legislation is not the best way to implement this principle and to overcome the barriers to economic parity for women, I believe it is very important to enshrine the principle in legislation. We have found this effective in other human rights fields. It is an integral part of the process of changing attitudes which are often the reason for women failing to be granted both equal opportunity and equal pay.

Only when the principle is enshrined in the legislation will governments and employers and trade unions set themselves seriously to developing the techniques for implementation of this principle. I must say I was very disappointed to hear the minister introducing a lot of red herrings about the meaning and application of the principle and how difficult it would be to sort out what would apply in implementing and enforcing the legislation. I think he was simply trying to find a reason for not voting for the bill.

The argument has also been made by the minister that we can leave the establishment of economic parity between men and women to collective bargaining, but a great many women are not in trade unions. Moreover, when he suggests that the attainment of equal pay should be left to the collective bargaining process, what he is suggesting is that all the members of a union forego needed wage increases and additional benefits in order to enable the employer to fulfil his obligation in justice to pay men and women at the same rate if they perform jobs requiring similar levels of skill, effort and responsibility and work under the same conditions in the same establishment.

[4:15]

Women have been subsidizing employers for decades to the tune of—estimates range from five to seven billion dollars. There is no reason why this subsidization should go on. It may be that the minister thinks his newly-appointed equal opportunity advisory council, announced in the speech from the throne this year, is a vehicle to deal with this problem.

In my opinion, this is akin to appointing an advisory committee of passengers and crew on the Titanic to study whether the ship is sinking.

The question of economic equality for women has been studied to death by this province. We have had studies and conferences and yet we have no commitment, no position statement on it. This advisory committee will meet, perhaps, three or four times a year and will have many items on its plate. It is certainly not the vehicle for achieving this principle.

The one advisory committee that knows what it is talking about on this subject has already spoken. It is the Ontario Status of Women Council. Its chairman, Lynn Gordon, said in her annual report for 1978: "Ontario's existing equal pay laws simply are not working for women. I urge the Ontario government to follow the lead of the federal government by enshrining the principle of equal pay for work of equal value in law. Only when we compare one job to another, using the criteria of skill, effort and responsibility, will we eliminate women's job ghettos."

Lynn Gordon underlined this in a recent letter to the members supporting this bill when she said, "The council is unanimously agreed that women in the paid labour force will not begin to reach economic parity with men in this society until the province's labour laws have been modernized."

Mr. Speaker, if members opposite vote against this bill they are reinforcing the opinion that they consider the status of women council to be simply a fifth wheel.

Mr. MacBeth: I am sure the member for Windsor-Walkerville will not be surprised to learn that I have entered the debate on this matter, to speak to this bill, because in the past we have had many long discussions on this very topic.

Mr. Bounsall: Windsor-Sandwich, not Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. MacBeth: I apologize to the member because he has been the spokesman for this cause for a long, long time.

Having, as he knows, shepherded the present Employment Standards Act through this House and knowing it to be the best of all possible acts I consider that its integrity should be left untouched, and am, therefore, a little reluctant to see this amendment. However, I am speaking facetiously, as he knows, because the topic is one of concern to all, and I know the sincerity with which the member has put forward his amendment.

The member is espousing a popular and a just cause. I am sure I will be attacked for defending the present act and will probably be misinterpreted in what I am about to say. It is not difficult for opposition to put forward this bill and support it, because as I said, it is a very popular and worthwhile cause. Yet at the same time, as we have said before it is up to the government to administer these laws. For that reason, and I suppose for no other, the government has to look twice at it.

Mr. Laughren: That's not so.

Mr. MacBeth: Well, it is so. The government has the responsibility to administer, and it wants to make sure what it has to administer is workable.

Everyone is against injustice. The failure of any employer to pay to women the same wages they pay to men for the same job is just that; it's an injustice. Common sense and harmony in the work place require equal pay for work of equal value. It seems to me the self-interest of the employers dictates they should attempt to achieve this.

However, the members have mentioned difficulties and regrettably this bill does not solve the difficulties, or does not find the answer to those difficulties. I hope soon the minister or someone from the opposition will be able to find a bill that will solve those difficulties. Because "equal value"—and I say "equal value" in quotation marks—is a matter of judgement and that judgement is in the eye of the beholder.

We all think we are doing a pretty good job, no matter what we are doing, and if we were asked to compare our work with that of the person next to us, we would probably say we were doing a better job than they are. In that sense I say equal value becomes a matter of the person who is doing that judging.

I believe the employer in this province still has a few rights. In my mind, one of those remaining rights is to decide the relative value to be placed on the various facets of his operation. The employer is more qualified to judge this value than some employment standards officer.

"It's no great problem," the members will tell me. "It is done every day in the unions." I know it is done every day in the unions, but I would remind those members opposite unions don't try to make their assessment on the basis of equal value, they make it on long-time, respected, categorizations that have been established over the years. A plumber gets so much, a bricklayer gets so much, and the value of that work is not taken into consideration at all. It is more history and tradition than anything else. Of course, it has been established over the long term, but very rarely do they compare the work of one person with that of another person, but rather decide what category they fit into.

It is not very much of a problem in a large organization or where there is a unionized shop, but it certainly becomes a problem in a small office or firm. We in this House, and I have heard it said so many times, all want to help the small businessman. We pay lip service to how we can do this. At the same time, we continue to harass business by a growing number of intrusions. I suggest to the House, no intrusion will be more onerous, more aggravating, or more disruptive of harmony, than having a government agency making the kinds of decisions this bill will force that agency to make.

Mr. Grande: I thought you were saying this was just.

Mr. MacBeth: The members will say they don't anticipate too many of these intrusions, but I assure them, because of the nature of the assessments that have to be made, there will be many of them.

It will be interesting to watch how the small-business advocates vote on this bill. This is not just an amendment to say women shall get the same pay as men. The present section 33, regardless of how ineffective it may be, provides just for that, and I admit, we should work to improve that. But this bill, in effect, says there shall be no difference between wages paid to male and female employees who are performing work of equal value. The corollary is there shall be no difference between wages paid to males performing work of equal value. That, of course, is not now in the law, so it is not a case of comparing one woman's work against one man's work, but comparing one man's work against another man's work, and one woman's work against that of another woman. We are opening up a field we have not travelled before. As I say, it is not a case of women against men, but of assessing one job against another in all facets of that place of business.

Who decides whether the salesman is more valuable than the worker who makes the product? Referring to law officers, who decides whether the title searcher in a law office is more valuable than the process server?

I think I can point to a few legal secretaries who are more vital to the operation of law offices than the lawyer. That's not hard to do.

An hon. member: The ministers' assistants could fall into that category as well.

Mr. MacBeth: Their work is more productive in many respects than the lawyer's. If work of equal value is what has primacy, then of what importance are degrees in seniority? The member is ready to recognize that equal value is not the only thing one should take into account; if it's not the only thing, then why is it that he can recognize degrees in the teaching profession and the matter of seniority if the real criterion is work of equal value? One can't have it both ways. The member even wants to allow a difference for quantity. Quantity and quality, of course, are entirely different things. Surely, these items are inconsistencies. Over the years, society changes its views of values as well. Once a PhD was considered fairly valuable. A skilled trades certificate is probably regarded and is, in fact, much more valuable in today's society.

So I say who is to decide this work of equal value? Who is to decide it in such fields as the arts?

Mr. Grande: Obviously you aren't deciding it.

Mr. MacBeth: Who is to decide it in the field of politics? Who is to decide it in the field of research? Who is to decide it in professional sports? I'd like to play around with that one for a little while.

The Employment Standards Act has general application. It's not limited to the factory situation. It's in all employment places.

What are we going to do in the world of sports if they decide the goaltender is worth a little bit more than the right winger or some other position? This act has wide implications. It is not just limited to the work place as, I think, many of the members understand.

There is a paradox which I fail to understand with the socialists across the way. They always are objecting to government, generally "the government." They are most critical of this government but no one appears—

Mr. Grande: Only the injustices that you perpetrate.

Mr. MacBeth: —to have greater faith in bureaucracy's ability to accomplish tomorrow what they have failed to achieve in the past. I think they are still dreaming of perfection through legislation.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Why don't you get rid of all of the legislation?

Mr. MacBeth: It might be better but certainly we're not going to correct this world by way of the kind of legislation the member is putting forward today.

I have no quarrel with the idea that men and women doing the same job should receive the same pay, but we're not going to do it by this kind of legislation. We have to do it by education.

The member for St. George refers to the number of years. It may take a few years to change this after all the years these inequalities have existed. But in the last few years we have made great changes and great progress in coming to this field. I hope we can continue at a faster rate, but if we continue even at the rate we've done in the last five years we'll be doing well.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Ms. Bryden: You're going backwards.

Mr. MacBeth: So I'm not a supporter of government, per se, and to adopt this bill would increase the bureaucracy manyfold and could create more injustices than it would rectify—

Mr. Wildman: Especially this government.

Mr. MacBeth: —without effectively aiding the position of women in the workplace.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill brought forward by the member for Windsor-Sandwich and I wish to congratulate him for bringing it forth. It is a shame we are here today to debate a private member's bill on equal pay for equal work rather than legislation put forth by this government. I'm afraid that's a vain hope, though, judging from remarks that have already been made.

We all know this government ultimately ignores or discredits ideas put forth in private members' debates; that is illustrated here today. Nonetheless, it is a good opportunity to go over the past record of this government on the issue of fair employment practices for women, and again impress upon the Conservative Party how present Ontario employment standards legislation perpetrates discrimination on the basis of sex.

It's been 28 years since the equal pay for work of equal value concept was set forth by the International Labour Organization. Early in 1978, the federal government saw fit to enshrine this principle in the Canadian human rights bill so all female employees of the federal government and its agencies would be protected from employment discrimination. In Ontario, however, the federal protection does not extend to 90 per cent of the province's working women.

We might ask: How has Ontario responded to the concept of equal pay for work of equal value for women? In 1975, the Labour minister, then the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth), the speaker who preceded me, turned to the Bible in an attempt to explain what he meant, saying—

Mr. Mancini: He was trying to blame God.

Mr. Handleman: God's a Liberal, that's why.

Mr. McGuigan: —society was not completely sold on the idea. He asked: "Do you remember the parable about the workers going into the fields? Well, there were different rates of pay." I'd like to remind the honourable members that the Lord Jesus Christ was probably the first—

Mr. Watson: Liberal?

Mr. McGuigan: I think he was Liberal all right, but he was the first one who recognized women when he spoke to the lady at the well.

From this low point in the debate, the Ontario government moved on to preparation of a discussion paper on the subject, a paper that the subsequent Labour minister, the member for York Mills (Miss Stephenson), warned could not recommend policy, but rather would stimulate discussion.

Mr. Haggerty: One of our worst Labour ministers.

Mr. McGuigan: I might add as well that the 1976 discussion paper had a rather negative approach to the concept, stating in detail the problems of administrative implementation rather than endorsing the human rights principle at hand. Again in 1978, there were more discussions arranged and ballyhooed by the government. Twenty thousand dollars was spent on a two-day conference at the Royal York Hotel, and about 250 attended. Yet this public relations gesture backfired somewhat when many of the guests made strong public statements condemning the forum as an apology for inaction. We have certainly had that this afternoon.

The director of the Ministry of Labour's women's bureau was quoted, along with the Deputy Minister of Labour, as admitting the present legislation is limited and inadequate.

Now it's 1979, and a full two years after the federal government introduced the equal pay for equal work of equal value concept in its justice committee. Ontario's Conservative government is still stalling on any meaningful improvements in the situation of working women, and the wage gap between men and women is widening at increasing speed. I won't mention those statistics because they have already been given.

In token recognition of International Women's Day this year, the Minister of Labour announced the establishment of yet another government committee to study the equal-value concept. Meanwhile, there has been no action taken to require affirmative action programs as a condition of contract compliance with businesses with which the Ontario government does business. My Liberal colleague from St. George introduced a private member's bill to this effect back in 1978. That lady has always acted as a strong advocate for economic and human rights and equality for women, but this government seems to become more defensive the more it is criticized.

I notice the minister said in one of his interjections that the member for St. George is ours. Well, she is, and we're darn proud of her.

Why should Ontario, traditionally touted as the richest province in Canada, want to stall any longer on improved employment protection for women, even though the former minister the member for York Mills, used the argument that adoption of equal pay for work of equal value would result in fundamental changes in the basis of wage determination in a free market economy.

Mr. Ruston: The worst Labour minister we've ever had.

Mr. McGuigan: Is the government really fearful that Ontario cannot manage to institute some very progressive legislation, and not be the better for it?

Mr. Haggerty: Don't use the word "progressive." It doesn't exist over there.

Mr. McGuigan: It's supposed to be part of their name.

After all, Ontario is frightfully behind the United States, the province of Quebec, the United Kingdom, Switzerland, New Zealand, the Netherlands, and Canada's own federal government in testing and implementing fair employment practices for women. The criticism that implementation of the equal-value scheme would cost employers too much must be rejected.

As federal Justice minister, Mr. Basford, said in 1977: "I would like to make it clear beyond any possibility of misunderstanding that as a parliament we would be wrong to accept that the economy of this country can survive only on the basis of equal pay for women doing work equal in value to that done by men."

We just heard the argument put forward. I too believe the human rights principle must stand foremost as the object of our debate. We have heard the economic argument so many times before. I guess it started back when Henry Ford introduced the $5 a day wage for his workers, but we continue to progress and we continue to have a better standard of living.

Serious consideration of the principle embodied in this private member's bill before us today has an added significance in view of this government's avowed commitment to improve the protection in the Ontario Human Rights Code. This House has yet to see legislation amending the present code. I might add that those in the community who can benefit from written protection are getting impatient with this government's reluctance to table changes recommended back in 1977. I still hope this basic human rights principle can find some expression in Ontario's promised revision of the code.

Beyond what I have just said, there are some specific points I would like to make in support of Bill 3. These points relate to the burgeoning participation of women in the labour force and obvious inadequacy of current provincial legislation. Canadian women have entered the job market at such a rate in the last few years that what was expected to be the 1986 level of participation had already been reached, seven years earlier. We should prepare for even higher rates if Canada follows the trend set in many other countries.

Studies show that not only are women still concentrated in the low-paying job ghettos, but they are actually losing ground compared to male workers in their ability to earn. I have mentioned that the wage gap is growing faster now than 10 years ago and I would suggest it is because the present equal-pay laws are not effective.

In Ontario, the vague definition of "substantially the same work" allows companies to keep women's pay rates low by simply giving them slightly different job duties or by keeping certain jobs filled only with women. This means that such jobs can be assigned a uniformly low wage rate because all the workers involved are being treated equally. The concept of work of equal value is lost or diluted by laws that define equal work as the same or similar work.

As well, the legislation does little to encourage a woman to initiate a complaint, because it puts the onus on her to prove her case while there is not a similar onus put on the company. The fear of company reprisal is also a strong factor limiting the full use of present laws. As long as women workers fail to make noticeable gains in equal pay issues there will continue to be a reticence to proceed with legal action that will be costly and very hard to win.

Another problem with present Ontario law concerns the definition—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired. The honourable member for Scarborough West. You have only one minute.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: This was going to be my maiden speech.

Mr. Speaker: That's how long it is going to be.

Mr. R. F. Johnson: My goodness, a summary. One of the Liberal members just asked me to give him some of my time. I don't think I will be able to.

I think this is an important bill. I think it is one the government is two-faced not to accept. I would like to throw back the minister's statement that he made in a speech on women's rights to the Hastings County Councillors' Association on May 1 of this year, which he ended by saying, "When we talk about seeking the best talent regardless of sex, one analogy seems particularly apt: if you have two barrels of apples to choose from, you may never have to scrape the bottom of either."

My statement is that there are not two barrels, there is one. There are people who are in the work force, not men and women that you separate out.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Sandwich for one minute.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I would have willingly given my extra minute to the last speaker. Let me just end up by saying that, while I have been sitting here, I have received a letter from Employment Services for Immigrant Women, in which the immigrant women would like to attest to their unequivocal support of this amendment to the Employment Standards Act to provide equal pay for work of equal value. I cannot think of a group of women in our society who are more discriminated against in their job classifications generally, in the work they do, than immigrant women. We feel for them in their position.

I might add that in one section of the Ontario Status of Women Council's prepared remarks today—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Bounsall:—they report that "the poor of this country were youth, the aged and women who head single families"—considering half of youth and half of the aged are women, the problem of the poverty of women becomes immense—"the greatest reason for this phenomenon in our society is that women work in female job ghettos which are undermined in the marketplace."

Mr. Speaker: This item will be stood down until 5:50.

MINISTRY OF CONSUMER AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 22, An Act to amend the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations Act.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. The purpose of this bill is to allow ministries other than the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to use the Commercial Relations Appeal Tribunal (CRAT) for purposes of appeals from their decisions. This is in line with the Wiseman report, which would consolidate agencies, boards and commissions, but in this regard it would consolidate appeal boards. This amendment to our act is not obligatory upon any other ministry. It is up to them to change their own act to put their appeal cases on decisions of the individual ministry before CRAT. All we are doing is facilitating the use of CRAT by other ministries.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I agreed on behalf of my party to go ahead with these bills this afternoon, as opposed to this evening, because we found ourselves in a position where we had some free time. I trust that the Liberal critic was informed of these changes. Are we in a situation where he will be able to be here in a few moments? I am advised that we are.

The basic aim of the bill, to expand the operations of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal by allowing it to deal with appeals from acts administered by people other than the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, is a good one. It is one that we will be supporting and, therefore, we will be supporting the bill on second reading; in fact, we will be offering no amendments to it. I would like to make a few comments about it, though.

It is my understanding that the expansion of jurisdiction of the tribunal will lead, in accordance with the Wiseman report, to similar bodies in other ministries closing up shop, as it were, over a period of time. I assume that is the aim, and I think the minister is nodding his head in agreement. The compendium that was supplied by the government put it fairly well on the minister's behalf when it said that the availability of CRAT for use by other ministries "eliminates duplication of effort and reduces overall costs."

Before we pat ourselves on our backs, though, do we have some kind of estimate as to what might be going in terms of similar bodies in other ministries? Has somebody in the ministry done an analysis, first of all, of which similar body it is in which ministry; secondly, will there be any reduction of people involved in the process; and, thirdly, what might be the expected cost savings of this action? I hope perhaps when he's closing up he can respond to that briefly.

[4:45]

The section of the bill which deals with the addition of industry representation from industries other than those currently under the legislation is one I think that's consistent with the spirit of the tribunal as established in its work and in the legislation. But I would like to raise with the minister the concern that while industry representation is probably a good idea and while it makes sense to continue that with new industries brought in from other ministries, has he considered the idea of putting consumer representation on the tribunal?

Hon. Mr. Drea: There is now.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Under the current legislation, the Lieutenant Governor in Council appoints the people to the tribunal.

Hon. Mr. Drea: They are full-time members.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Section 7(3) says: "The Lieutenant Governor in Council shall appoint six members of the tribunal and shall appoint one of such members who shall be made a full-time member as chairman and may appoint one or other such members as vice-chairman. In the tribunal, as I understand it then, there is that basic group that's appointed. Then there is also the appointment or bringing into the tribunal's affairs representatives from the various industries involved.

Therefore, if I am correct in that assessment, we have a body where the industry voice or representation far outweighs that of the consumers. For example, section 7(7), which is the one that deals with who will sit on a particular appeal, very clearly points out that at least one of the people hearing the appeal will be somebody appointed under section 7(4), i.e., somebody from the industry. There's no group of people as part of the tribunal who are representing the consumers involved in each of the particular industries.

I am suggesting that that may be a concept the minister would like to consider, not now, but at some time in the near future. He may even consider at that time a parallel to section 7(4), which would ensure that when the tribunal sits down there is a consumer representative involved in that industry or with some competence in that industry so that there would be a consumer representative, an industry representative and one neutral person, if we can find such beings, and I am sure we can.

The other matter I wanted to deal with very briefly is section 3 of the bill which dumps the nine-member Consumer and Commercial Relations advisory committee. I think that's probably a fairly useful thing to do. That body was advising the minister on financial and commercial matters. I am not too sure as to how frequently they met with the minister to advise him. I think it was infrequently, although I don't think it was a telephone booth sort of meeting. I think they were real but they are no longer relevant as we perhaps thought they were at the time of their creation.

The position of the New Democratic Party is in essence in agreement with what the minister's doing and in agreement with the recommendation of the Wiseman committee, with the one exception that the minister should take a look at the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal in terms of consumer representation with the point of giving the consumer an equal voice to the industries involved. If the minister, in his closing comments, would make reference to that I would appreciate it.

Mr. Breithaupt: I welcome the opportunity, even though it came upon us rather suddenly, to speak on second reading of Bill 22. As members are aware, the proposed change in the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal has developed from one of the recommendations in the agency's review committee, which was chaired by the member for Lanark (Mr. Wiseman).

Essentially, as we see it, the role of the tribunal is going to be expanded to permit representation of any industry registered under the act under which hearings are assigned to the tribunal, whereas at present, of course, it relates only to those acts that are the responsibility of the ministry at the present time.

The member for Hamilton Centre was wondering about the numbers of hearings that had been held. It is my understanding that in 1977 the number of decisions made by the tribunal was 26, and that figure more than doubled, to 55, in 1978; which, of course, has reflected a substantial increase in the enforcement activities of the ministry. I must say that I find that increase an encouraging one, because I think there are sufficient problems, even some of those raised in the question period today, that seem continuously to arise, whether it is a matter of the bank inspector comment that the honourable minister referred to in response to the point raised by the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) concerning phoney invoices, or whether it is a number of other of these scams that routinely come up somehow, like the dandelions each springtime.

I think the broadened scope of the activities is going to create a greater workload for the members of the tribunal, but it may well be that at the present time, in order to get a broad variety of experience and activity within the tribunal, they really have been underutilized. I think if persons are appointed to organizations such as this tribunal we have a responsibility to ensure that the workload is sufficiently stimulating that expertise can develop, awareness within the public that this tribunal exists can be seen and, finally, that the members really feel they have something to contribute because they are being called upon for their involvement on an encouraging basis.

I recognize, of course, that the tribunal will continue to meet only as it is required to do so, but if the scope is to increase, as the figures from 1977 to 1978 show, then I think this tribunal is going to be an active one and one that is indeed of use.

The member for Hamilton Centre commented upon the abolition of the advisory committee, and I do share to a point the concern with respect to continuing consumer involvement and availability to the minister of representations from the Consumers' Association of Canada or other groups. As I understand it, of the six members we are likely to receive perhaps two lawyers, perhaps three other industry representatives, and no doubt a member who would be consumer oriented in the appointments which are going to be made.

It is probably impractical to appoint a knowledgeable consumer who will have expertise in every area, unless the minister is going to come up with a scheme which will allow for that kind of sharing of consumer expertise and involvement. If he is able to do so in the appointments to the tribunal, then that will certainly be a very happy result.

We are pleased to see this as one of the first steps that has come before the House following the proposals to eliminate, merge or modify some 46 agencies, boards and commissions in the government of Ontario. That kind of change is welcome. It is obviously the tip of the iceberg, but we do recognize that these changes have to be done carefully in the sense that all of the areas that have been covered by various other groups must continue, where it is in the public interest to be covered, to ensure that proper administration of the various laws and the responsibilities of the ministry is continuing.

We welcome the bill and will certainly support it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in closing, I am interested in appointing more consumers. But bear in mind the consumer representation now is really significant. Take into account one of the things I have done which did not require legislative approval. We have in essence, as much as different statutes would permit, consolidated the activities of the Liquor Licence Appeal Tribunal with that of the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal under a single chairman for both. Bear in mind that the Liquor Licence Appeal Tribunal is specific within the Liquor Licence Act and really operates under different rules than the way CRAT does. That has been accomplished. That will produce significant savings in the support staff because those can be integrated.

We are also looking at cross-membership, the ability of members of the Liquor Licence Appeal Tribunal to hear cases with CRAT and vice-versa. I draw to the members' attention that a very prominent consumer, the former president of the Ontario branch of the Consumers' Association of Canada, has been on the licence appeal board since its very inception.

It is beyond our control as to whether any other ministry chooses to do it. I caution members on that. It is up to the individual ministry. To be quite frank, we have only had indications from one ministry that it will soon be bringing in amendments to its own legislation to do this.

It is not an area where there have been many appeals that they want to put before CRAT. The workload really will increase there from our own statutes. Because of appeals from decisions of Condominium Ontario under The Condominium Act, once that section is proclaimed, it is anticipated that will add cases. It has been our experience whenever we bring in new legislation there is a little flurry in the beginning to try and establish precedents and so forth.

I think it is quite true that the enforcement, which is the result of the approaches taken by the passing of this House some years ago of the Business Practices Act, an umbrella type of consumer act, rather than the specific regulatory type dealing with only one industry as was the tradition, has led to more cases before CRAT. I quite frankly welcome this.

Concerning the question of the repeal of the advisory committee, it is really redundant because the tribunal itself advises the minister on consumer affairs. I think that is a much more practical way because they have heard the cases, they have heard the evidence and they have seen if the enforcement and the proposal before there meets the test of law. They can recommend to us changes in the statute in areas where the statute is found wanting or could be improved. We think that much more practical than having them submit their recommendations and at the same time having another advisory committee. It is not a question of cost or contribution. It is really that the tribunal is in the adjudication seat. They hear both sides and they have to examine the statute in great detail and to come to a just verdict.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Wasn't CRAT supposed to advise on consumer affairs and be an advisory committee on commercial and financial affairs?

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's right. By and large in the beginning, it was to advise us in the broad context because at that time consumer matters were considered financial and commercial. The name of the ministry then was the same. That day is gone.

[5:00]

The areas of consumer interest and advice are extremely specialized. In terms of the application of the law, it is my feeling that we have sufficient legislation at the moment; it is whether the intent of the legislation we have lends itself to prompt and efficient enforcement that will determine the orderly marketplace. On that basis, this is simply the recognition that that advisory committee has played a very valuable and significant function but, in the evolution of legislation by this House, it is no longer required.

In terms of the cost savings, it would be very difficult for me to say what they would be. As I say, only one ministry has indicated an interest by following through on this, and the particular function that would be appealable to the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal has had one appeal in the last eight years. What their per diems are, or what their internal arrangements are, I do not know.

Certainly the consolidation in itself will produce savings in two ways: First, the support staff can be consolidated; second, the annual reports and the special reports of CRAT to the minister will be even more embracing than they are at this point. I would say that there is a significant saving in terms of the Liquor Licence Appeal Tribunal, if you want to look at $44,000, because there is one chairman of both. That is one saving that has been accomplished. The consolidation of office space and support staff, which is just going into effect now, will achieve somewhat significant savings in terms of the total budget of the two.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 34, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, when this bill was introduced some weeks ago, you will recall that it was pointed out that the most important change flowing from these amendments would be that the company that is incorporating—not the government; the company—will have to make sure that the proposed corporate name and articles of incorporation are not in conflict with the law. The traditional manner has been the government certification.

The new Business Corporations Act will provide, quite frankly, a substantial benefit to business. It is common knowledge that in recent years there have been numerous requests—I think that is an understatement—there have been numerous requests from business and from the legal community to speed up the process of incorporation.

One of the difficulties with speeding up the process in terms of the existing statute has been the escalating volume of requests for corporate name searches and for business incorporations received each year. That has made it increasingly difficult, because there has been demonstrated the inability of the English language, under manual operations, to keep supplying a constant source of different business or incorporated names. This, of course, has led to delays.

When a business wants to incorporate, or a person wants to incorporate for business purposes, one of the reasons for wanting to do so is that they see a market for their goods or services, and they require a name. In many cases, it is a name that in their view will attract the public and bring them—at least initially, until they can demonstrate their prowess in the field—new business. It is somewhat discouraging and frustrating to them to have to wait a prolonged period of time to get a name.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that over the past few years the docket number or the numbered company name has become increasingly common. I think most people dislike and feel somewhat uncomfortable with a number, especially when the number has no significance except that it is a docket number. The reason we have had to grant them is to allow companies to go into business and, hopefully, very rapidly thereafter the business will be successful in its search for a corporate name.

In practical terms, the advent of new facilities and technology which have already been adopted by the federal government have made these available and they will permit the government to hand over to the private sector the responsibility for corporate name acquisition. In practical terms, this means that the role of government in the process of incorporation can be reduced from 12 days to less than an hour.

That 12 days, by the way, is 12 working days at the moment. In the very immediate future, that 12 days might very well escalate to 60 or 72 days. It is a process where we simply find that the traditional manual approaches and so forth just do not keep pace with trends and developments in the business world.

In addition to the corporate name search, the act states that a proposed corporate name should not be the same as or similar to the name of another corporation, association, partnership or individual if its use is likely to deceive. This is a very basic protection in the business community. Under the legislation as it now stands, the minister must decide if a proposed corporate name should be prohibited. The onus, of course, lies with the incorporator to select a proposed corporate name that will not conflict with prohibitions under the act.

Just to give members an idea of the volume and the burden that the workload has placed upon my ministry's companies division, in the 1977-78 year we conducted 62,000 name searches. This represents a 70 per cent increase over the number of searches conducted as recently as 1974. Members can appreciate that burden. It now, as I said before, requires a tremendous amount of working time just to clear the name. This is before the incorporator even files the articles of incorporation.

Fortunately, within the past 18 months, at least three, and I think now four, private search firms have begun offering this service directly to the public. They use on-line data terminals with access to the automated name search system operated by the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This system contains the trade marks and names of all corporations from every jurisdiction in Canada, including foreign corporations carrying on business in Canada. These search houses obtain for clients computer printout search reports within 24 hours or less. What this really means—and the federal government has already set the lead—is that the provincial government can withdraw from the corporate names business.

This new act, in addition to privatizing the name search, will assist the business community in making appropriate name selections and provide for expanded regulations and guidelines. It will require the name search report to be delivered with articles of incorporation as evidence that the name search has been done.

Again, with articles of incorporation, the ministry has experienced similar problems. Also with reference to the articles of incorporation, right now the companies division examines the articles to ensure they comply with the act. If the articles of incorporation conform to the law and the fees have been paid, the division then issues the certificate.

Once again, the sheer volume is slowing down our ability to handle requests for business incorporations as quickly as the business community requires. The average service time has increased to almost nine days compared to a little over five days required in 1974. Of course, the business community, quite frankly, is justifiably critical.

To alleviate this problem, last year the ministry introduced procedures permitting lawyers to file legal opinions to the effect that the articles conform to law. Under this procedure the articles are examined only for proper execution to ensure that they are accompanied by the prescribed fee and a cleared name-search report. This has worked to the benefit of both business and government.

Under the new legislation, the incorporator would deliver articles of incorporation to the minister, accompanied by that name-search report and the prescribed fee. The staff will examine the articles to determine that they are properly executed, the accompanying name-search report is for the name set out in the articles and the fee is paid. If these conditions are fully satisfied, a certificate will be issued.

The amendment proposes numerous benefits to both the public and the government. By public I mean both business and the people dealing with business. It will permit over-the-counter incorporation. This is at a time when we want to stimulate small business; Canadian small business, preferably, Ontario small business. Over-the-counter means that you can be in business relatively quickly without the delays of the present system.

As I said before, the service time will be reduced to 30 minutes where the articles are filed and the certificate of incorporation is issued over the counter, and to one working day where we need the mail. I hope the use of the mail is not too optimistic, but I have great confidence in the ability of the people in the federal post office to solve their problems relatively quickly.

Administrative expenditures have been substantially reduced.

Finally, this amendment is consistent with the 1967 recommendation of the select committee on company law, that corporation law should impose minimum restrictions and afford maximum convenience and simplicity to the incorporation and organization of companies.

I should congratulate the committee because that was prior to the introduction and the demonstrated practicality of the ANS system. Data processing simply was not in a position in those days to really do it. Nonetheless, the committee wanted this done. If I recall correctly, from talking with people who were on that committee at the time, the rotating files and so forth that were seen in New York state and elsewhere impressed them very much that it was a quicker service and I congratulate the committee for having the foresight to realize this system could be in place and would be of great benefit.

I would ask the members to recall that eight years ago the House gave the business community incorporation as a right and the one-man corporation, when it enacted the Business Corporations Act we are now amending. That was a first in Canada and again, the speedy incorporation now is the first anywhere provincially in Canada.

For the benefit of the House I have gone over the act in some detail. I would like to say that we do have some amendments. We would ask that this go into committee today if possible. The amendments that we have are dictated by court decisions and also to clarify certain sections. I understand as well the member for Hamilton Centre will be proposing an amendment and he has been courteous enough to give me a copy, so that at the culmination of second reading we will be prepared to go into committee of the whole House on this matter.

Mr. Breithaupt: I was interested in the reasons the minister gave for the support of this bill and it was, of course, the last one which very much caught my attention, since this was a recommendation from the select committee on company law.

I did not think it would take 12 years to deal with a recommendation and I certainly hope 12 years from now we will not be dealing with some of the recommendations on insurance which the committee, now that I am the chairman of it, has been bringing before the House.

I must say I was concerned when I first saw this proposal because I felt there might be the prospect of 12 T. Eaton Companies suddenly incorporated. However, since the matter is going to be dealt with by regulation so that a printout of the corporate name is tendered at the time of incorporation, that problem will naturally be resolved.

There is clearly a difficulty in attempting to deal with quick incorporations of companies. I had always thought in my modest legal practice that the ability to use the numbered company circumstance was one that really dealt quite promptly with the problems that had been coming forward. However, the minister suggests that there are still additional pressures for the obtaining of corporate names and for the clearance to take place in the matter of a few hours or even a day or so, so that incorporation can immediately occur and the company begin to do whatever its principals have decided for it.

It has been interesting to see how the automated name search system has developed. Certainly the maintenance of this system by the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is one thing which I think the people of Ontario through our jurisdiction can take good advantage of. It would clearly be foolish and wasteful to duplicate such a system. It would also be really negligent on our part if by the avoidance of taking part in that system we are causing additional cost and inconvenience to citizens who wish to hide behind the corporate veil, as we were taught in company law many years ago.

The simplification of this kind of incorporation is certainly a good idea. At one point I had wondered whether anyone would bother to deal with the obtaining of a corporate name search if in fact that name search was not going to be a required part of the incorporation process, but this has been quite well clarified. The requirement for the printout, which I hope will remain at a modest cost, will ensure that the incorporation can proceed promptly, clearly and without the delays which necessarily take place as any attempt is made to manually deal with, as the minister suggested to us, some 60,000 or so applications within a year.

I'm pleased to see these developments because I think they will benefit the commercial life within our province. Incorporation is not only the sort of thing that one might think of when dealing with very large companies whether we're talking about International Nickel or, as I mentioned earlier, the T. Eaton Company or any of these other very large involvements.

Incorporation is a common practice for many persons, for tax reasons, for accounting reasons, indeed I presume that perhaps a majority of the members in this House are involved one way or another with private corporations, with the ownership of various properties, however, it might be. It so happens I am myself. This kind of incorporation, because of the necessity of keeping records and because of the various matters of taxes to which I have referred, is something which is really a common business practice.

It's no longer an esoteric sort of thing that has to be decided by decisions of the House of Lords. It's a matter which really is an ordinary practice, one with which many of us are personally familiar and one which must be speeded up to benefit the commercial interests within the province. Interests ranging from the individual gas station operator, to the hardware store man, to the person who wants to put together the large corporation whose shares might eventually be traded on the stock exchange.

I welcome these changes. I think they will be a boost in the futuristic view of business development within the province. It's a manner of dealing with a theme whose time has certainly come and, as I had mentioned, it was certainly a recommendation of the select committee on company law in one of its earliest manifestations. I welcome the acceptance of that by the minister and I hope that the mechanics will be successful and useful to many of our citizens.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, before I reveal my party's position on this bill, I was a bit taken aback when listening to the member for Kitchener use the name Inco when he was expressing his support for this bill. I might remind him that in this little corner of the House Inco is a four-letter word and he should be more careful.

The New Democratic Party will, of course, be supporting Bill 34 on second reading. The minister has at least three amendments to it and I have one so it will be going to committee. There are a few sections of the bill I have questions about and I will not be talking about those now. I will save those for when we go into clause-by-clause debate.

They are very brief and they are not trick questions so I think we can deal with them expeditiously at that time.

The bill calls for what has been characterized—not by me but by others—as the privatization of the corporate name acquisition process. The Business Corporations Act has been in place more than eight years in its present form and, as the minister pointed out at its time of introduction, one of the goals we were searching for was a relatively speedy process in terms of corporate name acquisition. Given the admittedly large number of individuals and companies that have been concerned about the escalating difficulties in terms of time, I think the business community and the corporate community will welcome the minister's response in this area.

The March figures that were released when the minister introduced the bill showed that it's now taking an average of five working days for the corporate name acquisition and 6.7 days for processing the incorporation, for a total of nearly 12 working days. It will be a substantial reduction in the amount of time being spent in the ministry.

Has the ministry done some sort of an analysis about what will happen to the people in the ministry who were involved in this processing and in this work? Will there be a substantial number of jobs lost at the ministry, or will people just be transferred into other facets of the ministry's work?

Hon. Mr. Drea: They will be able to handle it faster and do more work. The volume will still be there.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The volume will still be increasing too, I suspect.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Maybe a few of them can provide support services to CRAT, now that we have given that expanded jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I provide support services all over.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That was my one human concern in regard to the changes. The other aspect of the privatization which concerns me a little is the fact that the incorporator now is going to be responsible or carry the can, as it were, for the proposed name and that the minister now will no longer have to search and clear the names or check that the articles of the incorporation conform with existing legislation.

The key word there, it strikes me, is "responsibility," so on the one hand we have the government, the ministry, trying to speed up the process, which is admirable, but with the change we put a lot more responsibility on individuals or companies that are going through this process. There are many things that the minister was responsible for before which the corporations or the individuals will be responsible for.

I don't have at this point in time a great concern that there's going to be any significant abuse of that responsibility, but I think it should be on the record that that is a possibility I suppose. I am sure the minister will make a commitment today to keep a very close eye out for that kind of activity over the next year or two while we are going through the changes, to see if there is any significant degree of abuse. I would suggest that if there is we can to some extent pick it up under the current penalty sections, section 256 and forward, in the act.

One of the things the minister might want to consider, though, if we do find that kind of increase in abuse, would be to raise the penalty or in some other way make it clear that this kind of a breach is a particularly serious one, because this is a case of a breach where we have extended further trust to him and given him further responsibility, and I am sure that the minister will make sure that situation is monitored closely. The other concerns I have to raise with the minister I will raise when we are into committee stage.

Hon. Mr. Drea: If I could just answer that last one, yes, we are very cognizant of that, but I would like to point out that the present act really is just as vulnerable to deception as this would be, and based upon our experience since 1971, which has permitted the one-man corporation—and that is usually the tempting one—there hasn't been that much attempt at deviousness, and, quite frankly, we will be watching.

Quite frankly, the sanctions are just about the same, and there was no way for the minister really to say, "I know you, I don't trust you and, therefore, I am not taking you," even under this one. The difficulty is that this is the registration of a name. He can be a thoroughgoing scoundrel, but he is only registering the name. It is after he gets the name that certain things may or may not occur, and I can assure the honourable member we will be watching very closely.

Also, on the question of the automated name search, it is our feeling and that of the federal government—and the federal government, as I have it here, is getting out of the names business as of June 1, 1979. They send to their people a list of private search houses. The federal corporations branch plans to withdraw its name request service June 1. They are out. So that really, to be in conformity with them, we have to be. By the same token, both of us are watching, because if suddenly all five, in concert, start raising their fees, I can assure the members that if it is not the federal corporations branch that gets in touch with Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Ottawa with regard to the combine and other things, it will be this ministry.

There is competition out there: five name-search companies. There is not that big a market; it is in terms of manual work, but in terms of the service they are providing and their ability to provide it, they should be seeking, through search firms and so on and so forth, business based upon their service record. If their fees do start to suddenly go up, I can assure the member that it will probably be acted on by the federal people initially, because they are watching as well.

If there were only one company in the field, I can assure the member between ourselves and the federal government we would literally have to have price control or whatever on there, but when there is that degree of competition, especially with the announcement by the federal government of getting out by June 1, with the introduction of this bill, the field almost doubling within a very brief period of time, there is sufficient competition there that I don't think there will be a risk. Plus, of course, the search firms incorporating; I am not going to take kindly to their new service doing certain things.

I am also informed by my advisers that the search houses are forming an association to maintain ethical practices under their leadership in Ottawa, so the search firms that are specializing in this are forming their own watchdog group within the scope of the private sector. So those concerns, while they are legitimate, I don't think they will pose a problem. We will be watching in regard to the other one as well.

THEATRES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 72, An Act to amend the Theatres Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, this is a housekeeping act. We want to take out of the statute the statutory requirement for an annual renewal of a licence by a projectionist. We want to put it into regulations so that we can stagger the time period. We will probably be going to two or three years at different times of the year so the theatres branch will not be encumbered with an annual peak and so that there will not be delays and so forth.

We also find that the definition of "projector" in the act is redundant. We have a definition for "projection equipment" and we have a definition for "projector." We want the definition of "projection equipment" to remain the definitive one. We feel the other one is redundant.

The licences that will be changed from a statutory requirement of renewal each year will include film exchange licences. Again, instead of March 31 for an annual renewal, we would like regulatory authority to stagger them throughout the year and for a longer term.

I would point out that most of the projectionists' licences in this province are renewed. They are people in very good standing, and we think we can arrange the renewals much more expeditiously. It will be more convenient for the industry, for the people in the industry and, quite frankly, for the taxpayers, because we will not have to gear up for one month or so every year; we can stagger it out proportionately.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I accept the comments made by the minister that this is just a housekeeping bill and an attempt to deal with the workload of these renewals in a much more reasonable way.

We all recall the change to a three-year driver's licence, which was a means of dealing with a vast number of people within our province—probably some four or five million—who were otherwise all trying to renew their driver's licences at one period of time each year.

This is an example, even though it is on a much smaller scale, of attempting to shift that same workload so that it can be dealt with conveniently and properly on a routine basis. It is one way of avoiding the necessity of having additional staff and additional costs at a time when routine staff can and will be kept on anyway for the rest of the year and can do this in a normal and well-planned way. We are quite prepared to support the bill.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party will also be supporting the bill. The Theatres Act is really quite a piece of legislation; it has everything from the requirement to play the national anthem to all of the protections to the public and the regulation of activities. The minister is quite correct in pointing out the small problem in section 1. Just out of interest, and perhaps to add some levity to the consideration, those two clauses should be read into the record:

Clause (h) defines projection equipment or projector. It means the equipment necessary or used for the transducing from a film to moving images, including equipment for accompanying sound. Clause (k) defines projector as meaning any type of machine used for the projection of moving pictures.

Mr. Breithaupt: Don't tell me they have sound now.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I think the minister is quite wise to go after that clause and get rid of it from the act.

The aspect of no longer requiring the March 31 renewal date in going to, by regulation, a more flexible approach is quite reasonable, especially in regard to the projectionists or the projector or the film exchange.

I might have some concerns about the theatre itself because we deal with all the regulations regarding the fire inspection. I'm sure when the minister does make changes in that part he won't make changes that would in any way put the film viewer in hazard by not having as frequent an inspection of the theatre as is necessary. I have confidence the ministry will do that job.

There is one other point, though. When we talk about the licences for the operation of theatres, we should be giving some consideration to the question of Canadian films, and the percentage of films in our theatres that are Canadian films.

I know the culture critic for my party, the member for Oakwood, wanted to address a few comments to that particular aspect, and perhaps question the minister as to why we haven't proceeded in this bill along those lines.

Subject to that, I have no further comments about this bill.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I'm going to be very brief. Actually, this act to amend the Theatres Act really does not deal with anything but very small housekeeping matters.

It is true that's the intent of this bill. However, as I understand it, in second reading of a bill one could talk about certain things that are not in the bill.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I don't believe that understanding is right. The member must limit his comments to matters dealt with in the bill.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I'm just going to take a very few brief minutes. I want to deal with this particular bill in terms of culture and recreation.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I don't see anything in this bill dealing with culture at all.

Mr. M. N. Davison: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I think the member's remarks would be in order. Section 2 of the bill you have in front of you, An Act to amend the Theatres Act, repeals section 13 of the Theatres Act, and section 13 deals with the renewal of a licence for a theatre.

As I understand the context of the remarks raised by the member for Oakwood, he wants to deal with the question of culture with regard to the renewal of licences. That's exactly what this section deals with—the situation under which a licence for a theatre will be renewed. I think his remarks are in order.

Mr. Breithaupt: If I could speak to the point of order: It is my understanding the licensing of a theatre is entirely a mechanical thing, with respect to safety, accommodation, fire exits, or matters such as that. It is my understanding the kinds of films shown in a theatre have nothing to do with the licence of that theatre as such. I would presume remarks dealing with what might or might not be shown in a theatre, while they would be of interest and no doubt worthy for the members to hear, should not be made at this opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Drea: On a point of order, I would like to point out to the member who wants to raise this that nobody is more sympathetic to the Canadian film industry than I am, but I have no jurisdiction whatsoever over it. I've used my good offices on a rather constant basis to try and promote the increased use of Canadian films, not necessarily only those that are financed by the taxpayers and come under that general category of Canadian film.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I don't believe the minister is speaking to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I have no jurisdiction. There is nothing in this act which will permit me to do so. The only thing that might be involved is the fact we give an indirect subsidy to a Canadian film. We don't charge it as much, or anything, to go through our system as we do a conventional Hollywood film.

Mr. Acting Speaker: You say there is nothing here, but now you have spoken to the point I think the member for Oakwood wants to raise. Make it very brief.

Mr. Grande: Thank you very much. Certainly, the conditions under which licences are given to theatres is part of this act and part of this bill. All I would like the minister to attempt to address himself and the ministry to is giving as a particular condition for the licence that a certain percentage of Canadian films be shown at that particular theatre. This is all I want to talk about, because I've attempted to raise it within the Ministry of Culture and Recreation and they specifically state it is under this particular ministry, under the Theatres Act, that any such change can take place. Therefore, all I'm suggesting to the minister is he should take a look at this legislation and begin to think seriously in terms of bringing that in.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I don't know if that's the proper approach to it, Mr. Speaker since the thing that strikes me first is there is an insufficient number of Canadian films.

I sympathize with the member. As I said, since taking over responsibility for this act on October 18 I have been constantly promoting the use of Canadian films, and not only those we might regard as the commercial type of thing, but other very good films. There are films produced by ministries of this government that I think could be expanded a little bit to fill in the time frame.

I have been doing that, but I think the difficulty in saying that theatres must show a sufficient quota of Canadian films, bearing in mind the number of theatres, is there might be insufficient product. I can assure the member I will do everything possible within my ministry in terms of moral suasion, or what have you, to develop a market through the theatre for the Canadian films. By Canadian films, I mean films produced here with the technicians and the actors, and so on, that is representative of the talent, both technical and artistic, in this country.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

PREARRANGED FUNERAL SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 73, An Act to amend the Prearranged Funeral Services Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I'm pleased to rise in support of this bill. It is certainly important to see how, over the past several years, there have been some concerns which have been raised with respect to the details of prearranged funeral services. These concerns appear to be addressed and resolved in this bill. I think the acceptance of this legislation by the House will ensure that moneys are properly held in trust accounts; interest is, of course, applied and available; and all of the records and details will be completely in order. We're pleased to support the bill.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have?

Mr. Speaker: Up to four minutes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Up to four minutes? It is private members' day, isn't it?

[5:45]

The New Democratic Party has no great opposition to the things that are being done in this particular bill. One of the things that concerns us, though, is the points raised by the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) on May 3 in the debate on a private member's bill, Bill 60. They are relevant because we are dealing in this bill, under section 3, with the Board of Funeral Services. That is, in substance, what the member for Port Arthur was dealing with and the degree to which there would be consumer representation.

Once again, the ministry should give some further thought to the degree of consumer representation on that board, as proposed by the member for Port Arthur, so that there would be four funeral directors on the board, four consumer representatives and one person to represent the Memorial Society of Canada. I think that would be very useful, and I think the minister should take this opportunity to commit himself to some movement in that direction over the next short period of time.

Aside from that, I have no comment about the housekeeping nature of the bill, except to agree with the member for Kitchener that it is a good idea to keep in trust the money that is paid for a prearranged funeral.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, as I said last week when the bill of the member for Port Arthur was being discussed, it is very desirable to make possible in every way the prearrangement of funerals. It is a good protection for consumers. This bill is amending the Prearranged Funeral Services Act in a way that is going to further protect the consumer in the money he is placing in the hands of the trust. I believe this House should give this bill its full support.

Also contained in the bill is a provision that only a full-time funeral director may have anything to do with the prearrangement of a funeral, which I believe is also a good clause and one which, of course, would exclude me from doing so.

I want also to say that I know the funeral directors of the province are quite in favour of the amendments in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, very briefly—I guess I have about 10 seconds to wind this up—I would like to point out, in view of the concerns of the member for Hamilton Centre and the member for Sarnia, that there are now active discussions between the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations concerning the transfer of the portions of the Funeral Services Act, 1975, that are within the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Health.

The only reference in this bill to the Funeral Services Act is that, unfortunately, in terms of housekeeping, it still refers to the old act; it has not taken account of that. At the time those discussions come to fruition, I will bear in mind the particular comments of the members.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

EMPLOYMENT STANDARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Bounsall has moved second reading of Bill 3. Any member objecting to this question being placed before the House should now rise.

There will be a vote.

All those in favour of second reading of Mr. Bounsall's bill will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee on general government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Our friends in the gallery have been cautioned on two previous occasions. Members here have a responsibility collectively and individually to carry out the responsibility and the mandate given them. I cautioned you not to demonstrate. I am going to have to ask to have the gallery cleared.

House in committee of the whole.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS ACT

Consideration of Bill 49, An Act respecting Small Business Development Corporations.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any comments or amendments to Bill 49?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, I have several comments on Bill 49. Do you want to proceed now, or may I suggest that we adjourn and proceed at eight o'clock?

Mr. Chairman: If it's the wish of the committee, as it is very close to six o'clock, the committee will resume at 8 p.m.

The House recessed at 5:56 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

CO-PAYMENT FEES

14. Mr. Breugh: Can the ministry give any indication of the number and percentage of chronic-care patients who will not be required to pay the proposed co-payment fee for stays longer than 60 days? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The following outlines who is eligible for chronic care co-payment exemptions:

All patients under the age of 18 are fully exempted.

Patients will be exempted if they are in receipt of family benefits or general welfare assistance. When these patients are in chronic care, they are provided a $45 per month "comfort allowance" and not charged a co-payment.

All patients in chronic-care beds will be exempted from the co-payment for the first 60 days after admission. A patient occupying a chronic, rehabilitation or convalescent bed can be exempted from co-payment for the first 180 days of care (including the common 60-day exemption), where the attending physician certifies that the patient is in the process of rehabilitation or convalescence and is expected to return to his or her home. This certification can be renewed or changed by the attending physician (up to a maximum exemption of 360 days).

These criteria exempt those who should not reasonably be expected to pay—persons being rehabilitated, short-term patients, those on social assistance and families with children in chronic care.

The co-payment applies only to those in long-term care, and further exemptions are available, recognizing family income responsibilities.

A patient without dependents (a single person for example) in long-term chronic care requires income for personal needs, but other basic needs are met by the facility. Such a patient will keep the first $45 of monthly income for personal use, and any income above this level will be considered available to meet the co-payment. For example, a single, long-term patient with a monthly income of $100 would make a partial co-payment of $55.

For exemption purposes, spouses receiving old age security, spouse's allowance or benefits under the Ontario Guaranteed Income Act are not considered as dependents.

Again, the first $45 of the patient's monthly income will be exempt and the remaining income will be considered available to meet the co-payment.

Prior to the introduction of co-payment charges, the government paid the full cost of basic needs and medical care for long-term patients, while they continued to receive government benefits for their maintenance in the community.

This situation created inequities between chronic patients, similar persons in nursing homes who were charged a co-payment, and elderly persons maintaining themselves in the community. It also resulted in inappropriate use of chronic-care facilities.

The introduction of this new approach will result in a consistent co-payment policy for patients in chronic and extended care and contribute to a more efficient allocation of health resources.

A patient with dependents (or a patient who is a dependent member of a family) living in the community is treated differently than a single patient. While a single patient requires income only for his personal needs in the facility, the patient with a family may require a good part of the family income for the living expenses of the family members in the community. Accordingly, certain amounts of family income are not considered available to meet the co-payment.

The level of exempt family income increases with family size: For a family of two it is $15,000 per year; for a family of three, $17,100 per year; for a family of four, $19,200 per year; and for a family of five or more, $21,000 per year.

If family income is below these levels, the patient will be totally exempt from charge. If family income is above the exempt level, only one-third of the amount above the exempt level is considered available to meet the charge.

As an example, a family of two, with an income of $15,000 per year (or $1,250 per month), would be totally exempt. If this family had an income of $1,550 per month (that is, $300 per month over the exempt level), then the patient would be expected to pay $100 per month.

Family income level will be established by a declaration, rather than by some form of means test.

Finally, where a third party pays the total hospital cost or the co-payment for a patient—such as the Workmen's Compensation Board, Department of Veterans Affairs, or other federal government agencies—the patient will not be required to pay the co-payment.

PRIVATE CHRONIC HOME CARE

33. Mr. Breagh: Is the ministry prepared to issue fee guidelines for the provision of private chronic home care? If so, what would these fee guidelines be? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The ministry is not prepared to use fee guidelines for the provision of private chronic home care as this is a matter between a patient and health care providers.

59. Mr. Breagh: Will the ministry provide co-payment exemptions for chronic care patients in private nursing homes to match those now applied under guidelines for public hospitals? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As of the end of March 1979, there were 102 chronic care patients in nursing homes. Approximately four years ago, to relieve pressure on chronic care hospitals, a number of borderline chronic patients were placed in nursing homes. Since then the number has been reduced from the original 250 to 300 patients to 102 patients, through deaths, discharges, and changes from chronic to extended-care status.

These patients are now expected to make the same per diem contribution to their maintenance as the other residents in nursing homes. The status of each chronic-care patient is also being reviewed and it is anticipated that the majority of these residents may be eligible for transfer to the extended care program, and the chronic-care beds in nursing homes will be phased out.

It is expected that approximately 10 patients will remain after this process and these will be reassessed medically to determine the most appropriate way of handling their situation. They are eligible for the same exemption provisions offered to hospital-based chronic-care patients.

MEDICAL SCHOOL ACCESS

38. Mr. Breagh: What is the Ministry of Health position on the minority rights and equal opportunity admissions to medical schools? How many of Ontario's native peoples have been admitted to medical school in the last five years? How many representatives of ethnic minorities have been admitted in the last five years? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As university admissions relate to the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and not to the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Colleges and Universities has supplied me with the following answer and any further questions should be directed to that ministry.

The Ontario Human Rights Code forbids the identification of racial/ethnic origin for admission to programs such as post-secondary education. The medical schools do not collect such data.

MEDICAL SCHOOL PROGRAMS

41. Mr. Breagh: Has the minister taken any steps to encourage medical schools to include a rotation to northern Ontario hospitals as part of their undergraduate and residency programs? If not, does he have any plans to introduce such a move? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Attached are descriptions* of programs offered by Ontario medical schools in northern areas of the province. The northwestern program is with physicians, not the hospitals. The northeastern program is the most recent. These programs are variously funded by Ministry of Health, the federal government and respective universities.

The OMA and the College of Family Physicians have programs for continuing education.

UNDERSERVED AREAS—MEDICINE:

1. Northwestern Ontario Medical Program (NWOMP): Funding from Ministry of Health since 1972; McMaster administers program but Queen's, Toronto and Western also rotate undergraduate and postgraduate (I and R) through programs; agreements with physicians in area include the following numbers: Thunder Bay 41, Kenora 15, Ft. Francis 11, Nipigon 5, Dryden 10, Atikokan 3, Terrace Bay 4, Marathon 2; in 1978-79, 52 undergraduates (4-6 weeks), 19 postgraduates (2-3 months), rotated through these areas primarily in family medicine and pediatrics; since 1972, 23 students have settled in northwestern Ontario who have participated in NWOMP.

2. Other Underserved Programs Involving Ontario Medical Schools: University of Ottawa is negotiating with hospitals in Suburbia area for placement of family medicine trainees especially francophone; University of Toronto has agreement with federal government in Sioux Lookout that provides training opportunities as well as health services to Treaty 9 native people; Queen's and McMaster has a similar agreement in Moose Factory; Western is concentrating extending family practice training to small underserved communities in southern Ontario as well as NWOMP; Another area under consideration is development of continuing education programs for doctors working in north. Northern Affairs and McMaster are involved in this review. No programs have yet been announced.

Placement of Medical Students in North-eastern Ontario: Department of family medicine provides preceptorships in northern community practices within 50 mile radius of Ottawa area. Communities with such preceptorships are Smiths Falls, Renfrew, Arnprior, et cetera.

The university is in the first year of a program of placing medical interns in the Sudbury area. Currently, one intern is rotating through per month. In July, 1979 there will be two interns per month.

Queen's University is also considering becoming involved in the preceptorship in the Sudbury area.

Ottawa will be providing refresher courses in the Sudbury area this May.

Individual electives by resident students have been in North Bay and Timmins.

Ottawa has been sending representatives for the last three areas to the northern high schools to encourage applications to medical school, especially the French high schools. Communities involved in this liaison are Hearst, Timmins, North Bay and Sudbury.

This program with additional financial support will be able to help in meeting the local health care needs of communities in northeastern Ontario as the Northwestern Ontario Medical Program does for that area of the province.

Moose Factory: Queen's and Western have some involvement in Moose Factory: One internist, one paediatrician and two surgeons involved in providing services and training; Queen's also provides part-time consulting services to physicians working in north, family medicine arrangements being worked out between universities and federal government; nursing has research project; medical clerks, interns and residents receive training in medicine, paediatrics and surgery; nursing students rotate through for some training in primary care; UWO provides assistance in diagnostic radiology that complements Queen's program.

LAB BILLING ERRORS

122. Mr. Ziemba: Would the Minister of Health indicate the amount billed OHIP in error by private medical laboratories giving the name of the medical laboratory, the principals, the business address, the amount found billed in error in each case and the amount recovered in each case? [Tabled April 5, 1979. Interim answer April 19, 1979. Approximate date information available May 15, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: From time to time the ministry, in the course of reviewing claims submitted by private medical laboratories in respect of insured laboratory services, is of the opinion that an amount claimed is incorrect. Occasionally there is an obvious clerical or administrative error on the part of the laboratory; in the majority of cases it turns out that the ministry and the laboratory disagree as to the correct interpretation of the wording in the schedule applicable to laboratory services.

In some cases the disputes have been resolved. In other cases, discussions are taking place between the ministry and the laboratory, in the hope of resolving the dispute; it is to be expected that, where the dispute is not resolved through discussion, the courts will be asked to determine the issue.

There has not been a judicial determination that any specific billings were "in error," and accordingly—except for those cases where the mistake was obvious—it is not feasible to answer the question. Further, it would not be appropriate to classify a claim as being "in error" when that very issue will be the subject of court proceedings.

OHIP ADMINISTRATION COSTS

171. Mr. Isaacs: Will the ministry provide figures on the cost of program administration for OHIP for 1975-76, 1976-77, 1977-78? [Tabled May 1, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The total direct and indirect operating costs of the Ministry of Health for OHIP program administration for the years requested are as follows: 1975-76, $38,703,800; 1976-77, $44,346,200; 1977-78, $45,388,600.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

172. Mr. Foulds: Will the Minister of Energy now, in view of the petition he has received signed by 1,700 residents of the Atikokan area, insist on public hearings before test drilling by AECL takes place in the Atikokan area for a possible nuclear waste disposal site? [Tabled May 3, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Given the fact that the Atikokan township council reaffirmed, on April 25, 1979, its decision of March 6, 1979, in favour of AECL's proposal to undertake research drilling, it seems appropriate that any further review should be initiated by the township council.

In this connection, I am pleased to advise that the reeve and the council of the township of Atikokan have called a public meeting for May 17, 1979, at 7:30 p.m., for a full discussion of the proposed research work involving test drilling. Representatives of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will be present to answer questions. This meeting is being advertised in the local newspaper, specifying time and location. In addition, the meeting will also be advertised by means of a sound truck and local community TV.

It should be recognized that AECL's proposed test drilling is purely of a research nature and does not involve the selection of a site for a nuclear waste repository. If and when a nuclear waste disposal facility is proposed for a particular site, it will be subject to an environmental assessment review process and Ontario will require that public hearings will be held, presumably under federal jurisdiction.

The member for Port Arthur should also be aware that the following opportunities for information on nuclear fuel waste management have been made available to the residents of Atikokan:

1. Since May, 1978, waste management newsletters have been regularly circulated to all news media, reeves, mayors, MPs, MPPs, and interested citizens in northwestern Ontario.

2. May 29, 1978—An AECL briefing team, consisting of S. A. Mayman, H. Y. Tammemagi and E. R. Frech, attended a meeting at the Atikokan town council called specifically for briefing council and invited community leaders on the nuclear waste management program. Other members of the public also participated.

3. July 11, 1978—The Atikokan council passed a resolution to write a letter to the Honourable Alastair Gillespie asking that he direct AECL to undertake test drilling in the Atikokan area.

4. July 12, 1978—Letter by Reeve Jack Pierce to the Honourable A. Gillespie, saying that "The council of the township of Atikokan went on record July 11, 1978, as being in favour of inviting the Atomic Energy of Canada to drill and test sites in the Atikokan area," et cetera.

5. July 31, 1978—The federal Minister of Energy, Mr. Gillespie replied with a letter to Reeve Pierce to the effect that: "Council's decision has been transmitted to the appropriate authorities and your consideration of this most important question is appreciated."

6. September 21-23, 1978—Fort Frances energy seminar, sponsored by the Confederation Community College at the instigation of the Fort Frances Community Conservation Centre and anti-nuclear activists from International Falls. Attended by AECL. Participants included community leaders (labour, church, elected, et cetera) from Fort Frances, International Falls and Atikokan. The Honourable John Reid, MP Kenora-Rainy River, was present. Press from Atikokan reported meeting, with particular emphasis on waste management.

7. September 28, 1978—E. R. Frech, of AECL, attended a meeting of the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce in Atikokan. Briefed Mr. Pat Reid, MPP for Rainy River, on the program.

8. November 10, 1978—TV Atikokan Productions (local cable station) produced a local phone-in cable TV show on which Dr. Gordon Edwards of the Canadian Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility made a presentation to a panel on general nuclear issues. Panel participants were Mrs. Bernice Taylor, local citizens' group; Reeve Jack Pierce, town of Atikokan; Mr. W. Calder, Atikokan Hydro; and Mr. A. A. O'Neil, President, Local 3466, United Steel Workers of America. Time was allotted for questions from the panel and from outside telephone contacts.

9. February 14, 1979—J. Boulton and E. R. Frech, of AECL, briefed Mr. Pat Reid, MPP for Rainy River. He had no objections to regional information and community relations programs being conducted in the area and indicated he would urge local residents to keep an open mind on the issue.

10. February 23, 1979—J. Boulton, E. R. Frech and B. Franklin, of AECL, briefed Reeve Jack Pierce; Murray Goodwin, Atikokan councillor; Keith Penner (L), MP for Thunder Bay; Hon. John Reid (L), MP for Rainy River; and Paul McRae (L), MP for Fort William and Liberal candidate for Thunder Bay-Atikokan in the next federal election. None had any objections to the program as described to them.

11. March 6, 1979—E. R. Frech and M. Durocher of AECL attended an open meeting of Atikokan town council, previously advertised as being held to discuss the possibility of test drilling in the Atikokan area. Approximately 40 residents, including several who expressed general opposition to nuclear energy, attended and asked questions. Council passed a resolution, (5-1), giving AECL permission to test drill rock formations in the area. Extensive coverage by Atikokan, Thunder Bay press and radio.

12. March 7, 1979—The AECL presentation to the public meeting on March 6th was shown on Atikokan public service television. Plans included two subsequent showings.

13. March 14, 1979—Advertisement offering further information on nuclear fuel waste management program appeared in the Atikokan Progress.

14. March 21, 1979—Advertisement offering further information on nuclear fuel waste management program appeared again in Atikokan Progress. Total of five replies received to April 10, 1979.

15. March 27, 1979—Briefings for candidates in federal election for Thunder Bay-Atikokan: Iain Angus (NDP), Ken Moffatt (PC) and Paul McRae (L) in Thunder Bay.

16. April 9, 1979—TV Atikokan Productions reports having aired AECL March 6th presentation at least four times.

17. April 9, 1979—Arrangements made with TV Atikokan Productions for showing of several AECL films, including the new nuclear fuel waste management film, on local cable station.

18. April 11, 1979—Advertisement appears in the Atikokan Progress re television phone-in show on April 17th, featuring Dr. T. Rummery and E. R. Frech of AECL.

19. April 16, 1979—Nuclear fuel waste pamphlet mailed to all households in Atikokan.

20. April 17, 1979—E. R. Frech and Dr. T. Rummery of AECL appear on Atikokan cable TV phone-in show (previously advertised by the television station and in the Atikokan Progress) for two and a half hours. Fifteen telephone calls received, one of which advised that a petition is being circulated and has been signed by 1,500 people. Program subsequently shown three more times on local cable TV.

21. April 24, 1979—Atikokan council regular meeting. Delegation of 40 persons presented petition asking for public hearings and plebiscite prior to test drilling, and that council withdraw its permission to drill. Council sustained its earlier decision to support AECL's research drilling program by a 5 to 1 vote and declined to lend support to request for public hearings and plebiscite by vote of 4 to 3.

22. April 25, 1979—Letter from S. R. Hatcher of AECL, detailing community relations program in Atikokan area, appears in Atikokan Progress. News story announcing AECL exhibit in Atikokan starting May 14.

23. May 10-12, 1979—Meeting of Northwestern Ontario Municipal Association (covering Thunder Bay, Kenora and Rainy River Districts) held in Atikokan. AECL representative made presentation on nuclear fuel waste management to municipal representatives. Presentation was well-received and AECL expects to make similar presentations to town councils in northwestern Ontario.

RESPONSE TO PETITION

Petition to the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Lieutenant Governor and Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario as follows:

"That the Minister of Community and Social Services call an immediate halt to the downgrading of the Kirkland Lake Ministry of Community and Social Services office from a district area office to a local office. At the same time, the minister should immediately halt the upgrading of the Timmins office from a local office to an area office.

"The Minister of Community and Social Services should also make a thorough and complete review of the economic significance to Kirkland Lake of the 27 jobs that the community of Kirkland Lake would lose if the Ministry of Community and Social Services district area offices were moved from Kirkland Lake to Timmins."

Hon. Mr. Norton: This petition refers to changes in the field offices of the ministry which are due to a general administrative reorganization.

This reorganization was necessitated by the addition to the ministry of large-scale children's programs from other ministries, our desire to decentralize many functions from Queen's Park to the field offices and to effect an overall improvement in service.

The decentralization will have many benefits. Previously, we had 19 district offices. We are merging these into 12 area offices.

Prior to the reorganization, one of those district offices was located in Kirkland Lake. There was a local or subordinate office in Timmins.

During the planning for reorganization we carefully considered the location of the new area offices. We considered such objective factors as the number of clients to be served in each community, the number and location of allied agencies with whom we work, the rate and volume of social services in each community, the transportation and communication facilities, and the cost in time and money for the travelling of our field staff.

We concluded that for Cochrane and Timiskaming districts, the new area office, (including the decentralized children's services as well as services to adults) should be located in Timmins. That location best fulfilled the objective criteria we had used to evaluate locations.

This does not mean that we are closing or even substantially reducing our ministry office in Kirkland Lake. We still require staff stationed there to serve the population of the town and its environs. The ministry office in Kirkland Lake will remain; it becomes an adjunct to the area office in Timmins.

Twenty staff are located in the Kirkland Lake office, and there may be no reduction in this staff whatever. In fact, when the reorganization is complete, there may be an increase in Kirkland Lake of two or three.

I should note that Mr. Ed Havrot, MPP, was among the first to express concern about the possible reduction of ministry staff in Kirkland Lake. He was in touch with me on this point in January and I was able to give him those assurances.

The petition states that there will be a loss to Kirkland Lake of 27 staff positions. That certainly cannot be true of present staff; there will be no such loss. The petition must be referring to the fact that new positions, decentralized from Queen's Park, that might have gone to Kirkland Lake if Kirkland Lake had been chosen as the site of the area office, will instead go to Timmins.

However, 27 new staff positions is an exaggerated number according to our present estimates. We estimate now that over the next two years 12 new positions may be added to the Timmins area office.

I know that at the beginning of March a ministry newsletter on reorganization ("UPDATE") estimated that 27 new positions might go to the Timmins office. That estimate was made early in our reorganization planning and was overly optimistic. We have since carried out closer calculations, and have substantially scaled down the figure. The number of additional staff decentralized to Timmins will be approximately 12.

The present staff in the Timmins office is 13 persons. The additional 12 will eventually raise the total to 25. There will not be less than 18 in the Kirkland Lake office. This is a favourable ratio considering that the population of Timmins is over three times the population of Kirkland Lake.

Even if the objective factors had indicated that the area office should have been located in Kirkland Lake, it is by no means certain that the 12 jobs would have been placed in Kirkland Lake. The difference in population between the two centres and their surroundings indicate a difference in our work load which would determine staff placement.

The number of staff we are concerned with in this situation is comparatively small. They are unlikely to have a significant impact on the economic life of either Kirkland Lake or Timmins.

The petition asks for a "thorough and complete review of the economic significance to Kirkland Lake" of the supposed loss of jobs. But as I have indicated, there is little or no loss of jobs in regard to staff now situated in Kirkland Lake. It would be hypothetical and speculative to try to calculate the economic significance of 12 jobs that might have been placed in Kirkland Lake, if Kirkland Lake had been designated as the site of the area office. Since the greater volume of our service is used by the greater population of the Timmins area, since we do not wish to incur needless costs in staff travelling time and since these and related objective factors indicate that the area office should be in Timmins, we have located it there.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 17, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of the whole.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS ACT

Resumption of consideration of Bill 49,
An Act respecting Small Business Development Corporations.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any amendments to Bill 49?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, there will be some amendments that can be called housekeeping or clarification amendments.
There were some questions raised in second reading that perhaps should be answered.
It is up to the member for London Centre whether he wishes to pose them or whether he would be happy to have me answer some of them at this point.

Mr. Peterson: I would be pleased if the Treasurer would—

Mr. Chairman: If the Treasurer would care to, he could reply to them. Then I will call for the sections and the members can ask questions on any section.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Do you want me to wait for them?

Mr. Chairman: Go ahead and reply.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are certain things that I touched upon that perhaps would save a lot of questions.

During the debate, the member for London
Centre said I was not sure where the money would come from, I think that was one of the questions he posed. I was informed by my staff that during the budget lockup this question was raised. The fact is that we have money available in the Employment Development Fund that can cover any requirements in this first year. Then we would have an opportunity to budget for future years based upon the first year.

The second issue he talked about was the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. The federation met me in the pre-budget period, but I can honestly say they did not get themselves involved in the drafting of this legislation per se.

Mr. Peterson: They are taking credit for it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am happy they do. I am glad they feel they have had some influence with the government. You will discover this government always is able to listen to worthwhile contributions.

You then went on to say: "I think the legislation is politically high profile, but from an investment strategy viewpoint not many investment people will take advantage of it."
We have received opinions from many sources that this is attractive enough legislation to work. There is no question about it. I might say at noon today I had one corporation talk to me and say they would be forming an SBDC almost at once when we have passed this legislation. I am told a number will be formed.

Investment counsellors are confirming that.
We were quite pleased to see this one commentary on it—perhaps you had an opportunity to see it—from an investment counsellor or from a CA firm that has a 35-page booklet on it, pointing out the advantages to their counsellors. They have a slide presentation to go with it. I will say in all sincerity I am going to see their presentation. I have not had an opportunity to do so yet. It was not made with any co-operation from my ministry. It will be, I hope, useful to any of us who want to see it. I am sure this company would be pleased to show us a chartered accountant's interpretation of the way this act could benefit potential clients of theirs or investors.

You went on to say that you thought that only private companies would qualify. There is no restriction limiting SBDC investment to private companies, but I think it is safe to say we would assume almost every eligible corporation of fewer than 100 people would be a private corporation. There is technically, however, no prohibition on them being public corporations.

You questioned the saleability of SBDC shares. I can only say that I think you will find that an SBDC that has been successful will have very little difficulty selling its shares.

Mr. Peterson: They will start selling at a discount right away.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Prior to my days as a cabinet minister, I had been a member of at least two investment corporations which, had SBDCs been around, would have been SBDCs. Over the years I have seen one in particular—it was started in the 1950s and still is going on today—in the town of Aurora —

Mr. Peterson: Investing in small business only?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. The other is in the town of Bracebridge and, while I am not a shareholder and have not been since about 1972, it has had at least four or five share changes. It is held by 10 people, and I think that is about the size you will find many an SBDC becomes in terms of shareholders.

We have always found it quite easy, when one shareholder dies or wishes to sell his or her shares, to find replacement buyers in the community. I have no reason to believe that SBDCs will face any difficulty either. In most cases they will be narrowly held, if not by true definition—we define “narrowly held” within the act, as the member knows—certainly most will have 10 or fewer shareholders, I would assume. I am reasonably sure they will find no trouble marketing them.

The member went on to comment about the size of the corporation, saying 100 employees is wrong. Our original venture investment corporations legislation limited the size to 30, and that was too small. We quite honestly admit the 100 employees may be too small or may be too large. We will only find out through experience. It was suggested to us at one point that we should have as few as 10 employees as the qualifying level.

It is interesting to note that federal government statistics show that 80 per cent of all Canadian-owned manufacturing companies have fewer than 100 employees; so really 80 per cent of Canadian companies qualify on that kind of basis. It is even more interesting that 90 per cent of the members of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business have fewer than 100 employees.

The member questioned whether grants should be available to the small businessmen themselves. I think the words used were: “I am personally not sure, if we really want to develop high-risk propositions, that we should not let the entrepreneur have a tax advantage. If he is creating jobs and doing something here, why are we so anxious to exclude him?”

The purpose of the legislation is to encourage individuals and corporations to invest their savings in equity rather than in the relatively safe instruments currently available to them that are tax havens. We are not trying to make non-arm's-length transactions available to allow one to make money out of the government by lending it from oneself to oneself. I hope that would be accepted by both parties, since I believe that would simply allow for a fair amount of abuse of the system and would not achieve what we are trying to do, which is to get other people's money into somebody's business; not one's own money put in with a reduction.

Mr. Laughren: Thirty per cent?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes; tax treatment.

Mr. Laughren: That's not something to be sneezed at.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are three taxpayers involved in a normal SBDC transaction: the investor who purchases the shares, the SBDC itself, and the company in which the SBDC invests money.

Mr. Laughren: Which then invests in another SBDC.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I suppose one can go on and on.

Mr. Laughren: One could and would.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The first thing is the 30 per cent grant; the member asked a question about that. We are told that the grant, the tax credit, will not be taxed as income by the Department of National Revenue. They have already sent out an interpretation bulletin, IT-273, and confirmed this to our staff. They will not tax that 30 per cent as income. The second part was whether the capital gains tax on an investor's share would be taxed from the 70 per cent level on the 100 per cent level. The current ruling, as I think I told the honourable member, is that it would be taxed from the 70 per cent level. The capital gains would apply when it was sold. That is one I would like to discuss, as I mentioned earlier, with the federal government when the time permits, hoping they might change their ruling.

Mr. Peterson: Can the minister tell us about the negotiations? I am just interested.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Those were strictly staff negotiations. They were done in a fairly loose way over the telephone, talking back and forth around the time the legislation was in the preliminary drafting stages, and also right after it was announced in the budget.

Very often staff will give what they feel will be a ruling; but until senior officials have had a chance to look at it they can't confirm that it is so. Therefore, at one point we thought there had been an agreement that the 30 per cent would not be taxed for capital gain. Later on somebody else said they felt it would have to be. I have not tried to go the political route and discuss it with a minister. I would do that once we have this legislation through and once things have settled down in the Ottawa scene.

Mr. Laughren: If you get it through.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Well I hope it will go through.

You can, of course, take the borrowing costs, if you borrow money to buy your SBDC shares. That is a deductible expense as it is for any other investment.

If the investor receives dividends from an SBDC I am told they are treated as any other investment dividends would be treated for purposes of the Income Tax Act.

The SBDC itself, as we see it, would have three major sources of income.

Mr. Peterson: Is there any other way you can get the money out of an SBDC besides dividends?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I suppose there could be ways of getting it out on a salary basis. I don't know whether that has been ruled on or not; I don't think so. In most corporations, they are entitled to put somebody on payroll. The question is, if you take it out you are going to pay income tax on it at whatever rate you pay taxes on income anyway.

When I have had a small corporation, I very often found it cheaper to leave it in the corporation than to take it out on a personal basis.

We assume the SBDC would have dividend income; interest on any debt, investments of any form or from the trust fund, and any management fees it may charge to companies with which it is affiliated would be treated as normal income by the SBDC.

Mr. Peterson: For which they will pay full rates—small business rates.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, because it is a small business.

Dividends are tax-free to the SBDC. There are a couple of technicalities in that, depending on whether the SBDC is public or private. If the member wishes to have those technicalities we can get into them, but the Income Tax Act covers them.

Interest income is naturally taxed in the SBDC and is deductible by the small business. Management fees are taxed as normal income in the SBDC.

I think that really clarifies the kind of things the honourable member was asking on the tax side, or I hope it does.

The next question was why there is a minimum of $250,000. Secondly, the member said $5 million is probably too little. I have said before we have chosen those limits believing they are practicable, hoping they are and realizing experience will tell us if they are not. They can be subject to change with the consent of this Legislature. We simply wanted to put the maximum on to prevent large corporations from using this as too convenient a vehicle.

The 40 per cent, 70 per cent investment requirement I think was questioned by both opposition critics. We want to ensure that capital on which the government has made a grant is put to work. That's why limits were put in, I think that's obvious. The venture investment corporations had an 80 per cent level; we dropped this to 70 per cent, hoping that 70 per cent would be realistic.

The 40 per cent requirement within one year we believe will be practical because we would assume that many SBDCs would have searched out potential investments almost in advance of being formed.

We do have discretion to relax the 40/70 limit if the minister of the day feels the SBDC is complying with the spirit of the act. There is some discretion should he feel they're doing their best and particular conditions have caused them not to be able to go ahead.

I hope that's covered some of the points. I would be glad to answer any others as time goes on.

Mr. Chairman: We'll now come back to the proper procedure of committee. Are there any questions, comments, or amendments?

On section 1:

Mr. Peterson: On section 1(8), how are you defining "affiliated corporation" in this act? What does that "affiliated corporation" mean?

Hon. F. S. Miller: "Affiliated" is spelled out here. I'd have to look for the section.

Mr. Peterson: I couldn't find it. I'm not saying it isn't here, but I couldn't find it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I went through it all a few minutes ago and I found the definition of affiliation. It's section 1(4)—do you have it there?

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the member for Brantford might proceed on section 1(1).

Mr. Makarchuk: While the member for London Centre is perusing his navel, I wonder if the minister could explain, on section 1(c), debt obligation, why he hasn't considered the idea of promissory notes or term notes being considered as a debt obligation. Is there some specific reason?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would assume that section 1(c) does permit those. It's spelled out there.

Mr. Makarchuk: Am I correct in understanding that the phrase "or other similar obligation" would include an ordinary promissory note?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. F. S. Miller moves that clause (c) of section 4 of the bill be amended by adding at the end thereof: "and not more than $5 million."

Mr. Peterson: Supposing someone comes and wants to create one for less than $250,000. Does the minister feel he has the discretion to allow that? Supposing it was a small venture in a small town? Would he feel he had that flexibility?

Hon. F. S. Miller: My impression is I would not have that flexibility under the act at the present time. And my staff are confirming that.

Mr. Peterson: Would you like to have that right now?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would rather not have right now. I would rather have a short while to see what kind of demand there is at this floor. I can only assure the member I will be pleased to come back to this House if either the member's party or the NDP or our own operation shows us this floor is too high.

Mr. Peterson: It's very important to me to understand who you feel are going to be the major takers on this proposition. Do you see that it's going to be a sort of populist capitalist movement in small towns of people participating in one company, the kind of investment club you described earlier in which you are a participant? Or do you see it as more large companies using it as a tax shelter device? Obviously, there is going to be a mixture of all of those? They will all look at it, I assume. In your conversations since you published the act and from the inquiries you have had I'm interested in whom you see principally using this device?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's not easy to be sure of. I sense there will be a number of large corporations willing to form SBDCs. That by itself does not worry me, because they must invest it in small corporations, that is the major purpose of this. But I sense that the greatest popular appeal will be to groups of friends in professions who wish to have other interests in life besides their own particular business and will find a vehicle of this type both an enjoyable exercise and a potentially good investment.

Around this province, I think you'll find many groups of businessmen who, without the benefit of a small business development corporation grant have entered into some kind of investment in their community. I just sense this will attract more of them to do that.

Mr. Peterson: To whom do you feel the small business development corporation will sell its shares in the small business? The majority shareholder or the people there now have the first call on that. Do you visualize a secondary market for shares in small companies? How do you see that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't really perceive a large secondary market in these companies because they're too small in most cases to do that. You may get the odd one that runs to the $5 million limit that tends to get a number of shareholders. Again, my little company, Santa's Village, is traded now because you've got up to 350 people, and at that point, to hand them out, the I'll-find-a-customer-for-my-shares approach doesn't work. You get to the point where somebody has to create a secondary market for you, and it's not too hard to find someone to create a secondary market when you get to that level.

Mr. Peterson: When an SBDC goes into a small business, do you see a lot of complicated, buy-sell guaranteed arrangements for getting in and out; for example, bringing on book values ahead of time and that kind of thing? Or is that something where you just say: "Look, let the marketplace take care of that. I just don't want to get involved ministerially." I guess you're not prepared to do that? I'm interested in your vision of how this will work. You haven't convinced me it's going to work yet.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's one where we have thought through the process and wondered whether we needed to try to complicate it by saying we would not allow guarantees, for example from the small company receiving it, when preferred shares are bought. We came to the conclusion that at this point we would rather allow the marketplace to try to determine what kind of agreements are made between sellers of shares and purchasers of those shares, rather than have us set down in concrete a bunch of rules that may not reflect the way the market is going to function.

Mr. Peterson: In that circumstance, you visualize the majority are going to go for supplementary letters patent and create a new class of preferred shares which is going to be the financing mechanism? In the majority of cases I gather that's how you see it; or it could be a common share thing or it could be some kind of interest-bearing share. In other words, it wouldn't be dividend-passing but it would be interest-passing.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It could be a dividend per share.

Mr. Peterson: It could be. There are all sorts of varieties of preferred shares; some are dividends. They could, theoretically, have some kind of security they pay interest on. Do you visualize that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would like to see—and my staff will be much more knowledgeable on this—the kinds of shares that may be issued by a corporation that had voting rights. I would like to see which of those were able to pay straight debt. I suspect that you've got an incompatible requirement there when there is a straight pass-through of interest without pretax being collected in the company paying that debt obligation.

I don't really see the preferred share being as attractive to most potential investors as the common. The preferred is a possible one, but I would gamble that most of the people getting into these corporations are gamblers to a degree. They are going to want to see the equity value go up, and as you know, with preferred shares in most cases that is not likely because of the obvious advantages preferred shares have by their very definition.

Mr. Peterson: You may be right, but you have created a problem that I want to discuss with you. At that stage, when you have issued, let's say for the sake of argument up to 49 per cent of the common shares to someone else, first of all you have diluted your own equity and you have driven your price-earnings ratio down, assuming there are earnings. Then when you do declare a dividend you cannot do a preferential dividend; you have to dividend out to all stockholders. Frequently, these little companies we are talking about are so squeezed for cash they don't want to declare a dividend and they can't treat one shareholder differently than they treat another shareholder.

I am just questioning the prospect of dividends in a lot of these cases. If they are all that successful that they are going to be making that money they probably wouldn't have to go to this kind of financing mechanism anyway, which very frankly is probably going to turn out to be a very expensive one for the small business.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Again, if the company elects to go the common share route, to purchase common shares in somebody else's company, the odds are very good they aren't going to want to drain it of cash unless it can afford to pay dividends. Even so, let's suppose for some reason or other the SBDC wanted a dividend paid in the company: first, it hasn't got control, so that the decision to pass the dividend through—

Mr. Laughren: They haven't got a majority.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are right, they haven't got a majority; I'll take that back, they may have control. They can make this kind of decision, if the SBDC shareholders through any persuasion or control convinced the small company it should pay a dividend and if the other shareholders really don't want that dividend, then they can use a very common mechanism. The dividend is paid and received by all shareholders because it must be. All shareholders of the class must receive it, but those who do not wish to retain it because of their interest in the small business can lend it back to the corporation under any terms and conditions they wish to. That is done reasonably regularly.

Does the member for Nickel Belt have another point?

Mr. Laughren: I was just paying tribute to a member in the gallery whom some people might not recognize, the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley).

Mr. Peterson: He is a great member.

Mr. Laughren: I just wanted to comment on what my colleague from London Centre was saying. While people might not want to give up equity, they may have no choice. Small businessmen do not willingly give up equity; they do so because they have to in order to achieve more capital in the enterprise.

What needs to be on the record is that we understand that people do not go to either a bank or an SBDC in order to get money unless they are to the wall to start with. Maybe that is an extreme way of putting it, but surely the problem with many of the small business enterprises is that when they do go to a traditional lending institution they are told: "You don't have sufficient equity in your enterprise, therefore we will not make a loan to you." The addition of money into the enterprise would then allow them to achieve a certain credibility in the financial institutions where they want to borrow money.

It is a problem if we only look at it as a problem for the business enterprise that does not want to give up equity without looking at the reasons why anyone would give up equity. In this case I think it is because they want to borrow money, while if they had their druthers they would druther not do it; but in fact they probably have no other choice.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, that's very true. The choice between a preference share and a common share in terms of the equity sold is important at that point, because the one has an easy route to be purchased back by the original company, therefore regaining their total ownership at some future time.

There's one other thing, though, that will make many a businessman be glad to get an equity partner or a preferred-share partner these days instead of going to the bank for a loan, even when the money is available. That is, at today's interest rates it's often cheaper—often it's the only way a company can survive—to avoid large payments on interest for a period of time.

One must recognize, as I said the other night, that because of the 30 per cent refund on a preferred share, if the coupon rate on a preferred share is say, 10 per cent—which would be high—then the return to the investor is in the range of 14.2 or 14.3 per cent. In effect, it's a mechanism for the investor in a preferred share to get the going rate of interest without necessarily charging the going rate of interest to the recipient.

I think there are a couple of advantages to small businesses in going this route. Many a company—and I think the summer resort business is a classic example of this—simply can't pay today's interest rates on borrowed capital.

Mr. Laughren: What do you know about that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I know a fair amount about that one.

Mr. Peterson: The minister is assuming that the SBDC will take a coupon rate on its preferred shares at less than market. I'm not sure that's a particularly valid assumption. I mentioned the other night—and I'm happy that my friend from Nickel Belt mentioned it tonight too, although we haven't got to that section yet—that I think the minister has really missed a bet by not allowing some debt participation.

When I was speaking on this the other night I determined that my friend the Minister of Transportation and Communications

(Mr. Snow), who is a very sophisticated businessman and brings a great deal of experience and success to this House, has quite a different philosophy of business than the minister's. Both ministers are successful, but he is of the view that he would never give away a share of equity.

We must have something to work with that kind of an entrepreneur, who wants to do it on his own, who doesn't want to divest himself of equity or to disperse his equity. I think my friend from Nickel Belt is right. I feel fairly strongly that the minister has missed an important bet, an important possibility of making this act workable—something I question anyway.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, I'm glad that the honourable member says I'm successful. I am broke but successful, because I have a great family, a nice life and a lot of other things.

Mr. Laughren: If you're successful, it's because your investments are in a blind trust.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's partly the case. No, they're with a blind trustee; there's a slight difference. However, let me only say this: We can argue for a long time, and I may have to come back into this House and tell the honourable member he was perfectly right—

Mr. Peterson: Would you promise to be humble when you do it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I promise to be humble. Am I not always humble?

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, I would like to raise a point as a matter of clarification. The member for London Centre says there will be no debt participation, but the minister is saying by definition that participation by debt will be permitted. As I can see it right now, what will be happening is that, instead of the SBDC becoming an equity corporation, I think the emphasis will be increasingly that the investment will be in terms of promissory notes. You can get it in both ways. The small businessman will be in a position to keep control of his corporation without having somebody tell him; at the same time, extra cash might be available to him at a more or less reasonable rate, or a more reasonable rate than what's available now.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The limitation on the debt is in the percentage of the total capital in the SBDC permitted to be in that form, and in the legislation that is limited to 30 per cent of the total invested capital. Seventy per cent must be in eligible investments of the equity type. I think that's the correct figure.

Motion agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: That completes section 4. There is an amendment to section 9. Are there any comments on sections 5 to 9?

On section 5:

Mr. Makarchuk: I have something on section 5(4). What happens if there are groups of people involved in setting up an SBDC—this is assuming the operation has been in existence for a while—and all of a sudden it is decided that funds will be cut off, that there will be no more government funds available for the 30 per cent? Is it going to be advertised that “This is your last chance,” or “You have got 30 days,” or something; or by a cutoff date for any new SBDCs to come on stream? Otherwise, some people may have gone part way, gone through the legal formalities, have lined up the money and everything else, and then find out that they have been cut off.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would hope that the honourable member would realize that is a mechanism by which this House will have some measure of control over the money spent on SBDCs in future years, because it will become a budget item in a ministry vote, and as such an amount of money would be set each year.

Mr. Makarchuk: It is not in this year's budget.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, it isn't in this year's. It is in my ministry vote this year under the Employment Development Fund money. It is not set as a specific line item because in this first year we are not able to set a figure for it; but this is the mechanism by which one stays within a vote and item number in government. It is the kind of control we expect on all governmental spending; otherwise it could be completely open-ended.

Obviously, we would have to advise corporations that the budget funds had been used up if, as and when the budget in any one year had been totally used. I don't know that one would be able to advertise 30 days in advance, because in fact what is the use of doing that if the applications already coming on stream can't be handled. One would simply have to say, through the process of registration, that the registration can be accepted and can be used in the next budget year but it couldn't be used in the immediate budget year.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is the element of concern here, the fact that there will be some people who will be going through the process of setting it up, will almost complete the whole operation and then be told by the government, “You are too late, we haven't got the funding”, or, “We have cut out the funding.”

We have seen this happen in other programs. The home repair program is a good example, where the people are told, “Yes. funds will be available for repairs to your home from the government.” They go ahead, they get the estimates, do all the things that have to be done in order to qualify; they fill in the forms, send them in and then are told, “There is no funding available.” That gets them annoyed and everybody else annoyed, and people become rather concerned about the whole function of government.

What I am asking here is that surely some kind of mechanism can be installed so people who are embarking on an SBDC will know that they have got the chance to go through the thing, put it together, and that funding will be available from the government; otherwise they could be told, “You are cut off. This is the date you are cut off,” and that's it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Again, that kind of problem can be found in almost every vote in this House in that there can be demands in excess of the amount this House allots for a vote.

Obviously, through the mechanisms of Management Board, the Minister of Revenue has the right to recommend changes in the amount of money, and if Management Board, in its wisdom, says that the program is worthy of a supplementary vote, fine. If it is given extra moneys that are found in somebody else's vote, fine.

There can be no fiscal responsibility in government—I quite agree if we are getting to the point where we are oversubscribed we have a responsibility at that point to let it be as widely known as possible so that people won't be going through the motions only to find the money was gone before they started. That is not easy to do in this world, because I think we would have to admit one could put advertisements in every paper in this province and still have people miss that fact.

Mr. Laughren: The reason I am concerned about this section is that it is self-serving. It has nothing to do with the fact of whether or not it is a good piece of legislation, or whether or not the small business community will be attracted to this. The reason I say it is self-serving is that no one will ever be able to say to the Treasurer of the province of Ontario. “Your program was a success,” or, “Your program was a failure.” That is why the Treasurer has it in here in such an open-ended fashion. If he doesn't put a ceiling on it, how can anyone say to him, "Your program was a failure"? Nobody can say it.

The Treasurer frowns. I notice he is doing that more often lately.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is the job.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, it is the job.

Mr. Makarchuk: Is the pay good?

Mr. Laughren: There must be a ceiling on this program. I don't believe the Treasurer has that kind of authority in the government that he can have a program without a ceiling.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is what I am trying to say, there is a ceiling.

Mr. Laughren: What is the ceiling?

Hon. F. S. Miller: We tried to explain that in this first year we have not got a specific vote in a budget. I have $200 million in an Employment Development Fund. I have mentally set aside $20 million for this purpose, hoping it will be used for this current year. I think the size of a future year's allocation will be a measure of whatever priorities government is giving to economic stimulation that year, plus the measure of the demand in the business world for this kind of SBDC.

I think I can paraphrase Mr. Parizeau when he said in his budget he didn't know how much it would cost him for his program this year, but he hoped it would cost a lot because he wanted to see it work.

Mr. Peterson: It cost him nothing because it was a dog. That program of Parizeau's is a dog. It's not a dog, it is un chien.

Mr. Laughren: I understand the Treasurer wants it to cost a lot. It does seem to me you are saying the program has a mental—for lack of a better term—figure of $20 million you think will be spent on it. Are you telling us if it goes above $20 million it will not be allowed? Are you telling us the Employment Development Fund really only has $180 million in it? What are you telling us about this program? Is it directly subtracted from the EDF?

Hon. Mr. Miller: Mr. Chairman, this is an employment development function too, and as such I think it is as useful, and perhaps even more useful.

Mr. Laughren: How many jobs?

Hon. F. S. Miller: How can one say how many jobs are going to be in any one corporation?

Mr. Laughren: What is your prediction? You've got $20 million in money, how much in jobs?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact is that $20 million of our money would mean 2.33 times that many dollars of investors' money. That would be $47 million, so that would be $67 million going out before we spend $20 million. Is that right?

Mr. Laughren: Something like that.

Mr. Peterson: Some of these companies are in existence.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Okay, but that is $67 million of extra investment capital.

Mr. Peterson: They will sell some shares and pay off the bank.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is possible, but again that is replacing debt by equity. I think the honourable member would tend to agree that no one would do that in a small company unless they had very good business reasons for doing it, for all the reasons the member just spelled out a few minutes ago. Anytime I can borrow money at the bank and can afford it I am like my colleague, I am not selling shares to other people except where I have a reason to give an employee an incentive to be my employee. In each of the businesses I have owned I have always sold 49 per cent of the shares to the person who manages my business at whatever cash they have because I get the most competent, loyal, interested, low-paid—no that last one isn't correct—

Mr. Makarchuk: That was the accurate one.

Hon. F. S. Miller: —partners possible.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Chairman, what is bothering me about this, and I am glad the minister is coming around to it finally, is there is not a single proviso in this whole legislation that talks about job creation. I suspect the minister would agree that is a very serious problem in Ontario. There needs to be job creation. If there was job creation there would be the spinoff benefits of job creation which we don't need to detail here. [8:45]

Mr. Peterson: Save that for your main speech.

Mr. Laughren: No, but the Treasurer has made absolutely no projections at all on the number of jobs to be created. There is absolutely nothing in the bill that says a company can't accept the money from an SBDC and invest it in another SBDC as a corporation.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think you are wrong.

Mr. Laughren: No; I am not wrong. If the SBDC puts $100,000 in a business, that business can then take that $100,000—there is no requirement that they expand the operation or reduce their debt—invest it as a corporation in another SBDC, and receive a 30 per cent write-down on its corporation tax in the following year by investing in another SBDC. That other SBDC then invests in a company, and that company can then invest in yet another SBDC and have a 30 per cent write-down.

That's what is bothering me about it. While we are supporting the bill in principle we can see enormous potential for kiting of funds from one place to another. Surely that should be a worry to the Treasurer.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will get a legal opinion on that in a second. That is the kind of thing I am not going to offer an opinion on until I have had a lawyer send me a note on it.

Mr. Laughren: Would you be worried if I am right?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can only say this: I suppose it is conceivable that some money invested in a small business will by its nature—Yes, section 9(d)(i) prevents reinvestment of the money. I was pretty sure we had it plugged.

Let's get away from your chain-letter type of thinking for a second and talk about what happens to money put into small corporations. The amount of money required to create a job varies greatly from industry to industry.

Mr. Laughren: Half a million dollars in some cases.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Sure. I have seen it even more than that. In the big petrochemical plants in the Sarnia area, I believe the cost is $1 million per job. We are now talking of very highly automated, capital-intensive companies. Most of Ontario's small businesses are not as capital intensive as that. If one looked at the tourist industry 10 years ago we estimated that $5,000 to $6,000 created a job. I would guess today it would be closer to $15,000 per job created.

In most instances, when a company receives an infusion of capital it will do something with that capital like buy a machine or add on to the premises. Almost everytime that addition requires extra people; there are very few instances where you can simply use capital without labour.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Chairman, I think I am jumping ahead when I respond to the Treasurer here. He implied that my comments about the reinvestment of funds was covered by section 9(d). I don't believe that's correct. I suspect the Treasurer got that information by a memo from his staff, but section 9(d) says that the investment must not be used by the small business for the purpose of relending. I think that's what they are hanging their hat on.

Investing in another SBDC is surely not "relending." It is an investment by a company in another corporation. I doubt if that would be legally interpreted as a lending operation. I could be wrong; I am not a lawyer, thank God. But I really wonder if that is the proper interpretation. I don't see it being covered under section 9(d)(ii), or 9(d)(iii), or 9 (e).

Hon. F. S. Miller: If the honourable member is in doubt, or if our lawyers on examination of 9(d)(i) feel he has a valid point, and he may have, I am certainly willing to see that an amendment be put in there to clarify it for him.

Section 5 agreed to.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Makarchuk: Would the minister indicate what coercive powers he will exert on the SBDC if, at the end of the first year, they haven't got their 40 per cent out and at the end of the second year they haven't got their 70 per cent? What action is he going to take against them? How is he going to do it?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, if I'm not wrong, there are a couple of sections that will deal with that. Section 8 deals with the trust moneys and would allow us to deregister a company and take back the amounts of moneys given to the shareholders as a grant, if I'm not wrong. Also, section 28 sets out conditions under which we can deregister a company if it hasn't managed to meet our targets, and also where the spirit of trying to meet them has not been visible.

Do you remember I said earlier there would be a discretionary power for the Minister of Revenue to decide if there were good reasons?

Mr. Peterson: That's putting a lot of pressure on the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck).

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let's be honest. If there isn't at times the right to use discretion then very often some silly but required statutory moves are taken. I don't think you'll find the civil service, which would recommend those kinds of things to the minister, would do it lightly, unless they had a good reason to recommend a waiver of the 40 per cent/70 per cent sections.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, again what concerns me is you could deregister the SBDC, but isn't that really in a sense defeating the whole purpose of the operation? It leaves in your hands some rather arbitrary powers, sort of ministerial discretion or civil servant's discretion, and it again leaves things up in the air.

The investor, the person who will be putting money into the SBDC, may be under a certain amount of apprehension with the knowledge that if they do not get their 40 per cent of the funds out in the first year they could be delisted and the whole thing falls apart. They would have to turn back the 30 per cent and everything else. After going through all the rigmarole of setting up the corporation with all the legal requirements to fulfil, et cetera, they're behind the eight ball; they would be losing money strictly because the minister has this kind of discretion.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, there are also abuses open in the other direction. I think one has to have a balance so people couldn't use an SBDC as a convenient vehicle to get their 30 per cent cash rebate and invest in Canada Savings Bonds or a trust account with certificates of deposit paying 10.25 per cent—or whatever the rate may be on a given day—effectively giving them, say 15 per cent and not achieving any of our goals. Therefore, there has to be a requirement for investment in eligible investments. The only counterbalancing force would be the right to appeal, to say "We are unable to meet those criteria at this point because of the following reasons, which are valid." I have enough trust in our system to believe that will function fairly.

Mr. Peterson: We've already discussed the 40 per cent 70 per cent and we all have little problems with it. I don't know what more we can say, but I want the minister to explain to me how he figures, and I know it's only partially on this section, but let's discuss it now, the trust fund payout is going to work.

The money goes into the SBDC, there's 30 per cent set aside in trust. It semi-relates here, maybe we can discuss it here or maybe you would rather discuss it with section 8, it relates to the two.

When is the minister going to release that trust? At the point the 40 per cent is released the first year or at the point the 70 per cent is released? How does that relate to when you're going to pay the guy back his 30 per cent bonus for investing?

Hon. F. S. Miller: If you read section 8(2) I think it explains the mechanism by which the release is made. It says: "The minister shall permit payment from the trust fund of an amount equal to three-sevenths of the purchase price by the small business development corporation to acquire any eligible investment, provided that the minister is satisfied . . ."

As the company starts investing from day one, as I would read it, they are able to get that money back. In most cases you won't be dribbling your money. You will be making discreet purchases in companies for considerable amounts of money. Each time you put $50,000 or $100,000 into the company you would then get back three-sevenths of your trust fund or it would be released on that basis.

Mr. Peterson: When do you get the thing back from the government?

Hon. F. S. Miller: When do you get it back from the government?

Mr. Peterson: There's a section in here that says on registration, I believe. I was wondering about the timing of the three things.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Let me try and find the section. It's in here quite a bit further on, as I recall. I may have to have somebody who has written the bill tell me the section number. Payment of grants, section 21, I think that's the one we're going to talk about. Do you mean how you get your 30 per cent?

Mr. Peterson: Yes.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's in section 21, as I understand it. I'm looking for confirmation. That's right, yes. The details will be there. If you want to discuss it when we get there, fine.

Mr. Peterson: I'm just trying to relate the three things. I thought this was a good chance to explain the point at which I make my investment in the SBDC related to the time I get my cheque back from the government, related to the time the SBDC makes its investment in a small business. How does that relate to the time when the money is released from the trust? It seems to me the timing of all of that is important. I don't pretend to be able to relate all of those sections together. My point is, if the guy is not going to get his 30 per cent back for two years or until such time as the investment is being made, or coming up to the 70 per cent level, you can see that the immediate reinforcement is somewhat delayed, and like a Pavlovian dog, he will react a little later than he is supposed to. Can you help me out with that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can't give you an exact timing on it. I would like you to read section 21 carefully.

Mr. Peterson: I read it, that's why I asked you.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Okay. It doesn't prescribe times. It says: "The minister may pay a grant equal to 30 per cent of the amount of money actually paid by the applicant to the small business development corporation for equity shares." That, to me, would mean, I would think, on acceptance of the registration of the company. I would guess that's the time. Yes, I'm told that's right.

Mr. Peterson: Your administrative plan then is to get that bonus back as quickly as possible upon the registration of the SBDC. I wanted that clearly on the record.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's possible, because the 30 per cent is held in that trust fund so the risk is not that great. That is, 30 per cent of the invested capital of the SBDC remains in trust if they don't go ahead and make any investments. We always have something against which we can lay claim if that company doesn't try to reinvest its money.

Mr. Peterson: The only thing I can't understand is at what point is the person entitled to invest 100 per cent in the trust fund?

Hon. F. S. Miller: He can invest 100 per cent. I think the three-sevenths ratio soon runs you out of money. The three-sevenths ratio, if my mathematicians have done their work correctly, will exhaust the trust fund as you reach 100 per cent of the invested capital.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does any other member wish to speak on section 7? Shall section 7 stand as part of the bill?

Mr. Peterson: No.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: You're not satisfied yet?

Mr. Peterson: Maybe I'm sort of crazy, but I just want to pursue this a bit. At the point the SBDC has invested, assuming they invest 100 per cent, the trust fund has been paid out, or at least it's been dispersed; what protection does the government have if there is something untoward going on? The whole object of the trust fund was to protect your investment in the original investor. What is your protection at that point except you can sort of move in on the SBDC and take its assets or the shares it holds in other companies? Do you have any ideas on that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I let my mind wander for a second, Mr. Chairman, I was thinking of an answer to another question. I'm sorry I didn't hear you pose it clearly enough.
[9:00]

Mr. Peterson: I didn't pose it very clearly because I don't understand it. I thank you for giving me another opportunity to do the same.

We have these provisions in the act to pay out on the trust fund on a specified ratio. The reason for the trust fund is to protect the government's interest in the little bonus or prize they give to the investor, but that protection the government holds is gone as soon as all that money has been paid out. As soon as you have qualified and you have gone up to more than 70 per cent then you can invest the rest in equities, or whatever, of other small businesses, the small business or whatever. My point being, what protection does the Ontario government have if there is something untoward at that point? It doesn't have any access to a liquid pool of cash to get its money back.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are clauses in here that we have for the winding up of a company, and we have clauses requiring an average amount of money of 70 per cent to be retained in eligible investments. I think it is section 24, recovery of grant or tax, that would apply to the winding up of a corporation, it spells out the amounts we get back, because in not every case will the company make a profit; they can go bankrupt and we won't get anything back. But you realize when we wind up these corporations we get our 30 per cent back.

Mr. Peterson: How do you get it back?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Section 24 spells that out if you want to go through it. In other words, it is a deferral of tax. If you leave a corporation existing for ever, we never get our money back. But if the company wants to wind up its investment and wind up the SBDC, then that money is no longer available for placement in the market and, therefore, no longer should the credit apply. There is a mechanism then, if the company winds up its assets, to get back the 30 per cent, because they are no longer complying with the intent of our policy. You can understand that, if you didn't have a clause like that in there, you could have people who could wind up a company very quickly, having achieved their objective of gaining 30 per cent and, in effect, disappear.

Mr. Peterson: So you are just making a loan to the investor.

Hon. F. S. Miller: You are, in effect, making a loan to the investor of 30 per cent at zero interest, as long as he leaves the moneys in the marketplace.

Mr. Makarchuk: He could still disappear, but by the time you catch him it would be too late.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Sure.

Section 7 agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. F. S. Miller moves section 9(1)(c) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"(c) the investment is the purchase and acquisition from a small business by the small business development corporation of equity shares issued by the small business, but where the equity shares are issued as part of a transaction involving the purchase or redemption, directly or indirectly, of any previously issued equity shares of the small business or an affiliated corporation, the investment is an eligible investment only to the extent that the investment represents net new equity capital calculated in the manner prescribed."

Hon. F. S. Miller: That mouthful really prevents companies from buying back a class of shares, reissuing another class of shares, and having somebody claim 30 per cent without any more money having gone into the company. It simply cleans up the wording of the section we had here. The intent is the same, but the lawyers in looking at it claimed we should rephrase it.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak on section 9(1)(a). This is a matter that was raised in the speeches. What assurance does the Treasurer have, despite his statement that it has to be resident in Ontario, Canada and so on, that he can prevent the setting up of quasi-Canadian corporations—front companies, really—which in effect are paying a great deal of their income in terms of some other means, outside of wages and salaries, to a foreign corporation. They could be management fees, licence fees, patent fees, royalties, et cetera.

Those are the other avenues available, and that is a problem right now in terms of whether we have some control over whether the corporations are paying their fair share of taxes because they are in the position to manipulate the internal pricing within the thing. Although it ostensibly will be a Canadian or an Ontario corporation, it can still be milked dry or be a front for a foreign operation, and really you're not any further ahead. They still have, in addition to that, received the advantage of the 30 per cent grant from the government.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The kind of problems the honourable member describes certainly exist in the multinationals where they are either totally owned by a foreign company or controlled by one. In a case like this, we have two clauses in the act. One is the section to which he is referring that says,

"75 per cent of the salaries must be paid in Ontario." That doesn't protect ownership at all.

A second section a little further on—it's section 9(f)(i)—says: "An eligible investment is a small business in which no more than 25 per cent of the total number of issued and outstanding equity shares of the corporation are owned by foreigners, and no more than 10 per cent owned by any one person." I would have to say under those conditions, with the limitation of 10 per cent in one individual's hands and a sum total in foreigners' hands of 25 per cent, the kind of agreement you just talked about becomes almost academic. I won't say there won't be legitimate charges for a royalty or a patent right of some type, but the likelihood one is transferring moneys to another tax jurisdiction almost totally disappears.

Mr. Makarchuk: I won't argue with that. My legal knowledge isn't that profound, and my consultant, Mr. Warner, is in agreement with me. It's like the Bank of Sark, if you remember the story, where they had the office upstairs and the waitress who worked in the restaurant downstairs occasionally answered the phone and she was the Bank of Sark. They channelled through countless, well not countless, but many millions of dollars in the process. This, it seems to me, despite the fact you've got the shareholders and so on, offers no protection. Assuming they were paying it out in equity or in dividends, et cetera, then there is some control, but it seems to me there is no protection in this legislation for the kind of milking that can happen and does happen. Right now, it happens, with the multinationals with their branch plants; and I'm glad the minister acknowledges that as a fact.

It still seems to me this can happen in this bit of legislation. I'm not sure what kind of an amendment we could put in this, but perhaps it could be something to the effect that the payment in royalties, patents, research fees, et cetera and so on to a foreign corporation shall not exceed more than 25 per cent of the total salaries and wages, or something of that nature. That would put in a restriction. Whether the figure of 25 per cent is a proper figure or a fair figure or one that will not hinder the operation is something very difficult to ascertain at this time. I feel there should be some concern about this, and, although at this time the minister is not prepared to do something about it, it's something that should be watched.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We'll watch it.

Mr. Makarchuk: We should be certain it is an Ontario operation and the money does stay in Ontario, or the great percentage of it stays in Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I agree, our intentions are the same. We will watch it, and if we felt the protections built in in terms of ownership weren't adequate then I think we'd have to consider other means.

Mr. Peterson: One more time for the record, I want to say I think the prescribed list may be a little tight. One of the problems, of course, as was said before, is as soon as a company is successful there are no longer eligible investments. We want to encourage labour intensive industries here and manufacturing is a questionable term. Who knows what manufacturing means these days?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm listening.

Mr. Peterson: There are various different gradations of it. I think we should be a little more flexible and I think we should also consider some kinds of service industries. After all, we're looking for employment, which is the fundamental object of this act, and I think we're being a little tight. Number two, I would like to see a loosening of the act in terms of investing in the debt of prescribed companies.

Number three, the fact you can only own 49 per cent is also a limitation that may or may not, over a period of time, be a hindrance in this particular case. It certainly prevents some of the bigger syndicates from becoming involved, and it is something I think we will have to take note of and maybe look at a year from now if this bill comes back before the House. But that is just for the record, because I don't know the answers to those questions any better than the Treasurer does.

Would you explain to me what 9(1)(g) means?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Just by coincidence, Mr. Chairman, that is what I was over talking to the lawyers about.

The wording to me, as a non-legal person, is difficult to interpret. The other night I asked my lawyers about it because you brought it up in your opening comments, and I guess there are times when I have to trust them.

Mr. Makarchuk: You know what Shakespeare said about lawyers, don't you?

Hon. F. S. Miller: What did he say, Mac?

Mr. Makarchuk: He said first we shoot all the lawyers—or kill them.

Mr. Martel: You know what Bob Nixon said about the lawyers. Take all their QCs away from them.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The clause there allows us to prevent some of the things the member for Nickel Belt referred to earlier—that was the reinvestment of an SBDC into an SBDC, et cetera—because we are able, through regulations, to prescribe the classes that would not qualify.

Mr. Peterson: This gives you the power to prescribe what won't qualify, as opposed to what will qualify. So you are going to have a list of everything in the whole world that won't qualify.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, no, no. I think we could by exception name a non-qualifying company. In other words, if it wasn't listed it doesn't mean it doesn't qualify; but if we specifically say this doesn't qualify, it doesn't.

Mr. Peterson: Is this common wording in other acts that allows you, if you don't like one particular chap or you figure he is violating it, to name him?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes. It is called a basket clause.

Mr. T. P. Reid: From a basket case?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is the kind of phraseology that my lawyers tell me has been acceptable to cover eventualities that may arise and may require a regulation to cover them. I think the honourable member for Nickel Belt named the very kind of thing that would be required.

Mr. Laughren: How do we know that is going to happen?

Mr. Peterson: Would that be a specifically drawn regulation? Could you give me an example? I don't think it does cover the kind of thing my friend from Nickel Belt was asking about.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am saying a regulation would be written to prescribe that. In other words, we can write a regulation saying a small company can't—

Mr. Laughren: I want it to say that the member for Nickel Belt will decide which corporations are eligible.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is certainly more specific.

Mr. Peterson: I am going to try it one more time, and I will read it:

"An investment shall be an eligible investment if the small business is not of a type prescribed by regulation."

So that means that under this section you can draw up regulations to say who will not be eligible.

Hon. F. S. Miller: May I say to the honourable member, since I am not a lawyer either I have had trouble, as he is having trouble, reading the English and getting the interpretation from it that my lawyers assure me is there.

Mr. Martel: You are bringing it in and you are not sure?

Hon. F. S. Miller: All right. Look, my friend, I know the limitations of some of my abilities—some of my abilities, or some of my limitations.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Didn't you talk to that corporation lawyer from Sudbury?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I want only to say this: in the next few minutes I will have three of them consult over here. If, in fact, what they have been telling me is not so, I guarantee you that we will come back to it before we pass this bill tonight. Is that fair enough?

Mr. Peterson: Can we set that one aside?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, I will be glad to set it aside, or come back to it, as we see fit. We have the most competent of all the legal people in Ontario sitting over there, so I am sure he will guide us.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Well, we will set aside the whole section and come back to it.

On section 10:

Mr. Peterson: This is one I have got to come back to.

"A small business development corporation shall maintain its assets in eligible investments"—well, we have already established that—"liquid reserves"—okay—"equity shares that were eligible investments at the time they were acquired by such small business development corporation"—fair enough—"debt obligations of any small business that is an eligible investment, or such other form as may be prescribed."

[9:15]

This allows an SBDC to invest up to 30 per cent—i.e., the non-70 per cent part—in the debt obligation of a small company. So, in fact, it allows them to go in with a package of debt and equity, or it allows them to invest—Why do you need that? Why is that clause important in there? Why not just say "debt obligations of any business?" That could be an SBDC or it could invest in the debt of any other company, could it not? Couldn't a small business development corporation buy Hydro bonds?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Not the way that reads. I don't think that would be a liquid reserve by my definition.

Mr. Peterson: As a liquid reserve it would qualify.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It could be prescribed, but it is not as such.

Mr. Peterson: What do "liquid reserves" mean?

Hon. F. S. Miller: We would have to go to an accountant to get a proper definition, but I would have thought that bonds did not qualify.

Mr. Peterson: I think they do.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Bank accounts, certificates of deposit, those things which can be immediately made into money.

Mr. Peterson: So can stock of Bell Telephone.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Bell Telephone stock cannot be put into cash at a predictable price.

Mr. Peterson: Is the Treasurer telling me that is the legal definition of "liquid reserves"?

Mr. Laughren: I would like to propose a toast to free enterprise. Look at those two pretending they are free enterprisers.

Mr. Peterson: What is the Treasurer suggesting the 30 per cent trust fund be invested in? Suppose they are in a hiatus period.

Hon. F. S. Miller: First of all, they may be simply keeping themselves partly liquid, waiting for another equity investment. Therefore, in that period of time they may wish to keep it in something like a bank certificate of deposit, which would by my definition qualify as a liquid reserve. Secondly, they may wish to do what the honourable member suggested in his speech under the second reading, that is, make a package mixed up of equity and debt instruments for a specific company. That is why clause (d) refers to debt obligations of companies that are eligible, rather than debt obligations of any company, such as the member mentioned in the case of Hydro or Bell Canada.

Mr. Peterson: I just want to make sure I agree with the Treasurer on this. I am addressing this to the lawyers on the bench. Are you telling me that trust fund cannot invest in a treasury bill for example? That is not liquid.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The trust fund could. The moneys in the trust fund are quite different from the moneys that have been released from the trust fund. That is the only difference. In the trust fund we have it in a form that we can get it in a hurry, whereas once the company has reached its 70 per cent equity level it is free to either invest the other 30 per cent in equity or to invest it in these forms of debt.

Mr. Peterson: But the Treasurer can see there is going to be a time lag. We have two years to invest up to 70 per cent. I think the realities of the marketplace are that in some instances at least somebody will form one of these things, collect all the money and be sitting there looking around for investments. What are they going to do with that money sitting in the pot while they are waiting for the right deal?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Again, it can earn interest while it is waiting. The interest accrues to the small business development corporation; it does not accrue to anybody else, it does not accrue to the government.

Mr. Peterson: But they cannot buy Bell Telephone stock.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No.

Mr. Laughren: Is the Treasurer not worried that he is undermining the private enterprise system?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Mr. Laughren: I really worry about that. I wonder how the Treasurer can sit there one day talking about the virtues of the free enterprise system while the next day he gives a 30 per cent write-off to people who invest in it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: As the member for Nickel Belt knows, I am really a member of his party. He should not be exposing my real colours.

Mr. T. P. Reid: With some of the crazy people they've got in that party you could get in.

Mr. Laughren: We have often talked, in this party, about the need to stimulate the private sector. Here we are, socialists, and we have never had the audacity to come out and say that we will give 30 per cent right off the top and after that they can earn profits in whatever they invest in.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You sound like a free enterpriser.

Mr. Laughren: That really does my head in. But there he is, he sits there extolling the virtues of the free enterprise system and saying to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business: "Look, we believe in the free enterprise system. We believe that the private sector can exist with less government intervention. If only governments could get out of the free enterprise system, then the free enterprise system would function the way it is supposed to." Don't get me going. Rule me out of order, Mr. Chairman, before I get rhetorical.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm on your side. Just cool off.

May I just point out that the point raised by the member for London Centre was accepted by the legal staff and there will be an amendment to section 9(g) to clean up the wording so that you and I can understand it. I can table that now and go back to that section, since we deferred it a few moments ago, with my other amendment, if you wish.

Mr. Chairman: We are on section 10 at the moment.

Mr. Makarchuk: On section 10(1)(d), the reference to, "debt obligations of any small business"; I may be reading this wrong, but what is there to prevent me from lending the money to the small business development corporation and then borrowing it back from them? I have got my money and I've got my 30 per cent. This is the way it appears. It is as if private enterprise has run amok in a situation like this.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No. It says quite specifically, "debt obligations of any small business that is an eligible investment." Therefore you can't be lending it back to the original shareholders. They are covered by a whole bunch of clauses that discuss affiliates, associates, et cetera, to prevent that kind of thing.

Section 10 agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. F. S. Miller moves that section 9(1) (g) be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "(g) the investment is made in a small business that is not of a type prescribed by the regulations."

Mr. Laughren: You are going to have to explain the difference.

Mr. Lawlor: I hate to intervene at this very late stage of these proceedings, but why the hell isn't there a wider range? You are restricting it to manufacturing and prescribed tourist activities, et cetera. The people who came into my law office in the old days when I had such a thing and who are still in the constituency are in service industries of divers types. I don't think you should place the weight there by any means, economically speaking what we need is manufacturing; nevertheless, the growth of jobs and the future expansion of the economy to a very considerable degree rely upon that.

In the prescribed sphere at least, who does the minister not designate and elaborate? Not every hotdog stand in the province can have an investment potential here, nevertheless many people in quasi-manufacturing—the division between the service and the manufacturing is a very amorphous thing, I think. Sometimes in the little plant out there, they call it a service industry, they are providing what are fundamentally services, yet there's an element of manufacturing context. They're making new products, whether they're napkins or whatever; sometimes they're quite inventive. That's where the gravamen of much of the future development of this province lies, yet in this legislation as I read it and as I say, I'm one of the latter-day saints in the matter—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Later or latter?

Mr. Lawlor:—having hardly even read the legislation. Nevertheless, I would like an answer on that in order to satisfy myself that the legislation has even a modicum of common sense.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, the very fact I moved it indicates it has a modicum of common sense. You would admit probably that's all it indicates.

The truth is, this was discussed at some length in the discussions as to what kinds of businesses should be encouraged. We could swing, and we did, all the way from why not let them invest in any small business anywhere, be it a grocery store, be it a hardware store, be it a marina—which I think would be covered under tourist activities in my definition—be it a plumber's business, those kinds of things. In fact, we believe it is quite easy, through subclause (iv) of clause (b), to widen the terms of reference for the kinds of businesses that will become eligible investments as experience dictates.

We set our first priorities as these types of investments, not necessarily ruling out the willingness to go to others if there was not enough demand for investments in these kinds or if we concluded we should be stimulating others. But with relatively scarce funds, one might say, one would like to see them go into these categories first of all, since we believe there are more real creators of wealth within the economy.

We leave the option open under that one section to expand as experience allows us to make those choices.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: There was a previous motion amending section 9(1)(c).

Motion agreed to.

Section 9, as amended, agreed to.

Section 11 agreed to.

On section 12:

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have an amendment to section 12, to get rid of some redundant wording.

Mr. Ruston: The bill is all redundant.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. F. S. Miller moves that clause (a) of section 12(3) of the bill be amended by striking out at the end thereof: "and none of the shareholders are associates or affiliated corporations."

Mr. Peterson: I'd like your interpretation of section 12(2). In your opinion, does this mean that no business can invest in someone with whom they have either a buying or selling relationship?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That section really prevents sweetheart deals, where you could become the only shareholder of an SBDC. You can invest in 49 per cent of a little company and say: "Okay, my condition for investing is you buy everything you need of a certain product from me because I own or have an interest in such and such a company." What we're saying, in that section, as I understand it, is that unless the company is widely held, i.e., you own 10 per cent or less you may not do business with a company in which an SBDC of which you're a shareholder owns shares.

Mr. Peterson: That's my understanding too, but someone with whom I've chatted and who is very keen on this whole thing and thought it was wonderful said, "Gee, I already know companies that want to set up SBDCs to invest in their suppliers." I hasten to point out to them, because they will probably read Hansard, that's clearly prevented in section 12(2) as I read it. I just want a confirmation from the minister.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I can see it being a genuine way of milking a relationship. Yes, I would say that if there were strenuous objections I'd be willing to delete it, but I think the protection is better in than out for the time being.

Mr. Lawlor: What you're taking out, as far as you're concerned, is a redundant clause. In 12(1)(a), you've already excluded a major shareholder, which you're defining in this particular context, and then, you go on to say, "or an affiliated corporation or an associate."

There are good reasons for conflicts of interest and for playing with the moneys that are available from the government by way of collusive practices and what not. When you come to define major shareholders you're saying the ground is already covered in the previous clause and therefore it is not necessary. Is that correct?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think you're referring to a different section, apart from my amendment. The amendment I just proposed does refer back to words already contained in 12(1)(a). It talks about 12(3)(a) and not 12(2).

Mr. Lawlor: That's what I say, you're defining major shareholders and you don't feel that the extended definition that you've given to that is necessary in the 12(3)(a) context, because the ground has already been covered. Is that correct?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes.

Mr. Makarchuk: On that same section: On the one hand I can see the concern and the need to prevent sweetheart deals because they're receiving public funds. However on the other hand, as the minister well knows a lot of business operations do not necessarily operate on the sweetheart deal but operate on the principle of "I'll scratch your back and you scratch mine. I'll buy from you and you'll buy from me, and we'll all exchange a lot of things." That goes on all the time. If you've been out selling industrial supplies you really see the situation.

On the one hand I can see the concern, but on the other hand if I may take the other side—

Mr. Laughren: I don't think you need to.

Mr. Makarchuk: —in this case I could argue quite reasonably that to encourage or possibly channel some of this public funding into the small businessman or let the small businessman get some advantage that 10 per cent limitation might not be the best figure in the book. It's an absolutely safe figure, I would say.

Mr. Ruston: Conservatism, the NDP slogan.

Mr. Makarchuk: On the other hand, the minister knows and I know the reality out there is that there is a sweetheart deal going on all the time.

Mr. Bradley: Another form of socialism.

Motion agreed to.

Section 12, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 13 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 21:

Mr. Laughren: Have we gone all that way?

Hon. F. S. Miller: We did call the sections. I will gladly back up if there is something you wish to cover.

Mr. Laughren: I was just wondering about a point on section 17.

Mr. Chairman: Does the committee agree to go back to section 17?

Agreed.

On section 17:

Mr. Laughren: I am stretching the leniency of the chair here. I am sure, but I am worried about ensuring that all information pertaining to SBDCs is available to people who have a concern about them. In section 17 we are talking about the SBDCs filing with the minister, in the form that the minister prescribes, information that he wishes.

What I am concerned about is that the minister—the Ministry of Revenue, I believe, is the ministry maintaining the files on the SBDCs; I may be wrong but I think that is correct—I am concerned that there be some way for the individual investor out there to find out through the Ministry of Revenue just what is available through SBDCs, what SBDCs are investing in what kinds of small business, so that there is what the economist would call more information on the buyer of the service. I am worried about it becoming a closed shop kind of operation, if you will pardon the expression, within the investing community.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would have to check the rules on private corporations, but I thought they had the right to refuse to divulge that kind of information as part of the rules, and that we weren't doing anything specific here except making sure that changes affecting the basic owner's investment portfolio were duly reported to the Minister of Revenue for purposes of making sure the requirements of this act are complied with. In other words, apart from that we are not giving them rights we don't normally give other private corporations.

Mr. Laughren: Talking about giving rights you don't normally give; you don't normally give this 30 per cent write-off on the part of the taxpayer out there either, so don't talk about this as though it is a normal corporation out there. The public at large has a 30 per cent interest in what you are doing here. I would think the Minister of Revenue perhaps could comment on what he intends to provide to the public at large in the form of information about the SBDCs because we all have a stake in them, and whether they are a success or a failure. There is a greater obligation in this case to make sure information is available to us when we want to find out about what SBDCs are investing and where they are investing, both for the taxpayer and for the investor.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would say the information basically will be available in sum total, but not in the specifics.

In other words, you wouldn't have the right to know what the SBDC belonging to the member for London Centre and his 10 colleagues in the front row of the Liberal Party are investing in; or those that the member for Nickel Belt invests in. But in sum total: first we would have, as Revenue Canada has, access to confidential information; the Minister of Revenue in Ontario will have confidential information to make sure the public interest is protected.

In terms of confidentiality, though, those investors have the right to keep those investments confidential, provided he is satisfied they have obeyed the law and the spirit of the law.

Mr. Laughren: I don't want to belabour it, Mr. Chairman, but would the two ministers over there agree that there is a major investment by the public, particularly if it is a successful venture? If the SBDCs do go over as well as the Treasurer thinks they will, there is a major investment on the part of the public in these, because of the 30 per cent either direct tax write-off, or tax write-down in the case of corporations. Therefore there should be more information available. Would they be prepared to table in this Legislature on an annual basis, a fully detailed report on the SBDCs and where they are, who they are, who the major investors in the SBDCs are and where they are putting their money?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't think I could agree to do that. I would provide whatever information would normally be available on a corporation. I can't promise to give more information; because I sense, in all honesty, your party traditionally has been one of the greatest protectors of individual privacy, whether it was OHIP or something else. I would suggest to the honourable member this falls into that kind of category. Certain things under the Income Tax Act have been private—

Mr. Laughren: There is a little difference, Frank.

Mr. Makarchuk: You are trying to pre-empt us by putting it that way.

Mr. Lawlor: We would like a little less privacy and more publicity, please.

What in blazes is the role of the Ontario Securities Commission? What does the Minister of Revenue know about disclosures in this area with respect to dividends and the purchase, surrender, redemption or conversion? Conversions of equity stock can be quite intricate pieces of business converting to various types of redeemable portfolios.

The securities commission is peculiarly clued in as to that whole realm of dividends and disposition and sale of stock. I would have thought they would have been brought into this picture as a better vehicle than the Ministry of Revenue. Every day of the week they are handling this type of conversion; they play with equity stock and a wide range of other stuff. They know it intimately, in a way the Ministry of Revenue knows nothing about or is not particularly sensitive to. It strikes me as strange the OSC is not given the pivotal role in this section.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Far be it from me to tell the honourable member, because I can't spell out what the OSC does or does not control, but it seems to me the great bulk of its dealings are related to stocks of public companies dealing in the marketplace, protecting investors who may not have the ability to know some of the shenanigans that can go on in the field of financing public companies for sale. This section, if one notices, has a key word in it, that the minister shall be advised at least 21 days "prior" to these changes occurring. This is because of the requirements that the portfolio on average meet the investment ratios prescribed in the act.

Mr. Lawlor: The whole problem of timely disclosure is involved here. Setting up an arbitrary time limitation, et cetera, on the 21-day basis involves this very kind of thing, and these are at least quasi public companies. This is not the same as Eaton's running its own show in the disposition of its internal equity position and the range of types of shares—preferred, common, convertible, whatever it may deal with. Here there is given special credence and special privileges, and a certain recompense by investing in it.

I put it to the minister the ministry involved is not particularly competent in this area and you've got a vehicle in place which can make almost instantaneous decisions with respect to the very manipulations involved in this range of powers and dispositions outlined in the act. Why in blazes isn't the securities commission involved in the thing as the approving or disapproving body rather than the ministry that has been designated under section 1 of the act?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I'm not a match for the honourable member. I can only say we have consulted with the OSC in the drafting of this act, or so I am told, and they are satisfied with it.

Mr. Lawlor: The Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck) might enter into the debate to give us good assurances. Don't pre-empt the poor fellow. The Minister of Revenue can give us assurances that he had adequate staff, thoroughly clued in to the range of security matters. I thought the government relied fundamentally upon the securities commission, who are a fairly shrewd bunch. Have you got people who are able to handle the disposition of these matters with respect to redemption procedures and with respect to various forms of stock?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: At the risk of being called out of order by the chairman, not being the man who's bringing this bill through, I would advise the member for Lakeshore that I am not sure whether we have the expertise or not, but we would obviously have to obtain it if we don't have it in order to carry out the intentions of the act.

Mr. Lawlor: What in blazes is the point of doing that if it is already in place? If the securities commission, which causes a great deal of public expenditure and does on occasion blunder, as with Atlantic Acceptance Corporation and numerous other enterprises, why don't you, since it is in place, give the proper body the proper disposition of affairs? I am just making it up as I go along.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I was afraid of that.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Anyone who has read your poems would believe that

Mr. Chairman: Order.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: When this act is in place and we start to move into the administration of it, it would be much more simple, in my estimation at least, to deal with it in one ministry rather than delaying all of the things that have to take place by delegating part of the work to another ministry or another group. It is much more simple to handle it within the one ministry; I think that is the intent of the whole bill.

There are other sections of this bill, I suppose, that could have been designated to another ministry or another branch of a ministry, perhaps better so than the Ministry of Revenue, but if we get into that situation, where we are asking one branch of another ministry to do one thing and another one to do something else, then we will have to compile the information. We would like to see this thing flow as smoothly as possible and I believe that is the only way it can be done.

Mr. Lawlor: For such a modest human being, you still have Parkinson's law on the brain; you know, the expansion of your little empire. You are going to have to bring in a whole new battery of experts. You, on your own admission, have said we will in order to supervise and estimate and be able to make a disposition of the very matter in question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Being optimistic, they will not have that many takers.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, so be it, but don't pretend to us you are particularly assiduous with respect to cutting back the peculiar powers of your particular ministry. You are expanding, not contracting. You have to. Part of my philosophy is that the contemporary world does force certain terrifying options upon us. Doesn't it?

Mr. Laughren: I am voting NDP next time.

Mr. Chairman: Section 17 was carried previously, as were sections 18, 19 and 20.

On section 21:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. F. S. Miller moves that section 21(2) (b) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(b) The applicant is ordinarily resident in Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That simply will clarify that and the language in that clause is put in conformity with that used in other sections.

Mr. Lawlor: What the hell does that mean? Do you mean not in Mexico? You know what they do in Mexico; they say not ordinarily resident in Mexico, which means they are ordinarily resident in Ontario. By that way, all legislation with respect to foreign disposition of stock ownership and the advantages with taxes that are accrued go to certain New York corporations.

Mr. Makarchuk: I am concerned about this. What assurance does the minister have that, again, it is really residents of Ontario who are getting the grants and the money is not really channelled somewhere else? The people can be the front people and living or ordinarily resident in Ontario, whereas the money is going somewhere else, down to the Bahamas or Luxembourg or Switzerland.

Hon. F. S. Miller: There are income tax phraseologies that are traditionally used. One has to define where one's residency is. The term "ordinarily resident in" means this is their home base; it is defined as meaning 183 days or more a year in Ontario. That is the kind of thing one runs into with people who go to Florida for the winter; they are Ontario residents who may be out of the province for some extended period of time in a second home, but their home base is here for tax purposes, for citizenship, for a number of reasons.

Mr. Makarchuk: I am sure the Treasurer is aware that every year the Department of National Revenue indicates that between $3 billion and $4 billion of extra Canadian dollars is floating outside the borders of Canada that ordinarily should not have been there. Obviously that money gets out there, and what I am concerned about is that the Treasurer is setting up another framework for the channelling of what are essentially not private funds but public funds into possibly some foreign jurisdiction outside of the use of the people of Ontario.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Again, I assure the honourable member we have all those protections in this act.

Motion agreed to.

Section 21, as amended, agreed to.

On section 22:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. F. S. Miller moves that section 22(1) of the bill be amended by inserting after "under" in the fifth line "Part II of".

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Chairman, the explanation is in our briefing papers. That amendment makes it clear that the tax credit available to corporate investors is applicable against corporations income tax, not other taxes.

Motion agreed to.

Section 22, as amended, agreed to.

On section 23:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. F. S. Miller moves that section 23 of the bill be amended by inserting after "under" in the fourth line "Part II of".

Motion agreed to.

Section 23, as amended, agreed to.

On section 24:

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Chairman, this is the last section I have any remarks on; so this will be my final shot. I think it is important that people who are investing in these things understand section 24 and realize that the government is going to get them in the end. This is, as we established before, a loan, by the government of 30 per cent tax-free for a period of time and at the point at which the SBDC wishes to cash in its chips, they have to pay it back to the government. That is one of the reasons that I believe, if people truly understand it, it is not going to make it all that attractive to the investor.

Unfortunately, I missed the opportunity to speak on section 17, but I will just say peripherally at this time that there is so much ministerial discretion in that section—and, coming down to section 24—there are so many encumbrances on the free flow of capital seeking out a genuine investment opportunity, as there is in section 17—that it really bothers me. There is so much checking out 21 days ahead of time, deals will come and deals will pass, and we're going to have all these conditional agreements by SBDC—the Treasurer has made it frightfully complicated.

As I said earlier, it is my belief there will be lots of inquiries but, when the legislation is fully explained to those inquiring and they realize what they have to go through, it is going to become a far less attractive kind of vehicle than the Treasurer has visualized.

All of my reservations have been because it has become so complicated and so terribly restrictive. Now, when we come down to the last and final encumbrance, we find it really only is a loan from the government anyway. I understand the philosophy: They want to keep the money in circulation, presumably creating jobs, creating wealth and all that kind of thing. There are going to be winners and losers in this kind of proposition. But, as soon as they want to cash in their chips, they have to pay back to the government.

In those circumstances perhaps the minister should consider a time limit—10 years, five years, 15 years, whatever it is. This thing presumably runs in perpetuity. It could happen 50 years from now. Somebody winds one of these things up and it is going to be lost in grandmother's will, or hidden somewhere in the attic. They find it and say, "Oh my God, I've got to go back and pay the Ontario government."

Hon. F. S. Miller: Not them, the corporation pays it.

Mr. Peterson: Yes, the corporation does, but on the winding up there will be no net difference, if someone is a participant in a corporation. A lot of these things are small and will be handled by individuals. It is going to be the equivalent of that individual having his own private investment vehicle and paying to the government. It has made it fairly complicated, I think, and is one more impediment to an otherwise very nice idea.

I don't have any idea how to clean it up, or how to amend this section. I am conscientiously avoiding trying to amend this bill tonight, because I don't think it can be amended to work very much better than it is going to, given the philosophy inherent therein. I don't think any number of amendments we could make tonight would improve it that much, so we decided to adopt the government's point of view. We wish them well and hope they are right. If they are, then God bless them; it is probably a good thing.

I just want to put that reservation on the table about this particular section 24, understanding that is only a loan, not a grant.

Mr. Makarchuk: On section 24(3) where there is concern on the winding-up of the operation that the SBDC is wound down and the minister will try to get his 30 per cent back. What concerns me, naturally, is the fact that the money may not be there. It seems to me that it is not very difficult, if they are keeping their money in liquid assets in banks, in notes, et cetera, that they could milk the thing completely dry, walk off with their investment plus 30 per cent of your money, then when the government tries to go after them there really isn't very much it can do. It can't really collect something that doesn't exist.

There is a penalty section which provides for a fine of $2,000 for an individual and $20,000 for a corporation. When you are dealing in sums from $250,000 to $5 million, those amounts are not really large, even at $20,000. That's a licence to steal, in effect.

Perhaps the minister might accept a suggestion to include jail sentences up to two years to individuals or corporations. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, I see, is thinking of all sorts of ways it could be used for community purposes.

Mr. Martel: We'll let Gord Walker look after it.

Mr. Makarchuk: Anyway, it might provide, shall we say, some type of restrictive effect on people who may be just interested in trying to milk funds, make a quick buck and get away with it? The idea of a jail sentence might be a deterrent. Another thing is that it would probably improve the cross-section of the jail population, which would also improve the society in which we live.

I see that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations agrees.

Mr. Lawlor: If the minister is not going to reply to those comments, I have a question or two. Where in blazes does this fit into the federal bankruptcy scheme? I am looking at section 24(3), on page 16:

"Where the registration of a small business development corporation is revoked or where the corporation proposes to wind up or dissolve . . ." Winding up is part of the bankruptcy procedure. Dissolution is forced upon them. The government wants its 30 per cent back. Does the minister have the weirdest, wildest or most esoteric notion of where the government stands in the pyramid? Is it a preferred claim, or is that spelled out? Or is it with the common claimants to the winding up of the particular corporation?

Have you got legal advice or any other advice as to where you stand in the pyramid? As you know, there are 60 people who have various, divers, conflicting claims, and everybody thinks they're number one in the pyramid. Do you think so?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't know at what point I am in the pyramid, Mr. Chairman. I would say we have set forth in some of the sections the member may not have been present for the techniques by which permission must be obtained. When we discussed them the member for London Centre said we were making it too difficult. We're now hearing we're not making it difficult enough, because assets cannot be transferred around, decisions can't be taken without giving 21 days' prior notice to the Minister of Revenue.

I suspect there'll be chances to milk, chances to convert, chances to do anything except legitimately go broke, which will happen with lots of business. If they legitimately go broke, we don't get our money.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any other questions in connection with section 24?

Mr. Lawlor: What a seraphic human being you are.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't know what that is.

Mr. Lawlor: A will-o'-the-wisp.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: That's a comment, not a question.

Section 24 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is there any other section of the bill that any member wishes to discuss?

Bill 49, as amended, reported.

BUSINESS CORPORATIONS ACT

Consideration of Bill 34, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I understand that with the score two to one there might be a delay before the critic comes in here. During that time, I would like to draw to the attention of the House that I will be submitting three amendments to this bill. Two of them are entirely technical; the third one is necessitated by a very recent court case in Alberta.

The first amendment I will move is—

Mr. Martel: Could you wait about one moment?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'm just going through it. I'll come back again. Okay?

For the information of the House, the first amendment will be that section 7(1) (b) (ii) of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, be amended by inserting "known" after "the" in the first line. The description in subclause (i) includes the word "known" and this just brings it into conformity.

The amendment to section 22 of the bill is introduced because of a court case in Alberta. We want section 266(a) of the act, as set out in section 22 of the bill, to be amended by adding the following subsection: "(2) Articles filed by the minister under the act shall have effect from the date of the certificate endorsed thereon, notwithstanding that any action required to be taken by the minister under this act with respect to the endorsement of certificate and filing by him is taken at a late date."

This involves an Alberta court case which is CPW Valves Instrument Limited versus Scott, 5 Alberta Law Report, 2, 1978, 271.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Very important.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Interpreting the Alberta Companies Act has caused some concern about the certainty as to the date of incorporation of a company under Ontario law. It is necessary in the commercial world that a businessman be able to rely upon the date of incorporation without fear of a court looking behind him. This amendment is intended to ensure that notwithstanding this court decision in Alberta no one will attempt to have the courts here find that a date in the certificate of incorporation is not in law the date of incorporation.

Finally, section 271(j) of the act as set out in section 25 of the bill is to be amended by adding at the end thereof, "permitting punctuation marks and other marks referred to in subsection 3 of section 8."

The reason for that is just to bring the regulatory authority or the authority to make regulations, which is that section, in conformity with the way the act is set out in an earlier section.

Finally, section 271 is to be amended by adding thereto the following clause: "(1) prescribing the matters that the minister shall take into consideration in determining whether a name is contrary to section 7."

Now that we have attendance here, perhaps we could revert back to clause by clause.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, just before you do that, may I have a list of the sections in the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I'll give you a complete set, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right. The first section you have an amendment to is section 5. Have the opposition got copies of these amendments?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes; we gave them to the House leaders.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Oh all right, it's just the chair; and we now have them.

Are there any questions in connection with Bill 34 before section 5?

The member for Hamilton Centre.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I have a question, Mr. Chairman, concerning section 2 which deletes subsection 5 of section 4 of the act.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. M. N. Davison: It was a very brief question of the minister. Because that deletes section 4 (5), which is one of the clauses or sections which requires the affidavit, but is not in the same group of sections from which we're removing the affidavit requirement, was it felt by the ministry staff there was no need for the affidavit with regard to whether or not the person was a natural person or over the age of 18, as opposed to the other kinds of affidavits we're removing?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Very concise.

Section 2 agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

On section 5:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 7(1)(b)(ii) of the act, as set out in section 5 of the bill, be amended by inserting, after "the" in the first line, "known."

Hon. Mr. Drea: The reason for that, as you will see, is that in subclause (i) it reads: "The name of a known body corporate." We want to make it in subclause (ii) "known" as well to keep it consistent between the two subclauses.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I've got a lot of questions about that.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I don't think the minister could answer them.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They're good questions.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the member for Hamilton Centre have any questions regarding the amendment?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I had no questions until I heard the explanation. I'm probably misreading the amendment, but in (i), the phrase is, or the way it will read is, "the name of a known body corporate," and in (ii) "known name."

Hon. Mr. Drea: In (ii) "known name"; same thing. It just brings it into conformity.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'm not sure it's the same thing but I support your amendment.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Does the member for Lakeshore have a question regarding this section?

Mr. Lawlor: I confess I have read this for the first time at this moment.

You say it's a question of the names and designations of corporations and the policy of your ministry with respect to accepting names as they come in.

"The name of a known body corporate, trust, association, partnership, sole proprietorship or individual whether in existence or not." How can it be known whether—I find there's a little ambiguity in the phrasing that's all. If it isn't in existence, what do you mean by "known"?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Reserved, Mr. Chairman. Maybe someone who has reserved the name; they can reserve for a certain period of time, pending the actual documents being filed.

Mr. Lawlor: That's as far as it goes?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Chairman, as I read the essence of section 5, it is going to give regulatory power to the minister, rather than a clear statement by way of stature, as to what words and names are okay, as it were. I take it part of the reason for that is to provide some sort of flexibility so that he is not wandering back into the Legislature every time some new situation crops up.

If the minister will look at section 8(1) (b), (c) and (d) of the current act, clause (b) talks about a name not being able to imply a connection with the crown or the federal or provincial governments, and clause (c) involves political natures and parties—

Hon. Mr. Drea: If I could answer the member, the final amendment deals with that.

Mr. Lawlor: What on earth is the minister doing sitting over there? I object.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, I could bring a table down in front for my advisers, but I thought I would save time, with the consent of the House, by being here; it might speed things up.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, I see. Your left ear is exposed. Okay.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Under the present act, the onus is on us for making sure the name is not a name that should not be used. This is called the subjective test. The difficulty is that now the law firm, or whoever is doing it, is totally responsible. We want to put into the statute the authority to put in a regulation that will outline a list of prohibited names, such as "royal," et cetera; and that is in the final amendment.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I understand what the minister is doing; he is going to be using the new section 271(g) for that purpose, which gives him the power by regulation to prohibit the use of any words, expressions, et cetera, in the corporate name, and I assume he will draw up a list in the regulation.

My concern is this: The three specific ones I pointed out, section 8(1) (b), (c) and (d), make it unlawful to have a name that may imply a connection with the government, that has a political nature or political element in it and, as in clause (d), that uses the word "co-operative," for obvious reasons. Those are in the statute now; the Legislature has decided that. I assume the minister is going to build that into his regulation.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In the final amendment, yes. If my friend will read the final amendment, it says: "Prescribing the matters that the minister shall take into consideration in determining whether a name is contrary to section 7." That will be in the act, and then the regulatory part will spell out all of the things that are now the subjective test by law firms which are not in the act.

Mr. M. N. Davison: My question very simply is, will those specific three areas be in the regulations?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. M. N. Davison: And the minister is making that commitment?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, and more.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. M. N. Davison: On section 6, Mr. Chairman, I have two brief questions.

Regarding the change to sections 8(1) and (2) of the act, when I read section 8(1) against section 8(2), I am wondering, when a company is known by a name in another language, does the word "Limited," "Incorporated" or "Corporation" have to appear in English after the foreign-language name, or will they be able to translate? As I read it, they cannot translate. Am I wrong?

Hon. Mr. Drea: In English.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What is the rationale for that?

[10:15]

Hon. Mr. Drea: I would think the rationale would be to make it abundantly clear in English that this is a limited liability or an incorporated company. The rationale—notwithstanding the foreign language, whether it might be SA or some of the other things that are used—is that there would be a clear part of the title in English that would show the exact state of the company—that it is a corporate body.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'm not sure that's a terribly good reason, but I'm not going to move an amendment to it.

Mr. Lawlor: I am. Have you seen the French-Canadian and French designations for limited corporations as to the way in which they spell it? The minister gives accreditation to bilingualism in this country and in this Legislature, and he doesn't extend his designation far enough to cover what are peculiarly French Canadian, under their law. Why doesn't he give recognition to that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: We will. At the moment we are working on a great number of statutes, including those with which the honourable member is very familiar—the conveyancing of property and so forth—to conform to the bilingual policies of this government. But at this time, in the Business Corporations Act it is in English, and that's why we are putting this in for clarification. It's all very easy to say in a short form of a title everybody knows it's a corporation, but it may be a very long title. We want to make it very clear to people it is a corporation.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister is brighter and broader than that. He is cognizant of the French fact in this country, and of the inter-relationship between French-Canadian corporations and our own and even those from France itself. I'm sure he's seen the designations and the way in which they abbreviate the formality of their corporations. To give even glancing lip service to that might be a very wise move and a somewhat civilized one at this time in his history. Since he is changing his damn legislation anyhow, why doesn't he take cognizance of these things?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is not in the present act. Really we are—

Mr. Lawlor: You're lucky the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) isn't here.

Hon. Mr. Drea: In all fairness, I don't think the honourable member should point at me on the bilingual matter. I think my record as the Minister of Correctional Services, with bilingual services and so forth, stands for itself.

Mr. Lawlor: Keep up the record.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I also think that my record in this ministry is good, particularly when some of the legal forms and so forth which were once considered impossible are now being done. I'm pointing out to the honourable member rather succinctly that in the not-too-distant future—hopefully part of it will be done in the fall session—this Business Corporations Act will be entirely rewritten. At that time, which I think is the proper time, every step will be taken to ensure that the sections in it follow quite closely and indeed I would hope lead the way for the bilingual policies of this government.

Mr. Lawlor: All right, at least we've gone this far tonight. We've clued the minister in and we've placed a certain emphasis—not that he's not clued in but there's a whole range of things which on the face of the matter have not been put under proper surveillance. His staff is aware now, he is aware now and I would anticipate a change.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If I can ask the second half of my question on clause (a).

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I'm sorry, I thought the member for Lakeshore was kind of cutting you out there but you sat down so I let him do so.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'd like to thank the minister for his commitment to provide some change there to recognize the linguistic realities in the province. The new section 8(2) is a dressed-up version of the old section 7 of the bill, with the specific addition of regulatory powers in regard to non-English names. That will create a new section 271 clause, as I recall, by way of regulation.

Can the minister give me an example of what concern he has within the ministry about words that may crop up or special considerations or provisions that may crop up, when we are dealing with languages other than English, that would make the minister want to bring forward some prohibition that he wouldn't have under all the other requirements of the legislation?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I will reply in just a moment.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I may not have put that terribly well. If a name is in English, there are numerous ways under the current act and the newly structured act in which you can prohibit somebody from using a certain name or phrase or word or whatever, in his corporate name. This gives you an additional power by regulation when the name is in a language other than English. I am just wondering, by way of example, why that is necessary.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am instructed that it is because of obscenities.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That is what I thought you were implying.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Then why didn't you ask if that was it?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Is that not covered by all of the regulatory and other powers that you have?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Simply because the obscenity is in a foreign language, does that mean that all of the other sections of the act under which you could control it are non-operative?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It is the view that the use of a particular obscenity in a foreign language, where it is not readily recognizable, might lead us into difficulty if we didn't have this specific section in there. It should almost be a test as to what the reasonable public would interpret it as, rather than people with a specialized knowledge of the language. You might get a language, for instance, that is quite popular in the world, but has very few practitioners here and therefore that particular word might be slang or might be a lot of things.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What the minister is saying is that under this special set of regulatory powers he would only make regulations or orders that reflected one of his other reasons for being able to do such with an English name. Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: I would have thought that the term, the obscenity in question, with the word "limited" afterwards would have cut back on the possibilities.

I just want to be a bit eccentric for a moment. One of the things I dislike is the term "Inc." That is an Americanism of the most grotesque type and I find it insufferable. Did you feel you really had to bend to the winds of pressure? Up until the time of your ministry pretty well, that nefarious terminology, "Inc.," was excluded from the English lexicon, at least in your department, but now it has become widespread. The Americans call all their corporations "Inc." while we used to say "Limited" or "Ltd." I find "Inc." hangs rather more salaciously on the tongue. Does this bother you at all as the minister?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It bothers me. Unfortunately, by popular demand, many years ago it was incorporated in the previous act and it is now commonly accepted. If I had my druthers, it would be confined to "Limited," rather than "Inc.," which probably is an easier thing for the average person to understand. There is no question it is American. The decision was made many years ago. If you changed it now, it would be a profound inconvenience and a cost item to a great number of businesses.

Mr. T. P. Reid: And expensive.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, very expensive.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Shall section 8 now stand as part of the bill?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I assume it is section 6 we are being asked to carry. Is that not the case, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Section 6.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The minister and I are agreed.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: All right, section 6, I am sorry. I thought we had made more progress than that.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Lawlor: May I ask the minister: When he has his unincorporated associations in one branch, on the first or second floor of the ministry across the street—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Wellesley Street.

Mr. Lawlor:—and his corporation branch is hived off in another section, do they ever speak to one another?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: One can go in and register an unincorporated partnership, even if the partnership happens to consist of a single individual, and that name may already have been pre-empted by a limited or "inc." corporation. Is there a trading of information to prevent the registration of the unincorporated corporation in terms of an already incorporated one? My impression is that these things are not working together in the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, those two branches do speak to each other, but there is no authority under the act to refuse the incorporation under that name. If one is going to restrict the use, for incorporation purposes, of one person or a partnership to only names that weren't used by limited companies, then every partnership in the province would just be a six-numbered docket. Really, that is not fair in that type of incorporation, because the person usually wants a trade or a style name that will define the partnership, far more so than the limited liability corporation which can subsist for a while as a numbered company.

Mr. Lawlor: I could call myself, tomorrow morning, the Steel Company of Canada Unlimited and get registration through the ministry agency?

Mr. T. P. Reid: No; you misread the bill.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, you're quite right; but it doesn't happen.

Mr. Lawlor: Tomorrow morning.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. M. N. Davison: Section 8 repeals the powers granted by the old section 11, subsections 1 and 2, which gave a person the capacity to reserve a name for a corporation for a period of up to 90 days. Can the minister tell me why he is removing that section of the bill and people will no longer be able to reserve corporate names?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Because they will be using the name search. There will be a printout on what names are available. It can be done over there. We don't have the clearance on names any more.

Mr. M. N. Davison: It is not the clearance. It is the question of reserving the name.

Hon. Mr. Drea: We don't have the names any more. They are in all those ANS, the six systems. One gets a computer printout on the name one wants and once one gets that one has it. One presents it to us and it is automatically cleared from the other search houses.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Because of the change over to the new system, will it no longer be possible for people to reserve a corporate name for up to 90 days?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, it will be automatic. One goes to the search house, gets the printout on the name one wants and right there the computer no longer gives it to anybody else. It will be automatic over there, not with us.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Will it be a permanent reservation on the name?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Until it is registered, within a reasonable period of time. Obviously the search house would be in some kind of a quandary if a person started picking up all kinds of printouts, removing names from the computer and never did anything with them. Secondly, one is paying a fee in advance. One is paying a fee to the search house to do it; if one is not serious about it, it would be a very expensive proposition.

Mr. M. N. Davison: As I understand it, it will be up to these five or six companies in the automatic search process to substitute something for the old 90-day reservation policy. I take it the minister will keep his eye on that to see exactly what does happen.

Hon. Mr. Drea: As I said this afternoon, the federal government is doing exactly the same thing.

Section 8 agreed to.

Sections 9 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

On motion by Hon. F. S. Miller, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendments and progress on another bill.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MAY 18, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

ORAL QUESTIONS

METRO LAND SALES

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my first question is to the Minister of Transportation and Communications.

Mr. Sweeney: Put on your crash helmet.

Mrs. Campbell: Is the minister aware of the implications of Metro's policy to dispose at market value land which has been declared surplus? Is he aware that this policy will result in the loss to the city of Toronto of some 14 parks and over a dozen parking lots which now serve local business areas all across the city?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I think I missed a word or two of the honourable member's question. I am really not aware of Metro's plans for the disposal of land. I do not believe there has been any consultation or any involvement with my office. I am not sure whether or not there has been with the ministry. I am not sure just which land she is referring to.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: The lands are those basically right across Bloor Street. Is the minister not aware that his ministry is aiding and abetting this policy in that he asked Metro in a letter to the Metro chairman to reimburse the province "for the full market value in the percentage at which the province had originally participated in the purchase"? Is he not aware that by making this request the minister is lending his support to the Metro Toronto policy, which will wipe out many city parkettes and car-parks?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am certainly aware of that policy. It is the policy of the ministry and a very fair one. It is applied in all circumstances where land has been bought by municipalities and the purchase subsidized by my ministry. If land over and above that needed for a project is purchased for some reason and then disposed of, we would share in the disposal proceeds on the same percentage basis on which we contributed in the first place. That is our policy.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Does the minister believe that it is an appropriate policy that one level of government should make money out of another level of government, when the same taxpayers are involved?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I think it is only fair that the two or three levels, whichever it may be, of government that participated in the project should share equally in the proceeds if there are surplus lands to be disposed of. In many cases for transportation projects, it may be necessary to buy out a total property. Then after the project is completed if there are surplus lands, these are sold off and both levels of government share appropriately in the sale price, whether it is at a loss or a profit. That is our general policy.

With respect to the particular lands that the honourable member is referring to along the Bloor-Danforth subway, I don't recall any specific correspondence with Chairman Godfrey on those lands. There may have been general correspondence on other lands that Metro was planning to dispose of. The only knowledge I have of the lands the member is speaking of is the article I read in the press in the last few days.

Mr. McClellan: Supplementary: Since many of the parking facilities along the Bloor-Danforth route—the lands we are talking about that are used for parking facilities—are absolutely crucial to the survival of small business in the area, leaving aside the obvious value of the parkettes to the residential communities adjacent north and south, may I ask the minister to sit down and meet with city officials to review the implications of the ministry's current policy with a view to changing it?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am always available to meet with officials. The member mentions city officials. I believe in this case it is a Metro situation. It would be appropriate for me to meet with Metro officials and perhaps with city officials as well.

Mr. McClellan: The city officials would tell you what the problems are.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Snow: If the member would give me a moment please, I said I would be quite happy to meet with Metro officials. If they wished to bring city officials along with them to discuss the particular problem, I would be quite willing to meet with them jointly.

Mr. McClellan: You have more faith in Metro than I do.

TRUCK DRIVING LICENCE

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my second question is to the Minister of Transportation and Communications. On May 8, in response to a question of my leader, in addressing himself to the problems relating to diabetics the minister made the statement that the classification had been changed but that those holding licences prior to the change would be grandfathered. Has he made any investigation at all to see whether this is being done?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I haven't investigated it. I know it was done at the time of the 12-month transitional period. When the classified driver's licence system came into force, in the case of those drivers who held a position as truck or bus drivers prior to that period—I believe the member is referring specifically to diabetics in this particular case, which is right in the legislation that was passed by this House.—

Hon. Mr. Davis: With Liberal support.

Hon. Mr. Snow: —who had a controlled diabetic condition prior to the implementation of the legislation who made application to upgrade their licence from a normal chauffeur's licence, for instance, to a class A or B or C licence, this would be done as part of the transitional process.

I believe what the member is getting at is if a person was a truck driver prior to that period of time and now is diagnosed as a new diabetic, then that provision does not apply.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Would the minister investigate the case of Norman Makela who lost his truck driving licence? He had been driving a truck with Imperial Oil for nearly 30 years and has had several safety awards for truck driving. Now he is forced to attend George Brown College to take a retraining course because he has not been permitted to renew his licence by reason of being diabetic. The diabetic condition prevailed during the 30 years he has been driving.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I will certainly investigate that particular case. There's something that just doesn't jibe in the information the honourable member has recited. If that particular man had been driving for 30 years and had had the diabetic condition during those 30 years, he should have been issued a class A licence in 1976.

I get situations—not this one which I don't believe I've heard of—brought to my attention where drivers have heart attacks or other health problems that cause their licences to be downgraded or in some cases removed totally. That is the purpose of the program and the purpose of the legislation. But I'll certainly look into that particular case.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Supplementary: What is the record on people with heart problems? Do they have a bad performance record that warrants this strong legislation being implemented? I've had many cases where they have been denied licences because of heart conditions, yet they've been driving for many years. I wonder what the record is on their performance.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't know if I can recite to the honourable member any particular record. We do know that a certain number of accidents, whether it be automobile or otherwise, are caused by people who have heart seizures while at the wheel of a car or a truck or whatever. I would doubt if any member of this House would suggest that a driver who has a record of a heart condition or is considered by the medical experts to be a possible candidate for a recurrence of a serious heart attack should be driving a large transport on the highway or driving a bus full of passengers or school children. I just don't think it is reasonable.

[10:15]

I have all the sympathy in the world for the people who suffer with that particular situation. But I know, to become personal, if I were in that situation of having a heart condition, which I don't have that I know of, I wouldn't want to be taking other people's lives in my hands by driving them in my car.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre with his first question.

EQUAL PAY

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since Ontario women earn on average 53 per cent of what men earn, I have a question for the Premier. It rises out of the historic decision by the Legislature last night to adopt a bill by the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsell) which provides for equal pay for work of equal value. Would the Premier give his assurance that when this bill has been reported back by the general government committee that the bill be called for third reading in the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I certainly could remark that a lot of bills have gone to standing committee where members opposite have altered those bills very substantially so I don't know how I could give any such assurance.

Mr. J. Reed: While the Premier is at it he should bring back the Small Business Act.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The bill is going to standing committee and will be reported back. To speculate at this moment as to just what form it will take, if and when it is reported back, and what might happen to it then I think would be presumptuous on my part.

Mr. Swart: Why doesn't the Premier be honest and just say "no"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: So, Mr. Speaker, I can't give the leader of the New Democratic Party that assurance, partially because of the experience I've had in this House that I'm never sure just what form a bill will take when it is reported back.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A supplementary; the member for Wentworth North.

Mr. Cunningham: I would like to ask the Premier, in view of the large number of bills that have come before the Legislature during the course of private members' hour, very high quality bills presented by members of all parties, is it the Premier's intention to make private members' hour more relevant?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member, perhaps, has not been here as long as some of his colleagues—

Mr. Haggerty: The Premier has been here too long.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —a number of whom are missing this morning.

Mr. Bounsall: Look to your right.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't want to point out that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) and many of the heavies on the front row of the Liberal benches are probably out campaigning for Progressive Conservative candidates today. I just want to make that observation.

Mr. Martel: Yes, Joe needs some help.

An hon. member: You haven't answered the question.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, come on. Listen, your leader doesn't want Pierre to win.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cunningham: Answer the question.

Mr. Eakins: Tell us the history of the private member's bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Going back a number of years, the history of the private member's bill is very clear. The opportunities for introduction and debate in private members' bills compared to four or five years ago is extremely significant. There aren't many Legislatures in this country where there is an opportunity, as is available here, in terms of debate and discussion of private members' bills.

Mr. J. Reed: How many has the Premier's government blocked?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let the opposition look at their federal friends in Ottawa. Not only don't they permit it, they have never passed a private member's bill with the exception of one, which, I think, had something to do with the beaver, if memory serves me correctly.

Mr. J. Reed: Are you going to bring back the Small Businesses Act?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the member that I really think this House has an opportunity. I think there is a great opportunity for debates of relevant issues. I for one don't participate in them as a matter of policy, but I read them very carefully and I am always very interested in what the private members discuss during the private members' debates on Thursdays of each week.

Mr. Haggerty: It's called B and B: block and bury.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: The government has turned it into a farce.

Hon. Mr. Welch: How many vetoes have saved you from having to take a stand? Just ask that question of yourself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have had people in your caucus say to us, "Please veto the bill."

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Mrs. Campbell: Produce the evidence.

Mr. Martell: Is that what you did to Mr. Taylor yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It was a private member's matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. A supplementary from the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

Mr. Bounsall: Returning to the Premier's reply to the first question asked, since the principle of this bill will not be changed by committee, and a very simple statement is all that is required to implement the principles of this bill, can the Premier indicate whether he truly believes in the principle of this bill? Would he give us a straight answer that the government will not block this bill when reported out from committee, because it cannot and will not ever be substantially changed by committee consideration? Is not the real reason for unwillingness of the government to proceed on this bill the interference of the rights of businessmen, including the right to pay employees less money, usually women, for work of equal value?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In spite of the fact the honourable member is really repeating many of the points he made yesterday in his contribution, my answer is still the same. I can't prejudge what the committee is going to do.

There is in a standing committee a certain bill which these members have been delaying for months. The tenants of this province are still waiting for finality of that bill. They may do the same thing on this one.

Mr. Cassidy: Does the Premier endorse the principle of equal pay for work of equal value in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have always endorsed the principle of equality in this province. This government is striving to have equality in all areas and we have done very well, far better than any jurisdiction I know.

Mrs. Campbell: Will the Premier of this province give to this Legislature the assurance that this bill will be ordered to committee and not just scrapped as the others have been?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really thought the acting leader of the Liberal Party would be better informed.

Mrs. Campbell: I thought so too. I would love to be better informed on this subject.

Hon. Mr. Davis: My understanding is this House ordered it to standing committee yesterday. If her colleagues have a different impression or different information they might let me know. My information is that what the member for St. George has asked has in fact already happened. That was some hours ago. I know it takes a little while to be updated, but that is the impression I am under as to what happened yesterday.

I might also say to the member for St. George, we would like her co-operation on Bill 163 too on behalf of the tenants and others in the province so we can get this bill through.

PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Cassidy: A question for the Premier: In view of the fact the cost of living rose by 9.8 per cent last month and that this was the highest rate of increase in the cost of living since November 1975; and since it is clear wage increases were not responsible, what does the government intend to do to protect consumers against the rising increases in the cost of living?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This government, unlike some, is concerned and has been concerned about inflation, whether it reflects itself in the cost of living or in any other fashion. We have, through our own policies, made a very sincere effort to deal with the whole question of inflation.

I listened to the member's financial critic and I listened to the proposals being presented by his party, and I can only say to the leader of the New Democrats, if he is concerned about this month's increase in the cost of living, he should calculate what his party would do to the people of this province. It is horrendous. It would be terrible and his people should understand that.

Mr. Martel: Joe Who has the biggest bite. Remember Joe Who's cut?

Hon. Mr. Davis: You would tax everybody more dough.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since corporate profits went up by 58 per cent in the first quarter of this year on an increase of sales of only 18 per cent, is the government prepared to bring in a prices review commission that will roll back unjustified price increases in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the member for Halton-Burlington is giving the Liberal government of Canada total credit for the increase in corporate profits. I'd have to question that, but I won't this morning.

What was the question? Do we intend to roll back prices? I know the New Democratic leader loves to indulge in rhetoric, he loves to indulge in those things that are not practical and he loves to put up phoney issues. The fact of the matter is that he knows we do not have the constitutional power to roll back prices. I ask him very simply what is he going to do about rolling back the prices of imported foods? He knows and I know it can't be done. It's time he levelled with the people of this province and understood that these are the realities. He should be fair enough to present them that way to the public.

Mr. Warner: A corporate apology.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, I would like to ask the Premier if he does not realize that Ontario does have constitutional power over retail prices. Many retail articles are produced in this province and he does have some control over them. Is he not aware that one of the five reasons given for the surge in profits and the increase in prices is that suppliers have been able to charge higher prices because the dollar drop has cut import competition? Does he not realize that this means that a good part of the increase in profits is at the expense of the Canadian consumers because Canadian manufacturers here are arbitrarily raising Canadian prices to the United States level?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the honourable member place the question?

Mr. Swart: It has nothing to do with government expenditures, even this government's excessive expenditures. If these are true, if these are facts—and they are—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Swart: —will he take at least some ad hoc measures to control some of the excessive prices to consumers in this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect to the honourable member, I know what constitutional rights we have and what we don't have. I also know that it is impossible for a single jurisdiction in this country to deal with the very complex issue of pricing as it relates to imported foods. The member knows that and I know that.

Mr. Swart: You haven't done a single thing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's time he levelled with the people when he is explaining it to them.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the last two years workers' real incomes have declined by about three per cent, is it the Premier's policy and the policy of his government that workers should continue to subsidize corporate profits?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It has never been the policy that the workers or anyone else in this province subsidize profits or anything else. I would only say to the financial critic, as I listen to him, and as I analyse carefully what he is proposing for his party, if he's concerned about cost of living or the negative impacts on our economy, let him analyse what he is suggesting. If he is honest about it, he would acknowledge that what he is suggesting would mean more taxes for everybody, a less competitive position, lower productivity and lower growth. In fact, the economy of this province would be a shambles if we were to adopt the political philosophy of that party.

Mr. Wildman: You're whistling in the wind.

GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY

Mr. Mancini: I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food, if the Premier will allow me to place it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Essex South has the floor.

Mr. Mancini: Thank you. Mr. Speaker. I'd like to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Food, since it's been almost four years since I first brought to his attention the plight of the Ontario greenhouse industry, especially in the Leamington area; since his government and his ministry have not lifted one finger to assist that industry; and since a report which has been prepared for his ministry says that the industry might come to a collapse in four years, what does the minister propose to do to assist that industry now?

Hon. W. Newman: Mr. Speaker, it's quite obvious that the member for Essex South has a very short memory. He sat in on our estimates last night.

Hon. Mr. Snow: He has a very short body too.

[10:30]

Hon. W. Newman: Does he remember who stepped in when we had the storm damage a year ago? We stepped in. Where was the government in Ottawa? We stepped in to help the greenhouse growers who were hurt very seriously.

The member says we do nothing for them. We are doing research all the time on heat conservation in the greenhouse industry. The minister took the sales tax off the heat blankets to save energy. We are now doing enough work so that we feel we can save 40 to 50 per cent of the cost of heating greenhouses.

The member should do a little reading. I will send him some research material. He should keep in touch with his riding and he would find out what we are doing.

Mr. Mancini: A supplementary: That was a good show by the minister but it did nothing to assist the industry.

An hon. member: It is not a show. It's fact.

Mr. Mancini: That's a good policy to have: when in doubt, shout.

In view of the fact the storm damage assistance to the greenhouse growers had nothing to do with the energy problem, in view of the fact the so-called heat research is not taking place in the Leamington area where the government could use the expertise of the farmers in this type of research, and in view of the fact that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the member place his supplementary?

Mr. Mancini: —the solar blanket cost almost as much as does the existing greenhouse structure, how can the Minister of Agriculture and Food say he has helped the greenhouse industry when he knows darn well the heating costs have gone from $9,000 in 1973 to $30,000 in 1977?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. W. Newman: You know it's very—

Mr. Eakins: Watch your blood pressure, Bill.

Hon. W. Newman: Oh I know. I have problems with it at times and it's going to get worse if he keeps up this sort of nonsense.

We are doing a lot of work with solar heat. I would invite the member to go and have a look at what we are doing in research in this province. I invited the whole committee that is sitting on my estimates to do that, and he was sitting there when I invited them.

At Vineland we have just finished building new greenhouses. This is one of the best research stations in the world—renowned world-wide—dealing with the greenhouse industry. The member also forgets we run a Foodland Ontario promotional program and the greenhouse cucumber sales are up 16.2 per cent this year. We have the co-operation of the growers and he doesn't like it because we are getting along very well with them, working with them, helping them to promote their products and move them.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter and I rise on a point of personal privilege. The minister has stated—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What is the member's point of privilege?

Mr. Mancini: The minister has said he is getting along with the growers and that I don't like it. If he is getting along with the growers, that's fine and I am glad to hear it. I want the record—

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. That's not a point of privilege, that's a point of view.

Mr. Mancini: I have a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. It's a very important matter, that is affecting 225—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs. Campbell: They don't want to hear it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mancini: They are not interested at all.

MINING COMMUNITIES

Mr. Martel: To the Premier: In November 1977 the government established a cabinet committee to look into the economic future of mining communities to consider short-term and long-term measures which might be adopted by the province. Because the Treasurer last week indicated that the committee reported to the policy field and to the cabinet on its meetings, can the Premier indicate to the House what short-term and what long-term policies have been developed to assist mining municipalities that are in trouble because of decisions by the corporate sector?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think that is a very legitimate question. I only say it is a very legitimate question because there are some that aren't always as relevant as the one just asked. I think the Treasurer has made it quite clear, through his budget, through the stability of the mining tax, which I think is important, that we are embarking upon a policy that will encourage the mining industry generally to further investment and to expand operations within this jurisdiction. That has to be, in essence, one of the fundamental policies I think relevant for the mining communities.

I think it is also fair to state that the government is considering other possible ways we can assist, but fundamentally, in terms of the mining communities, there has to be an economically encouraging climate for investment and for expansion. I understand that party disagrees with us in terms of how that should be done. That is fair. What they would do, of course, would be to discourage further investment. I understand that. What we are doing is trying to encourage further investment because that, in essence, is how we keep the mining communities healthy.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary: Having had 18 months to develop some policy, and in view of what the Premier just said, there has to be some economic incentive, can he tell me how the government is going to assist the municipality of Capreol when a mining company that made $6.5 million last year has shut its doors? What short-term policy has the government developed in the last 18 months to offset that crisis in that community?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is obvious that there is no solution for each individual community. I can say with respect to Capreol that this government made a very genuine effort to help resolve that problem.

Mr. Laughren: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was there. Some members may think it is inadequate, that is fine, but in terms of the attempt made by the Minister of Labour and other ministries of this government to resolve the situation in Capreol, the member who asked the question, if he were fair, which he is on occasion, would acknowledge the effort that was made to keep that mine operating.

This government cannot, in terms of the market place, keep a mine in operation that is not at this moment economically viable. I don't expect that he would think we could. In terms of the alternatives, we won't have an alternative for each individual situation, but we are looking at ways in which we can assist Capreol because we are anxious to see that that community survives.

Mr. Martel: Final supplementary: Can the Premier tell me when he is going to be prepared to introduce into the Legislature some indication of what the short-term policies are going to be—not dealing ad hoc with one community, because that is isolated—and the long-term policies which will help those mining municipalities to avoid what has happened in Capreol recently, what happened in Sudbury last year, what happened in Falconbridge also last year, and what is happening, I understand, in Atikokan?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think the honourable member himself understands the situation in Sudbury better than many others, and I think he knows that in terms of efforts of this government we made a great deal of effort in an attempt to have that particular matter resolved.

Mr. Swart: That wasn't the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I can't think of any—well, it was the question.

Mr. Swart: No, it wasn't the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, don't interrupt. Don't interrupt. You are very vocal this morning. You are very vocal every morning.

We did make that effort. As I said, the obvious long-term solution is to have an economic climate that encourages the mining industry to expand its operations, and we are committed to that. Those people opposite aren't. They would nationalize the resource industry. Do they think that is going to solve the problem? They will drive development out of this province so rapidly they won't know what happened; that is what would happen to it.

MEMBERSHIP OF POLICE COMMISSIONS

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General: There are many police commissions in the province of Ontario lacking a quorum, or at least lacking the three required members and in some places five. In our own area we have some commissions that are supposed to have three members but only have two; since they must have a judge on them—there was a resolution only recently in this House suggesting this—is the minister intending to bring in legislation with regard to police commissions so that they can have other than judges on them?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are intending to introduce legislation to remove the mandatory requirement that a county court judge or a judge sit on the commission, although we still intend to support the principle of judges serving in this capacity.

WILD RICE HARVESTING

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: Considering the serious questions raised in the northwest over the $182,000 in development loans and the 28 wild rice harvesting licences, covering more than 2,000 lakes and waterways, awarded by this government to one Mr. Benjamin Ratuski, would the Premier be willing to table the guidelines for the operations of Tory patronage in the north and throughout the province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that no such guidelines exist it is impossible for me to table any such documents.

Mr. Wildman: What measures is the Premier willing to take to ensure that all those concerned will realize that there is, and appears to be, no favouritism involved in the awarding of wild rice harvesting licences in the northwest?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to discuss this with the minister. We will have a detailed, voluminous answer that probably will not take too long on Thursday.

GUELPH CORRECTIONAL CENTRE

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Correctional Services relating to the incident at Guelph recently.

Would the minister comment upon reports that two or three weeks before the escape at Guelph there was an increase in the number of fights breaking out between inmates, resulting in the isolation cells being filled to capacity; that there was an increase in the number of inmates requiring confinement to the hospital and, therefore, all the beds were filled; and that a week prior to the riot, twice the normal number of inmates attended an AA meeting which was a legitimate meeting but it was rather suspicious that so many would attend at that particular time?

Taking all these things into consideration, would the minister not agree that if these facts were true it would be sufficient to make the authorities suspicious that there was an impending escape or other incident planned?

Hon. Mr. Walker: The staff of the Guelph institution did not anticipate there would be a breakout. The breakout was thought to be a spontaneous event that occurred during the period of the disturbance and the disturbance itself arose out of extremely minor events that took place earlier during the day, so far as our investigation at this moment can ascertain.

Mr. Bradley: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware of a report that an important door was left either unlocked or open, enabling the inmates to take control of three corridors of cells and, therefore, control of certain of the hoses which were then able to keep the minister's officials at bay? Taking all these things into consideration—these continuing reports, about which, no doubt, the minister has heard, either through the media or through other sources—is he planning to give a further report to the House in the form of a statement or an answer to questions on the incident at Guelph, to clear up some of these doubts that have arisen in the minds of citizens of this province?

Hon. Mr. Walker: I did not know there were any doubts in the minds of the citizens of the province relative to any unanswered questions. I thought in fact, Mr. Speaker, that all the questions had been answered with respect to the incident. If the honourable member chooses to put forward some more points, we will attempt to respond to them.

I would say that the individual dormitory areas where the disturbances occurred, four in total, were secured within moments after the incidents broke out. To my knowledge the access to the water hoses in each area permitted the place to be completely dampened down; they did not have to go from one area to another with hoses.

[10:45]

ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE

Mr. Lupusella: My question is related to the use of electronic surveillance in the work place. In view of the fact that two appeals to the human rights commission have failed to rid Ontario work places of cameras and other spying devices and considering that the minister agrees with the NDP position that workers should be protected from oppressive electronic surveillance, will the minister introduce legislation to ban electronic surveillance from the work place in order that workers may be free to work without electronic scrutiny and will be treated like human beings with dignity?

Surely in 1979 in Ontario—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the honourable member ask his question?

Mr. Lupusella:—this is a basic right which can be supported by all members of the Legislature.

Mr. Havrot: You are making a speech.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us you're concerned.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It's nice to see the member for Nickel Belt here on a Friday. Members will recall the views I expressed on the question of electronic surveillance before. As the member for Dovercourt well knows, the particular incident that we discussed on a previous occasion had to do with surveillance in a situation in Toronto. The whole question of surveillance is now before an arbitrator. I have to tell the member in all honesty that it wouldn't be appropriate to review it in any great detail prior to the arbitration report.

However, I would like to tell him as well that we are preparing a position paper on the matter. It is not a matter that doesn't continue to concern me.

Mr. Laughren: We knew it would concern you.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my colleague from Dovercourt will be introducing a private member's bill, which will be debated on June 7, with respect to banning electronic surveillance in the work place except under very restricted circumstances, will the minister, firstly, table in the House before that debate takes place all the information he has with respect to the installation of electronic surveillance devices in work places throughout the province, the numbers and what purposes they are put to?

Secondly, can the minister assure us that we will have the opportunity for a free, unfettered and unblocked vote on this most important bill when it is debated on June 7, in view of the enormous concern within many of our communities with respect to electronic surveillance devices?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I would anticipate that the information the member has requested will be appended to the position paper when it is released. As to the stand of this government with regard to the private member's bill, I expect that each caucus will review the bill and take the position which its caucus decides is appropriate.

Mr. Laughren: Like yesterday?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has an answer to a question previously asked.

GAS COMPANY BILLINGS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) raised questions about the five per cent penalty imposed for late payments by natural gas companies across the province.

These charges are dealt with by the Ontario Energy Board through the Ontario Energy Board Act. This act allows gas companies to charge a flat five per cent late charge on all accounts. The five per cent is not compounded but is assessed only on the specific amount that is late. It is not assessed on the total amount of the next bill. If the next bill is late, the five per cent will be assessed on the amount of the gas billed in that month, not on the total bill, including the previous bill and late charge.

There is a 10-day grace period before the penalty is levied. It would never amount to the 60 per cent alleged by the honourable member as the companies simply do not allow a customer to go a year without paying his bill. The gas would be cut off.

The Minister of Energy made a statement to the Legislature on November 21, 1978, entitled Public Utility Credit, Collection and Cutoff Practice. This statement was prepared after extensive studies by industry and government. The minister recommended that the grace period be extended to 16 days. All companies are now studying the matter.

The energy board used to permit a late penalty of 10 per cent on monthly customers and no charge on equalized-billing customers. However, as many equalized-billing customers were late, the penalty was reduced to five per cent and was applicable to all customers.

Mr. Peterson: A smaller ripoff.

Hon. Mr. Drea: When the companies appear before the energy board requesting a rate increase, billing practices are among the factors considered. The Public Utilities Act, administered by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, allows other utilities to require a deposit from customers prior to the start of service.

Mr. M. N. Davison: First of all, in regard to the interest rate that a five per cent penalty represents, whether it's compounded or not, would the minister not agree that five times 12 equals 60? Secondly, would he not agree that any penalty or any interest rate, when there's a favourable credit balance in the account, is a consumer ripoff? Will he not do something to protect the gas consumers of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, as usual, the honourable member is totally confused. The five per cent, no matter how long it goes, is not compounded—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Five per cent on one month is 60 per cent a year.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The member should just sit down and calm down and keep his head straight.

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I know it's Friday, but he should keep himself calmed down.

Mr. McClellan: You keep yourself calmed down. You're becoming hysterical.

Hon. Mr. Drea: On the equalized billing, these factors were taken into account—not by this minister, not by any legislation we have—these questions were raised before the Ontario Energy Board. The energy board comes within the sphere of the Ministry of Energy. In order to end the debate with the member for Hamilton Centre, I see no reason for my ministry to intervene on this matter, now or in the future before that board.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Just let the consumers be ripped off.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I do not consider it to be a ripoff.

One of the things the honourable member has to learn is that the rest of the public is not going to subsidize anyone if he or she doesn't pay bills on time. That's a pretty fundamental business practice.

ALLEN CASE REPORT

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Could the Attorney General report to this House on comments attributed to him in the local media subsequent to the acquittal of Gordon Allen at his murder trial that he intends to conduct an investigation into the investigative tactics used by the police in preparing the crown's case in that trial?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I don't think I said I was going to conduct an investigation. As the member knows, we're not an investigative ministry. I did say I had requested a full report from the Metropolitan Toronto Police Department and from the crown attorney's office in relation to this matter. I expect the report to be forthcoming very shortly.

Mr. Warner: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it the Attorney General's position that evidence collected illegally should not be admissible in the courts in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know whether this has anything to do with the Allen case. I don't think there was any suggestion of evidence collected illegally. There was some suggestion or concern expressed about the manner in which a particular interrogation was carried on. As I've already said, I'm waiting for a report in that regard.

Mr. Stong: Arising out of the last answer: The concern obviously surrounded the use of a phoney affidavit in the acquisition of evidence and the later presenting of that evidence in court. That is what concerned us. Would the Attorney General direct himself in that respect in reporting to the House?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: A major part of the report I'm awaiting deals with that particular matter.

CHOICE OF PHYSICIAN

Mr. Swart: A question of the Minister of Labour: Will the minister recall that during the Workmen's Compensation Board's estimates on March 29 of this year, my colleague, the member for Bellwoods, strongly condemned section 21(1) of the Workmen's Compensation Board Act? The minister will know that section said an employer may require an employee to visit a doctor of the employer's choice or risk losing compensation.

Does the minister know that Mr. W. R. Kerr, of the Workmen's Compensation Board, replied to him, "That section has been inoperative since the day it was put in the act in 1915"?

Will the minister now note carefully the contents of a letter dated April 17, 1979, from Hayes-Dana Limited, in Thorold, to Mr. Ross Secord, of 33 McColl Drive in Welland? I quote from that letter—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the honourable member place the question?

Mr. Swart: Yes, I will put the question. This is a very important part of the question.

"You are to report to the office of Dr. McCullough on Wednesday, April 25, 1979 at 3:15 p.m. Be further advised that failure to keep this appointment will be a violation of section 21(1) of the Workmen's Compensation Act which reads:

"An employee who claims compensation or to whom compensation is payable under this Part shall, if so required by his employer, submit himself for examination by a legally qualified medical practitioner provided and paid for by the employer."

Would the minister now agree that, in fact, section 21 is being used by employers to threaten employees to go to a doctor who well could be pro-company? And, doesn't he now agree that this section—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order. Put the question.

Mr. Swart: —ought now to be rescinded and will he bring in such an amendment?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I would appreciate if the member would give me a copy of the letter. I'll take the question as notice and respond next week.

Mr. Swart: A supplementary: May I ask him also to note well that the letter also states: "Your employment at Hayes-Dana will be subject to the results of this independent medical. Failure to keep this appointment could result in dismissal from your employment at Hayes-Dana."

Does the minister agree with that kind of oppression? I'd like to have his comments on it and will he also amend the Workmen's Compensation Board Act and the Labour Relations Act so that any employee—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think the member—

Mr. Swart: I'm asking, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question was taken as notice. The honourable member may add a very brief question so that he can ask for further information, but this is not the time to make a speech.

Mr. Swart: The question I want to ask is, will he amend the Labour Relations Act or the Workmen's Compensation Board Act so that where the Workmen's Compensation Board is involved the employee may only be required to see the doctors of his choice or the doctor where he is directed by the Workmen's Compensation Board?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I'll take that as notice and report.

Mr. McClellan: I hope the minister will find out whether I was misled by his officials or not.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. B. Newman: I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Recently, the minister announced evacuation planning concerning nuclear plants in the province of Ontario. As there is a nuclear plant within 30 miles of the city of Windsor in the state of Michigan, would the minister consider contacting the operators of that plant, Detroit Edison Company, and also discuss with the local officials possible evacuation plans for the Windsor area in case of some type of mishap in Michigan?

Mr. Warner: Bette wants to close Windsor anyway.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, the issue of contingency planning, as the member knows, was discussed in some detail in committee and here, and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) indicated that there would be an international committee requested to review off-shore problems and I expect to be part of those discussions. I will certainly keep the point of view the member has mentioned in mind when I go to the meetings.

Mr. Cooke: A supplementary: Would the minister agree that the potential dangers to cities that are on the boundary between the United States and Canada are much greater? He can't use the same excuse he's used for lack of planning with the nuclear reactors here in Ontario because the one being built in Michigan is not a Candu reactor. We're dealing with one of their reactors.

It's of great concern to the people of Windsor that there has been no evacuation planning and no contingency plan in case there is an accident. Leadership is required on the part of the government to make sure that a plan is developed.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I appreciate the concerns the citizens must have about off-shore nuclear plants and, certainly, that is one of the issues that has been raised as a result of the Three Mile Island event. I can assure the member that I share the concern he has expressed and that will be a part of the—

Mr. McClellan: The minister should have a violin.

Mr. Laughren: There's that concern again.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Listen, Floyd; settle down young man. It will soon be after the 22nd and you can relax.

Mr. Laughren: The minister's concern is overflowing.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I'll take that point of view as well to the committee meeting.

Mr. McClellan: The minister is going to die of concern.

[11:00]

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: Is the minister not very concerned about the situation of this nuclear plant with its problems of design and the evacuation systems that may need to be set up because of the length of time that it takes to get cross-boundary agreements on anything of this sort? Is the minister not concerned about the length of time it is going to take? And will he move with some urgency in this matter to see that the proper safety devices, if possible, can be built into that plant and the citizens of Windsor protected?

Mr. McClellan: The minister is going to die of concern.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are concerned about the member for Windsor-Sandwich.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Like the other members of this House, I have been reading the papers and I have been interested in the moves that have been taking place south of the border with regard to nuclear plants. I would expect the member would acknowledge there is a concern being demonstrated south of the border with regard to that matter.

Mr. Laughren: There is that concern again.

Mr. McClellan: I'm going to send the minister a thesaurus.

ADULT ADOPTEES

Mr. Sweeney: I have a question to the minister responsible for the social development policy field or to the Premier, whoever chooses to pick it up. Can the minister advise this House whether or not cabinet has made a decision with respect to the Child Welfare Act, particularly on the section dealing with adult adoptees?

Mr. J. Reed: Neither one of them knows the answer.

Mrs. Campbell: Don't look so stunned.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I am just following you.

I would like to say to the honourable member that it is under consideration.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Can the minister identify for the House the criteria that are going to be considered in making that decision?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: We are consulting with the minister on all of the legislation that relates to the new act which will, we hope, be proclaimed on June 1.

Mr. Sweeney: Given the fact that the bill including that section, was passed by this House in third reading, does the government have any intention at all of removing that section from the bill?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: As far as I know, there is no intention to remove any section of the bill.

TOURISM

Mr. Wildman: I have a question of the Minister of Northern Affairs. In view of the request made by the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association that the government should fund a study of the economic effects of acid precipitation on northern lakes on the tourist industry, what response is the government prepared to make to that request? Is it willing to fund a study this summer to try to assess the effect on jobs in the tourist industry?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The honourable member is very much aware that we in the Ministry of Northern Affairs have been very closely associated with the tourist industry in northern Ontario, having funded a number of studies related to the economic future of that industry in that part of Ontario. I have not been made aware of any such request to take a look into that particular study.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The oral question period has expired.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Vote Tory on Tuesday.

Mr. McClellan: Not a chance.

Mr. Martel: Are you begging now?

Mr. Sweeney: Is that a paid political announcement?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Your leader is voting Tory.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

EMPLOYMENT STANDARD AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Lupusella moved first reading of Bill 98, An Act to amend the Employment Standards Act, 1974.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lupusella: The principle of this bill clearly spells out that electronic surveillance can only be used if the employer can prove it is necessary for the protection and safety of the workers. At present there are no restrictions on the use of electronic surveillance in the workplace. All appeals to the Ontario Human Rights Commission have failed to rid Ontario workplaces of cameras and other spying devices.

Employers use electronic surveillance devices for two reasons. The first is to prevent theft; however, they do not need to prove that theft has ever occurred or is likely to occur, or that electronic surveillance is the best or the only means to control theft. Just because an employer is afraid that theft might occur is no reason he should be able to spy on his employees and show no respect for their dignity and privacy.

The second possible justification for electronic surveillance is that it increases the productivity of the workers.

An hon. member: Is this an explanation or a speech?

Mr. Gregory: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. The honourable member seems to be debating the bill. Isn't he supposed to be just introducing it and discussing the principle?

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order: You will recall yesterday that when the Attorney General introduced a bill, the Speaker allowed him to make a statement after both bills were introduced. I remind the honourable member of that.

Mr. McClellan: One rule for the government and one rule for everybody else.

Mr. Breithaupt: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker: I think there has been some acceptance in the House that an introductory statement is made briefly and that usually it follows the form of the notes inside the page of the bill. If those notes are extensive and have to be dealt with then there is some merit in a somewhat developed statement; but I do agree this seems to be rather a lengthy comment on this one point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appreciate the comments made by the honourable members. I'm quite sure it's been the custom of the House that basically the purpose for the time allotted after the introduction of the bill is strictly for an explanation of the bill. I'm sure the honourable member for Dovercourt will stick to that.

Mr. Lupusella: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I got your message and I'm satisfied. In view of the concerns raised by the honourable member for Mississauga East, I conclude my brief remarks by stating that if the bill passes, working people, particularly immigrants and the low paid workers, will have won a significant victory.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, I'm afraid the honourable member is out of order saying "if the bill passes." Would the honourable member please take his seat. I feel that remark really is not appropriate at this time, on the introduction of the bill. The honourable member has introduced it and we will see when it is discussed whether that will come into effect.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answer to question 15 and the interim answer to question 173 standing on the Order Paper. (See appendix, page 2116.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS

On vote 701, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. Wildman: I wonder if the minister could give some clarification with regard to the comments I raised in the leadoff I made last Monday on the comments made by a Mr. Jackman of his ministry with regard to the directory. I know it's a small matter. It is an expenditure of only $18,000, but I wonder if the minister could clarify as to whether or not this was indeed a trial balloon sent up by the ministry to get comments from various people and ask for clarifications and criticisms, or if indeed it was a final edition for that year. It was just full of errors, and when those errors were drawn to the attention of the ministry they backed up and said it was just a draft. If it was indeed just a draft, why on earth was it done in such an elaborate fashion and why didn't the ministry just send out questionnaires to various municipalities and bands and organizations in unorganized areas to get the information?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Many of the clerks and many of the people in northern Ontario were looking to us to pull together a very comprehensive survey or a comprehensive list of all the communities and what they could offer and what was there. It involved the whole aspect of identifying all those areas in northern Ontario. While there were some minor mistakes, I thought the editorial in the Sault Star was a little overdone.

There were some mistakes. To err is human, let's be honest. I can tell you I didn't lose any sleep over the errors that were in that report. They can be corrected very quickly and they will be in the next printing of that very comprehensive bit of information.

Mr. Wildman: In relation to that, it would have been far better if the director of information services for the ministry had said what the minister has just said, admitted the mistake and said that they would improve on it next time. In relation to the overall co-ordination function of his ministry and in relation to the main office, I also would like to know if the minister could indicate if in the operation of flood relief in the northeast, which I raised last Monday, Mr. Herb Aiken, the assistant deputy, is going to play an active role; and if he is what that role will be in co-ordinating the assessment of damages and the distribution of government funds? Is this what the ministry sees as its role in such emergencies—and I am not being critical particularly—namely, coming in later, after the immediate emergency is over, to try to deal with the cleanup and the rehabilitation in a somewhat similar way to what happened in Cobalt? Is that the situation?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This matter was dealt with extensively during the last couple of weeks. Just as late as this morning we had a very broad meeting with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), along with senior staff from five or six ministries, including Bruce Lonsdale who was there from Field. As the hon. member knows, the communities have banded together and have engaged his services in trying to co-ordinate the municipal response to that very disastrous problem that occurred in that particular area. The Assistant Deputy Minister, Northeastern Ontario, Herb Aiken, has been designated by cabinet as the co-ordinator to come in, as you correctly say, after the fact, and to be the main contact for that group in that particular area and to co-ordinate all the various activities and the assistance that we will be giving to that particular area from the provincial point of view.

Mr. Wildman: Can the minister indicate when the government anticipates a decision on White River? Will that be at the next cabinet meeting next week?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

[11:15]

Mr. Wildman: Okay, then that's fine. I will just leave that. I just have one other question in regard to your co-ordination and liaison with other ministries.

The minister disagreed with me when I raised this briefly on a previous occasion, but there is some evidence that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has been very unhappy with the continued existence of the very few statute labour boards in the unorganized areas of the north and has been actively encouraging those boards to convert to local roads boards. For one thing, the funding formula is particularly different between the two, and in some ways it is advantageous in terms of global funding for a board to be a local roads board rather than a statute labour board. However, of course, the statute labour board can contract out the work rather than having MTC carry it out, and in some ways they can save money that way.

Recently it came to my attention that MTC is proposing a meeting with the various local statute labour boards that are left to try and talk about the whole issue. I think they appear at least to be trying to discourage them from continued existence and to encourage them to convert to local roads boards. Is this the minister's understanding? If it is, what input has this ministry had with MTC about this? Have you tried to poll the views of the chairpersons of the various statute labour boards to find out their views on this matter?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This is an area in which we would not really get involved. I think it is fair to say the Ministry of Transportation and Communications is very pleased with the operation of the local roads board. They are funded, as the honourable member correctly pointed out, on a two-for-one basis; however, the actual expenditures are done through the ministry itself. In other words, the $1 raised by the local roads board is sent to MTC and they do the actual work.

I think there is some benefit to that in that MTC does have the equipment. Under the Statute Labour Act, of course, the statute labour board can engage their own contractors and do their own work, but they only get funded on a one-for-one basis.

I would have to agree that if there is a movement to go to local roads boards, and I am not sure if there is, that is the route to go. I know in my own home town of Hudson it took us some time to convince the local people there were some real advantages in going to the local roads board. I think the assistance given in administration alone was very beneficial. Quite frankly, there is a duplication, there is no question about it, with a local roads board and a statute labour board actually doing the same thing. I don't think it is necessary to have two acts to look after roads in unorganized areas. I think they are just trying to streamline their operation and I would agree with it.

Mr. Wildman: Just in brief response to that, I don't have any great disagreement with what the minister has said; however there are some members of statute labour boards who feel they can get some of their work done, grading and so on, at substantially less cost by contracting out to local contractors than it might cost them if they were having MTC do the work, because of greater overhead costs for MTC and so on.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I might elaborate a little further on the statute labour board. I think if you look at the act itself and go back into history, you will see that in many unorganized areas of northern Ontario much of the work was contributed over the years. In other words, you actually went out and did your statute labour on the road and that was a credit to your property. This is not possible under a local roads board. It is on an assessment basis, not on the work performed. I think really the statute labour board has outlived its day and the route to go, and a more modern approach, would be to the local roads board.

Mr. Wildman: Thank you; I have a further item in relation to the question I raised with the Premier (Mr. Davis) today. I would like to give the minister the opportunity to respond specifically to the relationship between his ministry and the Northern Ontario Development Corporation in northern Ontario, and to the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Administration. I think it is only fair the minister have the opportunity to clarify that situation, and I would like to give him that opportunity to do so if he wishes to take it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what there is to clarify. I understand that as I was walking out of the House the honourable member did stand up and ask a question, leaving an inference that it was political patronage between myself and Mr. Ratuski in Kenora. I think that is about the lowest, cheapest political attack I have ever heard in this House.

It would have to come from a member of the socialist party, because if anybody knows the Ratuski family, Mr. Ratuski's father was the former mayor of Kenora and a very strong Liberal for many years. In fact, talk about political affiliations, the present Ben Ratuski was the campaign manager for the former Liberal candidate back in 1967. The family is recognized for that.

The integrity of that family has been called into jeopardy and I just cannot stand here as a member of the Legislature and accept that. It is cheap and it is wrong. I think if the honourable member knew the family and knew the situation in the Kenora area he would appreciate what this family has done for the development of a wild rice industry in that area, the hundreds and hundreds of native people that his father and he himself employ in the industry.

In fact, it was done on the initiative of this man who has lived in the area all his life and has raised several children who are actively involved in the resource extraction business. He was in commercial fishing for several years. In fact, it was the Fresh Water Fish Marketing Corporation, when it was established, that put him right out of business. A lifetime of work had gone into that. He followed in his father's footsteps in moving into the wild rice business and it was through his initiative, his free enterprise spirit that encouraged him to move along and develop a product that is second to none on the North American continent as it relates to wild rice.

He has developed, with ingenuity, imagination and initiative, the only processing plant in the province of Ontario right at Keewatin, using a very simple gravity feed system on the shores of the Winnipeg River. Any assistance he did receive through ODC was certainly through the regular channels and was available to anybody who would want to apply.

I think the former Treasurer made it very clear in that article that there was no special attention given to his request because of his friendship with many members of this Legislature, not only on this side of the House but on that side of the House too. To leave an inference that there was political patronage, I just cannot accept it, I will not accept it, it is totally wrong and I think the comment should be retracted.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Chairman, I did invite the minister to make a response and he has indicated that he considers my inference cheap. I would like to point out that I was not intending to criticize any particular individual, but to ask a question in relationship to a number of development loans that have been extended and the relationship of this ministry towards them.

Since the minister has referred to the article I will refer to it myself. It is an article from Harrowsmith magazine. I guess the author of the article phoned the ministry and asked for names of commercial sources of wild rice in Ontario and from a secretary received this response: "I can give you the name of the company that sells it," she told the caller. "Shoal Lake Wild Rice Limited in Keewatin. They have two offices." She furnished the telephone number for each office and then was asked if there were any other companies selling wild rice. "I don't know if anybody else sells it. This man just happens to be a friend of Mr. Bernier's."

I am not particularly concerned about what she said. What I am concerned about is the fact, as raised by this article, that the Manomin co-op was not mentioned. I am wondering why it wasn't, and for that matter why that co-op has not received the assistance of the Ontario Food Council or the interest-free loans that might be available from the Ontario Development Corporation. Perhaps if that kind of assistance had been given that operation would be more viable and would be able to compete more effectively.

If the minister considers my inference cheap, I merely refer him to the comments made by a member of his ministry in response to a question about information on the availability of commercial wild rice. I am not criticizing any individual outside of the government, but I think the whole question, as I said in my leadoff, is the need to ensure that there's not any appearance of favouritism.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: To respond briefly, I appreciate the honourable member's remarks. I realize he is getting his information from a magazine article and it may raise these questions in his mind. As a ministry we have no involvement in NODC applications. We are not a line ministry, such as the Ministry of Natural Resources, which would be dealing with the allocation of a timber limit in response to an application from a sawmill operation through the Northern Ontario Development Corporation. We don't have that kind of connection as a co-ordinating ministry, having funds for development with regard to municipal infrastructure and setting priorities for northern road development. Our relationship is not the same as that of other ministries. We don't have that kind of connection in NODC.

In connection with the wild rice company I know of no other producer—I hope the honourable member is listening?

Mr. Wildman: I am.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't know of any other producer who had rice available at that time; just the Shoal Lake Wild Rice Company. I understand that Manomin some time ago did send their rice to Minnesota for processing. It is down in the United States. Here we have one operation in Keewatin. In fact it is my understanding there was such a small crop last year he is actually buying American rice to look after his customers in the United States.

My secretary was quite right in saying there is no other company in Ontario selling wild rice. If anyone would call, I would hope that she would respond in the same manner, saying that Mr. Ratuski is a friend of mine. I do not deny the fact. He is a personal friend of mine and I am proud of it. I want to repeat that there is no connection between NODC and the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

Mr. Laughren: I want to talk about a few different matters that appropriately come under the head office vote because they reflect policies of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

We in this party have been concerned about the role of the Ministry of Northern Affairs from the day the government rejected the amendment put forward by my colleague the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) because it indicated it did not appear to be very serious about really effecting change in northern Ontario. While they talked about the Ministry of Northern Affairs being a co-ordinating ministry, it really was nothing but a ribbon-cutting ministry for the minister to trip across northern Ontario—what was the expression?—"like a wounded moose in a snowstorm." That's the role that the minister has tended to play.

The reason I say that, and I am rather harsh on the minister, is because despite the number of very specific problems to which he should have addressed himself in the years that we have had a Ministry of Northern Affairs, nothing has really happened.

This morning I wrote a letter to the Premier (Mr. Davis). I am sending a copy to the Minister of Northern Affairs and also to the Minister of Health and the Minister of the Environment, about their failure as a group of ministries to do anything about the problem of drinking water in the community of Gogama. It is unbelievable the way they have passed the problem from one to the other. It is a classic case of a co-ordinating ministry just mucking things up and throwing red tape into the machine.

It's serious. I've asked the Premier not to put me back to one of the ministers because there appears to be no solution there. I'm very critical of the various ministries, because we're not dealing with a simple problem of catering to my whims as the member for Nickel Belt, we're talking about a community of 500 or 600 or 700 people, and considerably more than that in the summertime, a community which has extremely high levels of nitrates in the water table.

The minister knows about it. As a matter of fact on March 2 of this year I met with officials of the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Northern Affairs in Timmins to talk about the problem. I've mentioned it to the Minister of Northern Affairs. It always seems to be a case of tomorrow. They say: "When we get the unorganized communities legislation in, then maybe we can do something about it." Yet on Monday of this week the minister stood up and said he didn't know if this legislation would be going through this session. So it's put off again. If it's put off until the fall, there's nothing can be done in terms of a water supply system in northern Ontario in the wintertime, so it will at least be put off for another year while the nitrate levels spread in that community.

I'm using Gogama as the example for a couple of reasons. There are other communities too, in Nickel Belt, and I'm sure elsewhere in northern Ontario where the water supply problem is serious. I could use Sultan as an example, where there are very high levels of nitrates. The minister knows they are dangerous to infants, and potentially dangerous to pregnant women.

It's not as though there is no solution. In Gogama there is a communal water supply system that services the Ministry of Natural Resources' people and the OPP detachment there. It would be expensive to extend it but it can be extended. There's been study after study done in the last six or seven years, and no concrete action is taken. It's always tomorrow, it's always there'll be something around the corner with which to deal with the problem.

The typical financing arrangements are not sufficient. I think the minister would agree to that. The one-to-one formula that applies to Gogama wouldn't work. As a matter of fact, I don't think two to one would work either, because of the cost of establishing a communal water supply system. Special consideration has to be given to communities where health is a problem. Where at least a potential health hazard exists you've got to throw out those criteria.

I know the minister is worried about setting a precedent, but when we're talking about the health of people you can't use precedent as a reason for failing to take any action. I really do urge the minister to seriously think about it and not to use the arguments we don't have the legislation in place or we're going to have to wait yet again. That's not a defensible position, given the length of time it's been a problem and the number of ministers who have been involved.

So help me, if I were to bring in all the files I have on the Gogama problems, I would need all the pages that are here assembled. What a fine group of pages we've had this time! I am somewhat prejudiced about the quality of pages this time. Nevertheless, it's been a fine group. It would take all the pages to carry in all the files I have on Gogama. I didn't do that; but the minister understands it, he and his ministry really lack a lot of credibility in our eyes because of the failure to resolve that particular problem.

The other thing, leading on from that, is the whole question of the development of northern Ontario. I hope the Treasurer would at some time, not because I said it but because it represents the policy of his party, take a look at the comments I made in the budget response on mining machinery and what I see as at least a partial solution to the problems of the development of northern Ontario.

In this province in 1978 we imported 91 per cent of our mining machinery. Back less than 10 years ago it was down around 60 per cent. The imports are meeting an increasing proportion of the domestic demand for machinery. We're one of the world leaders in resources but we're importing 91 per cent of our needs for mining machinery. The private sector simply hasn't done it.

I was taken to task somewhat by the Globe and Mail for my fixation on crown corporations. But I want to tell you that in every single case where I mentioned a crown corporation it was because the private sector had failed to meet the need. It was not because of any particular passion of mine. Take a look at mining machinery, if you will. If the private sector won't do it, then I would suggest to you that we have to do it. It's nuts for us to be importing 91 per cent of our mining machinery into this jurisdiction, it's absolutely nuts. I'm not just talking about mining machinery to meet the needs of the nickel mines, but there are gold mines, copper mines, the oil exploration development out in western Canada, and, the coal fields. They need all sorts of mining machinery.

The Ministry of Industry and Tourism runs around saying we've got to stimulate exports and that's the solution to our balance of payments, the growth of jobs and so forth. Surely the first step is to develop industries to meet the needs of our domestic industries like mining. Surely we should first develop a mining machinery complex to meet our own needs, then develop the economies of scale and the expertise, the research and development to export them to world markets. There's an enormous potential here. By our figures, in Ontario alone there are at least 12,000 jobs at stake. That's what that 91 per cent of imports represents. It represents 12,000 jobs. If it requires joint ventures with the private sector, fine. The important thing is to produce our machinery here.

We can argue if you like about who should do it, but I don't think you'd disagree we should be producing it here. If the private sector hasn't got it, then let's move in and do it. Let's talk to them about it.

We talked to Inco when they appeared before the select committee on layoffs and they indicated there didn't seem to be any suppliers here. When we pursued it further, we found out there were interlocking directorships between Inco and mining machinery suppliers in the United States. When you've got interlocking directorships it's a very comfortable and nice way to buy your mining machinery. There is nothing illegal about it, but it's one reason we never developed a mining machinery complex in the province of Ontario. We are the leader in this country, we are the leader as a province, in the proportion of manufacturing and real wealth that is created in Canada, and yet we stand idly by while we import 91 per cent of our mining machinery. That is a sad comment on the policy of this government.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs should be playing a very active role in this. I can imagine what a mining machinery complex would do for the Sudbury basin. It wouldn't have to be there, but it would be an ideal location. We've got the best laboratory in the world in the mines of Sudbury. We've got a university where the research and development work can be done, and we've got a willing and eager work force in Sudbury as well. The steel industry is at the Sault. There is a potential for a deep water port in the area, and yet nothing seems to happen. We just let things drift and import an increasing proportion of our mining machinery.

The minister gets up or the various ministers get up and talk about stimulating the small business community. The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) brought in a bill which we debated and passed last night on small business development corporations. We give a 30 per cent write-off to people who invest in a small business development corporation which will then put equity into small businesses. That's fine, we supported the bill; but the minister surely knows the biggest boost he could give a place like Sudbury, its small business community, would be to establish a major complex to turn out mining machinery there. Nothing would stimulate the small business community as much as a major operation such as mining machinery. If you really want to stimulate the small business community, that's what you have to do, not just give them tax incentives and write-offs and so forth. They'll take them, obviously, they'd be crazy not to; but that's not the long-run answer to developing an industrial complex anywhere in the province of Ontario.

When the minister responds when I sit down in a couple of minutes, I hope he will talk about developing a mining machinery complex in the Sudbury basin. I can't think of anything that would give a greater boost to northern Ontario than to do that.

This minister has an obligation to talk about the development of the north. The former Treasurer, Darcy McKeough, said there would be no secondary manufacturing in northern Ontario for 20 years. He said 20 years, and this minister isn't doing anything to indicate he has views different from that. If he does, I'd like to know what they are.

He can get up and talk about incentives in the mining industry in order to create a climate for investment. That's what the Premier (Mr. Davis) did this morning. What a joke. There have been incentives given to the mining industry for 75 years, and not just from this government; yet what have they done for you? What have they done for us in northern Ontario? Where is the mining machinery complex? Where is Falconbridge's refinery? For 45 years they have been in Sudbury and still they have no refinery. They do the dirty and the dangerous work in Sudbury and the clean work in Norway. We have had enough of that. They lay off people as they see fit and they export capital to the other worlds, the third world and the United States, as they see fit, with not even a whimper from the Minister of Northern Affairs.

The Premier beats his chest and says, "We put a lot of effort into saving Capreol and saving Sudbury." I am sorry to say it but we measure this government by its actions, not by words. That is how we feel about it. We have had it up to here with all the promises of what is going to be done for northern Ontario and seeing nothing come to fruition. That is wrong. People's expectations are raised and then let down. We are very critical in that sense.

I have only talked about mining machinery, but there are other areas, if there was more time, we could talk about as well. I really wish this minister would go to the Treasurer and to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) and say, "Look, guys, you have $200 million in the Employment Development Fund; instead of spreading it all over Ontario in tourism, in manufacturing, in resources and in agriculture, take that $200 million and put it into a sector and do something meaningful with it." I can't think of a better sector than mining machinery. Take that $200 million and start to build a mining machinery complex in the Sudbury basin. That is what should be done with that $200 million. At the end of a year that $200 million is going to be spread all over Ontario and there will not be a single sector improved because it will be spread too thin.

If my suggestion is taken up we would address the problem of one sector and rebuild one sector at a time, maybe even two. With $200 million something can be done. But, with a grant of half a million here, half a million there, spread all over Ontario, in the end no difference will be seen. We will still be importing 91 per cent of our mining machinery. There should really be a serious look taken at that.

The other area I want to talk briefly about is the obligation of this ministry to look after communities that are abandoned. The minister knows the town of Chapleau, he's been there; within the last six months or a year he's been to Chapleau, I believe. I just came back from there last weekend. I spent almost the whole weekend up there in Chapleau.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am in the area on a pretty regular basis.

Mr. Laughren: Who?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Me.

Mr. Laughren: Are you? Yes. I won't ask the minister to table a record of his visits to Chapleau in the last 10 years.

There are a couple of rivers running through the middle of the town of Chapleau. On one side of the river there is a sawmill. The town boundaries extend for part of that area. It is called "The Planer," because that is where the planing mills are. A lot of that portion known as The Planer is not within the boundaries of the town of Chapleau. So guess what? They are in real trouble. They have inadequate subdivision of property. They have inadequate drinking water, sewage disposal facilities, and the roads are unbelievable. I almost lost my car in a pothole over there.

Mr. Havrot: Too bad you didn't get lost.

Mr. Laughren: If I had had a small car I don't think I would have emerged from the bottom of the pothole. It is really serious. The place is abandoned. The town won't extend its boundaries to take it in. I am angry with the town too. I am very angry with the town of Chapleau for the way the people in The Planer have been treated. I am not proud of that and they know that. As a matter of fact there is going to be a meeting in a week or two to look at one specific problem, but it is only one specific problem involving a trailer park. Those people have been abandoned.

The property isn't properly subdivided by the lumber companies, or whoever owns the land; some of it is owned by the lumber company, some of it is privately owned. It is a real planning mess. And everybody allowed it to happen. There have to be 1,000 people there now. People come in, they live there, they work in the sawmills, they move on;

they have no sense of fixing up their houses. It would not be a good investment because who knows when they will be kicked out of there. A bunch of people is just getting eviction notices now from the trailer park. Why should they fix the place up? They have no real authority to be there, no statutory right to be there. That is wrong. It is one thing for the town to say, "Look, we have our own problems in this community." They have got a problem financing the existing boundary. But, no ministry of government, despite all the letters, will move in there and say, "This has gone far enough." The problem is only going to get worse, it cannot get better. So there is a choice. Either sit back and twiddle your thumbs and watch it get worse or move in aggressively and do something about it. [11:45]

Why doesn't the minister do something about it? I know it's complex and it involves different ministries. It involves the Ministry of Housing and it involves the health unit from the Sudbury area. It involves the municipality, it involves the Ministry of Natural Resources and it involves all sorts of people. What you would have to do, almost, is to send somebody in there with authority, as a lead for the various ministries to say: "We're going to work this out for heaven sakes." It's going to cost us some money but if we leave it it's going to cost more. The problem is much worse now than it was 10 years ago. In 10 years from now it will be worse still. I really urge the minister to move in there and do something about that problem.

The people in that community are almost solidly Franco-Ontarians. They are almost solidly French-speaking people. Chapleau is basically—I want to be careful—basically an anglo town in the way in which it is run; main street, council so forth. I really think the people on that side need improved services in their language. They should have French television beamed in there. I know that's federal jurisdiction; I've done the correspondence on that end. You'd never guess who the former federal member was for the town of Chapleau. He was Ralph Stewart. I can't tell you which party he was with because I don't think anybody knows. That was the former member. He promised French television for the people in Chapleau.

He kept promising it, but nothing ever happened. Even though that's a federal jurisdiction, the minister should come in and state in no uncertain terms to the CRTC in Ottawa that this should be a priority, that those people should have French television. I'd say the majority of them don't speak English. A lot of them have come from Quebec and have settled in that community. They are good, hard-working people in the sawmills and in the bush. For them to be just abandoned, which is the word that keeps coming back to me, for them to be abandoned by everyone is not fair.

That is simply not the way we want northern Ontario to be developed. I don't know if when the minister was there they took him on a tour of The Planer or not. I suspect they didn't, but I could be wrong. It is not something they would set up as a tour. Tour guides would not take you on a trip of The Planer area. They are good people, they pay their taxes and they send their kids to the school there; yet they're not getting a fair return for their presence in that community. They contribute a lot to it and they are getting very little in return.

It's partly a responsibility which the town hasn't met, but also the provincial government has a responsibility to oversee something like that. If a large number of people are being neglected, the government has an obligation to move in and do something about it. I know it's not easy, I wouldn't pretend otherwise. I haven't stood up here and said there are simple solutions to it, but the government has really got to get somebody in there, pull all the people together and get on with solving the problem.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I could go back to the earlier comments of the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman). I wanted to just put on the record for his information, and maybe for those who will be reading these comments in Hansard, that the author of that particular article in Harrow-smith magazine was a Cathy Avery. She was a former employee of Treaty No. 3 in the Kenora area. I put that in as a matter of interest. Also, I have just been reminded by a member of my staff that the Manomin plant, to which the member made reference did receive a very substantial federal grant—there was some thought that might be in the neighbourhood of about $900,000—to develop a wild rice business in that part of northwestern Ontario, which has never materialized. I think those are areas of interest that should be put on the record.

In connection with the member for Nickel Belt's comments. I share equally his concerns about Gogama. I appreciate your views; having been there on a number of occasions I know very well to what you refer. Where one area of the community is serviced with water the other area across the tracks is not. The health problem involved with regard to their water supply is a very serious one. Members will recall that the old Treasury department, TEIGA as we used to refer to it, did try to bring forward a piece of legislation known as Bill 102 that would have organized them in a very formal way, which was not acceptable to the people living in those unorganized areas and it was rejected.

We have spent some considerable time going back over that route and not wanting to fall into the same problems that TEIGA did or doing the same things that they did. We wanted to get an input from the unorganized areas to respond to their type of structure, I suppose one might say, and we think we have that in the Local Services Boards Act which will be introduced very very shortly. If the members will make way for me, I would be glad to get the legislation through this session if at all possible, if time will permit. I would be pleased to, really.

Mr. Laughren: Why not bring it in now?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think I will be bringing it in June 7 for introduction.

Mr. Laughren: Are you saying you have to wait for that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, it goes to the final stages of preparation now with the legal people.

Mr. Laughren: No, I mean for that water supply. Do you have to wait for that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I want to address that problem. One of our problems is to be able to deal with an organized group in those unorganized areas. I can say to the honourable member, and I say it loudly and as clearly as I can, that Gogama has to be a priority with us because there is a health problem, and if there are other unorganized areas that are in that similar category where their water supply is being affected, then I think it's incumbent upon this ministry to pull out all stops once we get things in place, and I intend to do that.

Mr. Laughren: I will hold you to that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I do. I say that very sincerely, because when we are dealing with people I feel very upset that we have to wait this period of time to get this legislation but there is no other way of doing it. I think I wrote the honourable member just recently and indicated that to him. I know my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, is very concerned, as is the Minister of Natural Resources, because we have a problem here that because—

Mr. Laughren: The Minister of Health is not very happy with you. You know that, don't you? He was very critical about Gogama.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —of internal problems and our legal problems we can't move as effectively and quickly as we would like. I just want to say that we look at Gogama as a priority and we will look at it as quickly as we can and as quickly as we can put something into place. I want to make that commitment to the people in Gogama.

In connection with industrial diversification for northern Ontario, I am a little surprised at the short memory of the honourable member for Nickel Belt, because I can recall just a few months back—I guess it is less than a year ago—when all the members sitting on that side of the House were at a very important gathering in Sudbury—

Mr. Laughren: Talk about mining machinery.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —wait a minute—the 2001 Conference established locally, local initiatives, local enthusiasm, support from the member's party, support from the labour unions, support from the community and the private sector, just a tremendous step forward for that particular community, funded very handsomely by my ministry to the tune of $600,000, where they would look at themselves. Not only did we fund that study to that extent but we also have the regional municipality of Sudbury import substitution study, to develop a secondary manufacturing production and marketing strategy with the objective of—

Mr. Laughren: You have done enough studies, Leo.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —making and marketing locally items that are presently imported into the northeastern Ontario region, thereby increasing local employment opportunities given to the local people, and what better way to approach that problem than to let the local people become involved?

Mr. Laughren: What a copout.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is not a copout. It's a sincerity on this part of the government. We are not going in there with a heavy hand. We have to have them with us. We have given them the resources to look at themselves, to look at what they can do to improve the economic well-being of that particular area. So when you see the financial assistance to the Sudbury 2001 committee, the import substitution study, and let me read into the record a number of other areas that we are working with—

Mr. Martel: Other studies?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, they are not studies at all; just listen. In Atikokan, the economic development project we are doing there, the lead ministry concept, and I would ask the member to go to Atikokan and see what we are doing there. There's an attitude in Atikokan today that doesn't exist anywhere else in northern Ontario; a community that knows that its main employer is—

Mr. Laughren: Is winding down.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, is winding down. They know that; they have known it for 30 years. We are in there working side by side with them, and it is a treat. They are very complimentary of what this government is doing in Atikokan. That is the kind of approach that we are doing there.

In Geraldton, industrial land servicing.

Hornepayne: The member for Algoma knows what we are doing in that community. A $12 million town hall concept—a joint provincial, private and federal government program; something that will make Hornepayne a real model in northern Ontario. I think the member for Algoma will agree with me. He was there at the sod turning ceremony, a very enlightening experience. The private sector, the public sector and the whole community are pulling together to develop a major civic centre that will be the model we may use in other communities in northern Ontario. We are looking at it very carefully to make sure that it does meet the needs of that part of northern Ontario and satisfies the unique needs of places like Hornepayne.

Mr. Laughren: Will it create jobs?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It will, yes. The CNR—turn around and ask the member for Algoma what it will do for Hornepayne. It is just fantastic, really it is.

Kirkland Lake: The industrial land servicing at Kirkland Lake; an industrial development review for Kirkland Lake.

North Bay: Let's talk about what we are doing in North Bay. We signed a $10 million Ontario DREE agreement that will see the development of a major industrial park at North Bay. I regret the member for Nipissing (Mr. Bolan) is not with us today. As the honourable members will recall—I just want to make a note of it on the record—the former Treasurer and I had been dealing with the federal government and the city of North Bay with regard to an Ontario DREE agreement in the amount of about $14 million.

The present—is the Solicitor General or Attorney General that comes from North Bay?—Jean-Jacques Blais, a very senior man in the federal cabinet; at any rate, I felt with him being there that we could get a total package for North Bay, a $14 million package. It would have taken in the industrial park area, the development of the Marshall Avenue overpass, something that is really needed in North Bay. I must say the industrial development commissioner in North Bay has done one fantastic job in attracting small industry to his community. That has encouraged both levels of government to move in with this development.

But what happened? The federal government came back here and said: "Look, we are ready to go for a $10 million package, not a $14 million package. Somewhere down the road we will talk about the other $4 million. We would like to get on with just the development of the industrial park, so we are prepared to sign a $10 million package."

We looked at it very carefully and the big talk of cutbacks came to the fore. There was some concern that we might even lose the $10 million package. I recall very vividly going to North Bay and meeting with the chamber of commerce and being literally roasted for my stand in wanting the whole loaf. They said, "Look, don't take the whole loaf; for God's sake take half the loaf. Let's get on with it." So we did—we went with the $10 million package.

I went up to North Bay a couple of weeks ago. Believe it or not I got roasted again, because now they want us to go back and get the other $4 million. I said, "If you had left us alone in the first place we would have had the whole package."

We have that kind of initiative and drive, and we are moving ahead. I just wanted to point that out to you and put it on the record, because the member for Nipissing was one who said, "Let's go for the $10 million package." Today he is being criticized in his own home town for going for that small package when they could have gone for the whole works. Being a northerner, I guess, it is my attitude when you see that kind of possibility ahead we should go for the whole works, because God knows we need it.

Sault Ste. Marie: an industrial opportunities study, and an expansion of the present industrial park. You will recall that is where we had the by-election not too long ago, and there was some criticism I think levelled at us about lack of industrial land.

Mr. Laughren: But did you see the figures on the number of jobs related to the steel industry up there?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: But look what is happening in Sault Ste. Marie. Go to the industrial park and see what is happening to the funds that we are putting into Sault Ste. Marie, the new companies that are going in.

Mr. Wildman: A lot less secondary industry related to the steel industry than there is in Hamilton.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I was taken on a tour and I was most impressed with the small factories being developed in the industrial park.

Mr. Laughren: When are we going to go on a northern tour?

[12:00]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We will talk about that too.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us about mining machinery and about Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I mentioned Sudbury.

In Timmins, of course, the small business management study is going on there about the industrial land servicing in the tritown area. We have established the development commission on Manitoulin Island. This was all designed to attract secondary industry into northern Ontario, so to say we are not thinking or moving in that direction is not totally correct.

Further, in our discussions with the federal government on the Department of Regional Economic Expansion agreements we have the responsibility for northern Ontario, to make sure any DREE agreements clearly spell out any purchases or any consultation or any needs connected with that agreement are Canadian first. That is clearly spelled out in the agreement, just to make sure. The Ministry of Northern Affairs has insisted on that. As we sign more Ontario DREE agreements, we hope there is going to be that incentive to attract industry into northern Ontario.

Chapleau is an area, of course, that has always been very close to us here in the Ministry of Northern Affairs, obviously because the former deputy was very familiar with it and it was first and foremost in many of our discussions. We are very familiar with the problems of Chapleau. As the honourable member has correctly pointed out, there is no easy solution. There are differences of opinion in that community and within the present council related to the sawmill area.

Mr. Laughren: You are not doing anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I have had discussions with the mayor—a very good mayor, I might say. He has some political aspirations that may give the member for Nickel Belt some concern. He has done great things for his community.

Mr. Laughren: One centre.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The recreational centre is the most beautiful in northeastern Ontario.

There is the new town hall concept; and three major complexes have opened in one year.

Mr. Laughren: You will not talk about the Planer. You are embarrassed about it. You are as guilty as they are.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not ashamed of it. We will resolve that problem. But let's look at the nice things happening in Chapleau.

Mr. Laughren: We are talking about a problem area and you won't do anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We are doing things there. The combination home they have there, the senior citizens units where they have extended care and residential care, is a model in northern Ontario. I tip my hat to the people in Chapleau for what they have done. I just have a great belief in those people, who have that kind of imagination. That kind of initiative will solve that problem.

Mr. Laughren: You are not going to do anything.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Let me finish. If we can help them, we will be there to help them in any way possible because there are going to be requirements for some resources. Let's be honest.

Mr. Laughren: There is going to be. They are not even in the town.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know. Even when they move into that particular area, the annexation—if that is what one wants to call it—will have problems associated with it. I do not have to tell you and I do not have to belabour the problems.

Mr. Laughren: I want to know what you are going to do and you are not telling me.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The initiative has to come from the local community.

Mr. Laughren: Outside the community?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It has to come from the local community to take them in.

Mr. Laughren: And if they don't want to annex it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They have to make application to the Ontario Municipal Board, as you well know. There is a certain route they have to go through.

Mr. Laughren: And if they don't do that?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They have to. I cannot force a big hand on them and tell them to do it. We can hold certain carrots out; there will be certain assistance granted them. There will be a certain infrastructure required. We are prepared to look at that.

Mr. Laughren: Only if they join the town. Is that right?

Mr. Chairman: Order. Perhaps the honourable minister would address his remarks to the chair.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The mayor is very much aware of our desire to see that area tidied up. I can tell the honourable member that when they move we will be there to assist them in every possible way.

Television in northern Ontario is an area of very serious concern to us in the Ministry of Northern Affairs. In fact, in this past throne speech there was a reference to our responsibility for improving television services in northern Ontario. We are awaiting the decision of the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission as it relates to the hearings they had in Thunder Bay. In fact, we had been promised it would be down by December 31 of last year; then it was January 31; and now the candidates tell me it is going to be this week. It will likely be next week now, because of that great event occurring on May 22.

Mr. Laughren: Ed Broadbent day.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I can assure the member, as I have assured many members in northern Ontario, that when that decision does come down we will be there, first and foremost, to make sure that the carrier, whoever he is, is assisted to a point, I suppose one might say in getting all of the jobs and in providing that type of recreation that many of us in southern Ontario just take for granted.

I might say to the honourable member that there are certain things occurring in northern Ontario with regard to television that are very encouraging. In Dryden just last week one of the local cable operators used his ingenuity to purchase one of those "dishes" and aimed it at the satellite. One Sunday afternoon he turned it on and was receiving TV signals from Atlanta, Georgia. Absolutely beautiful!

Mr. Wildman: Was it legal?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, it is not. I understand. It is something that is not totally acceptable to the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission. Nevertheless, the people in the Dryden area are elated with the quality of cable television they are getting from Atlanta, Georgia. I am told that there are eight or nine channels they can also pull in. That may be an answer for places like Chapleau.

Mr. Wildman: The feds are doing that in Saskatchewan, but they don't do it in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There are a couple of areas in northern Ontario where they will be doing something to bring television off the satellite. We are as anxious as the member is to get on with improving television services in northern Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: I raised three issues with the minister. One was the problem of the water supply in Gogama. The second was the question of developing a mining machinery complex in the Sudbury area to replace the 91 per cent of imports that meet our domestic demands. The third was the problem of The Planer area in Chapleau. On all three questions, the minister has said that we are not going to change the fact that we are doing nothing about it.

He said he has to wait for the legislation for the Gogama situation. He totally ignored the question of the mining machinery complex for the Sudbury basin and didn't even comment on it, which indicates to me that either he doesn't understand or doesn't have the courage to take on the Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Tourism in using the Employment Development Fund for that purpose. On The Planer area, he said blatantly that those people can do it on their own. Unless the town brings in The Planer area he is not going to do anything about it. That is a dismal response to very serious problems.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is totally wrong that the member should take that attitude. On this side of the House we put our money where our mouth is.

Mr. Laughren: What about those three issues?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We've looked at them. You've pointed them out to us. Read the record and you will see what we're doing. You're part of the 2001 Conference.

Mr. Laughren: I'm not talking about that. I'm talking about the mining machinery.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know, but wait a minute; the initiative should come from there. We'll give them the resources. On this side of the House we're not going to force people to do things. We encourage them and assist them. The initiative must come from that section.

Mr. Laughren: Put on a clown suit and come to the north.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We will be doing things. There is more advancement in this field than there has ever been before.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Essex North.

Mr. Wildman: He's got "north" in his name.

Mr. Ruston: That's right. The word "north" is in my riding, so I should have a right to ask some questions about the north.

Last Friday on the way home I was listening to CBC radio. The speaker was an expert on nuclear waste. One of the questions raised was the problem of mining tailings at Elliot Lake. It was a phone-in program and on the line was an engineer or physicist with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. If I remember correctly, I got the impression that he said they have never really addressed themselves completely to cleaning up the tailings from the Elliot Lake area.

In what way are you getting involved in this to protect the people of that area by seeing that this is taken care of? The Atomic Energy Control Board is the control agency and if it is not taking an active interest in this don't you think you should get involved in the matter in some way?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, that area is being addressed. There is considerable concern in the provincial Ministry of the Environment. But, as the member correctly points out, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has the overall responsibility as it relates to uranium. They have been doing some very extensive studies in the Elliot Lake area to lower the radiation count in the residential areas. I understand—I'm not totally sure on this—they've designed a type of basement where the air moves underneath the basement and the air flow there reduces the radiation count.

They are actively involved in holding public hearings and doing some very extensive studies. I believe they will be moving ahead with regard to the required residential developments that are needed in the Elliot Lake area.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I listen to the minister talk about all the wonderful things we're doing for northern Ontario, and I'm amazed. I am absolutely amazed. If he's the new guru of grunts, we don't need it.

According to the minister there are no problems. The minister talks in such grandiose terms of what's going on. Apparently, he doesn't see the northern Ontario I do—I get down to the ground; maybe he flies too high. Maybe he should get down to the ground.

The minister talked about studies this morning and what he was doing here, there and everywhere—everything's rosy—and he ignored the problems raised by my colleague. I'm going to talk about Capreol, and I'm going to talk about Sudbury, and I'm going to talk about Falconbridge. And in each instance the minister will back off.

When the bill creating this ministry was first introduced I moved a number of amendments. One in particular was to establish a fund so that when communities faced problems as a result of mining companies deciding to get up and leave, we would have an alternative. The government voted it down; the Liberals voted against it.

We've got a municipality called Capreol. The minister knows Capreol—my home town. A mining company has been there for 20 years; it only made $6.5 million last year. They're leaving, for two years. They're getting up and they're walking out. But, two years from now they're going to say, "Yoo-hoo, we're back. Put in some more additions to the schools. Put in another subdivision in the town. Create some more problems. We've got a 15-year life expectancy. You, the people of Capreol, pay the shot.

"When the going is good, we, the mining company from the United States, we reap the benefits. If it gets tough a little bit, we pack up our bongo balls and go home; and we say to the residents of the town of Capreol, 'You pick up the tab.'"

The same thing happened with respect to Mother Inco two years ago because we have no policy that regulates production, that says they can't stockpile for 13 months and then just decimate the community. Inco has reduced its work force from 19,000 to 11,000 in seven years. And they produce more today than they did seven years ago.

What have we got for policy? What's emanating from this ministry? Is the minister saying he will no longer tolerate massive stockpiling and then see tremendous chaos in an area? No way.

It's interesting. Read the article written by Val Ross for Canadian Business, May 1979; she indicates the arrogance—in fact, it's titled, The Arrogance of Inco.

[12:15]

Who protects the Sudbury basin? Who protects the municipality of Capreol and the taxpayers? The Premier established a committee. For two weeks I've been trying to get from the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Premier what short-term and long-term policy your government has because that was the purpose of that committee—of which you should have been chairman as you have that responsibility. But they made the Treasurer the chairman. In fact, the other day when I asked him the question he didn't even know who the new chairman was. He assumed it was the new Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld).

I want to tell you that you didn't meet and you didn't do a damn thing with respect to policies. You didn't develop one. That's why the Premier fudges it and that's why the Treasurer fudges it because you've got no policy. You can talk about 2001. I was at that great meeting.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Supporting it.

Mr. Martel: Yes, supporting it and hoping, like all northerners, that some day we'd have some courage to do something.

Do you think the $600,000 you gave for seed money will ever resolve the problems of a layoff like that at Inco? There were 2,400 in the mine alone and Falconbridge had 750. Take into consideration what that does in the other industries. There is a layoff of 5,000 people. You tell me that 2001 is going to be able to overcome that type of problem? That's wishful thinking with $600,000 in seed money to get started.

Let's get realistic. You helped to launch that. They will have some successes hopefully, but with the type of massive layoffs that occur when a whole industry shuts down or lays off or wipes out a community, they haven't got the fiscal capability to overcome that problem. You and I know it. Why don't you admit it?

My colleague the member for Nickel Belt said, "Let's talk about the development of a mining equipment capacity because we import 91 per cent." We have a trade deficit of $1.61 billion annually in mining equipment in this country. Outside of Jarvis Clark who is a pretty initiatory sort of guy, we do virtually little in terms of heavy equipment in Canada. If the government wanted to get serious, there was a select committee chaired by the former Speaker the member for Northumberland (Mr. Rowe), who sits behind you and is in his seat at the present time. In 1974 that select committee said: "Mining equipment is such a natural for Canada that if the private sector doesn't want to do it, government should become involved."

Let me tell you why. We import more mining equipment than any other country in the world and yet we are the third largest producer of mineral wealth in the world. We import more than anyone else. We have an economy large enough internally to develop that sector. We could also have incentives for mining companies in Canada which bought from this company, hopefully private, but encouraged and pushed and what not by government to get it going. We could give them a tax incentive to buy Canadian equipment. We could do a number of things. We have the base and we have the resources, but we don't have the will.

When my colleague tries to raise it with you, you start to read a litany of towns and municipalities where you have put in industrial sites. That's great. We have three industrial sites in Sudbury, but the type of economy we have in Sudbury isn't the same as in North Bay. You can't put small plants like that there because they can't compete. What you've got to do is get a type of sector that in monetary terms can compete with what the other companies are paying, and where would that be but in mining.

I also remind you we have a university that's now moved to a four-year course in mining. We have a community college that has mining courses. When my colleague tries to talk to you about it, you talk about everything else in the world but that.

The minister talks about Chapleau. Great. He talks about what he did in North Bay, and that's good, but he can't get serious about this. His only response is, "We put $600,000 into 2001," but he doesn't want to deal with the problem. Don't tell me about studies. The chamber of commerce wrote a report, and what was one of the things it was advocating? The developing of mining equipment.

Then there was a second select committee, I remind the minister, just last year. The select committee on Inco—and there were nine Tories on that committee—recommended the production of mining equipment. What have we done? What have we even done to try to look at it? We have had two select committee reports. The Premier established a committee 18 months ago to look into the long-term solutions, and he stands there this morning and says, "We have to make the climate economically good so the mining companies will proceed."

I don't want the mining companies to just rip it out faster, to take more out. I want something developed for northern Ontario that goes beyond extraction. Will Tories ever learn that? It isn't merely extraction we want so we can send it to Clydach to be refined, so we can send it to Huntington, so we can send it to Norway to be refined and processed into some finished commodity. We want to do it ourselves. We want jobs for our young people, we want a tax return, we want jobs for women in northern Ontario.

Will this government ever understand it? It isn't just an economic climate for more mining. That's nuts. How many more times do they have to be told? We have heard the same answer for the 12 years that I've been here.

We have heard about planning. On northeastern Ontario alone how many studies have been done? Since 1958, I think there have been 12. They are coming out our ears. I think it is because you are defeated on it. The former Treasurer, in the last provincial election, said, "We won't have secondary industry in northeastern Ontario for 20 more years." That's what McKeough said.

My colleague tries to get serious and talk about one of the areas we could excel in. We have the universities and we have the technical skills and we have the people and we have the resources; what we need is a government that says, "Wait a minute, we are going to start to pull it together, not as a crown corporation; we are going to start to pull the people in, we are going to start to try to talk industry into developing it."

Lord knows, since before the turn of the century in Sudbury we have had the opportunity if someone was going to go in and develop it on their own. They haven't. What do we do then? Just throw our hands up in the air and say, "Too bad"? We can have a trade deficit, we can import our equipment, we can do a whole series of things, and nothing changes in northern Ontario.

I wish we wouldn't paint it in such rosy terms. I wish we could get serious. I wish we could find out why there is a declining population in northern Ontario. We know why—there are no jobs. The mining companies are not exploring.

I remember the minister when he was Minister of Natural Resources saying the reason there is no exploration is because they are afraid of the socialists, they are afraid of what Barrett is doing and what Blakeney is doing in Saskatchewan. Let me tell the minister how much exploration is going on in Saskatchewan this year: $80 million; $45 million by the private sector, $35 million by the government.

In Ontario last year it was $28 million. The Tories can use all the red herrings they want, but isn't it strange that there is $80 million? What they are trying to do is develop, not only the resource sector with regulations on production and with some crown companies; they are moving. What are we doing for northern Ontario? That's the first thing I want to deal with very briefly.

Secondly, I want to deal with something the minister should be doing. He and I have discussed it. I'm getting increasingly frustrated with his colleague, the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), who in fact continues to allow further development in unorganized community after unorganized community. Again, there is no policy of what we do with unorganized communities and we continue to allow them to develop. There's something nuts about that because for every one of those we allow to continue to develop, we have the problems my colleague representing Chapleau spoke about this morning.

Just outside the boundaries of an established community, an unorganized community is developed. You and I know, because we've talked about it, that to provide services for those unorganized communities for which a bill is going to be brought in, is going to cost us in the long run, an arm and a leg. We have no policy. I have been pushing your friend, the Minister of Housing, for some time.

It's interesting that in Sudbury the Minister of Housing a couple of years ago took a fellow in an unorganized community to court. They were successful in the prosecution against the fellow, because he built without permission. He built knowing he couldn't. My colleague, who is a lawyer, is going to appreciate this. The man was convicted, he was fined and he went back and sold the house to the next comer.

By the way, Hydro would not allow power to be connected to that house, so the fellow who had six children was forced to sell the house to try and recoup his money because he wasn't going to get power. Housing said, "No, you're not getting power," and they instructed Hydro not to connect it. Well, my friend sold the house. I learned three weeks ago the Ontario Minister of Housing had recanted and said Hydro could go in and hook up power for the new fellow.

Tell me, how am I supposed to support the concept of preventing this sprawl when that occurs? I don't know in law what that means, but the ministry itself took someone to court, obtained a conviction, a fine, and then the next fellow is allowed to buy the house. He then is allowed to get power from Hydro.

Mr. Wildman: The fine is a building permit.

Mr. Martel: I want to tell the minister I've been trying, as my colleague knows, for not months but years, to get some type of plan so we do not allow people to go and simply buy land somewhere. First thing you know, four or five houses spring up. Talk about costs—when those four or five houses spring up, we have to send in a school bus, we have to look after the roads and the minister knows the local roads board tax is minuscule. Who is picking up the costs?

It doesn't do anyone any good, but as long as land is allowed to be sold, people are going to demand the right to build in all kinds of areas. The cost, as the minister knows, is astronomical. We're trying to undo what was done in the regional municipality of Sudbury. If one looks at Broder, an area I represented when I first came in and which I still represent, across the street from the city of Sudbury, the cost to put in services for those 4,000 people is going to be horrendous.

I would hope we have learned our lesson and that we will prevent this. Your ministry must take the lead because I'm sorry but Mr. Bennett doesn't know what he is doing in this field. He simply doesn't know what he is doing and you must take the lead as a northerner, one who understands the problems of the unorganized communities, one who talked about them in Chapleau and in Gogama, and who has them in his own riding.

We've got to get serious about that problem. Otherwise we are always going to be moving in to pick up the tab, which is a lot more costly when it is not planned than is the case if it is planned. We have to have a plan, Mr. Minister. I have been saying that for years around here and you haven't moved on that either. I guess that is what frustrates me when you get up to speak in glowing terms. When you introduced the bill creating your ministry, I said there were two basic problems: one was secondary industry and the whole economic sector. Our party moved that more funds could be made available to do things when something went belly up. We don't even have policy when it doesn't go belly up.

In the case of Capreol, when the American parent company decides that they need to cut and the American government intervenes and says, "We will pay you to mine out another mine," Capreol gets shut down. It isn't improving the economic situation at all. It is buoyant for National Steel Corporation, which happens to be managed by Hanna Mining Company. Between the two of them, I think they turn out something like 35 million tons a year.

The economic sector was one problem and the second was the unorganized communities. You talk as if everything is glowing and yet we have not resolved the problems of the mining corporations and we are not even doing the exploration that's necessary, nor do we have the manufacturing or the resources to develop the manufacturing. In fact, we have tax laws that hinder the proper development of the north—I'm talking about the write-offs of the off-shore developments against the Ontario tax.

We haven't even started to deal with the problem of the unorganized communities. I remember Bill 102. I remember when it went down the drain. I am delighted the minister is talking about local boards now. When his bill was moved and I moved amendments, one of them called for community councils which would have exactly the authority that's going to come in under this bill. The one I proposed was simply to have one group responsible for the funding that would go into the area so you would be able to pass money on through.

Thank God you have moved in that direction. It has taken two more years, but it's a move, but we haven't started to resolve the problem because we are not getting into the overall planning. We can start to put on Band-Aids and try to help those who are already there that are unorganized but we are not even starting to deal with allowing the continuation of this to occur.

I tell the minister that in the Sudbury district last year, there were 100 applications to the Ministry of Housing, through the Ministry of Natural Resources, for people to winterize their cottages or to build beyond the boundaries of the organized municipalities. What does that tell us? They are still trying to get out to where it is unorganized. So we haven't dealt with that problem seriously.

We haven't really started to get serious about the economic problems confronting northern Ontario because we are not doing the exploration. We certainly have not moved in any way to assist the orderly development of the manufacturing sector. We can help with DREE to some extent. We can get agreements to locate industrial sites—we have three industrial sites in Sudbury and they have services—but we have never tackled freight rates. The Economic Council of Canada says this is the most serious deterrent to the development of manufacturing in northern Ontario. This is the highest freight rate rate zone in Canada. We haven't got serious about that.

I always am amazed at northerners. In the federal House out of our 14 members, 11 of them are on the government side. I have yet to hear one make a speech on reducing freight rates in northern Ontario, yet the Economic Council of Canada says the single largest deterrent to economic development is freight rates. It always amazes me.

You have to start to tie all that together, Mr. Minister. When we moved the amendments to the bill creating your ministry, you will recall that we moved in total six amendments. Three dealt with unorganized communities and three dealt with the economic sector. I had hoped that this ministry would get that sort of mandate to really move in to help the co-ordinated development of northern Ontario. We might piecemeal it a little bit, but you haven't got the mandate and unfortunately the line ministries really don't get serious about it.

The Minister of Housing hasn't got a clue of what is going on in the unorganized communities in northern Ontario. It is evident from the letters I write to him that there is just nothing there. As for the manufacturing sector, McKeough summed it all up a couple of years ago when he said it isn't going to occur. I would like to know what you intend to do in those areas. Let's not get off on a tangent; let's deal with both of those.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If I could deal with the last item first, I was just a little confused when the honourable member talked about doing something about freight rates. I couldn't help but recall the efforts of my colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), trying to deregulate the trucking industry. The trucking industry was something that we supported wholeheartedly. We wanted it, and we assisted him in tackling that problem. But who opposed it?

Mr. Wildman: We told him we'd agree to taking out the North Bay restriction but he wouldn't bring it back in.

Mr. Martel: Right in your own caucus you couldn't get solidarity.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Those gentlemen right there who today are trying to chastise us. I find it very humorous really. It's that old thing about trying to suck and whistle at the same time. You can't have it both ways. Join us in some of our efforts we are making for northern Ontario. It wasn't a big step, I will admit that, but at least it was a step in the right direction, where we could improve and get more competition in the trucking business for northern Ontario that would hopefully lower freight rates.

Mr. Wildman: That bill really dealt with southern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I agree with the honourable member when he says freight rates are the key to development of northern Ontario. My God, just look at what would have happened out in western Canada, if it hadn't been for the Crow's Nest Pass agreement and all the benefits that that has brought western Canada over the years. They won't change that formula—there is no question about that—because of all the political ramifications that would occur. That is what developed western Canada. It is that same attitude that must be used with regard to freight rates if we are going to do something for northern Ontario. I have said this many times, and I will keep on saying it because I firmly believe that to be the case.

The honourable member knows—and I think the Premier made it very clear today—with regard to secondary manufacturing in northern Ontario, the investment climate has to be right. This government is moving in that direction to make sure that the investment climate is improved so that we do get the private sector involved. Along with that, he talked about the $200 million in economic development funds and DREE. In fact, it has been the initiative and the aggressiveness of the present Treasurer and this Ministry of Northern Affairs that have now achieved about $240 million worth of Ontario DREE agreements in the last year, the highest in history, solely for northern Ontario.

Sure, there are problems in the Sudbury area, and I just want to make it clear that your group does not have a corner on the concerns for people in the Sudbury area. You don't have a corner on that. We are as concerned as you are about those people who are laid off and those people who are on strike. This party is very concerned and we have shown that.

We have shown our concern about Capreol. The member went down with my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), to deal with that particular problem.

He knows how difficult it is, without getting in with the big stick and doing it ourselves, which this party philosophically will not do. You may want to go that route; that is your decision. But it is not our political philosophy to use that heavy-handed attitude. We believe the route of encouragement is to improve the investment climate and get the private sector involved.

That is the strength of this country. That is where jobs are going to be created in the long term, and not by putting the burden on the taxpayer you keep referring to. You keep referring to the burden on the taxpayer, but I will tell you that if you go your route you will ruin the economy not only in this province, which is the key province in Canada, but of Canada as a whole.

Mr. Wildman: Saskatchewan has the lowest unemployment rate in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You saw what happened in BC, you saw what happened in Manitoba, you saw what happened in Britain and you saw what happened in Australia. Even Sweden is turning around. So the honourable member just cannot sell that here, as much as he tries. I have heard that philosophy for 12 years, he is quite right, that gloom and doom.

I must say, when I first came here—I was elected in a by-election in 1966—my wife used to come down with me all the time and sit in the Legislature. I spent hours in here and I used to listen to the other side, particularly the honourable member's party. I used to stay down here for two or three weeks at a time because I used to have to go back and forth by train. I used to go home to our room at the hotel and I would say to my wife; "Marj, my God, things are really bad in northern Ontario."

Mr. Havrot: Especially in Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: "I have only been gone three or four weeks and they are just collapsing. Everything is terrible up there." But when I went back to northern Ontario the quality of life was there. The people were content that things were being done. Sure, we are going to do more. As a northerner I will never be satisfied, I admit that. But the attitudes being expressed here and what is happening out there are entirely different. I assure you they are entirely different. They are opposite in some cases.

Mr. McClellan: Everything is fine in Sudbury, is it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The honourable member expresses a concern, and I am equally concerned about keeping young people in northern Ontario. Four of my children have left northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Martel: Why?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Because they wanted to go out to western Canada.

Mr. Martel: Because there are no jobs.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They had jobs.

Mr. Martel: There are no jobs.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am concerned as the honourable member. We are moving in that direction. What I spelled out in answer to the member for Nickel Belt, is a clear indication that we in the Ministry of Northern Affairs are embarking and have already embarked on an answer to the local responses. I think that is very important; not to use the heavy hand of government and the big resources we have down here, but to get the local people involved and to improve the climate to give them the resources to do it themselves. That is the route we are going to go and keep on going.

With regard to the honourable member's comments on housing and planning, sure, there has to be a certain amount of planning. I agree with that and that is moving in. There are planning boards being established all across northern Ontario. I am not a great advocator of a lot of government regulations and controls. Northerners do not want that. The quality of life that northerners want, they do not want levels and levels of bureaucracy. They do not want that. That was clearly spelled out to us when we took the Local Services Boards Act across northern Ontario. They want as little government regulation and control as possible. They want to be free to live that lifestyle that they have there.

We will come to grips with these problems. They are there and we recognize them. I think that is the main thing, as long as we recognize them and move in that particular direction. So while the honourable member can cry of great things that are not being done, on the other side of the ledger I think he fails to see the other things that are being done in a very aggressive way, in a very responsive way, in step with the local people—that is important—in co-operation with them. We have seen this in many communities.

They used to say that Geraldton—the typical example—was going to be a ghost town. Go to Geraldton today and see that community. That community has actually grown. In fact, the infrastructure in that community today is finer than it has ever been in its history. The mayor up there is elated with what has happened in his particular community, a community that was once dependent on the non-renewable resources in that particular area. The economy has shifted, it has changed. Geraldton is there and there will always be a Geraldton. There will always be an Atikokan. I do not have those fears. Sure, there have to be some adjustments and some adjustments in attitudes. This is being done, as we are seeing in Atikokan today.

Pickle Lake is another example of what can be done and what is being done. While there are concerns, there are concerns on our side too. The honourable member may think he has the answers to all those problems; I confess I do not. I say that as sincerely as I can: I do not have the answers to all those problems. But I can tell the honourable member, by God, we are working on them.

Mr. Martel: The minister may say he is working on them. How many of his children have left northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Four.

Mr. Martel: Why?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: They married.

[12:45]

Mr. Martel: Why do they have to leave northern Ontario? Why is it that if one goes around Toronto one can find more young people from northern Ontario? Because the jobs aren't there, apart from extracting.

There is the Robert report from Laurentian University which indicates that anybody who gets beyond grade 12 will not go into mining. Those people are here; the minister knows it and the member for Timiskaming certainly knows it. They are here because there are no jobs in northern Ontario.

Mr. Havrot: They want to come down here.

Mr. Martel: Which of my colleagues who spoke today has said, "use a heavy hand"? We have asked the minister to talk to us about mining equipment, and I said he would ignore it. He ignored it when my colleague raised the issue; he ignored it when I raised it. I remind him that there were two select committees, one chaired by the former Speaker, and the other chaired by the former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Both committees recommended the production of mining equipment.

I tried briefly to explain why that would be viable in northern Ontario. The private sector has not, in all of its years, decided to produce mining equipment in Canada. The minister totally ignored it.

Mr. Havrot: They're building a plant in Kirkland Lake.

Mr. Martel: I hope so.

Mr. Havrot: They already have a mining equipment manufacturing plant.

Mr. Martel: They are producing scoop trams, are they? They are producing all the drills, all of which are imported into Canada? There's a trade deficit of $1.6 billion annually—

Mr. Havrot: Never mind statistics.

Mr. Martel: And you tell me. "Never mind statistics." That's the type of mentality we have to deal with from that side of the House. If there is a place we could move in—and I said it didn't have to be government; I said if government could take the lead, bring people together, put up some of the cash—to try to get it established. We've got the resources; we've got the university, the community colleges; we've got the testing beds right there in all of the mines. We've certainly got a large enough economy internally, let alone what we could do in terms of export. And the two of us who have raised the question can't get a response.

Mr. Havrot: Why don't you get some of your socialist friends to finance and build a plant?

Mr. Martel: Why don't you go outside and grunt?

Mr. Havrot: Oh, dry up yourself. You're a groaner yourself. You're a "poor-mouther," that's all you are. You've destroyed the north with your "poor-mouthing."

Mr. Martel: Jibber-jabbering like a chimpanzee over there. If you want to get in on the debate, get in. If you don't want to get in, if you just want to be the continuous "guru of grunt," that's fine. If that's your maiden speech—

Mr. Wildman: You're a great one to talk, Havrot, about what you say in the north.

Mr. Havrot: Who closed up the mine in my area? Three hundred and fifty jobs lost. Don't hand me that stuff.

Mr. Martel: The member for Timiskaming should read what the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) said about that. I watched your television ads last time, brother. "We closed up Matachewan."

Mr. Deputy Chairman: A little order, please.

Mr. Martel: I'm not sure, Mr. Chairman, which one of us has the floor; me or the member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: The member for Sudbury East has the floor. Will the other members of this House please refrain from interrupting the member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: To get back to it, will the minister tell me what's wrong with a proposal to produce mining equipment? The private sector hasn't got involved; yet we import and we import and we import. Why don't we get serious about it? Two select committees looked at it; two select committees recommended it. They weren't loaded with New Democrats. I remind members that on one there were seven Conservatives and only two New Democrats; on the other one there were nine Conservatives. If the minister's colleagues who had looked at the issue didn't think it would wash, would they have put it in a report?

The government has never got serious about it. He stands there with platitudes and says "the heavy hand." That's a lot of nonsense. The minister said they won three seats back because northerners like it. It was because the Liberals didn't run anybody. They didn't run anybody in Timiskaming, and they didn't run anybody in Cochrane South, for God's sake.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I didn't mention that. The member mentioned that.

Mr. Martel: There was that old fellow that the Liberals imported into Timiskaming.

Mr. Wildman: A 75-year-old man into Havrot country.

Mr. Martel: —two weeks before the election. And you still only won by 600 votes.

Mr. Havrot: That's all right. We'll win it by 6,000 next time.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Could we turn to vote 701, item 1, main office?

Mr. Martel: The minister talks about heavy-handedness and the quality of life. Tell me why if the quality of life is so good—and it is, in many ways—do our young people have to leave? Answer that—and don't tell me it's because they want to. It's because they have to, if they're going to get meaningful employment. The minister knows it and I know it. He has never resolved the problem, and he's had how many studies? The final one came out in response to—

Interjections.

Mr. Martel: Not my friends. The chamber of commerce aren't my friends. Remember their report called A Profile in Failure?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The same group which wanted the 2001 funding?

Mr. Martel: No. They wrote the report. I didn't write that report, Mr. Minister. They wrote a document in response to the government's study on northeastern Ontario and they entitled it A Profile in Failure.

Mr. Worton: Elie, the chamber loves you too.

Mr. Martel: You want to believe it. Let me come back to that—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's all oriented to Sudbury.

Mr. Martel: That was not true. No, it's not.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is. John Rhodes took them to task. I was there.

Mr. Martel: We're taking everybody to task, except the minister won't respond to areas where in fact he knows the weaknesses are. He can stand there and dispute that his children left because they wanted to go to Alberta. I suspect, like most of the young people from northern Ontario, unless they want to go into mining, there are very few jobs if they're not in the professions.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What about the pulp and paper industry?

Mr. Martel: That's extractive. What about manufacturing, that they might want to go into? Where would they get into manufacturing in northern Ontario? There's some, extremely limited. That's what we want to talk about. That's why I linked it to trucking—which reminds me, before I forget, Oliver Korpela from Chapleau, the minister's friend, he put in that article the minister referred to. The New Democrats, with a few misguided Liberals, he said, didn't want to allow the bill to come in.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Because he knows he doesn't have support.

Mr. Martel: There were two bills last year on transportation. I'm responding directly to the minister, Mr. Chairman. The first one died after second reading. The minister himself did not want to deregulate. My colleague, our critic, sat on more than one platform with the Liberal critic and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) on this very topic. The minister wasn't in favour of deregulation. He's even now only moved to limited deregulation.

The Tories can go across northern Ontario and play that game. The first bill got first reading. On May 2, the minister withdrew that bill and introduced Bill 78. There was only one thing we said, that section dealing with the North Bay restriction—the rest was okay—we differed on that. That was the only part. Do you know where the real problem was? Internally, over there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No.

Mr. Martel: Oh yes, it was. Internally, there was a dispute between Mr. McKeough and the Minister of Transportation and Communications. The minister can shake his head all he wants. He never even brought the bill back for second reading.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Were you on that select committee?

Mr. Martel: No, but they opposed the de-regulation—

Mr. Wildman: That's right.

Mr. Martel: —and the minister's Tory colleagues signed the bill. It was a unanimously endorsed report.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Why are you against de-regulation?

Mr. Martel: I'm not here to answer why I'm against deregulation. You are the ones who said I was trying to have it both ways.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Tell us why? You know why and I know why.

Mr. Martel: Don't throw a red herring in. The minister is the guy who said we were the ones who prevented dear old Jimmy from getting his way. That's a lot of nonsense and the minister knows it and I know it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You know why you are against it.

Mr. Martel: Our friends in the union?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I didn't say it. You know exactly why.

Mr. Martel: I can't believe it. I think the head of the Teamsters—what's his name, the senator? He's a Liberal. The senator from BC, who's head of the truckers; Lawson is his name, I think.

Mr. Worton: I don't know many senators.

Mr. Martel: You're lucky. So don't blame the deregulation on us. We understand what the problems are in northern Ontario. Nowhere in the resource sector are we talking about a little bit of a heavy stick. I would I'd use a heavy stick in the mining sector. I wouldn't allow them to overproduce and then lay off, because we know who picks up the tab—the government. When Inco lay off 2,400 men the workers suffer, the communities suffer and the government of Ontario and the government of Canada pick up the tab. The mining companies don't pay. When they lay off 250 men in Capreol the guys who have to leave will lose $10,000 on their homes. There are 140 homeowners.

This government will eventually, I suspect, either through the region or something, have to assist that municipality which provided those services which the municipality is now unable to pay for because of the loss of revenue. Who picks up the tab? Don't tell me about the heavy stick. In the final analysis, who picks it up? Is it the mining companies or is it the people of Canada, the people of Ontario and the people of Sudbury?

We allow it to happen over and over. The pattern is there. As a northerner, you know it and I know it. What's even worse, in the case of National Steel Car Corporation Limited, they want to come back in two years from now. What's vicious about Inco is they produce in excess—read the articles, know what's going on—13 months in advance, and then they put the community through the wringer. They really put it through it. That's why you had to move in with 2001 funding. Again, I ask you, who is picking up the tab? Who will? Will it be Inco?

You can tell me I'm heavy-handed but I know who picks it up every time.

Mr. Havrot: You're not heavy-handed, you're heavy-tongued.

Mr. Wildman: Inco's heavy-handed.

Mr. Martel: My colleague puts his finger right on it. The company is heavy-handed. They're much tougher than you are, and they know it.

Talk to your colleagues in the cabinet about Inco and its conduct. They too shake their heads about some of the things that company does. Not very often do you say to them: "We've had enough. We've had enough of your nonsense. You will act like a good corporate citizen." That's not the way you fellows talk. You don't even say that to them, do you? You let them overproduce.

They've done it every time there are going to be negotiations. They've had a stockpile. They've had huge inventories. I want to tell you, don't come to me and tell me that it's our fault on deregulation, and that youngsters are leaving because they want to go somewhere else. You and I know every youngster who could get a decent job in northern Ontario would go back. He'd go back to the north. I suspect you know it from talking to, as I have, hundreds of youngsters. They would go back north if the opportunities were there.

I've heard it said over and over again. Given an opportunity to go back those people in Toronto who are from northern Ontario would head back north immediately. That's what we're asking you to grapple with. Don't come giving us red herrings about heavy-handedness. Tell me what you want to do. Let's look to the areas where we can develop so those people can go back home.

Mr. Havrot: You'd make a great babysitter, Elie; you tell good bedtime stories.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you go home?

Mr. Havrot: I will go home.

Mr. Wildman: Do you have a home?

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported progress.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in her chambers.

Clerk of the House: The following are the titles of the bills to which Her Honour has assented:

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

15. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister inform the Legislature of: 1. How many active-treatment hospital beds will be cut across Ontario in 1979-80 as a result of his proposed new bed ratios? 2. How many of Ontario's hospital centres currently meet the new bed ratios without cutting any beds? 3. What are the names of these centres? Will he also provide his projected figures for the number of active-treatment beds to be cut in 1980-81 and 1981-82? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our response to the above question reads as follows:

1. In developing the hospital budget allocation methodology it was decided to use a planning guide for active-treatment beds for Ontario of four per thousand in the south or 4.5 per thousand in the north. Using this methodology there was identified approximately 890 surplus active-treatment beds. The hospital budgets were then reduced by $12,000 per surplus bed. These funds were redistributed more equitably to those hospitals operating at the guideline and to provide additional funds for chronic-care and outpatient programs. No hospitals with surplus active-treatment beds were actually required by the Ministry of Health to close any beds.

While there is an identifiable surplus of approximately 890 active-treatment beds it is recognized there is a greater need for more chronic- and extended-care beds. Therefore, many hospitals are requesting through their local planning bodies permission to convert their surplus active-treatment beds to chronic-care beds with the net result there will likely be little change in the total number of beds available in the system. Conversion of surplus active-treatment beds to more appropriate levels of care will provide ultimately a better means of meeting the changing needs of the people of Ontario.

2. There are 51 hospital centres which currently meet the bed ratio of four beds per thousand (4.5 in Northern Ontario).

3. They are: Ajax; Burlington; Bracebridge; Brampton; Barrie; Bancroft; Burk's Falls; Chatham; Cambridge; Collingwood; Dryden; Fergus; Grimsby; Guelph; Haldiburton; Hamilton; Kitchener; Kingston; Kemptonville; Lindsay; Leamington.

Milton; Minden; Mississauga; Midland; Napanee; Newmarket; Newcastle; North Bay; Oakville; Owen Sound; Oshawa; Orillia; Ottawa; Pembroke; Perth; Port Hope; Port Colborne; Paris; Peterborough; Richmond Hill.

Sioux Lookout Sault Ste. Marie; Smiths Falls; Scugog; St. Catharines; Stratford; Metro Toronto; Trenton; Winchester; Whitby.

4. It is difficult to project figures for the number that will be identified as surplus active-treatment beds for the years 1980-81 as there is a growing shift in population and these figures must be recalculated using new population figures and weighting factors that are used in the referral population calculation.

PHYSICIAN AVAILABILITY

173. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Minister of Health table information on the number of medical specialists by county across Ontario? Would the minister state the total number of specialists practising in each county, and would the minister indicate how many of these specialists are still in OHIP? Would the minister further indicate how many anaesthetists, obstetricians and gynaecologists, surgeons, psychiatrists, and paediatricians there are in total in each county, and how many are still practising within OHIP? Would the minister provide this information as of March 31, 1979; December 31, 1978; September 30, 1978; June 30, 1978; March 31, 1978? Would the minister also state the total number of general practitioners in each county and the number still within OHIP as of the same dates as noted above? [Tabled May 3, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our answer to the above question reads as follows:

Due to the amount of material to be assembled for this question, we require more time to prepare an answer. An answer will be tabled in approximately six weeks.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 24, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs passed a motion that the government direct Ontario Hydro not to reopen the Rolphton NPD nuclear generating station until such time as the committee has finished its review of nuclear safety matters.

As members may be aware, the select committee met yesterday to discuss an application to the Atomic Energy Control Board—

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I please have a copy of the minister's statement?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the honourable minister have copies of his statement?

Hon. Mr. Auld: They are here and in the process of distribution.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: The Leader of the Opposition doesn't look well. Has he had an illness?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Have the copies been delivered at the moment?

Mrs. Campbell: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the minister continue or not?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then we shall have the statement of the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND GRANTS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Have you got copies? I am pleased to announce three recent government initiatives we are taking through the Employment Development Fund, which exemplify our continuing interest in and support of Ontario's industrial base.

We have just completed successful negotiations with Tridon Limited, a wholly-owned and managed Canadian firm with head office in Burlington, whereby the Ontario government will provide the company with an Employment Development Fund grant of $800,000.

Mr. S. Smith: Oh, that's incredible.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In return, Tridon will make an $11 million investment in the Halton region, an investment which will create 360 new jobs and represent $10 million in new export sales.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: Tridon doesn't need government help.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Leader of the Opposition as always is opposed to it. Tell them in Burlington, not in Prescott.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Tell them in Dryden.

Mr. S. Smith: It is easy to give away the taxpayers' money to a wealthy company.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Tridon is in the process of expanding its manufacturing—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You can't stand to see us win some companies for this province. Tell the people in the Halton region and in Hamilton that you are against doing it.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If you don't want any of this in Liberal ridings, let us know.

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, I'll let the minister know. We don't want it in any part of Ontario.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You don't want any in any Liberal riding.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The colleagues of the Leader of the Opposition aren't applauding that. The member for St. Catharines is not applauding that.

Mr. Bradley: Helping healthy companies is not a credit to you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Roy: We never wanted it and the minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Tridon is in the process of expanding its manufacturing capability to build on the world leadership it has achieved in the manufacture of plastic wiper blades and wiper arms for the automotive industry.

Mr. Bolan: Why doesn't the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) go back and sell used cars? He can't sell his ideas. Go back and sell some Edsels.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Employment Development Fund grant will assist Tridon in maintaining a strong presence in Ontario. The project typifies the kind of development we intend to support through the fund. It will provide stable, long-term employment, foster the development of needed job skills and stimulate export development.

As a result of earlier negotiations, culminating in the recent meeting in Detroit at which the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Treasurer and I had discussions with senior officials from the automotive industry, I am pleased to announce that we have succeeded in obtaining a major auto parts expansion for Ontario.

Mr. Kerrio: For Niagara Falls.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Close. We have agreed to assist TRW Canada Limited in securing North American production in Ontario for their new products. To this end, $420,000 will be provided through the EDF to assist TRW in a $5 million expansion of plant and equipment in their St. Catharines operation, I would say to the member for St. Catharines whose leader doesn't support this type of program, and an $8 million project in Tillsonburg, whose member does support it.

Mr. Bradley: They've expanded already.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister is right that I don't. They would have done it anyway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the Leader of the Opposition's member can go back to St. Catharines and tell his constituents that, I'd like to hear him do that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This will create 100 new jobs in St. Catharines and an additional 100 new jobs in Tillsonburg. As a result of this expansion, TRW Canada Limited will manufacture automotive valves and parts for auto steering systems to be used in the new lighter, more energy-efficient automobiles. The entire production output will be exported.

The Employment Development Board has also concluded an agreement whereby the government of Ontario, through the EDF, will guarantee a chartered bank loan of $4.3 million to HSA Reactors Limited of Rexdale. HSA Reactors is a 74 per cent Canadian-controlled company. Significant funds from the private sector over the past five years have permitted the company to engage in major research—

Mr. S. Smith: That's what the government should be doing—guaranteeing loans, not giving out money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and a state-of-the-art technology for waste management in metal plating industries has been developed. This technology has a wide variety of potential applications.

Mr. S. Smith: That's not a giveaway.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Leader of the Opposition just can't stand it.

Mr. S. Smith: Why did the government not give them a grant? Why the guaranteed loan?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a guaranteed loan. Was the Leader of the Opposition paying attention?

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, that's what I'm saying. Why didn't you give them a grant like you gave the automotive people?

Mr. Warner: Throw the member out, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Because we shape our program to the needs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would just like to remind the honourable members that on Thursday 30 minutes is allotted for ministerial statements. There are a number of statements to be made. I wish the ministers making the statements would disregard the interjections.

Mr. Kerrio: Shape up or ship out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hope the Leader of the Opposition's back-benchers don't disregard them.

Foreign firms are anxious to acquire such world-leading technology and have offered financial arrangements in an attempt to ensure that any future production takes place in foreign jurisdictions. We want to give this Ontario-based research and development a chance to expand into international application and production. In order to ensure this, we have provided a guarantee to allow HSA to obtain local, not foreign financing. In exchange, we have obtained an undertaking from the firm that it will establish production facilities in Ontario on a major scale and maintain domestic ownership.

Our support of this project is an example of this government's commitment to encourage the development of new processes through Canadian-based innovation.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: I just wanted to be sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition has a copy of this statement.

Mr. S. Smith: Yes, I have.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yesterday the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs passed a motion that the government direct Ontario Hydro not to reopen the Rolphton NPD nuclear generating station until such time as the committee has finished its review of nuclear safety matters.

As members may be aware, the select committee met yesterday to discuss an application to the Atomic Energy Control Board by a group of concerned citizens in Renfrew county for a public hearing into the safety of the Rolphton station. In its application, the concerned citizens' group stated its belief that: (1) Rolphton is operating in breach of its licence and in breach of AECB's safety standards; (2) the licence for operating Rolphton should be revoked because its emergency core cooling system is inadequate and would be unable to prevent overheating in the reactor if the main cooling system failed.

Since this matter was first raised, the ministry has been in touch with AECB and as late as this morning it has discussed with the director of the reactor and accelerator branch of the control board the status of the Rolphton station and the views expressed by the Renfrew county concerned citizens' group.

In addition to the information I provided to the House in my statement of May 10, 1979, there are a number of matters of which I believe members should be aware.

Rolphton is a 20-megawatt electric Candu demonstration station owned by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and operated by Ontario Hydro. The station was started up in 1962.

In AECB's view, Rolphton is not operating in breach of its licence nor in breach of the control board's safety standards. The control board is satisfied with the safety of the Rolphton station and that satisfaction is evidenced by the fact that the control board has continued to allow the station to operate at 100 per cent power.

The control board is satisfied that the emergency core cooling system at Rolphton is adequate. Rolphton is currently shut down for routine maintenance. That maintenance is not related to the emergency core cooling system.

The control board is today studying the application of the Renfrew county concerned citizens' group for a public hearing and assessing how it intends to respond. It would not be appropriate for me to speculate on their decision but I have been advised that it will be available shortly.

The councils of several communities in the Rolphton area have considered the matters raised in the application of the Renfrew county concerned citizens' group. These communities are: Deep River, Chalk River, Petawawa, the united townships of Head, Clara and Maria, and the united townships of Rolph, Buchanan, Wylie and McKay.

I should like to read into the record an excerpt from a resolution passed by these communities following a meeting with the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) on May 11. I am also attaching a transcribed copy of a letter these communities sent to the Leader of the Opposition on May 16 setting out the full text of the resolution: "That the area municipalities . . . emphatically reiterate their past support for the nuclear power industry and, in particular, express their confidence in the nuclear installations, operations and personnel at AECL's Chalk River laboratories and at Ontario Hydro's [Rolphton station]."

As the honourable members know, the Atomic Energy Control Board is the agency which has the technical capability and legal responsibility for licensing the operation of nuclear reactors in Canada for establishing nuclear safety standards in Canada. As I previously indicated to the House, the control board is "satisfied with the safety of the Rolphton station and that satisfaction is evidenced by the fact that AECB has continued to allow the station to operate at 100 per cent power."

Mr. Cassidy: It's called passing the buck.

Hon. Mr. Auld: In the light of this technical capability and legal responsibility, I believe it is appropriate—

Mr. Cassidy: Have you read the report of the committee?

Hon. Mr. Auld: —that the concerns expressed by the Renfrew county concerned citizens' group be assessed, as they are being assessed, by the Atomic Energy Control Board in the context of the board's expert knowledge and its nuclear safety standards.

If the control board determines that the concerns being expressed have any validity, we have been assured that it will take the necessary steps to see that any deficiencies are corrected. This will not require any action by the government as Ontario Hydro will automatically comply with any order issued by the control board.

Mr. S. Smith: You should have made that statement at the committee.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES LEGISLATION

Hon. Mr. Norton: I wish to inform the Legislature and the public of the province's plans for proclamation of the eight pieces of legislation relating to children enacted by the Legislature during the last session.

The new laws make major changes in such areas as child abuse, adoption, standards of service and children's rights. I will be making a further statement about these changes at a time closer to the date of proclamation.

Proclamation date for all of the acts will be June 15, 1979. It had been our intention to proclaim on June 1 but this has been delayed to ensure that all new court forms, procedural rules and explanatory materials have been received by every children's aid society and every family court.

Over the past six months a great deal of work has been done to prepare for the proclamation. Training materials have been drawn up and training sessions held for children's aid society employees across the province. New regulations and court forms have been prepared. A special effort has been made to produce forms which are understandable to all involved in child protection cases. Most importantly, a complete set of rules of procedure for child protection cases has been developed. These rules emphasize both full disclosure before the court hearing and pre-trial conciliation in an effort to resolve matters without the need for a possibly destructive adversary proceeding within the courtroom.

Proclamation is being delayed on two sections in the acts, one in the Child Welfare Act and one in the Day Nurseries Act. In the Child Welfare Act, proclamation of section 20 dealing with legal representation for children will be delayed until October 1 in order to enable the Ministry of the Attorney General to complete the work necessary to implement the new system for such legal representation, one which will include training programs for those lawyers wishing to appear on behalf of children under section 20. All of the remaining sections of the Child Welfare Act will be proclaimed on June 15.

The second section is within the Day Nurseries Act and deals with the completion of applications and needs tests by parents or guardians within the day nurseries themselves.

A number of municipalities have indicated that substantial sums of money will be required to pay for the administrative costs of implementing this section. I have decided, therefore, to delay proclamation until we know precisely what, if any, additional costs are involved. We should have the answer within two months. At a time of limited additional resources, I am very concerned that all new funds go into direct services to children, not to support or create administrative structures or new administrative procedures.

Mr. McClellan: It should save money if you do it properly.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Convince the municipalities of that.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: On Friday last my colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), informed the Legislature that motor vehicle fatalities—

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of order, I hate to interrupt the minister, but we do not have a copy. Perhaps if these copies could be distributed ahead of time instead of kept by the assistants under the gallery, it would facilitate matters.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: On Friday last my colleague, the Minister of Transportation and Communications, informed the Legislature that motor vehicle fatalities had climbed a shocking 67.5 per cent across Ontario in the first three months of 1979.

It was deeply disturbing to me as the minister responsible for law enforcement in the province to learn that 270 people had been killed in traffic accidents up until the end of March. These grim statistics are simply unacceptable, I know, to all of us. During this past week I have instructed the Ontario Provincial Police to step up law enforcement on Ontario highways and to increase their visibility in every way possible.

I should like to advise members of the Legislature that we will be taking the following steps immediately to achieve these objectives: First, the number of aircraft patrolling provincial highways in high-accident areas of southern Ontario will be doubled from three to six. The additional funds required for this stepped-up aerial surveillance have been made available and the extra aircraft will be on the job as soon as possible.

Second, increased enforcement of our seat-belt legislation, which passed with the support of all parties in the Legislature, will begin at once. The legislation has now been in effect for three years and statistics show this law has saved hundreds of lives. In the January to April period, provincial police laid 9,500 charges and issued 14,000 warnings to motorists for seat belt infractions. I have asked Commissioner Graham to instruct his men to lay more charges instead of issuing warnings in the months ahead, since every Ontario motorist must now be aware of the legislation and its obvious benefits.

Third, in addition, the commissioner will be instructing all OPP officers to be on the lookout for flagrant traffic infractions, whatever their assignment. Greater use will be made of unmarked patrol cars to apprehend speeders and lane hoppers on provincial highways.

Mr. Bolan: What are they doing now?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Fourth, discussion has already taken place with the chief judge of the provincial court in relation to the appropriateness of increased and more uniform fines for speeding and moving traffic violations imposed in the criminal division of the provincial court.

Mr. Conway: Down with government limousines.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Fifth, I am writing to all crown attorneys to alert them to the increasing public concern about highway safety. I am asking that they bring this public concern to the attention of the courts when dealing with the sentencing of motorists convicted of Criminal Code offences related to driving. These offences include criminal negligence, dangerous driving and alcohol-related driving charges. There were 57,000 convictions for these offences last year.

It is also my intention to enhance the role of the Ontario Provincial Police in the whole field of traffic safety in the province. I am pleased to announce the formation of an ongoing highway traffic safety co-ordinating council under the direction of the Ontario Provincial Police, with representatives from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, the Ontario Police Commission, the Ontario Association of Police Chiefs and the Ministry of the Attorney General. This council will seek long-term solutions to the upward trend in highway deaths revealed by the recent statistics.

Studies related to police visibility undertaken by the Ministry of the Solicitor General show higher visibility does reduce the carnage on our highways. In an effort to provide higher police visibility, I will be asking my cabinet colleagues to consider approving funds for the hiring of additional OPP officers in 1979.

As honourable members are aware, I announced earlier this month that MTC was undertaking a statistical survey of the drinking and driving habits of Ontario motorists from approximately 250 sites at 16 selected locations across the province. The ministry is working with local police forces and the OPP using a number of roadside breath testers known as ALERT devices to obtain a meaningful sampling on which to base our future programs against drinking drivers.

On the completion of this sampling, it is my hope, these ALERT devices can be made available to the OPP as an enforcement tool. I am personally deeply committed to stepping up our crackdown on drinking drivers, which senior OPP officers inform me played a significant role in the terrible slaughter across Ontario last winter.

I want to assure honourable members that despite the reservations some people may have about a get-tough policy, I am personally committed to taking whatever steps are necessary to reverse the alarming upward trend in highway deaths.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, I am deeply disturbed that the Leader of the Opposition does not take this matter more seriously.

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: You should be damned well ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. What's the point of privilege?

Mr. S. Smith: I wish to raise a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It surely should be obvious to the Attorney General that we take the matter of this carnage extremely seriously and we also take the matter of dealing strenuously and with great severity with drinking drivers very seriously. We do not take seriously, however, an obvious attempt to play for headlines unrelated to any real change in any real policy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Absolute nonsense and the honourable member knows it. I repeat, you should be ashamed of yourself, damned well ashamed of yourself.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order!

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: This is not a high-school debating society, we're talking about human lives. The honourable member should understand that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude stating that this action is being taken to protect the lives of the vast majority of Ontario's 4.7 million motorists who obey the rules of the road, and I suggest that every citizen deserves to be protected from the callous or unthinking minority who flout the law and endanger us all.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy: Is it true, as has been reported in this morning's article and as has been rumoured, that Ontario Hydro has decided not to go after Babcock and Wilcox for the full cost which resulted from the defective boilers delivered by that company to Hydro on the basis that to make Babcock and Wilcox pay the full cost might bankrupt the company? If there is any truth to that, would the minister please explain what good a guarantee is from a company if forcing them to honour it would render them bankrupt? Why would Hydro not have demanded, in order to protect the public interest, a bond from that company when getting into that arrangement in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I propose to make a full statement about the Babcock and Wilcox boiler situation tomorrow. I had hoped to do it today but, unfortunately, there was a meeting going on between Hydro and Babcock and Wilcox. All the files and people were involved in the meeting; so I was not able to get all the information. I will have it tomorrow.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: We look forward to the minister's statement, and in the statement would he please include reference to what I have just asked?

Would the minister also table the agreements between Hydro and Babcock and Wilcox, and would he tell us whether it is true that Babcock and Wilcox was chosen over other companies without a tendering process in this particular case simply to give that company a boost? Would he not agree that MLW of Quebec, for instance, was also capable of making these boilers? Why would Babcock and Wilcox have been chosen without going to the tendering process?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will cover that. I think that was on the air this morning—I heard a bit on early morning radio involving Mr. Morison and somebody—but I will cover that tomorrow too.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since Hydro has had inspectors at the Babcock and Wilcox plant all during the period that these boilers were being constructed, could the minister explain why the defects in the boilers were not discovered before they were actually taken from the works in Cambridge? Why was it that a full year had passed on the entire production line of boilers before the defects were discovered? Would this expense not have been avoided if Hydro's inspectors had discovered the defects at the beginning of the production of these boilers?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I can answer that today. As I mentioned on May 10, or whenever it was that I gave the previous statement, there is something like 29 miles of tubing inside the boiler; the final step in constructing the boiler, after all the welding has gone on inside, is to cover it with a welded cover. Then the heat treatment is done, and that is apparently when the difficulty was caused; you could not see inside.

Mr. J. Reed: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: If this is such a difficult problem to discover, how did it become discovered?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will be covering that tomorrow, and I think I had better leave that until then, if the honourable member will wait, because otherwise, without it written down, it will take me about 10 minutes, as the honourable member knows, and I think he will be happier if he gets it in a concise form tomorrow.

[2:30]

Mr. S. Smith: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since it is possible that there is a design defect in the Babcock and Wilcox boiler which means that the tubes will bend when given this heat treatment process, and since if it is a fundamental design defect, it is possible that after it is repaired the same thing is going to happen again, which might be both a financial and a safety hazard, why has the minister not made it his business to find out the reason why Atomic Energy of Canada Limited did not buy the Babcock and Wilcox boiler in its most recent order for Korea and instead chose one from Foster Wheeler? Why has he not made it his business to find out the reason why they made that decision since apparently, according to what the minister says, he doesn't know whether it was due to financial reasons?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I covered that last question in a reply to the member's question previously.

Mr. S. Smith: No, you didn't.

ACCESS TO REPORTS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question for the House Leader. Given the results of the recent federal election and the fact that Mr. Clark supported—

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: —freedom of information and his support of freedom of information was presumably one of the reasons why he won the election, can we assume that this government's support of him implies the same sort of willingness? Can we, in particular, expect to have access to the inspection reports on the various nursing homes in Ontario, which are undoubtedly of great interest to the Russians or to any other enemies we might have and are, therefore, kept highly secret? Can we have access to the X-ray machine inspection reports which are in the custody of the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell)?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in attempting to respond to the question posed by the Leader of the Opposition, I was interested that he would attribute some success by the Prime Minister-Elect to the whole question of privacy. It is obvious that the people of Canada elected Joe Clark and his people because they were tired of an arrogant, insensitive Pierre Trudeau and his administration.

Mr. Makarchuk: Next time it will be your turn.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The people of Canada, the jury, finally decided that they had enough of that man and those associated with him, and I say thank goodness for that.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Welch: As far as the question is concerned, there is no doubt in my mind that the Prime Minister of—

Mr. Makarchuk: He looks like a member of the Rhinoceros Party.

Mr. Breithaupt: Will the other members of the quartet be coming in?

Mr. MacDonald: There has been a fire sale.

Mr. Gregory: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker: I just wanted to reply to a remark that came from the opposition side. If they like the red, white and blue I am wearing so well, I know where they can get one just like it. I would also like them to know that we are going to use the proceeds from the sale of these suits for a fund for the preservation of Liberals as a dying breed.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And now back to the answer to the question.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in addition, I should also serve notice that the Minister of Natural Resources will also be adding the Liberal Party to the schedule attached to the Endangered Species Act.

Mr. T. P. Reid: If you administer that program like the rest, we don't have anything to fear.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It should be noted, as the chief government whip has entered the House in such resplendent attire, that we have reintroduced the colour of blue, along with the red and white, which of course is a very important combination.

The balance of the Leader of the Opposition's question, as I recall it, had some specific reference to the Ministry of Health. I undertake to draw the attention of the Minister of Health to that particular question.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since it is obvious that the continuing secrecy is to be a policy in that particular area, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of the Environment? Can we have the site inspection reports from the Upper Ottawa Street site and from all the other liquid and hazardous waste dumps in Ontario, or are these also to be kept as a deep, dark secret?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to continue to send over to the Leader of the Opposition our certificates of approval. We have sent over a dozen in the last little while. I see no reason why we shall not continue to do so.

Mr. S. Smith: I referred to site inspection reports. We have not received any. We asked for them two months ago.

An hon. member: They're getting pretty arrogant over there.

Mr. Breithaupt: Do they sell men's clothes where the chief government whip bought his suit?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Now that he is back from his pursuit of foreign investment in Japan, can the minister explain why Ontario is putting such an effort into attracting Japanese investment, rather than building Canadian-owned industries, to take advantage of the opportunities that exist in this province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I found it very intriguing that some of the potential Japanese investors in this country, with whom we met—for example, the auto parts people, the automotive people and the electronics people—were considering very many locations, some of which we did talk about, in ridings represented by members on his party's benches. Again, if it is the policy of his party that we should not encourage those multinationals into his party's ridings, I would appreciate being informed in that regard.

I should also tell the honourable member that a major part of our effort over there was to promote the very Canadian-owned industries of which he spoke. To this end, we spent several hours meeting with the presidents and vice-presidents of Toyota, Nissan and Honda to encourage them to purchase more Canadian-made auto parts. To that list I might add Tridon, which we have supported, as I indicated earlier, and which is one of the major suppliers of the Japanese market. Our attempts over there were to encourage them to look after Canadian interests and to buy our very high-quality auto parts, in spite of some of the policies they have had over there which, quite frankly, as the honourable member well knows, discouraged imports into their market.

I might add that we feel that we had a great deal of success in this regard. We got some very positive indications that auto parts in particular would be purchased in greater amounts from this country. There is no question they will be purchasing auto parts in larger numbers from the North American market, and a major part of my time there was spent ensuring that a large number of those auto parts are purchased from our very good and successful Canadian auto parts industry.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the Gallup polls have been showing consistently since 1975 that seven out of 10 Canadians think we have enough US foreign investment in Canada, can the minister say what makes him think that the people of Ontario want Japanese investment to solve our economic problems?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member is suggesting that we should not have Japanese investment in this country, and that the level of American investment satisfies him and we should concentrate on—I do not know where he is suggesting we concentrate, other than on Canada, which we do—I want to tell him quite simply that there are thousands and thousands of jobs in this country that can be created by proper, carefully considered, product-mandated Japanese, German, French investment, as well as American investment in this country.

Just so there is no misunderstanding about the difference in philosophies between the member's party and our government, let me say, yes, we do want proper, carefully considered multinational investment to create jobs in this province.

Mr. M. N. Davison: What about Canadian investment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We've always had it; it's always been a large component of our employment in this country. He believes we shouldn't have any, including Japanese, and I think that's one thing that the voters in very many ridings of this province should be well aware of next time around.

Mr. Martel: It depends on the type.

Mr. S. Smith: Supplementary: Since Tridon exports auto parts from Canada to Japan, can the minister show us what assurance he has that Japan will not now raise a countervailing tariff against these parts because of the $800,000 giveaway, a subvention by the Ontario government to Tridon?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are satisfied that under the new GATT code—

Mr. S. Smith: Table it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —negotiated, the incentive grants we are talking about will not bring down countervailing duties.

Mr. S. Smith: Table your legal opinion.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would have to refer the member to the communications we have had with Jake Warren and the federal government negotiators who have been dealing with this matter.

I might also add that, as I am sure members will recall, an injury test would have to be shown, which in the case of the products that Tridon exports in any event, notwithstanding everything else that is contained in the GATT agreement, in itself would eliminate any possibility of countervailing measures being taken.

Mr. di Santo: Supplementary: In view of the fact that Canada pays over $7 billion in interest, dividends and debt-servicing; and in view of the fact that the outflow of investments from Canada is higher than the inflow; and in view of the fact that last year our trade with Japan will amount to $2.5 billion in manufactured goods in Ontario, while Japanese investments in Canada are in the resource industry, doesn't the minister think that he is encouraging the Japanese to take over our economy even more when we need to develop our manufacturing industry—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Mr. di Santo: —here in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One of the things the Japanese have pointed out to me with some regularity is that, in fact, Canada had a trading surplus with Japan.

Mr. di Santo: In resources.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As we pointed out to them, that surplus was totally on account of our export of resources. We then indicated to them that that wasn't satisfactory; that we measure the value of international trade in terms of the jobs it creates in our country. I offered to measure our trade balance with them in terms of the jobs created in their country as against the jobs created in our country. Of course, they immediately agreed that that is an imbalance in their favour.

Therefore, one of the major purposes of our trip was to point out to them that, in order to continue a healthy and fair trading relationship, they were going to have to greatly expand their trade with us, in terms of importing many, many more of our manufactured products from this province.

DAY-CARE POLICY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question for the Minister of Community and Social Services, Mr. Speaker, arising out of my question on May 11, 1979, about day-care cutbacks.

Is the minister aware that the social services committee of Metropolitan Toronto has today passed a motion expressing its extreme disgust at the answer by the minister in his allegations about inefficient administration as the cause of proposed cuts in service by Metropolitan Toronto social services? Will the minister reconsider the government's cut-back policies in order to ensure adequate funding so Metro can meet the need for at least 900 additional day-care spaces in Toronto this year?

Hon. Mr. Norton: The answer to the first part of the question is no. I wasn't aware of any resolution that had been passed today.

In respect to the second part of the question, my reference in the House on an earlier occasion to the $800,000 figure, to my recollection wasn't couched as an allegation of irresponsible administration, or however the honourable member phrased it. At that time I knew of what I was speaking.

[2:45]

I don't have it with me at the moment, but I could document specifically the recommendations that had been made by my staff in a meeting with the administration—not specifically referring to day care but referring to other areas of social service administration in Metropolitan Toronto.

I want to make it clear I'm not alleging irresponsible or inefficient administration. I did suggest there were ways, and we had recommended them, that by a careful review of certain administrative expenditures those savings could be achieved, and I stand by that.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I want the minister to know he has caused great offence to the social services people in Metropolitan Toronto because of the allegations he made in this House two weeks ago.

As a supplementary, I would ask the minister, given the economic impact of the provision of day care, and the problems it's creating for couples who must both work in order to make ends meet, and for single-parent families who cannot get off welfare unless they can get adequate day-care services, does he not believe that both for social and for economic reasons, it is desirable to ensure there is adequate provision of day care in metropolitan funding? If that's so, how long will the government continue with the present freeze on day care in this city? When will that stop?

Hon. Mr. Norton: With respect, again, perhaps I can deal first with the statement by the member and then the question. I trust there was no offence created by my response in the House on the previous occasion; although I suggest, and I don't mean to be provocative, but I'm sure—

Mr. McClellan: It was disgust, not offence—extreme disgust.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —if there is any way the members opposite could make it offensive, or appear that I was intending to be offensive, they would dearly love to do that.

Mr. Swart: The minister can do it on his own.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would suggest, given things like press releases I have seen recently—

Mr. Swart: Perish the thought.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —and statements issued on the NDP caucus letterhead, and so on, that the member is doing a very effective job in trying to undermine the very good intentions and the very sincere efforts of the people in my ministry and to make it appear we're out to offend people in the social service field.

An hon. member: Distortion is an art.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Norton: With respect, I'm not shedding tears but in times of some economic difficulty in this province, when we are determined to preserve the quality of social services, it requires a little integrity and a little co-operation on the other side of this House as well.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, despite the hyperbolic, outrageous rhetoric from the minister, I want to ask him a question by way of supplementary.

Interjections.

Mr. McClellan: Would he tell us very simply why he has imposed a five per cent ceiling on day-care expenditures, singling it out from all other children's services which have been given an increase of 9.9 per cent? Why has he imposed that ridiculous cut-back level ceiling on day care in this province?

Ms. Gigantes: For Mini-Skools.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, again with these statements that precede the question, I can't resist responding to the statement initially. Talking about rhetoric, I think it would be interesting if, for posterity, the press releases of the member for Bellwoods could be preserved. I have yet to see anything that make such nonsense—that is couched in words that—

Mr. McClellan: Unlike his programs, they're preserved.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —he just sat down and digested the dictionary and is regurgitating—choosing the largest words first in a way that doesn't necessarily make any sense. But I would say this—

Mr. Breagh: I was afraid of that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That I would say this? Maybe I shouldn't. What was the member's question anyway?

Mr. McClellan: The five per cent ceiling.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Day care has not been singled out from any other programs with respect to the five per cent ceiling on growth in administrative and other expenses.

Mr. McClellan: Children's services are 9.9 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It applies to all transfer programs. The additional funding available in children's services represented by that 9.9 per cent increase is funding that is available to assist and encourage the development—

Mr. McClellan: The 9.9 per cent is just bunk.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —of more preventive programs—

Mr. McClellan: What do you think day care is?

Hon. Mr. Norton: —and to assist agencies in the transition from, in some cases, very high cost but secondary or tertiary care, if you wish, to earlier care, intervention and prevention programs across this province, in response to the almost unanimous message we have received from the people involved in child care across this province—

Mr. McClellan: Yes, we need more day care. That's the message.

Hon. Mr. Norton: —during the last two years in our consultations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre with a final supplementary.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I'm glad the minister lashed out at the members of this party because it shows how sensitive he is becoming about the failures of his ministry.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Balderdash. Why don't you talk sense once in a while?

Mr. Rotenberg: Nonsense.

Mr. Cassidy: Will the minister now acknowledge the damage the cutbacks policy is causing both on children and on families across the province?

Mr. McClellan: He's exceeding James Taylor's cutbacks.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the government prepared to abandon the cutbacks policy in order to ensure adequate day-care services in Metropolitan Toronto and across the province?

Hon. Mr. Norton: My lashing out at the honourable member opposite has nothing to do with any particular sensitivity about conditions in the ministry at this point in time.

Mr. McClellan: It's part of your leadership ambitions, right?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I would suggest to him I have always been sensitive to what I may regard as irresponsible politicizing and trying to take advantage politically of a situation which I think is the responsible way to deal with the delivery of services in this province.

Mr. McClellan: Cutbacks, that's all it is, cutbacks.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Second, I would respond by simply saying there are no cutbacks in children's services funding.

Mr. Martel: We don't believe that. What about the money for Thistleton?

OTTAWA COURT FACILITIES

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Government Services. Can the minister advise if he was correctly quoted last week in the press? I don't think he realizes I'm asking him a question. All right. I realize this minister has been having an easy time.

Can the minister tell me if he was correctly quoted in the press last week in Ottawa saying the Ottawa-Carleton community will have to be satisfied with the present court facilities for another five years? Can he explain why it takes two years to get architectural plans and why it takes five years to renovate the old teachers' college? Can he tell us why he treats the Ottawa-Carleton community with such contempt when the court facilities there would be intolerable any place else in the province?

Mr. Sterling: You know what the delay is.

Mr. Handleman: The new government will help.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Actually, the question was asked. It was a good question.

Mr. Roy: Yes. Does the minister agree with his colleague from Ottawa South—

Hon. Mr. Bennett: That's right.

Mr. Roy: —who states, "Surely to goodness, if we can build courthouses in London and St. Catharines, we need a proper building in the nation's capital"? Does the minister agree with that?

Interjections.

Mr. Handleman: Thank goodness for the new government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order. I'm sure all honourable members want to hear the answer.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the honourable member's question, number one, I suggested to this member back a few weeks ago that May 22 would correct the big obstruction we had in the way of the Ottawa courthouse.

Mr. Roy: Yeah, blame it on Ottawa. Why is it going to take five years?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Number two, with regard to the honourable member's question about the quote in the paper, I haven't seen the quote to which he is referring.

Mr. Roy: Did you say it or not, about five years?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I have not had the opportunity to look at it; the honourable member has not sent it over.

Mr. Peterson: If we asked five minutes ago, you wouldn't remember, would you?

Mr. Bolan: Did you make it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I explained to the press that once we corrected the House of Commons and got the property cleared up for the courthouse—

Mr. Roy: Okay, but why is it going to take five years?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —and once the decision was made to move ahead with the building—

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It takes time to make plans.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —once that decision was made and once everything was in order to appoint an architect—

Mr. Roy: Two years. We're not building First Canadian Place.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —past experience tells us that it takes ordinarily from one to two years for the architect to prepare plans and for a contract to be awarded and for work to start on the project.

An hon. member: Two years.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Then, depending on the contractor you get, it could take one and a half to three years.

Mr. Conway: Oh, Claude Bennett can get one faster than that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: All in all, you could read it either way, from three to five years.

Mr. Roy: You said five years.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, I didn't. I quoted to the press quite clearly three to five years.

Mr. Roy: Can the minister advise whether possibly the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) or somebody else got to him and said, "Let's delay this decision on spending money in Ottawa-Carleton to help us balance our budget"? Is he asking the people of Ottawa-Carleton to accept facilities which the citizens' inspection panel described just last week as being "inadequate, lack security, small and poorly furnished, poor acoustics, no smoke detectors or air conditioning" and so on?

How is it that on the one hand we have the Attorney General professing he's gung-ho on law and order and this minister on the other hand is delaying a process which would facilitate this? Why doesn't he put his money where his mouth is?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: For once the honourable member is correct. This building has been delayed, or any announcements. On December 16 I visited the federal minister in Ottawa. I requested property from him at that time. Let's add it up—December, January is one, February is two, March is three, April is four—that's five months and not a positive response. The five months' delay the member suggests lies right at the door in Ottawa.

Ms. Gigantes: I would like to ask the minister how much faster than five years he thinks the job could be done if there is a dangerous incident in the Ottawa court facilities? That seems to get things speeded up in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If the honourable member had been listening, I think I pointed out quite clearly, I said from 18 months to two years from the date we appoint an architect before sod turning takes effect, and then from 18 months to three years. I pointed that out quite clearly.

Mr. Roy: Why does it take five years?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It is quite clear that the honourable member's party in Ottawa has not informed him of the plans. The majority of the building would be a new building.

Mr. Roy: What are you going to do tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No problem, that will all be corrected.

COMPLAINTS AGAINST POLICE

Mr. Warner: I have a question for the Solicitor General. Mr. Rodney Turner claims to have spent two hours of terror in a Scarborough police station. When will the minister present to this assembly a full report of the events, including the names of each police officer involved?

Secondly, will he also speak to his good friend, the Attorney General, asking him to bring forward legislation to correct a serious flaw in our system of justice by guaranteeing that each person in this province has the right to a telephone call at the time of arrest or detention by the police?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't know personally about Mr. Rodney Turner's allegations. I will inquire and report back to the Legislature. I don't know the details of allegations made by the person referred to by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere.

Mr. Lupusella: In view of the minister's concern in relation to highway safety and in relation to the question raised by my colleague, considering that too many incidents like the one raised by my colleague involving the public and the police officers have occurred in Ontario in the last few years, and remembering that the government promised—
[3:00]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would say to the honourable member that this is not a supplementary.

Mr. Lupusella: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister willing to introduce legislation in this House establishing a citizens' complaints bureau to deal with these types of problems?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The whole issue of citizens' complaints is under review. I'd like to say that in the last year in particular the Ontario Police Commission has played a major and, I think, a very effective role with respect to the general policy relating to citizens' complaints. Since the Morand report into police practices in Metropolitan Toronto, the Metropolitan Toronto police department has upgraded its citizens' complaints procedures considerably. Given what has been accomplished, I want to make it very clear that I don't have any intention at this time of introducing legislation in this area. But we're going to keep it under continuous review in case the need arises where it would appear that we have got to the point, which I don't believe we have got to, where we can say to the police of this province that they are not to be trusted with respect to policing themselves. As far as I am concerned, we haven't reached that point, and I hope we never do.

Mr. Cassidy: You are going to put it off as long as you can.

TRUCK DRIVING LICENCE

Hon. Mr. Snow: Last Friday the member for St. George asked me a question concerning Mr. Norman Makela who has had his truck driving privileges removed because of his diabetic condition. The member was right when she stated that the gentleman had been driving heavy trucks for many years—I believe she quoted 30 years—with Imperial Oil and for quite a few of those years with his diabetic condition. But she also left the impression that Mr. Makela had not been grandfathered in as a truck driver when the driving licence system was changed.

It was because of Mr. Makela's past driving experience and a satisfactory medical report that the medical standards established under the classified drivers' licence system were waived and Mr. Makela was issued a class A licence in April 1977 during the one-year transition period. This licence was issued subject to Mr. Makela's diabetic condition remaining stable.

Unfortunately, in 1978 the ministry's medical advisory committee received new medical reports concerning Mr. Makela. I cannot go into details on these reports. I am sure the honourable members will remember when this legislation was changed about two years ago there was a special clause that I introduced into the legislation that makes all these medical reports confidential to the ministry. But suffice it to say it left the committee no choice but to recommend that Mr. Makela's class A licence be downgraded to a class G licence.

As I have stated before, I very much sympathize with Mr. Makela and others with similar problems, but on the advice of medical specialists it is imperative that the privilege of driving trucks and buses be denied under these conditions for the safety of the general public using our highways.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. Rotenberg: I have a question of the Premier. In the light of the election results on Tuesday would he care to comment on how this might affect federal-provincial relationships and specifically how it might affect our stand on the alleged problems of the constitution?

Mr. Warner: What a setup!

Mr. Peterson: Are you moving him to Jerusalem?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know that all members of the House would join me in expressing to the Prime Minister-Elect the best wishes of all of us for what will be obviously a difficult and onerous responsibility. While we all had our partisan involvement in that particular campaign, it is over and I am sure all of us wish the Prime Minister-Elect and those who he will select to join with him, our very best wishes.

An hon. member: For an early retirement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In case some members of the gallery were concerned about some of the notes appearing here and the large sums of money that were sort of arriving on my desk, I can only make it clear that if they were declared as income, they would still not offset what I have lost on certain other wagers, on certain other events. I just want to make that clear.

Mr. Roy: I am still way ahead.

Mr. Breithaupt: The Argo account.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That's right, but you know what I said, or you said I said, I really didn't say it—Joe Clark in the spring of 1979, the Argos in the fall of 1979. I might be half right.

Mr. MacDonald: What was the question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The very important question from the very distinguished member for Wilson Heights, was how I perceive the events of Tuesday with respect to the federal-provincial relations.

I think I can express most subjectively that the events on Tuesday really are in the process of bringing about a new era in federal-provincial relationships—a period of consultation, a period of co-operation, a period of setting of national objectives, and of dealing with the provinces as partners in Confederation. I am very optimistic that the changes that took place on Tuesday will be beneficial to the people of this province and the people of this country.

As it relates to constitutional discussions, I expect the Prime Minister-Elect will have this as one of his priorities. I think he understands the views of the government of this province that we support patriation but we are opposed to referendums. We think it should be done with respect to the amending formula on the basis of provincial co-operation consensus and agreement. I thank the honourable member for a question I was afraid no one was going to ask.

Mr. Martel: Is that why you planted it?

Mr. S. Smith: If I might just rise briefly on a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I just want to associate ourselves with the comments made by the Premier, the good wishes to be extended to the Prime Minister-Elect as he takes on his very serious duties which will be very important to the future of the country. We all wish him well in the assumption of those duties. I certainly want to associate myself with the Premier in that regard and I also want to just say a very brief word of tribute to the man who has been Prime Minister for 11 years and who has, at some considerable personal sacrifice, served the country that he loves and that he loves dearly, and served it very well.

Thank you very much.

JAMIE BONE CASE

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is it true the Ontario Human Rights Commission has recommended that the minister call a board of inquiry to resolve the discrimination complaint of Jamie Bone, a former quarterback at the University of Western Ontario football team, against the Hamilton Tiger-Cats? If so, when will this inquiry be held?

Mr. Conway: The perfect union is in divorce court, I guess.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, in response to the question, it is true I did last Tuesday sign an approval order, indicating it was in order for the human rights commission to proceed with a board of inquiry into the Jamie Bone matter.

Mr. Van Horne: Supplementary: Would the minister use the authority or power of his office to expedite this inquiry, particularly for rookies, in the light of the football season being imminent? Secondly, when the inquiry is complete, would the minister share the findings of that inquiry with us and also with the federal human rights commission which is also interested in this and with the new Prime Minister who made a personal inquiry of Jamie Bone as late as last weekend? It will perhaps encourage him to see the federal human rights commission takes some course of action to see Canadian quarterbacks are not precluded from playing for Canadian football teams.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I will be glad to indicate to the human rights commission the concern that all members have that this matter be heard as expeditiously as possible, and when the report is issued I will be pleased to share it with the members.

HAMILTON ROADS STUDY

Mr. Mackenzie: To the Minister of Transportation and Communications: Will the minister assure the people of the east end of Hamilton that they will not be pressured into a major north-south freeway through King's Forest and the Redhill Creek valley, that they are not dealing with a fait accompli, and that their views can reverse a decision that has the potential of destroying an ecologically fragile valley that is the last major greenbelt in the east end of the city?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't think I can assure the honourable member of that because the study is now being carried out, and I have not received a final report as yet. I believe the study is presently being presented to the region of Hamilton-Wentworth and the city of Hamilton, and this is a study being carried out jointly by staff and officials and elected representatives of the city of Hamilton, the region of Hamilton-Wentworth and officials of my ministry, with the consideration of consultants.

I wouldn't want to comment on the recommendations of that study until I have had an opportunity to read it and see what is recommended and what is the decision of the locally elected representatives.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that the people of the east end of Hamilton have been presented with six potential routes, all of which go down the valley, which have been rejected now three times by the city of Hamilton and city council? Would he also lay to rest the public perception of virtual provincial black-mail, in terms of funds for other highway projects or roadway projects, if the people don't choose the valley route?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I don't know where the honourable member gets that kind of hog-wash because that is not the situation at all. It is NDP propaganda.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Will the minister explain to this House why he has not even read the studies that have been made available to people in the city of Hamilton when he is the Minister of Transportation and Communications? Doesn't he care about what is happening there?

Hon. Mr. Snow: That shows the ignorance of the people over in that corner, Mr. Speaker, because the study is being prepared by the staff—as I have already explained to his colleague, but obviously he wasn't listening—the staff of the region, the city, and with the co-operation of staff from my ministry. The study is not complete yet and I have not received it which is why I have not read it.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

Hon. Mr. Parrott: On May 11, the honourable leader of the third party asked various questions related to such chemicals as methyl yellow, benzidine and MBCA. These particular substances are classified as aromatic amines and they are also used in the manufacture of dyes, or are dyes in themselves. They are not manufactured in Ontario, but are used in the textile, paper, carpet, plastic and other industries.

I think that the main concern with respect to these substances is exposure to them by the workers in the various industries that use them, and the Ministry of Labour has occupational health guidelines which cover such hazardous materials. In fact, in the 1976 handbook, to which the leader referred, was part of a summary of the knowledge we had on these substances in relation to occupational health guidelines. The Minister of Labour may well have further comments to make relative to the safety of workers who are dealing with these substances. I want to stress the substances are not manufactured in Ontario and, of course, the greatest risk is in their manufacture.

The air and water monitoring we have done so far has turned up no indication of ill-effects on the environment by these materials; nevertheless, we are going to have the MacLaren study done so that we can be absolutely sure.

I think I should point out that the leader is a little in error when he says that the MacLaren study is being commissioned in order to control or limit the use of these chemicals. As indicated in our written response to his party's critic some time ago, the substances are already controlled. Indeed, their use is decreasing as other substances which are less toxic become more readily available. I think it is a mistake to leave the impression that these substances had been freely available over the last couple of years without any controls.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since these substances are being used by the ton in Ontario, even though they have been banned in some other jurisdictions such as West Germany, can the minister explain precisely what the MacLaren study is intended to create? Is it the government's intention to ban the use of these very hazardous substances, as has been acknowledged in the government's own hazardous products textbooks, or is the government simply going to leave these in use at the potential risk of workers in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can go around banning every substance that has some potential harm. That is a nice, idyllic world; it is not the way it is. We establish standards where the health of workers is protected under the other ministries. In that case, we have to expect that there will be some use of these materials—but under very controlled conditions. As I said in my reply, they are not being manufactured here, and they are used under very controlled conditions. Surely those conditions which the Ministry of Labour is prepared to administer are the safeguards that we want—that my friend wants and that I want. Surely he will accept that we cannot just ban every material that has any possible harmful effect. We would probably ban everything but water. That is just not the practical world in which we live.

Ms. Bryden: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: I understood the minister to say he was going to have further tests made on these substances. Is he planning to do these with his own staff, or is he hiring outside consultants for this testing?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I think the MacLaren report, when we receive it, will have a great deal of information. Obviously the members know that just last week, or the week before, we banned a particular material on the basis of scientific evidence. Frankly, the evidence is not all in on 2,4,5-T as yet, but we said we would err on the safe side; that is the basic philosophy of the ministry: to err on the safe side. But surely we should not just indiscriminately ban these materials until the evidence is all in.

We will be asking MacLaren to look at these hazardous substances, and many others, to recommend to us what they think should be done. In the final analysis it will be the staff of the ministry that will have to make the recommendations and, after that, I guess in the final analysis I will have to make the decision.

DREE PROGRAM

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. In view of the fact that the counties of Simcoe, Grey and Bruce and parts of the counties of Dufferin and Wellington were in the last federal-provincial Agricultural and Rural Development Agreement; in view of the fact that he stated recently that the federal government would not allow these areas in the new program; and in view of the fact that the Prime Minister said in the television debate that it was up to Ontario to decide which areas it wanted covered by the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion program—

Hon. W. Newman: You heard in estimates what happened.

Mr. McKessock: —which I think clearly showed that the newly decided upon areas were determined by a federal civil servant, against the government's expectations—with a new government elected but the same civil service in place, what does the Treasurer intend to do to see that our area is included in the new DREE program and that the same civil service decision does not remain?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, we will certainly discuss and, if necessary, fight with our colleagues to see that the areas we believe should be included are covered.

Mr. Breithaupt: Dissension already?

Mr. Conway: That was a very high tone that the Treasurer's eastern Ontario colleagues put on that debate.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I might say one thing about it: I have enough faith in the members who were elected this time—

Mr. Conway: The member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) put a very high tone on that debate. He really ought to be congratulated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: That will give the Tories two seats in Quebec for ever.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Havrot: He's a mouthy little brat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the honourable minister continue?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The fact is I really do believe that the people who are elected now probably can govern the civil service.

Mr. McKessock: Does the Treasurer agree with the Minister of Agriculture and Food and myself as well as, I am sure, the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) and the member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. McCague), that the areas that were covered under the old program should also be covered under the new program?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, some of those areas were not included in the discussions that were going on. The federal government never even brought them into the discussion. The areas that were included for very early discussions were Grey and Bruce. Simcoe as I recall, although the province asked that parts of it be covered, was not ever considered by the federal government.

Mr. Gaunt: Since the minister has indicated that he intends to negotiate with some vigour in respect to including the areas mentioned in the new program, when will those negotiations start, and when does the minister anticipate getting results from the new federal government?

Hon. F. S. Miller: First, I have to find out with whom I am negotiating. Once that decision is made, I can assure the member we will start the approaches very quickly and pursue them assiduously.

INMATE EDUCATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Correctional Services: I would like to ask the minister what rationale he used in closing the education programs at the Windsor, London, Hamilton, Ottawa and Toronto East detention centres. Would the minister not agree that the elimination of these programs is a step backwards in the helpful process that has been developed by the former minister? Would he not also agree that the education program was a very important aspect of the rehabilitation process in the detention centres?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the education program is very good for rehabilitation. Regrettably, in the short-stay institutions like the detention centres and jails to which the member made reference, the average length of stay is about two weeks. That is not enough to provide a suitable period of education. We have therefore concentrated our education provisions in the longer-stay facilities, and education will be continued there at an increased rate.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: If this program was not useful, why does Mr. Hildebrand and the education staff at the Windsor jail say it was useful? Since such programs as remedial reading, English and mathematics were being offered, does the minister not think these types of programs are crucial if these inmates are to develop the skills necessary to survive in our society once they are released? Does he not also agree that there are inmates who remain in the detention centres and jails for a considerable period of time?

Ms. Gigantes: For a year.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Where education is useful, in the long-stay facilities, it is being provided.

Mr. Cooke: Why don't you just tell us about the budget cut?

Hon. Mr. Walker: In the short-stay facilities, it is not being provided.

Mr. McGuigan: Supplementary: Doesn't the minister realize that many of those residents are crying for an opportunity to at least begin their education, and that anything he can do, even on a short-term basis, provides an entry for them into the educational system? I think that something like 16 per cent of them have only a grade five reading comprehension level. Anything the minister could do, even on a short-term basis, would be of great benefit. Doesn't the minister realize this?

Hon. Mr. Walker: We are certainly well aware of the value of education. In some respects, with respect to short-term facilities, community resource centres and temporary absences are being used to permit the individuals to be provided with education within the community, where we think it can be delivered quite well.

WILD RICE HARVESTING

Hon. Mr. Auld: Last week the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) asked the Premier (Mr. Davis) what measures he was willing to take to ensure that all those concerned will realize that there is an appearance that no favouritism will be involved in the awarding of wild rice harvesting licences in the north-west. The Premier said he would be delighted to discuss this with me and that I would have a short, concise answer today.

Prior to 1978, wild rice harvesting licences were issued on a first come, first served basis by our offices, with the exception of a number of registered areas which had been licensed to native people since 1960. I'm informed that over 200 licences were issued up until 1978 when honourable members will recall that as a result of the Hartt commission the government declared a moratorium on further licences in the Dryden and Kenora area except to native people.

The member also asked me about Mr. Ratuski and his company, the Shoal Lake Wild Rice Company, which, he said, held 28 licences that covered more than 2,000 lakes and waterways. Actually, Mr. Ratuski has 18 licences, and there is no way the area covered there would include 2,000 lakes and waterways.

REPORTS

LANARK COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today a report which I requested from the provincial auditor on grant payments for transportation to the Lanark County Board of Education.

It had become evident, in the course of a review by personnel of our eastern regional office, that certain of the board's bus routes were significantly shorter than had originally been recognized by the board as a basis for its payments to the contractor and its claims to the ministry for the grants. Since some public disagreement had been expressed about the amounts involved, I felt that it was important and desirable to ask the provincial auditor to investigate, as provided under section 17 of the Audit Act, 1977.

The report shows that the board has taken proper action to correct the situation. It also shows that the decision of our regional office to investigate the matter was clearly justified. I appreciate the assistance of the provincial auditor in this matter and the co-operation of which was extended to his staff by the Lanark County Board of Education and its officials. The recommendations in the report are now being studied in the ministry to determine the best way of putting them into effect.

I have noted the discussion about this report in the standing public accounts committee and I'm asking the Clerk to make copies available to that committee as well.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HYDRO AFFAIRS

Mr. MacDonald from the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs presented the following interim report and moved its adoption:

The purpose of this interim report is to bring to the attention of the Legislative Assembly a matter of compelling importance requiring its immediate attention. The committee's terms of reference, approved by the assembly on November 24, 1977, ordered the committee: "To examine Ontario's nuclear commitment."

During this ongoing examination, the committee on May 23 by a vote of five to four adopted the following motion: "That the government order Ontario Hydro not to start up the NPD reactor at Rolphton until the committee concluded its consideration of the matter."

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the procedure as recommended by the procedural affairs committee, it's my understanding now that the chairman of the Hydro affairs committee will move the adjournment of the debate and it will then go on the Order Paper so that we might call this item.

I would remind the House that that is the understanding at the moment. I would invite the chairman of the committee to move the adjournment of the debate, in accordance with the standing orders.

On motion by Mr. MacDonald, the debate was adjourned.

MOTION

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that private members' ballot item 20, standing in the name of Mr. Kerr, be debated on May 31, and such remaining ballot items standing in the name of a member of the Progressive Conservative caucus be similarly advanced in the schedule of items to be debated.

Motion agreed to.

[3:30]

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to table the answers to questions 174 to 178 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 2161.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Pursuant to standing order number 13, I wish to indicate to the House the order of business for the remainder of this week and next week. This afternoon we will consider ballot items numbers 15 and 16; this evening we will go to legislation, starting with Bill 34 in committee of the whole House, then second reading of Bills 87, 32 and 33, along with Bills 43, 44, 45 and 17 and any committee work which follows.

On Friday, the House will sit in committee of supply, to continue with the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On Monday, May 28, the House will sit in committee of supply to continue consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On Tuesday, May 29, in the afternoon, we will go to legislation, dealing with Bills 29 and 25 in committee of the whole House. In the evening the House will be in committee of supply, to conclude the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. I would repeat that: on Tuesday evening next, we are going into committee of supply to complete the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On Wednesday, May 30, the resources development, general government and justice committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, May 31, in the afternoon, we will consider ballot items standing in the names of the member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr) and the member for Lincoln (Mr. Hall). In the evening, we will consider Bills 71, 93 and 94, both second readings and committee of the whole House, as required; and, if time remains, we will resume the budget debate.

On Friday, June 1, the House will sit in committee of supply to commence consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

PROGRAM COST DISCLOSURE ACT

Mr. Van Horne moved second reading of Bill 69, An Act to provide for the Disclosure of Information relating to the Financial Cost and Economic Impact of Government Programs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker and members of the assembly, I would like to start off by suggesting that this bill is presented to the assembly with the very sincere hope that every member will be allowed to vote on this bill according to the dictates of his or her own reasoning—

Mr. Warner: Don't bet on it.

Mr. Van Horne: —and with the sincere hope that no one party will attempt to block the vote.

This bill, An Act to provide for the Disclosure of Information relating to the Financial Cost and Economic Impact of Government Programs, is also presented as a sincere attempt to provide a framework of financial accountability for the government of Ontario. If adopted, it will also provide all elected members with sorely needed background information to assist them in the decision-making process.

When I first came to this Legislature in 1977 I was amazed at the lack of information given to members before they were called on to vote approval of budget estimates and items brought to the House. That is not to suggest that information might not be made available if it had been sought by me or, for that matter, by any member. As a matter of fact, in some instances I had more than adequate background costing data supplied to me—for example, in the case of reviewing costs at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education. On the other hand, I could find numerous examples of situations in which I was not able to get very much background information on program costs.

I use here, as an example, the heritage language program which was introduced in the fall of 1977. This program is a prime example of the need for such legislation as would be provided by Bill 69. I say this because I am convinced that 90 per cent of the members of this House—and perhaps I am being generous here—haven't got a clue about the cost of the heritage language program.

I am not, and I repeat not, being critical of the program, its aims or objectives or of the merits of the program; but I am being critical of the fact there was virtually no indication of how the estimated cost of $1 million to $2 million was arrived at. We learned very quickly that the cost of the program in Metro alone would exceed $1 million. In fact, the cost in the whole province in that first year of implementation of the program was going to run between $3 million and $4 million—approximately double the original estimate.

I would like briefly to review the seven sections of the bill before I give any more illustrations of how it might have been useful in curbing costly government programs that have helped to put the deficit of this province in the state it now is.

The first section of the bill defines auditor, program and public money. In a sense the terms are self-explanatory but the word "program" requires a further word of explanation. It is the intent of this bill that any and all programs, projects, works, undertakings or services that are considered by executive council and approved by them for implementation be included under the terms of this act. This definition would serve to prevent any government in Ontario from drawing an arbitrary bottom-dollar cost below which they could possibly act without informing the House according to the stipulations of this bill. It would in other words, make the government deal carefully with all amounts of money, large and small.

Section two in a sense is the heart of the bill. This section puts some teeth into the standing orders of our Legislature. I am referring now to the little booklet we all have at our desks, Standing Orders Approved by the Legislative Assembly, Thursday, December 14, 1978. If members wish to make reference to it, page 10, section 32(c) indicated: "on the introduction of a government bill, a compendium of background information shall be delivered to the opposition critics. If it is an amending bill, an up-to-date consolidation of the act or acts to be amended shall be delivered to the opposition critics unless the bill amends an act amended previously in a session."

Perhaps that is fine as far as it goes, but these compendiums for the most part are really not very helpful in determining program costs or economic impact. By the way, my colleague from London Centre (Mr. Peterson) will have more to say in this debate about economic impact.

Many compendiums are not much more than a summary of background reading material or recent research papers with very little financial or economic information in them. I have brought along with me one example. If any members in the House haven't had the experience of looking at a compendium, I would like to show them the size of the compendium that was supplied with Bill 25, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

What do we find in this large pile of paper? We find a report of the industrial inquiry commissioner concerning grievance arbitration under the Labour Relations Act, a copy of the act, a copy of the Ontario Labour Management Arbitration Commission Act, various documents submitted to the Kelly commission. In summary, having looked through all of this, we still find ourselves looking for some indication of what the cost of implementing this bill, if it were passed, would be.

In other words, "compendium" as it is defined in the standing orders, or as it is understood by the members of this Legislature, is not good enough. This bill would hopefully allow for a much more complete compendium of costing data and other financial data that is required before members can properly and thoroughly think out a proposition brought to them and vote on it with any kind of intelligence.

I would point out further it is the intent of this section that once any program is approved by executive council through either legislation or regulation or internal policy, then this section would apply. I would repeat that. The intent of this section is once any program is approved by executive council through legislation or regulation or internal policy procedure, then this section would apply. That too, then becomes an extension of standing order 32(c) and makes 32(c) of necessity, something that would have to be changed.

Section 3 of the bill requires our ministers stay on top of program costs under their jurisdictions. Programs that exceed or will exceed estimated total costs will be reported in a cost-excess statement. Secondly, the new cost of these programs will be reported in a supplementary cost-excess statement. That is the reason for the first and second sections. All members will be able to assess if program costs are being effectively projected and it will also assist ministers and members in effectively dealing with supplementary estimates in any program prioritizing. This, of course, is further defined in section 4 of the bill which requires an auditors investigation into the requirement of a cost excess statement or a supplementary cost excess statement.

Section 5 of the bill ensures all members of this Legislature are notified of any proposed expenditures through the filing of compendium data with all members, the auditor, and the public accounts committee. As far as the public is concerned, that public which we all serve, it will be provided through the central office of the ministry concerned. If anyone chooses to look, it would be there available for her or for him to see.

If I may stop and digress for a moment from the prepared text I have, it may seem of itself to be onerous and costly but I would submit to you—and I'm pleased the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) is here. A question was put to him last week by one of my colleagues about the use of ministry computers and that was quite coincidental to my being asked to speak in London, Ontario, last night to a group of data processing students from as far away as Sarnia, Seaforth, Windsor, and other places in southwestern Ontario. In order to speak properly to these students I had to contact some of the very well trained, very dedicated people who are working in the member for Lambton's ministry—for example, Mr. Leo Belanger.

Mr. Belanger was able to supply me with very strong evidence that the capacity of the data-processing facilities in our three major data-processing centres of the ministry and the Ontario government are very capable of supplying the kind of data that would be required by this bill. We've got the resource and I would submit to the minister, it's incumbent upon the government to use its own data-processing equipment and the expertise of its staff to provide the information that would be required by this particular bill. It's not an impossible task. The minister's people are capable. In fact, they can do this at a cost that would not be horribly high. As a matter of fact, it would end up saving us money as we would be better money managers.

The last two sections, as I mentioned, are the routine sections that require no further definition at this point. Let me address myself to what I think should be a major concern of any member of Parliament, provincial or federal.

During the recent federal campaign TV debate on May 13, our new Prime Minister spoke of the power of the House to control spending. Those members who watched the debate will recall in the last section of the program, the last half hour—

[3:45]

Mr. Nixon: Trudeau won that hands down.

Mr. Van Horne: —the major topic was the power of the House to control spending.

Mr. Peterson: A great debate.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not true.

Mr. Van Horne: I want to quote our new Prime Minister, the former Leader of the Opposition. Our new Prime Minister said: "The Liberal government has inadequate control over public spending." I am sure that that comment has been made in this House about the Conservative government of Ontario—"inadequate control over public spending." Both he and the Liberal leader agreed that there was a very evident need to tighten control and they went on to sing the praises of the report of the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability, or, if you will, the Lambert report.

It is interesting that our legislative library has only two copies of this report. I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that in the light of these days of restraint et cetera, we should encourage every member to do as I did and spend $8.50 to get his or her own copy and let it become his or her Bible. If members of the assembly want to make a serious job out of being a member, this should be required reading. It's called the report of the Royal Commission on Financial Management and Accountability. It was published in March of this year. The chairman of the commission was Allen Lambert of the Toronto Dominion Bank and I am sure all the members are aware of him. This is a must to read. The two leaders as well as the leader of the third party, Mr. Broadbent, have made reference to this royal commission report.

The media is fast becoming aware of the Lambert commission report or this royal commission report as witnessed by a May 21 article in the Globe and Mail. The title of this article, which I am holding up for any of you who care to look at it, is "New Government Must Fight to Take Control," May 21, 1979. The author is Wayne Cheveldayoff and I am going to quote a word or two from it.

"The new government will need every gram of imagination and courage it can muster to deal with these two problems." The problems, of course, are the size of the deficit and the number of people unemployed.

"The bureaucracy will not be easily moved," it goes on to say. "After two years of careful study, we have reached the deeply-held conviction that the serious malaise pervading the management of government stems fundamentally from a grave weakening, and in some cases an almost total breakdown, in the change of accountability, first within government and second in the accountability of government to Parliament and ultimately to the Canadian people." I would submit to you that that statement could be reiterated for the province of Ontario.

That article ends up by saying: "Ultimately, either the Canadian public regains control of the extravagant dinosaur or the piling up of debts for future generations will continue and further deepen our distrust of the political process." And if you don't think there is some distrust of our political process, Mr. Speaker, answer me this—why were all 13,000 copies of the first printing of Ed Murphy's book, A Legacy of Spending, which was certainly a condemnation, a litany of the sins and errors of the federal government over the last few years, sold out in one week? I am sure when I retire from here I could do the same thing, write about a legacy of spending in Ontario and probably assure myself of a better retirement pension than I will get as a retired member of this place.

The point is, the public is concerned and we, as members, should be concerned.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot help but agree with the Lambert report's introductory comments which observed that "it has become apparent that the management of government requires greater attention from Parliament, ministers and public servants than it has been given in the recent past.

"Programs and activities must not be approved without more carefully defined goals and objectives, and a realistic forecast of costs. Parliament should pursue more vigorously its role of holding the government to account. The cabinet and individual ministers should provide more leadership and direction to officials to ensure that they administer their operations with economy, efficiency and effectiveness, and should be more directly involved in holding them to account for carrying out their assigned tasks.

"In addition, the unsustainable rate of growth of government and its complexity"—my understanding, by the way, is that we have over 60,000 civil servants; I am not sure if the minister could verify that, but that is the number that I have, 67,000, and that is certainly a large number to deal with—"and size make it increasingly obvious that there needs to be greater care in the use of resources that have been entrusted to government. Not only is waste to be avoided, but in the context of today's fiscal situation and the pervasiveness of government activity, managers in the public service are being challenged to rediscover a sense of frugality and a commitment to the careful husbanding of resources.

"The system should be capable of planning and defining the government's priorities; converting priorities into programs with clearly defined and agreed objectives, allocating the requisite resources and setting centrally-imposed standards and procedures; delegating to managers the authority to implement programs by developing the assigned human, physical and financial resources; and providing monitoring and appraising procedures to ensure that all the actors are held fully and clearly accountable in a progressive and unbroken chain of linkages carrying through to the sovereign Parliament."

There is no question that our province's deficit, whatever it is, whichever set of numbers we wish to look at—$1.3 billion is a popular one—is so large because of many factors we can all speak to: inflation, productivity, international money markets, increasing demands for social services, to name only a few.

The factor which our present Conservative government here in Ontario shrinks from, in my view, is financial management and accountability. How accountable was this government in the affairs of the Ontario Land Corporation? In an exclusive Toronto Star article on May 5 this year, the indication was that taxpayers are responsible for carrying charges of $28 million on a $311 million costing in the land-banking programs.

I could go on with other examples, Mr. Speaker, I realize my time has lapsed, but I do want to say very sincerely in conclusion that I hope that the members consider these thoughts carefully and that they use their individual judgement in voting on this. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Bryden: I find this bill preoccupies itself with formalities rather than with substance, and that it is what too often comes out of the other opposition party, I am afraid, because I don't think legislating a government into this kind of action is going to produce results. It is going to give the government simply another excuse for inaction.

Any government that is not already preceding any new program or new activity with studies of the sort requested by this bill is a government that should be changed; it is beyond hope, and I don't think legislation of this sort can improve the matter. What we need is a government that believes in planning and in action, and this legislation will simply substitute studies for action and will encourage governments to hire a lot of high-priced civil servants and outside consultants—

Mr. Peterson: Have you read the bill? You are so far wrong that you should sit down right now.

Ms. Bryden: —to carry on spending taxpayers' money in that way, instead of using the taxpayers' money to deliver services to people.

There are two main reasons why I am opposing this bill. One is that it suggests that the studies required should happen only at the stage when the executive council approves the implementation of a program. That is far too late for any such studies to be undertaken. If they have not been undertaken already, the program cannot possibly be presented to the House or to any estimates committee, where money will have to be voted, with any sort of confidence or any opportunity for attaining approval of the program.

For a new program which requires legislation, it is already required that a compendium of information be presented at the time of the introduction of the bill, which would summarize presumably what studies have been done. They may not all be as full as is requested in this bill, but it is up to the members to keep demanding the additional information when the bill is going through.

If it is a program which does not require legislation, it has presumably gone through the stages of the policy field committee—

Mr. Peterson: The honourable member does not understand the rules.

Ms. Bryden: —the policy and priorities board, the Management Board of Cabinet and the cabinet. If this kind of analysis has not been done, then I do not see how those committees could have even considered it.

While I do not disagree with the member's bill in that we need this kind of analysis and we need an assessment of the number of jobs that will be created by each program, I just think he is going about getting it in the wrong way. He is trying to impose a legislative straitjacket on any government in power instead of letting the government do its pre-planning and then come to the House with a program that is not only planned, but on which it is ready to act. This will simply delay action for a considerable period and give the government a good excuse for delaying action, which it uses far too often anyway, by referring matters to committees.

Also, the bill really substitutes a new form of accountability on top of our present form of accountability in the House which is the estimates procedure and the supplementary estimates procedure. I do not think either of those procedures are perfect and I think we need a lot of improvements in them, but I do not think we need a third system imposed on those two. It is much better to improve them. For instance, one of the main things we need before we can really evaluate what kind of studies the government has done is a freedom of information act. When we get that, we will be able to have full access to all the studies the government presumably has done and be able to ask them long before we get to the implementation stage, and long before we even get to the introduction of a bill stage, what studies are being undertaken. That is essential and an alternative to this bill.

We also need the rules of the House strengthened regarding the tabling of compendiums of information. At the time ministerial statements are presented, there should be a similar compendium to what is presented at the time a bill is introduced. We also need to know the effect after the new program is put into operation. For instance, we have never yet been able to find out from the grants given under the Ontario Development Corporation whether any of the grants actually produced the number of jobs the government said would be produced by a given grant. That sort of analysis after the program is in effect would be far more useful than some of the pre-analysis which simply gives a forecast while we never find out whether they are carried out.

We also would like to know the results of the tax concessions which the government gives to industry after they have been given with the promise that they are going to create so many hundreds of jobs. Every year there should be a report not only on the value of the tax concessions that went to each company, but what they actually produced for this province. Those are known as tax expenditures in the jargon of the tax people. We do not have any accounting of those tax expenditures. All we know is what the government itself spent through the money we voted to it.

[4:00]

We also need more vigorous reviews of what are known as ABCs—agencies, boards and commissions—of which we have more than 300 now. The agencies review committee has so far only dealt with 47 of that 300, and I think they've only decided to discontinue about seven. So there is a big area for examining the economic impact of government activities—that is, of existing government activities, not just new ones.

The government also seems to delight in forms rather than action, in that periodically they go through this alphabet soup in their attempt to evaluate their activities. We used to have PPB, which is program planning budgeting. Then they substituted MBR for that, which was management by results. Then they tried ZBB, which is zero-based budgeting.

But none of these seem to have produced any real results in giving us an analysis of how many jobs the government is creating and what sort of productive efficiency it is able to measure in the delivery of services. It seems to me, mainly, that these programs are a smokescreen designed to indicate the government is attempting to evaluate its programs; really it is not willing to tell us what sort of improvement in services to people it is able to bring in.

Even the estimates books have only been improved very slightly. I can remember 10 years ago when I was research director for this caucus, it was our caucus which persuaded them to bring in the standard accounts classification. This is now a part of the budget books and enables us to look at the total amount spent on each standard subject like salaries, travel and things of that sort. Before that, they never added those things together for every ministry and they had no idea how much they spent on each category.

They still don't give us last-year figures in the estimates book on the individual items, only on the totals. They still give us descriptions of the programs in the estimates books that are a laugh. They are an exercise in meaningless words that do not really tell what the program is aiming to do. They only cover everything the ministry might like to cover. If one asks them how they are implementing this particular wording, they can't really say.

We still don't get enough background information in the estimates book for the estimates. They don't compare the number of employees who are on contract and who are in the public service year by year so we can see whether they are actually increasing the contract employees at the same time as they may be appearing to decrease the public servants.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Ms. Bryden: To sum up, while I agree we need much more information and analysis, I don't think this is the right vehicle for it and it would put us in a legislative strait-jacket.

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I commend the sentiment of my colleague from London North but I am very confused as to why he would introduce a bill such as this. That confusion arises from the fact the government, in a very routine manner, currently assesses all the factors concerning past and new programs that this bill seeks to have included in the proposed compendium.

Furthermore, these assessments, carried on primarily within the ministries responsible for various submissions, are by no means withheld from legislative scrutiny. Certainly, and sensibly, any assessment carried out in connection with the cabinet's decision-making process, or its policy formation, should not be subject to mandatory public disclosure.

By and large, however, these matters which comprise the facts and statistics upon which government programs are planned are brought to the attention of all parties in the House during the annual estimates debate. As we all know, it is at this time the detailed listing of the amounts of money the government proposes to disburse for the fiscal year are made by each ministry. The estimates are set out in the prescribed format for review and approval by the Legislature. Since 1963, the cost breakdown of wages, salaries and maintenance, or in other words the standard accounts, have been presented on a program-by-program basis with accompanying program and activity description.

I think it is worth emphasizing, since section 3 of Bill 69 addresses itself to this, that the funds appropriated in the estimates cannot be exceeded except through special approvals such as supplementary estimates or special warrants.

In pointing out the obvious, I merely wish to draw to the attention of members the fact that while accountability is the essence of the democratic process, there is more than one chain of accountability in the parliamentary government which we practise. Ultimately, the government and all members of the assembly are accountable to the taxpayers of Ontario, but first and foremost the government is accountable to the Legislative Assembly since it is only with the confidence of a majority of the members that it can continue to exercise the responsibilities of office.

The estimates, then, are the traditional, and certainly the most significant, means of achieving accountability because they form the basis of government requests to the assembly for authority to spend money.

It warrants mentioning that certain improvements have been made in the presentation of the estimates.

For example, we now include approved or actual estimates figures from previous years through which comparisons and better appraisals can more easily be made. As a routine procedure in the estimates review, the government now supplies the opposition critics with supplementary information prior to the commencement of the review process. This information elaborates on both the program description and numerical content of the printed estimates and is seen as a method of ensuring a more complete analysis of each ministry's fiscal plans.

The Management Board of Cabinet requests ministries, normally in the fall of the year, to submit their proposed estimates for the coming fiscal year. Each submission is guided by directions developed through the multi-year plan, which will also serve as a basis for developing the estimates that are presented to the Legislature. The financial data contained in the submissions is only one of their components, since other information is necessary for internal planning and control purposes. I should say it is what I view as a third chair of accountability in addition to those which I referred to earlier.

Cabinet and the ministries must provide the leadership and direction to their officials so economy and efficiency within government operations can be maintained. To this end, accompanying each proposal or submission to cabinet is precisely the kind of economic impact evaluation referred to in Bill 69. In short, any new policy being considered is evaluated from both a private and public sector economic standpoint.

Specific areas considered are: Job creation and/or job loss; effect on investment capital; encouragement for the formation of new business; duplication of the intent and functions of existing organizations; effect on consumer prices; reduction of the incentive to work; and cost of compliance.

In terms of the public sector, the effect on the government work force and on the particular ministry's resource base are closely examined. Finally, reasoning must also be provided in cases where no economic impact is expected.

The Management Board of Cabinet, in its role as general manager of government operations, requires that each ministry quantify in specific terms a statement of results to be accomplished by the use of the funds it requests. The ministries, by agreement with Management Board, commit themselves to the achievement of results over the course of the fiscal year. The results are calendarized and records are maintained, thus providing the basis on which planned results are carefully compared with the actual results. In this manner, the board exercises control over the expenditure of public funds.

I am personally of the conviction that the government is successfully achieving that measure of internal control which is necessary to maintain the principles of accountability.

Mr. Peterson: What about the opposition? What about the rest of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. McCague: The Lambert report, I might say, is really a blueprint of what we are presently doing in Ontario.

Mr. Peterson: What about giving the opposition access to that report?

Mr. Bolan: He says it with a straight face too. Who writes your speeches?

Hon. Mr. McCague: One indication of the effectiveness of this system is that actual spending has come well within estimates for the third year in a row.

Some comment on section 4 of Bill 69 is also warranted. I fail to understand why a provision is included for an auditor's inquiry where a cost excess statement would be required under this act, since this would be done, and is currently done, as a matter of course under present legislation.

Section 12(2) of the act to revise the Audit Act, 1977, outlines the contents of the provincial auditor's annual report. This section of the act serves to illustrate the recent increase of broad examination powers given to the auditors by the amendment. The new provisions allow the auditor to report on cases in which he observes that money is expended without due regard to economy and efficiency, or occasions on which procedures to measure and report on the effectiveness are not established by ministries, or where established these procedures are not satisfactory. Since the auditor's annual report is delivered to the Speaker of the assembly after the public accounts committee has laid its report before the House, one assumes the issues or cases of inefficient spending are brought both to the attention of members of the Legislature and the members of the public.

By way of conclusion, I would like to state that in so far as this bill attempts to make public certain information upon which policy decisions are made, this provision deals with issues currently under review by the Williams commission. The Commission on Freedom of Information and Individual Privacy was established in 1977 to study and report to the Attorney General on ways and means to improve the public information policies of the Ontario government, as well as its relevant procedures and legislation.

The commission has been directed to examine public information practices and developments of other jurisdictions in order to consider possible changes which would be compatible with our parliamentary traditions. It will ultimately also identify categories of information which should be exempted and applied in Ontario. I do feel we should await the commission's final report before taking legislative action. The freedom of information commission will, I am sure, define in detail its findings and opinions on the information regarding government programs and executive decision-making. For this reason, and those I have mentioned, I would urge the members of this House not to adopt this bill.

The honourable member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) did mention early in his remarks that he was getting more than adequate information when he asked for it. He did mention some difficulties in establishing a cost for the heritage language program. I think he well knows that is a very difficult cost to establish because it is voluntary at the school board level and it was very difficult to know how many would take on that program.

As for the number of people in the employ of the government now, I am told it is between 82,000 and 83,000. The member for Beaches-Woodbine (Ms. Bryden) did mention that we were finagling the figures. That is not so. There has been some increase in the number of civil servants and a reduction in the number of contract people. That varies back and forth a little, but we are getting them practically all on to the regular civil service now and the contract employees have been reduced.

I do commend the member for Beaches-Woodbine for the comments she made at the beginning of her presentation in that we are really doing what is mentioned here in the bill. We are trying and are accomplishing a great deal from time to time in the whole area the honourable member mentioned. More information, improved reporting systems, approved accountability and improved productivity are all important.

Mr. Peterson: I am very happy to rise in support of my colleague's bill. May I compliment him? It is exactly the kind of legislation that is needed in this House.

Frankly, I am quite astounded by the naivety of the remarks of the member for Beaches-Woodbine. She is one person whom I thought would have some appreciation for the necessity of this kind of discipline in government behaviour and government expenditures. I have only one of two conclusions: either she doesn't understand it or doesn't care. I would have to conclude probably that she doesn't care. She mentioned that we need more action. She resorted to the old socialist diatribe on income redistribution and everything else, in my opinion without once addressing her mind to the principles inherent in this bill. I wasn't very happy with it.

[4:15]

She said in her speech that we needed freedom of information laws and went into a speech about that. What does she think this is? This is freedom of information. We are starting somewhere; we are starting to put some discipline into government, to force it to come to the Legislature and give us some rational basis upon which to check its expectations against what was actually accomplished.

The minister chatted about what's been done already and said, "We're already doing it. They are fine people. They are a model for the Lambert commission. People in the ministries are concerned about efficiency, productivity and all other good things." But they aren't prepared to bring it to the House. The compendium of information brought to committee of supply is not what we're talking about here. It's one possible part of it, but that is not the kind of discipline this bill is asking for. We are asking to know, fully, the government's intentions for every piece of legislation introduced into this House and what it's going to do in a variety of different areas—things like balance of payments, job creation, the effect on the incentive to work; all the other kinds of financial indicators by which, and only by which, some kind of effective measurement can be made of a program.

The reality is that when a bill is brought into this House the minister usually doesn't even make a comment. We are presented with the bill; and one or two or three weeks later we stand up on second reading, and usually the critic from the official opposition starts with the first speech, then it goes to the member of the third party and eventually the debate goes back to the minister. The minister doesn't have to justify; he doesn't even have to speak, he doesn't have to do anything. The opposition is left only with the information they root out themselves. The opposition has no idea what the government's expectations are. They have no idea what the government expects to accomplish except what they surmise or read or pick up in the newspaper or extract from the civil service.

We see a lot of government decisions made—and I go back and quote my little friend the Treasurer from Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller), who said: "You know, I make a lot of decisions on impulse." We get that feeling from the government. If every bill were brought in here with a specified set of expectations, we could look at it a year later and see if the government was right or wrong. Not only would it force a discipline on the government which I think is so very important, it would also allow it to be aired publicly. It would allow the government programs to be scrutinized and we could make sure that what we collectively wanted accomplished was being accomplished.

I can tell you another thing, Mr. Speaker, it would dramatically improve the quality of debate in this House. We would all end up talking about the same things because we could measure those expectations.

I don't think the process we are involved in now is serving this House well. The government says: "Well, we do this during estimates." I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it isn't done during estimates. That is usually after the money has been spent and it doesn't necessarily apply to legislation but rather on a department basis. We have the complement of staff, but there is no cost benefit analysis, it's just a bunch of statistics. As I said, we have that after the money has been spent, not before the money has been spent; and if those estimates are varied one penny, of course, it's a matter of confidence.

The estimates debate has become a meaningless waste of time for most of the members and most of the ministers. It's our collective fault. As an opposite member let me say I am very sad about that. Another day, in another debate I am going to speak about that at great length, because I think the estimate procedure in this House has deteriorated to a deplorable level. Obviously we need a forum for general debate, and maybe we should use throne or budget or something else; but the meaningless diatribes that go on, the constituency things aired and all the time involved, the obfuscation by the ministries, all the people hauled in, has become in my opinion almost a waste of 420 hours. It's an indication, collectively, how seriously we take that process, inasmuch as rarely, if ever, have those 420 hours been used in total; and we have to do something about that.

So don't come into this House and tell me the estimates procedure is an effective device to measure the efficacy of government legislation, because it is not. It is after the fact and the information is not presented there in the way this bill asks it to be presented on a specific, bill-by-bill basis. I want the minister and the honourable member for Beaches-Woodbine to understand that what they address their minds to is not what is being addressed in the bill of my colleague and my friend.

Mention has been made of the public accounts committee where we have scrutiny through the provincial auditor. Again, that information is a year or two years old, having all been analysed. The committee goes through it and questions various witnesses. I happen to sit on that committee, and never is that committee able to get its hands on the person who actually made the decision because he has been moved somewhere to another department, moved up or down, or has done a lateral arabesque.

It is impossible to get any kind of precise information about who made the specific decision. It is a most frustrating process. Then we file a report, and the government gets that report and files it in the garbage can. Members of this assembly have no influence whatsoever, in a meaningful sense, over either the measuring of programs or the spending of money. I think this whole area has got to be one of major concern for the members of this House. I hope the procedural affairs committee takes this on. I, for one, will put in my three cents there at the appropriate time.

I want to say that this bill is not a panacea to curb government spending or to bring all government programs under control. It is part of a number of programs by which, legislatively, we can provide a counterweight—and we need opposition forces—to the great weight of bureaucracy and the government structure. This is the one way to force one form of discipline on the government.

It is not the only one. Collectively we have to use every management tool and device we can possibly conjure up. I have talked before about a systematic program of deregulation, I have talked about zero-based budgeting, I have talked about sun-setting. None of these is the end of the world, or perhaps individually all that significant, but those three approaches, in conjunction with an economic impact study program, are going to force care and concern, not only on the ministers but on the people who work for them.

I realize that cabinet ministers get a lot of briefing documents. They should. If they didn't that would be crazy. A lot of the information they have is secret and private, it is information that never gets to the House. We have no way to evaluate the decision on the basis of the same information that ministers had in their evaluation of that decision.

Therein lies the problem. If the government says a particular bill is going to create 700 jobs in the province, it may or may not be right. We have no idea what its expectations are. The government should share information with us so we can collectively apply our minds to it and collectively decide if that is a wise allocation of government resources.

This is just one device. It's a freedom of information bill. That's what it is. It is getting more information in a specific way. I am not holding my breath waiting for a general freedom of information bill in this House. We have been yelling about it for years, and so have our friends in the NDP. The honourable member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) has done a lot of work in this area. The federal Tories have talked about it. We have Carlton Williams examining it.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Peterson: We are all concerned about this. I am not optimistic that we can move the government to action, but here, specifically, is one important segment of the financial area. I would urge all of my colleagues in the House to support this excellent piece of legislation.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, our colleague, the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne), has brought forward a bill which I suspect has grown out of some of his frustration over the process we experience in the assembly. If one just reads the explanatory note, I would think it would be difficult, even for the minister who spoke, to speak against the concept that is developed in the explanatory note. In fact section 2(1) is a tough one for anyone to speak against. The basic idea, that the elected members of the assembly, and then the public, should have a good knowledge of government spending, is obviously a laudable one. I would assume that is something every member of the assembly would support, the proposal that we should know where the money is being spent and on what because it is tax dollars.

Unfortunately, to date we have never found a useful way to come to grips with how our dollars are squandered in the private field. Every time a motor company manages to turn out 50,000 defective automobiles we all pay for that in the long run. As the company is required to rectify the problem they then increase the cost of the automobiles. So the motor company's inefficiency ends up with the public paying more money. We have never found a way to control that.

However, the one place where the public can exercise some control is over expenditure of its tax dollars by the government. The member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), who unfortunately I guess had to leave, spoke in favour of the Small Business Development Corporation Act the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) brought in, as we did in this party. I think part of the reason that bill gained support was that it was an initiative taken by the Treasurer. He freely admitted he was not sure whether this was going to work. He was prepared to put up $200 million, even though he was not sure it was going to work, but felt it was worth trying.

The problem under this bill my colleague has proposed is that it would curtail that initiative because there wouldn't be any way of estimating in advance how many jobs are going to be created. Neither would there be any way of estimating the exact cost of the program. That amount of money is set aside; we don't know it is going to be spent, maybe none of it will be or maybe it will be more than $200 million.

I would hope if the government latched on to a good way to support small business, to create a lot of jobs and strengthen our economy, it would be prepared to spend more than the $200 million. That kind of flexibility has to be allowed the government.

Yes, I want an accounting of public dollars; yes, I want to know exactly how much money is being spent and for what purpose, and it would be nice to know in advance. Perhaps we could head off a Minaki Lodge if we knew in advance; that kind of wasteful pork-barrelling could be cut off at the pass if we knew in advance. But I am afraid that in enabling the government to do that by way of this bill, we at the same time might cut off some of its scope for initiative. Our fear was that it might just end up as a slush fund; but we don't know and neither does the Treasurer, no one knows at this point. We will find out later on, maybe a year from now or in two years or whatever; but that kind of initiative can't be spoiled.

I think the other thing my colleague perhaps underestimates is the tradition of our system. While he refers to a book by Lambert, I would refer him to a book by Erskine May. All of us, as members of the assembly, have various ways and procedures available to us to extract the information we need; particularly if the government is reluctant to give us that information there are many ways to deal with the problem. Ultimately, if these measures fail and we are not able to get the information we need, if we are not able to evaluate the programs properly because of secrecy, the people of Ontario have the opportunity to make a selection. We do that once in a while, sometimes every couple of years, we do that to permit the people of Ontario to voice their opinion about the government.

If the government chooses to be overly secretive and the people of Ontario object to that, they will voice their objection in the ballot box. All I can say is that when I am a member of a New Democratic Party government I certainly intend to put forward the cost estimates and the cost expenditures for programs. At the same time I would expect to have the kind of flexibility to initiate new programs where I do not know exactly how many jobs are going to be created.

I would assume that every member of this assembly would expect that when the House is not in session and a disaster occurs in his or her area, as has happened with flooding, the government should be able to move swiftly to provide the funds needed to correct the problems without having to come to the assembly. That is what is done now by order in council, and it is part of our system that is extremely important. The member for London North would be the first to complain if a disaster occurred in his area when the House was not sitting and the government could not react to provide the funds needed until the House was sitting; he would be the first to complain and I would be right beside him.

In conclusion—and this may come as a little surprise to the member for London North—based on what I have said, I am going to support this bill because I want to see it go to committee. I would like to see it dealt with in committee. In my opinion, the member has a good idea, and if I can curb what I perceive to be his attack on the civil service, if at the committee stage I can inject a clause that will allow the government some flexibility and some imagination in planning, then I will be happy to support it. So for the time being I am going to support the principle and hope the bill goes to committee where I can attempt to bring about some of the amendments I believe necessary. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope this government does not guillotine the bill this afternoon, as it normally does with private members' bills; we will wait and see.

Mr. Cureatz: May I begin my opening remarks by saying what a privilege and fine opportunity it is for me to speak to this bill, especially as it is a bill presented by the member for London North, a member I respect very much and whom I think is very sincere in the work he does in the House and in committees. I know in the association I have had with him I have always been impressed with the kind of work he has attempted to do. No doubt, as the previous speaker, the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, pointed out, the bill has probably been brought forward by a degree of frustration that I think we all feel from time to time when we sit on committees and consider the ministry estimates.

There are just a few concerns I have that I would like to relay to the member for London North in the few minutes I have. My colleague, the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. McCague) has just explained to us the present mechanism through which expenditures are controlled. It becomes obvious that extensive and rigorous methods already exist to ensure accountability of government expenditures. Furthermore, when private sector impact studies are applicable, they usually appear as part of the policy proposal when funding is sought.

I do not wish to belabour the points made by the honourable minister. Suffice to say that I feel sufficient mechanisms exist already in the financial management of the public purse. Each ministry, therefore, is held accountable for its expenditures in its regular applications for funding from Management Board. But accountability does not stop at the ministerial application to Management Board level. As legislators we are all involved annually in the approval of government spending. This is a reference, of course, to our role in the estimates process. The committee of supply, meeting to consider the estimates, provides an opportunity for all members of the Legislature to examine the proposed expenditures of the ministries of the government and the sundry other government bodies which expend public funds. Members are free to examine programs and expenditures to whatever degree they desire in the supply committee.

Committee members are provided with briefing booklets and other materials before particular estimates begin. The briefing material contains short descriptions of programs and program areas as well as the number of dollars proposed to be expended on the programs. A recent addition has been the inclusion of the dollar expenditures of past years. These aid the members in making comparisons of expenditures over a period of several years.

In estimates, as all members know, the expenditures of a particular ministry or body are broken down into items and votes. A member who has any serious disagreement with a particular expenditure can register this disagreement through a statement during the discussion of the item and/or through a dissenting vote.

Of course, the ultimate accountability by the government to the people obviously occurs on election day and, as was so well and aptly put, quite often from year to year.

In conclusion, without repeating comments made by my minister, let me merely say that I do not feel I can vote in favour of this proposed piece of legislation from my friend from London North. I see no reason to legislate a process of accountability when the process is already in place without legislation and seems to be working sufficiently well.

I might add that the few minutes I have left I would like to turn over to the member who proposed the bill so that he might make a few last comments.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments both pro and con made on this private member's bill. I would like to reiterate the comment made in the television debate between our parties' two leaders, because it really does reflect what happens here in our private members' hour. The question put to the then Prime Minister was, "Why do you misappropriate power and block the business in private members' hour?" Again, I would plead that we allow members to vote on this particular bill.

In summing up what I think of the comments made, in one way, shape or form, each person who has spoken has spoken in favour of this, at least in principle. I do not think there is any question, as was mentioned by the minister, that there are many aspects of this bill that are covered by the present procedures and present legislation, in whichever form we wish to look at it.

On the other hand, speaking as a backbencher, and as a relatively new member, I think he should appreciate that this frustration comes not only from me but from every, practically every, other new member, as was mentioned by the last speaker from the government party. All of us feel this way. I am speaking not just for myself but for many members of this Legislature. We want to see the procedure changed and improved. If we could at least accept this bill in principle, which we would hope to see go to committee, some of the frustrations we have in dealing with the moneys of this province would be resolved and we would do a better job as legislators in managing the moneys of this province.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That concludes the allotted time for ballot item 15, and it will be dealt with further at 5:50.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING ACT

Mr. Makarchuk moved second reading of Bill 83, An Act respecting the Purchase of Goods and Services by the Government of Ontario and Government-supported Institutions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, initially I will try to explain how I hope the bill will function. The purpose of the bill is to provide Canadian-owned and operated businesses some recourse in their dealings with publicly owned and publicly financed institutions.

The government to a point has a buy-Canadian policy, and by and large—I notice the minister is here—the minister does follow it and allows a 10 per cent cost increase in order to show favouritism to Canadian businesses, which I think is a commendable thing, and I certainly support it.

In general, where the program falls down, and where my bill is aimed, is in dealing with other publicly owned institutions and, specifically, publicly financed institutions. These are the hospitals, the schools and the universities. Among themselves they consume a lot of public funding, and yet in many cases they do not have any kind of a buy-Canadian policy; nor do they show any favouritism for Canadian businesses and manufacturers.

What this bill will do is provide businessmen with some financial recourse against an institution so that they can collect, if necessary, a fine from the institution if it refuses to buy Canadian. It seems to me that there will not be any argument from members here that, if you are using Canadian public funds or taxpayers' money, it's only reasonable that perhaps some effort should be made to spend that money on Canadian goods.

What the bill will do is probably break up some of the existing commercial relationships, particularly between the purchasers in these institutions and their long-time suppliers. The relationships have been developed for many reasons, but the most damaging relationships, shall we say, exist where, in the first place, the firm—it's probably an American-based firm—has been around for a long time, there have been favours passed either way, but particularly to the purchaser, and, as a result, a Canadian or somebody else who tries to break into this charmed circle to sell finds that he is cut out. He may have a pleasant hearing but in the long run the contract for the purchase goes to somebody else.

In this situation, with this bill, and the possibility that some court action can be taken, I think the purchaser will have to look very closely at everyone who is trying to sell goods or services to a hospital, a university or another institution.

Only recently I had a case of a very distraught man who was a salesman for a Texas-based company that was selling hospital equipment to hospitals in Ontario. He had a falling out—there was a dispute with the company—and he went ahead and applied for a job with a Canadian firm providing similar equipment. The Texas-based company went to various extents, including court injunctions, to try to prevent this man from working for the Canadian company. The reason for that was the fact that this man had the contacts, he knew where to go, and if he did go to those hospitals where he had been selling he would probably be selling Canadian equipment and the American firm would be cut out.

He related various stories of what went on in terms of the trips that were laid on for various people, shall we say the homes that were established, the various condominiums that were provided, et cetera—favours that were provided to certain people in order that they would continue to trade with a foreign-owned or foreign-based corporation. Certainly the interest of the Canadian public was not taken into account in this situation, because the equipment was basically the same, and the prices were almost the same, but the fact is that the company wanted to keep this man out for the simple reason that they had the contacts and they knew that if they had the contacts they were going to sell the equipment or make that kind of persuasion.

Because there will be a 10 per cent fine levied, the bill will make the purchasing agents in the hospitals and the universities, and particularly the business administrators of the school boards, look very closely at Canadians who are trying to sell to them.

The other advantage that can flow from this bill that we have to take into account is the fact that there is a 10 per cent advantage to Canadians. It will allow a Canadian firm to charge 10 per cent more than what the costs would be of a foreign-owned firm, much like the government policy at this time. Although this may be costlier in the short run, in terms of the economic advantages that will flow to Canada from buying Canadian, from creating jobs here, from everything related to this economic activity and growth, it will more than offset the slight cost that could be incurred initially.

It will also give Canadian firms certain advantages in terms of a chance to plan ahead where they know there is a market. In many of these cases it does not require major manufacturing facilities to produce the equipment. The equipment is of a highly technical nature and the equipment can probably be produced by four, five or maybe a dozen people, but the point is it is the design, the research and everything else that has to go into developing this equipment.

It will also help the 10 per cent advantage and the knowledge that the advantage will persist. It will also help us in research and development of Canadian corporations so that they would be able to plan ahead, they would also operate on the basis that they are assured of markets and, consequently, we will have more research and development. Of course, there is no argument right now as far as the government is concerned, or anybody in this House. I am sure they agree we need more in Canada and we are lacking sadly in that area.

The bill is simple in the sense that it does not require any bureaucracy for administration. It is really self administered. The businessman has the option that if he makes a bid or puts in an offer to provide a service or equipment and it is turned down, if he checks it out and finds out that he was within 10 per cent, if he wishes he can then go to a court and collect from the institution a penalty up to 10 per cent of the total cost of the contract.

I don't think there will be any big rush or any great desire on the part of very many businesses to try to sue everybody. I think in general they will like to keep the goodwill they can develop or that can be there, but at the same time it will make the purchasing agents look very closely at Canadian goods. If the purchaser or the purchasing agent refuses to buy Canadian, I am sure the board of governors of every institution, or the trustees of a school board, or the board of governors of a hospital or a university will look very closely at the administration when they find out they are saddled with a 10 per cent bill for which they have received absolutely nothing.

In many cases right now where we have boards of governors, particularly of hospitals and universities, they are really not involved in the day-to-day operation of the hospital. They know very little about the purchasing policies, they know very little about the equipment being bought. The idea of whether they are getting Canadian content, buying Canadian content or Canadian supplies is not really a matter that is of consideration. However, if they see they have to cough up another 10 per cent for something they haven't received, I am sure they will start looking very closely at how the system operates.

We should realize that the public spending is something like $30 billion between the provincial and municipal governments. Out of this, about $9 billion goes for equipment, for operating costs and so on. If because of this bill we manage to shift the purchasing patterns by even one per cent, and I think the shift will be a lot more than one per cent, but even by a matter of one per cent that means millions and millions of additional public funds will be spent to the benefit of Canadian industry.

Again as I said, the bill puts teeth into the buy-Canadian program. It is not a perfect bill. It poses some problems. I think most of us here understand that when we are drafting a private member's bill, we do it in a hurry and we don't go into all the details and everything else. I would like to see support for this bill. I hope to see that it eventually goes into committee where we could sort out some of the problems that even I see are inherent in the bill in terms of Canadian content or what is a Canadian owned and managed corporation and how we define these things, or what specific regulations we would use to ensure we get what we are aiming at. I think this can be carried out in committee.

So I ask the support of other members of the House to ensure that when we talk about a buy-Canadian program we actually give that small independent businessman out there some assurance that we are serious about it, and if he has to buck some of the existing purchasing arrangements he at least has something, he has the support of this Legislature and the government of this province.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In responding to this particular bill as the Minister of Government Services, I would first like to tell the House that I am fortunate today to have Brooke Central Public School students up in the gallery above you, and I am very proud they are here.

Mr. Speaker, it's no difficulty at all for me to take a stand on this bill. First, I would have to tell the honourable member that the proposals of the bill are excellent. The only difficulty is that they are redundant. As the government we now carry out fully all the proposals recommended in this particular bill. To support that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the Ontario manual of administration distributed to all people in purchasing positions within this government. First it deals with purchasing policy and Canadian preference. The following policy was approved by cabinet and released in a memorandum from the Chairman of Management Board on April 19, 1974, a little over five years ago. It was rewritten in a standard format and approved by Management Board on April 17, 1976.

The purpose is to assist Canadian firms to compete for government business against foreign producers of goods and services. The application of this directive applies to all ministries, and to those agencies, boards and commissions designated by Management Board. In addition, commissions, municipal governments, school boards and other bodies receiving provincial grants should be urged to follow similar purchasing guidelines.

The previous speaker mentioned several of the boards covered by our directory. I would go further. The member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) questioned me about this a few weeks ago in my estimates on behalf of the city of Windsor. I pointed out our guidelines, so maybe he would like to send this particular part I am speaking on now to the city of Windsor, because I am going to point out just what he asked me for at that time and what this particular bill says.

Mr. B. Newman: I'd appreciate receiving a copy.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Okay. Now first the definition of Canadian content. The difference between the laid down cost and the dutiable value of imported goods or imported parts, plus all values added in Canada, including labour, materials, transportation, duty and taxes, and the Canadian supplier profit, fall into Canadian content.

The policy statement by this government is, and I refer back to the April 1974 and August 1976 policy statements: "1. In order to comply with the policy of the government to encourage the production of Canadian goods wherever such goods can be economically produced, ministries shall allow a price preference of up to 10 per cent to be given in respect of the Canadian content of goods and services supplied to the government.

"2. Ministries shall be vigilant against the possibility that the Canadian preference price allowance will encourage inefficiencies in domestic suppliers or will be used to generate an unwarranted profit.

"3. Major purchasing or service contracts presented to the policy and priorities board or to Management Board for approval shall specify the degree of Canadian content as it applies to the contract."

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to read into the record two or three examples of how this particular 10 per cent applies to actual tenders that we as the government have received, and the end result.

This is very technical. Wherever price quotations for goods imported into Canada are received, as well as the Canadian quotation on any product, the 10 per cent price preference calculation is applied to determine the recommended awardee. The formula for this calculation is as follows. First the discounted price is the quoted price, less quoted price times percentage of Canadian content.

As an example, if the quoted price is $90 and Canadian content 25 per cent, the discounted price is 90 times 0.25 over 10, which makes that bill actually $87.50 for bidding purposes; it is reduced by that amount.

Our highest present formula works this way. For example: (a) 100 per cent foreign product, quoted price $500; (b) part Canadian product, 25 per cent is Canadian, quoted price $512; (c) 100 per cent Canadian product, quoted price $550.

Now I am going to point out the results of (a), (b) and (c). For comparison purposes (a) would remain as it is, that's 100 per cent foreign product; the original quotation is $500 and it would remain at $500.

Example (b), the $512 bid, had 25 per cent Canadian product; so we would take $512 minus 128 over 10 which would mean their bid would be $499; reduced from $512 to $499.

The next one, item (c), would be deemed to cost $550. We take off $55. That puts the price of it at $495.

So as I say, we go back to the original quotation. The foreign product would be $500 and would remain at $500. The 25 per cent Canadian product at $512 would be reduced to $499; and the 100 per cent Canadian product with a bid of $550 would be reduced to $495. That is how it works.

Next, Mr. Speaker, I would like to use another example. Am I getting near my time? I didn't look when I started.

We have bids on typewriters from Olympia, IBM, Olivetti, NTI, Facit, SCM and RemCan. I could use any one of these you wish, but I will use Olivetti. The Canadian content of Olivetti is 79 per cent compared to NTI's machine, which is only 25 per cent. The original bid for the Olivetti typewriter in this particular bracket is $514.50, with 79 per cent Canadian content. The adjusted price then moved from $514.50 to $473.85.

[5:00]

I carry you on down then. When we take bids on typewriters, we consider the cost of ribbons over a seven-year period. On the Olivetti machine, we estimate that the cost of the ribbons for the seven years would be $72.80. The average trade-in value at the end of seven years on Olivetti would be $129.48, leaving a net cost at the moment for the new Olivetti typewriter of $417.17.

On the NTI, the Royal machine, the original bid was $776. The Canadian content was 25 per cent. When we adjust the price on the 25 per cent we then come up with a price of $756.60. The ribbon cost over the seven years is $31.85, which I might compare with that of the Olivetti ribbon, $72.80. The average trade-in value of NTI's machine is $137 at the end of seven years. When you compare them, the adjusted price of the NTI is $651.45, while that of the Olivetti is $417.17, after we apply all those things.

Mr. Speaker, I would have to oppose this bill, because it would result in more work, more civil servants, and it would be very difficult to make work. In addition, what the honourable member is proposing is redundant; it is already in the manual of instructions.

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly and to commend the honourable member for introducing Bill 83. I think it deserves the support of all members of the Legislature, and I hope that the members will support the bill and that the government will bring it forth in committee so that it can be discussed.

When I introduced my Small Business Act, I was told the same thing by the government at that time; it was full of bureaucracy and everything else; they didn't want to act on it. I believe the time has come when we should be supporting our small business sector. Not only should we support this bill, but I feel that it is also time the government acted to ensure that a good share of government purchases be placed with the small business sector.

Both our Small Business Act, which I introduced, and our industrial strategy paper would go even further than my colleague's bill, which he has just introduced, in supporting Canadian-owned and controlled firms through government purchasing policies.

My Small Business Act would establish a target of 40 per cent of government purchases, contracts or subcontracts which should be placed with small businesses, which are defined as independently owned and operated and not dominant in their field of operations. At present, the Ontario government does not even know how much of its business goes to these firms, because they group them together with branch plants operating in Canada.

It is rather interesting that the definition we use for small business—independently owned and operated and not dominant in its field—is also the definition that has been accepted by the Prime Minister-elect, Mr. Clark. He has stated that he would develop a small business policy, and that his definition of small business would be the same as the one outlined in the Small Business Act, which I introduced in the Legislature. So it looks as if the federal party perhaps will lead the provincial Conservatives in the field of supporting small business and in recognizing the small business sector.

We should also establish a small business subcontracting program to ensure that businesses are considered fairly as suppliers and subcontractors to recipients of large government contracts. Any firm, I believe, awarded a contract of something around $500,000 should designate a small business liaison officer for this purpose. I believe, too, that the government should provide that a small business liaison officer may be an existing member of that firm and that most firms would not likely employ an additional person for that purpose, although we would not want to interfere with any firm that might wish to do so.

It is interesting, too, that a report prepared by the Department of Communications for the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, but which was not for public distribution, found that a 76 per cent premium was justified in the purchase of Canadian-made communications equipment. In other words, if the price of the Canadian product is less than 176 per cent of the price of the import, then buying Canadian is justified.

While there are several qualifying factors, I believe there is a great deal this government can do to support the small business sector and to comply with many of the aspects of Bill 83. I only hope the government will not use the same old line, which is full of bureaucracy, which is that it is going to take civil servants a long time to develop this. I think government members should support it. It deserves the support of all members of this House and I want to thank the honourable member for introducing this bill.

Mr. di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly in support of Bill 83, introduced by my colleague the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk). At the outset I would like to state that I really do not understand the position of the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson). On one hand he has been telling the House that the government practices are directed in the way the bill suggests; on the other hand he says he is against the bill. That is a contradiction I cannot understand and it probably is inexplicable.

The scope of this bill is rather limited. It requires not only the government of Ontario but every public institution in the province to give preference to Canadian-made commodities over foreign commodities when such are available on the market. Not only should the government adopt a buy-Canadian policy, but so should municipalities, boards of education, universities, hospitals, every public institution in the province of Ontario.

This is not a new policy, but as my colleague the member for Brantford said before, it is a reasonable and fair preference given to domestic products and materials in government procurement. The intent is to establish procedures to ensure that Canadian products are treated fairly. We have to realize that if we take a number of dollars for procurement and place them with Canadian rather than foreign firms, they yield a much higher value in gross economic activity and in tax receipts for the provincial treasury, which means that this buy-Canadian policy is also important from a fiscal point of view because it increases revenues for the provincial treasury.

This policy was enacted in the United States in 1933. Very recently, on March 5, the US Senate passed a similar bill, a buy-American bill; and there are states like West Virginia and New York state which have similar legislation.

At this point municipalities, boards of education or other public institutions are not compelled to buy Canadian. As a matter of fact, they can buy foreign-made products without any restriction whatsoever. We know there are other countries which have similar legislation. In the hearings held by the American Senate it came out quite clearly that there are countries like Italy where it is almost impossible for foreign firms to get into the market when the government buys commodities for public use. Japan is another example, as the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) could tell us, the restrictions are just fantastic. It is almost impossible to break the barrier the Japanese government has put around its borders for end products that foreign countries would like to export to Japan.

We are especially concerned because small Canadian businesses are at a disadvantage, not only because of the present situation, but they would be even more disadvantaged when the GATT negotiations are finished. Right now we import duty-free, 63 per cent of our end products from the United States; when the negotiations are over, we will import over 80 per cent of our end products from there. This means that between Canada and the United States, as far as end products are concerned, there is virtually a free market. Canadian businesses at that point will be at a real disadvantage; they need the protection of the government if we want them to survive.

I think this should be extremely important. That's the reason I don't understand the opposition of the Minister of Government Services. Small business in Canada is the sector that creates more jobs. The Canadian National Federation of Small Business, in one of their reports in April, said that small business alone has created 80 per cent of jobs in 1978. If we do not put small business in a position to compete with foreign firms they will have a very tough fight once our tariffs go down as a result of the GATT negotiations.

With Bill 83 in place I think the government will be induced to ask foreign companies, or branch plants operating in Canada to develop Canadian content in terms of research and development in the same way that foreign countries also treat all Canadian companies. All of us know what is happening with Northern Telecom, which is one of the most advanced Canadian firms in the communications field. They have a big contract in Turkey, but the requirements imposed on this firm by the Turkish government are very strict; we don't even dream of doing anything like that in Canada.

Of course if we start at the government level, and at the level of other public institutions, to set a good example, I think we will encourage our small businessmen and we will create more jobs in Canada. We will help the economy in general, because as all of us know most of our trade deficit, which last year reached the staggering amount of $12 billion, is in manufactured goods and end products. All of us know this.

If we want to start solving the Canadian economic crisis we have to encourage small business to manufacture goods in Canada. One of the ways of doing this is to have our markets absorb Canadian goods. Right now we know that isn't happening because the Canadian market is extremely fragmented. We know that it doesn't happen because there isn't a real buy-Canadian policy. We have only rhetoric. The provincial government says it is in favour of a buy-Canadian policy but it doesn't do anything concrete. By not accepting this bill—which is not a very radical bill; it's simple common sense, and as far as I'm concerned it doesn't go as far as it should to protect Canadian manufacturers, especially the small businessman—the minister, and I hope he speaks only for himself, makes a very serious mistake.

[5:15]

As I said before, at this point we have no possibility at all of controlling institutions other than those of the provincial government in buy-Canadian products. As a matter of fact, there is no mechanism at all to control foreign firms dumping products on the Canadian market. There is no mechanism that gives the provincial government the ability to prove foreign firms are dumping products in the Canadian market below cost. We know that it happens. It has been revealed several times in hearings of the American Senate. In Canada we have never had any inquiry of that type, but we know it happens.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. di Santo: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are countries which give incentives to export firms in order to prevent other foreign firms from invading their markets. I don't understand why we shouldn't do the same and why we shouldn't encourage our businesses.

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill as presented by the member for Brantford.

Mr. Wildman: Surprise, surprise.

Mr. Eaton: I share the same views of the minister. I think the minister has already stated his belief very clearly, that the main thrust of Bill 83 is currently being met by the government's administrative policy—

Mr. di Santo: What about the other institutions?

Mr. Eaton: —which does provide for the application of a 10 per cent price preference calculation to quotes obtained for the purchase of Canadian goods. This is not something which is optional, rather it's a directive of Management Board. It is also a feature of this government's administration. I think it is a somewhat more sensitive or more responsive mechanism for gauging the allowances made for purchases of Canadian goods than the one proposed in the member's bill.

The minister again pointed out a particular fact which I think is important. He pointed out that some commodities, while assembled and manufactured in Canada, are wholly constructed of materials purchased abroad. Bill 83 contains no means whatever by which the Canadian content of goods or services can be defined in any way. It is lacking very much there.

Mr. Makarchuk: It provides for regulations that would define it.

Mr. Eaton: The requirement set out in the manual of administration referred to by the minister certainly does make this distinction, and I think it's a very important distinction.

This point leads me to the reason for my opposition to this bill. It is not that the stated purpose of the bill is already seriously followed by the government that I am concerned with. I am not against the legislation of Shop-Canadian programs, if it can be done effectively. I think that's the question: Can it be done effectively with legislation the member proposes? I don't think this is possible and I think this bill demonstrates this point pretty clearly.

If I might, I'd like to briefly comment on the bill on a section-by-section basis and point out some of the difficulties I see arising with the kinds of requirements the member for Brantford is seeking to have imposed upon the purchasing process.

Firstly, the Minister of Government Services has already discussed the difficulty of defining or interpreting the terms used in the bill.

Mr. di Santo: He didn't talk at all about the bill.

Mr. Eaton: Despite its provision that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations that define the terms "resident in Canada" and "substantially produced in Canada," specifically the term "Canadian producer" does not cover jobbers, for instance, or distributors, retailers, agents—a number of people who might be involved in that way.

Section 2 also contains a requirement that "a purchasing authority must ascertain what commodities or services are competitively available in Canada." That's a very difficult thing to do. The phrase found in that section, for instance, "make a reasonable effort according to the circumstances" is quite vague and left undefined, although damage claims could result from that. How do you start defining them? You can get into serious court actions over it. You can get into some very complicated situations that could result from various interpretations of the intent. It could result in things that probably weren't intended by the member in the first place.

The section also implies the need for a Canada-wide bid solicitation for requirements of $100 or more. To start a Canada-wide process of distributing the bid calls will result in purchasing delays and increased expenditures in administration when we get into some of the many situations in these institutions where purchases are from $100 to $1,000, and from $1,000 to $2,000.

It also implies the use of formal written or advertised invitation to tender procedures for all requirements of $100 or more. This will also add considerable expense and cause delays in the purchasing process. Some particular product you want which costs $500, could cost $10,000 in carrying out the advertising program necessary to see that bid goes across Canada.

I have two concerns with section 2(2), which calls for the actual purchase of Canadian-produced goods or services. First, substantially produced in Canada is not defined. This section does not deal with the commodities and services which might be more or less substantially produced in Canada. For instance, should an item 100 per cent produced in Canada have any preference over an item 75 per cent produced in Canada, and so on? I think the minister clearly laid out how that process is handled under our present directives.

Second, limiting the comparison to competitive price overlooks such factors as availability, delivery, delivery prices, after sales service and many other evaluation criteria that are normally used in looking at bids. I think there are very important factors overlooked in the bill.

Section 3 makes the provision for identification of alleged damages. What are alleged damages? I think it is a term that is very difficult. It implies public opening or bid disclosure of all potential contracts of $100 or more. This practice is not common to all purchasing groups and will increase administrative expenses considerably. The requirements of this section would likely incur considerable verification and audit expenses, especially with variable situations such as substantially produced in Canada claims.

Sections 4 and 5 of Bill 83 are problematic only in that they show the same shortcomings found in section 2. However, I might emphasize my doubts as to whether regulations could in fact construct a definition of substantially produced in Canada. That would be sensitive to our complex manufacturing business and our industrial economic sectors.

In concluding, I think it is quite obvious the bill as it stands is very loose and imprecise. One of the foremost examples already pointed out is that a purchasing authority would have a reasonably easy job in justifying decisions concerning the purchase of goods or services simply because the quality of a commodity or the service is in most instances very difficult to quantify.

I do sincerely believe we are stuck with our present system, which in the case of the public institutions receiving more than 50 per cent of our government funding relies primarily on the honour and the encouragements of government to follow its lead. I think it would be incorrect to say the bill could not be drafted in a more precise manner. However, as the minister pointed out, legislation such as this would necessitate such extensive administration procedures that the cost of purchasing would significantly increase and the process would be really unbearably hampered in many cases, especially the numerous small ones over $100.

Certainly the encouragement of the Shop-Canadian program should be undertaken whenever and wherever possible when it is feasible and realistic. I think this government has taken the lead in doing that in this province and will continue to take that lead.

Unfortunately, I don't think this bill is one of the cases that shows the kind of action needed. Therefore I would urge my colleagues to oppose this bill as it is.

Mr. Hall: I rise to support Bill 83 presented by the member for Brantford, even though I have some feeling that he possibly borrowed it from our Liberal caucus.

Just briefly, I might again put on the record that I had the privilege on April 21, 1977 of putting forth a resolution in this House, and I will read it to members: "In the opinion of this House, every effort should be made to encourage the consumption of Ontario-grown fresh and processed fruit, vegetables, jams, juices and wines, and that the government of Ontario should require that all fruit and vegetables, jams and juices consumed in provincially-operated facilities, whether purchased directly or by contract caterers, exclusively be Ontario-grown fresh and processed fruit, vegetables, jams and juices at all times that such are available for purchase."

This resolution was never discussed, because if my memory is correct the government decided to force an election eight days later, on April 29, 1977. However, the former Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Drea), did provide assistance to our processors and promoted our products in his capacity as minister. However, without central purchasing of food stuffs, difficulties were encountered in ensuring an effective policy.

On the matter of an industrial strategy on which our party put out a comprehensive paper a month or more ago, an important first step in a progressive industrial strategy is a strongly supportive procurement policy. A captive domestic market is crucial as a base upon which domestic firms can build and become strong and large enough to expand internationally. One important way to guarantee this domestic market is through procurement policies.

The Liberal Party in Ontario would undertake that all purchasing, wherever possible and reasonable, be from Canadian-controlled firms or from foreign-controlled firms which comply with a certain code of corporate behaviour. These firms would receive preferential treatment as to price vis-à-vis imports and non-complying foreign firms. This preference could extend, in our opinion, to as much as 40 per cent in some cases. Preference is justifiable because of the secondary benefits of unemployment reduction, new construction, expanded research and development, and taxes on profits.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, some federal studies which were done by the Department of Communications and by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, while apparently not having wide public distribution, have found that as high as a 76 per cent premium could be justified in the purchase of Canadian-made communications equipment. There are several qualifying factors that would have to enter into it having to do with the fact that there would be no point in using a premium if the government had a negligible portion of the market. Therefore, size of market and possible government share would have to be analysed in arriving at any appropriate premium level.

The level of any premium would depend on the level of unemployment as well. Naturally, as unemployment was lowered the premium would drop correspondingly. The amount of any premium which would be justified on government procurement would also depend on capital utilization. As utilization rises, the maximum premium would approach zero and any premium would therefore have to be adjusted from time to time.

The policy we have stated would also have a qualification that any firms that participate would have to obtain a certificate from the government stating that at least half of the value of their products is added in Canada. We visualize that a purchasing policy to support an industrial strategy would extend to Ontario Hydro and all agencies and institutions of the provincial government, including hospitals, colleges and universities, as well as municipal governments and school boards. These additional institutions are large purchasers of goods and services and a procurement policy would not be truly effective without their inclusion. Price differential would have to be paid by the provincial treasury and not by the local municipal bodies and boards.

However, I reiterate, the long term goal of establishing stronger Canadian industry and a captive Canadian market would be worth the price differential in our opinion.

[5:30]

Of course there are branch plants of foreign money multinationals that wouldn't fit into this too easily, but when it is necessary for a government to purchase outside the proposed procurement policy we favour, products of the branch plants in Canada would be favoured over imports, so we think it's a progressive step. We think more attention has to be focused by government taking the lead. Private-sector procurement is also important but we, as a party, feel that is best left up to the private sector. However, we feel that to encourage the private sector the government has a very strong role to play. Ontario, through a more enlightened procurement policy, could lead the way in helping to build a stronger industrial base in the province. I therefore hope that all members will support this bill.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Scarborough West for eight minutes.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: It is better than the one minute I got last time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of my colleague from Brantford's—

Mr. Acting Speaker: I might ask if the member for Brantford wants his whole nine minutes. He does? All right.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Eight minutes is satisfactory. I am very succinct. It is unfortunate, I think, that my colleague from Brantford has to bring in a bill in a very mild form and try to word it in a fashion that will not offend the sensibilities of the members opposite, and yet they come back and attack it. I am pleased to see that members of the Liberal Party have decided to support this bill. I hope that members opposite will see the wisdom of going along with us.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Surely there are more important issues, though, than duplicating things we are already doing.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I do not think it is duplicative, I might say to the minister. There is a substantial difference involved in this. The member for Middlesex wants to have it both ways. He wants to say that what the government is doing at the moment is fine and this duplicates it, and then he attacks this as being unenforceable. I just do not think he can have it both ways. If he can, I will have it both ways myself and say that it is definitely enforceable, that this does not go far enough and that I hope this goes to committee to get strengthened so as to get even more teeth put into this. It seems to me at the moment there is a very good case to be put for the fact that hospitals and universities are not making use of existing regulations, if you will, and the enforcement side of this is vital.

I am not going to speak to all aspects of this bill, because I think the member for Downsview has done so very well, as has our leadoff speaker—and I am sure, in conclusion, he will speak to a number of the government's reservations about his bill—but there are a few things I would like to raise. One has to do with the price differential of 10 per cent. I think that is an inadequate amount, but I am glad to see it being used. I accept the ruling by the Science Council of Canada which says that in certain commodities, especially in high-technology commodities, you could go up to a 75 per cent price differential in some of these things and still have an economic benefit to the country. I think we should look at that very seriously when this goes to committee.

I recently heard of a case that was brought before a particular minister and had to do with a company which, although it had put in a price 25 per cent below that of a United States competitor, was ruled out for various and sundry other reasons. Therefore, I would say again there is no ability to enforce the present act and there is a need for the company to file for restitution.

I would also like to see the prospect of an enlargement of the idea of making a reasonable effort as quoted in section 2(3), because there are certain kinds of important high technology, in terms of equipment and service systems, that need advance notice if Canadians are going to be able to compete. I think in particular of computer systems. If a university wants to put in a computer system for registration of its students, as an example, it is more likely just to adopt a present system already used by an American company and to ask for tenders for that particular system rather than to give adequate notice that it wants a system and then to file open tenders and allow Canadian companies to compete on that basis. We are never going to be able to establish a network of high-technology corporations unless we give special preference in this area.

The only other thing I want to talk about is the punitive aspect of this. We are not setting up a bureaucracy, as it is always claimed we do as New Democrats when we try to protect people and business and to promote growth in this country. What the member for Brantford is suggesting—and I think it is very wise—is that a company dealing with a specific purchasing agent, a purchasing officer in a university, or a hospital board, or whatever, would have the ability to file, if he felt or she felt they were not being dealt with properly under this act. At the moment, there is no way for them to appeal any decision that is made by a minister, or one of these public corporations, or institutions.

I think this just makes sense. If you don't put that kind of teeth into a bill or a regulation, Mr. Speaker, then you are essentially saying that you don't believe in the principle. I think for that reason, members opposite, if they are serious about promoting Canadian producers and Canadian corporations and the small business sector, should think very seriously about sending this bill to committee to try to tighten up the aspects they don't like, but let's get it down as policy agreed to by the whole House.

In conclusion—and I will stop now and allow the member for Brantford to have extra time to respond—I would like to say that it is unthinkable to me that the members opposite would not consider this matter important enough to be taken to committee and discussed by members, to develop a means of actually enforcing this.

The member for Downsview raised very well the question of the number of jobs that could be created by an actual enforcement bringing back into this country the one to two per cent of the billing presently going out of the country, by enforcing this with our institutions. At this time, especially taking the position of the Tory federal party on this whole matter into consideration, it is unthinkable that the government members would not support this bill in principle and allow it to go to committee.

Mr. Acting Speaker: Is there any other member of this House who wishes to speak to this bill for three minutes? If not, the member for Brantford?

Mr. Makarchuk: After listening to the comments from the government, I am wondering whether we are talking about the same bill or not. It seems to me either they can't read over there, or else are not prepared to start reading.

Mr. di Santo: I am not surprised.

Mr. Makarchuk: I want to point out to the members opposite who seem to have the great knack for nitpicking—I have never seen such a collection of nitpickers going through the bill, particularly the member for Middlesex, and saying, "If we haven't this and we haven't that, we couldn't do this because of this, et cetera."—they should look at the bill we passed recently, the Small Business Development Corporations Act. If we had nitpicked on that bill, it would never have got through the House, because that is one of the most vague, loosely-worded bills there is; yet the government has certain faith that eventually we will try and work it out. It is the same with any other bill; we do not and we cannot—and we know that in this Legislature—cover every possible situation that could develop. That is something we do as we go along; it is a normal part of our legislative procedure.

I want to deal with the argument that there is going to be some kind of a bureaucracy created by this bill. The point is that there is absolutely no bureaucracy whatsoever involved. I have a feeling the reason the Tories object to the bill is that they will not be able to stick their bureaucracy into this kind of situation.

All the bill provides for is that we set up a framework where the businessman, if he so wishes, can take action against the purchaser, in this case an institution that is publicly financed. There is no bureaucracy telling him he should. There is no bureaucracy involved to examine the prices, or anything like that. It is strictly a relationship between the businessman and the institution, and nothing else. How members opposite get the feeling that there is a bureaucracy, how they read that into the bill just boggles my mind. It boggles my mind that their comprehension of the English language is so limited.

The minister, and I am glad that he is here in all his massive bulk—

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Don't be jealous.

Mr. Makarchuk: I am envious. I am envious.

Mr. Riddell: There is a big green tile right up to your door, Lorne. It goes all the way down to Florida.

Mr. Makarchuk: The minister states that the government has a policy. If he had been listening, he would have heard that I said the bill is not specifically aimed at the government; we recognize that the government has a policy. We recognize that it is actually working towards that end and in some cases is having a measure of success. There is a recognition in this.

What the bill is aimed at is all those other institutions that live from public funding. They spend or receive close to about $15 billion of public funds, over and above what the provincial government spends. We are trying to make them follow government policy. We are not going to coerce them or anything like that. There is no coercion on the part of businessmen to take action against these institutions.

All we are saying in this bill is the framework exists if one feels one has been done wrong, if one feels the institution did not follow a buy-Canadian policy, if one feels one has been discriminated against by the institution because of previous trading arrangements or favours exchanged between the foreign-based corporation and the purchasing officer and so on. And the members know those kinds of situations exist; they exist all over the place. What we are trying to do is break that up. If we are going to have private enterprise then we are going to have private enterprise in the sense that it should exist. We are trying to encourage this thing and this is the purpose of the bill.

You have to recognize, Mr. Speaker, that in many cases Canadian firms labour at a disadvantage. Most of them are relatively new. Most of them do not have the massive sales force the American firms have. Most of them don't have the experience or the contacts a long-established firm has, which in most cases is foreign, generally American. They have to break through this in order to sell to publicly-financed institutions.

Why the government objects to this I really cannot understand. It is not as if the government took action that could be misconstrued by us or anybody else as some kind of repentance. I acknowledged from the start of the speech that indeed the government is following that policy. We acknowledge that and congratulate the government on doing it. What we are trying to do is extend that same policy to other publicly-financed institutions. That is the intent of this bill.

Again, it is not difficult; it does not require any bureaucracy. It is strictly an arrangement between the businessman and the institution. And as I said before, he is not going to be too anxious to embark upon any lawsuits, because he wants to preserve his goodwill. He does not want to be known in business circles as the guy who wants to start suing everybody. But the point is, once purchasing people know that if they do not treat Canadian producers or Canadian owned or managed businesses fairly, then they may get annoyed and take action against them. As a personal thing, the purchasing agent will understand that the pressure will be on him to oblige and to try and spread the cost throughout.

The other factor in this situation is that we are dealing with institutions, universities, hospitals and schools. In most cases the equipment they buy is of a highly complex, highly technical nature. But it is not the kind of equipment that has to be produced in large assembly plants. It is equipment that can be produced by a few people, but it requires a great deal of engineering know how, physics know how, et cetera. This is the kind of equipment I am trying to emphasize, or that should be emphasized in this bill.

We have, in Canada, all sorts of people who have the know how, who have the ability, even people who are working for foreign corporations who may have to move out of those foreign corporations and set up their own operations. If they have the knowledge that they can compete, plus the 10 per cent which gives them some kind of leverage or some cushion in terms of developing this equipment, they are going to move in this direction.

Like anything else, Mr. Speaker, one cannot go into this kind of business on the basis that in the next six months one is going to have this policy and then afterwards one may not; or the institution may afford to buy this equipment for a period of time but then afterwards they may change their policy. They have to have some assurance from the government that this policy is going to be consistent, and will prevail, not one year or two years from now, but for numerous years ahead—for at least five years it will be on the books. With the kind of legislation in this bill, they know it's a law of the province, that the options are there, the influence upon the purchaser is there by legislation, and they can go ahead and proceed to develop.

We can talk at great length about the lack of money spent on research and development in this country in comparison to other nations. We are dealing here in an area where research, development and people with skills—not branch plant operations—can be put to use, can provide jobs for Canadians. Again, the government decides to vote against this.

In conclusion, I am really concerned when the government decides to oppose this legislation. Admittedly, it is not perfect; it is a private member's bill that is drawn up hurriedly, and it doesn't cover everything. But certainly the legislation could be put to committee; it could be improved and certainly it will provide that incentive.

If the government opposes this bill, as they have indicated they will, then the government does not have any confidence in the ability of the Canadian small businessman or the Canadian people to be able to manage their affairs. All we ask in this legislation is for some assistance to overcome some built-in handicaps they cannot overcome right now. That is all it is. It's a request to provide some assistance to overcome the handicap posed by the built-in, long-established companies over the newly-emerging firms. The Tory government in Ontario refuses to give them that opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to spend the remaining time on this bill?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to respond to the remarks of the honourable member?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has already spoken. The standing order says you can only speak once.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Okay, no problem.

PROGRAM COST DISCLOSURE ACT

Sufficient members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on Bill 69.

Mr. Warner: A point of order, Mr. Speaker: I followed the procedure quite carefully and it appears to me that those members who objected stood and were asked to remain standing until their names were recorded. At that time the Clerk then determined whether or not there were 20 members standing.

I would ask you to make an interpretation, then, of section 64(2)(e) which says the names of those members objecting will be reported. Would you rule whether or not that means even if only one member stands to object to the motion being placed? Perhaps you could report back whenever you have an opportunity.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will be glad to do that.

The following members objected by rising:
Auld; Ashe; Baetz; Brunelle; Cureatz; Drea; Eaton; Gregory; Handleman; Havrot; Henderson; Hodgson; J. Johnson; Lane; Maeck; McCaffrey; McCague; F. S. Miller; Norton; Ramsay; Rollins; Rotenberg; Rowe; Scrivener; Snow; G. Taylor; Villeneuve; Watson; Welch; Williams; Wiseman—31.

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING ACT

The following members having objected by rising, a vote was not taken on Bill 83:

Auld; Ashe; Baetz; Brunelle; Cureatz; Drea; Eaton; Elgie; Gregory; Handleman; Havrot; Henderson; Hodgson; J. Johnson; Jones; Lane; Maeck; McCaffrey; McCague; F. S. Miller; Norton; Ramsay; Rollins; Rotenberg; Rowe; Scrivener; G. E. Smith; Snow; G. Taylor; Villeneuve; Walker; Watson; Welch; Williams; Wiseman—35.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER
BLIND RIVER DAMS

174. Mr. Wildman: Will the minister inform the Legislature of: (1) how many dams are under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Natural Resources in the Blind River MNR district, giving their locations and ages; (2) the total amounts of funds by MNR on maintenance and/or reconstruction of each of these dams in the past 10 years; (3) how many feet of water MNR estimates were being held behind Mount Lake, Rawhide Lake and Kindiogami Lake dams during the week of April 22 to April 28, 1979; (4) what work was done by MNR to lower those dams and the water levels behind them during the month of April 1979? [Tabled May 8, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: 1. There are 16 dams under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Natural Resources in the Blind River MNR district. Their locations by watershed and ages are as follows:

MISSISSAGI RIVER WATERSHED

Peshu Lake Dam: Located in Root township at the outlet of Peshu Lake on Peshu Creek; age 35 years.

Wakomata Lake Dam: Located in Casson township at the outlet of Wakomata Lake on Snowshoe Creek; age 15 years.

Cummings Lake Dam: Located in Gould township at the outlet of Cummings Lake on an unnamed tributary to the Mississagi River; age 48 years (rebuilt in 1970).

Rawhide Lake Dam: Located in Viel township at the outlet of Rawhide Lake Dam on the Sister River which is a tributary to the Little White River; age 40 years approximately.

Mount Lake Dam: Located in Sagard township at the outlet of Mount Lake on the Sister River which is a tributary to the Little White River; age 27 years.

Kindiogami Lake Dam: Located in Wiseman township at the outlet of Kindiogami Lake on the Kindiogami River which is a tributary to the Little White River; age 24 years.

Endikai Lake Dam: Located in Albanee township at the outlet of Endikai Lake on the West Little White River which is a tributary to the Little White River; age 23 years.

Basswood (Wakwekobi) Lake Dam: Located in Day township at the outlet of Basswood

Lake on the Bolton River, a tributary to the Mississagi River; age 18 years.

BLIND RIVER WATERSHED

Matinenda Lake Dam: Located in Scarfe township at the outlet of Matinenda Lake on the Blind River; age 28 years.

Chiblow Lake Dam: Located in Scarfe township at the outlet of Chiblow Lake on the Blind River; age 25 years.

Deagle Dam: Located in Cobden township at outlet of Scarfe Lake at Whitefish Falls on the Blind River; age 25 years.

Blind River Dam: Located in Cobden township in the town of Blind River on the Blind River; age 5 years.

THESSALON RIVER WATERSHED

Shaw Dam: Located in Kirkwood township on the Bridgland River which is a tributary to the Thessalon River; age 49 years.

McCreights Dam: Located in Kirkwood township on the Bridgland River; age 35 years.

Little Rapids Dam: Located in Thessalon township on the Bridgland River which is a tributary to the Thessalon River; age 18 years.

LAUZON RIVER WATERSHED

Lauzon Lake Dam: Located in Long township at the outlet of Lauzon Lake on the Lauzon River; age 27 years.

2. The total amounts of funds spent by MNR on maintenance and/or reconstruction of each of these dams in the past 10 years are as follows:

Peshu Lake Dam, nil; Wakomata Lake Dam, nil; Cummings Lake Dam, nil; Rawhide Lake Dam, nil; Mount Lake Dam, nil; Kindiogami Lake Dam, $1,500; Endikai Lake Dam, nil; Basswood Lake Dam, nil; Matinenda Lake Dam, $6,500; Chiblow Lake Dam, $1,100; Deagle Dam, nil; Blind River Dam, $116,400; Shaw Dam, nil; McCreights Dam, $2,200; Little Rapids Dam, nil; Lauzon Lake Dam, $7,200.

3. Water depths held behind the Mount Lake, Rawhide Lake and Kindiogami Lake dams during the week of April 22 to 28, 1979, were estimated to be as follows:

Mount Lake Dam: The dam was checked on April 25, 1979, and April 27, 1979. On April 27, 1979, the water depth behind the dam was observed to be 11.7 feet. Water was flowing over the spillwall in the dam but no problem was observed with the dam at this time. The peak water depth reached was not directly observed but it is estimated to have been in excess of 12 feet. Normal summer water depth is about 10 feet.

Rawhide Lake Dam: Water depth behind this dam when observed on April 27 was at an estimated depth of four feet or near the top of the dam. Maximum depth that was reached during the week may have been over four feet. Normal summer water depth is about 2.5 feet.

Kindiogami Lake Dam: When checked on April 27, the water depth behind the dam was about 1.5 feet above normal but was not over the top of the dam. Normal summer water depth is about six feet at this dam. Maximum depth reached during the week is estimated at over eight feet.

4. The following work was done by MNR in lowering water levels behind these dams in the month of April:

Mount Lake Dam: Water levels on Mount Lake were drawn-down approximately two feet last fall as is the normal practice for operation of this dam. When checked on April 25, another stop-log was removed to increase the discharge through the dam.

Rawhide Lake Dam: This dam is not operated and acts as an overflow type of structure with approximately two stop-logs left in the bottom of the sluice gate in the dam to maintain summer water levels. This is normal practice for this dam and no problems have occurred as a result in the past. Access to the dam is by air or water only. The dam was not breached during the recent flood.

Kindiogami Lake Dam: This dam is not operated and also acts as an overflow dam. Two stop-logs are left in the bottom of the sluice gates to maintain summer water levels. No problems have occurred in the past as a result of this procedure. Access to the dam is by air or water only. The dam was not breached during the recent flood.

FLOODING

175. Mr. Wildman: Will the minister inform the Legislature when in April 1979 the Ministry of Natural Resources Sault Ste. Marie district officials first became aware of the danger of flooding for Searchmont and of how many hours warning the ministry gave the residents of that community that water levels in the Goulais River were rising to alarming levels and that a flood might occur? [Tabled May 8, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Ministry of Natural Resources Sault Ste. Marie district officials first became aware of the danger of flooding for Searchmont when a district official was informed by telephone around 8 a.m. on Thursday, April 26, that water levels in the Goulais River had risen, that flooding of some residences had occurred, and that water levels were still rising.

As the Sault Ste. Marie district office was unaware that Goulais River levels were rising overnight, no warning was given to residents of Searchmont that a flood might occur.

MOUNT ALBION SCHOOL

176. Mr. Isaacs: What is the precise status of the request by the Wentworth County Board of Education for capital funds for the replacement of Mount Albion School in Stoney Creek, and what is the ministry's estimate of the pupil capacity of the present main building and nine portables? [Tabled May 8, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: 1. The Wentworth County Board of Education has received an allocation for the Albion Heights School in Stoney Creek for the year 1980 in the amount of $1 million.

2. The present building has a capacity of 460 pupil places.

3. The nine portables on the site have a capacity of 315 pupil places.

FOREST REGENERATION

177. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry table figures on the percent stocking levels by regeneration method and working group within Algonquin Park? [Tabled May 10, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have prepared a table showing the percentage stocking by regeneration method and major working group within Algonquin Park for the five-year period 1974-75 to 1978-79:

PERCENTAGE STOCKING BY REGENERATION METHOD AND WORKING GROUP – ALGONQUIN PARK

178. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry table in the House figures on the number of acres of cutover and acres regenerated within Algonquin Park for the last five years? Will the ministry detail the cutover and regeneration figures by the subcategories contained in MNR annual reports? Will the ministry also detail the above figures by working group? [Tabled May 10, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have prepared tables for Algonquin Park for the five-year period 1974-75 to 1978-79 showing acreage of regeneration by treatment categories; acreage of cutover by cutting method and treatment availability; acreage of regeneration by treatment category and working group; and acreage of cutover by cutting method, availability of treatment and working group:

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 24, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of the whole.

BUSINESS CORPORATION AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of consideration of Bill 34, An Act to amend the Business Corporation Act.

On section 21:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. M. N. Davison moves that section 21 of the bill be amended by deleting the words "or any signature of an officer of the ministry designated by the regulations."

Mr. M. N. Davison: I understand very well the position the minister is in in terms of signing documents, and specifically documents which may be used later as evidence. I understand the time constraints of the job and I know it is just not practical for the minister to sign every single one of these documents; I am fully aware of that. I have no objection to one of two methods being used as an alternative; either an official of the ministry being designated to sign the document instead of the minister, or the use of some sort of mechanical reproduction or a signature machine by the minister's support staff, if I can divide his staff in that fashion.

What I am a little concerned about is the fact that people other than the minister who had been designated to sign things would have their own signature machines or have their signature run off. There is an element of ministerial responsibility, so it is important that we make a distinction between the minister and the officials on his staff.

Understanding fully the time constraints on the minister, understanding the way these things operate, I have no objection whatsoever to the minister designating responsibility for signing documents to his staff, to the officials in his ministry. I have no objection to some mechanical reproduction of his signature or a signature machine, but I think we can draw the line there. We don't need to go down the road of other people having signature machines or having their names run off on a mimeograph. That, simply is the reason and the rationale for the amendment.

Mr. Breithaupt: This is an interesting point. I recognize the comment made by the sponsor of the amendment with respect to the minister having the opportunity of having his signature reproduced by machine or by printing. I suppose it really depends on who, in fact, would be the civil servant able to have this responsibility. If, for example, this is a senior person within the ministry, a person who is known and responsible at a director level or whatever, then I would have no particular objection to having it done as proposed by the minister, and as a result I would not support the amendment. If, on the other hand, this were going to require much additional time, or this were a task that was going to be performed by a quite junior person, then there would be some merit in the amendment. It really depends on hearing from the minister as to who the person is and what level of responsibility the person would have who is going to be doing this. It really hinges on that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, to answer the questions: First of all, the one that should have been asked is, who is doing it now? As a matter of fact, the person who is doing it now on certificates of incorporation and related certificates is the controller of records—not even the minister; the controller of records. The member is going to ask, what is the authority? The authority is section 33 of the Ontario Regulations, 452/76. Her signature comes under the written authorization of the controller. Her signature is written on each certificate by an auto pen operated by a clerk.

The procedure is based upon common law. All we are doing in this section is putting it under statute that we have to designate the person whose signature is used; it's not that of the minister. Then the signature is reproduced exactly as the honourable member said, by auto pen. It is the signature of the controller of records, regardless of who pushes the auto pen. What it is doing is putting under statute what has always been done under the existing act and under the authorization of common law.

Mr. Breithaupt: I must say I would far prefer to have it under statute than under regulations, but that is a satisfactory answer to me at least.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'm sorry; what was the title of the individual?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The controller of records.

Mr. M. N. Davison: The amendment to the Business Corporations Act as proposed by the minister in section 21 of this bill will not designate by regulation exclusively the incumbent of that position. It is a much broader power that is being given to the Lieutenant Governor in Council when the phrase used is "or any signature of an officer of the ministry as designated by the regulations." It opens the door fairly broadly. I understand the minister's concern and his position, but it does not answer the question in my mind that led me to place the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Perhaps I can try again. Section 33 of the regulations now authorizes the executive director, the senior legal officer, the director of the company services branch, the controller of records, or the assistant controller of records to sign any certificate required or authorized by the act.

Just to give the member an idea of the volume and why we have gone to the present system, more than 1,000 certificates weekly are required to be signed in the companies division. Of these, more than 500 are certificates of incorporation. With such volumes it is impractical and unrealistic, as has been mentioned by the honourable members, to require my officials to sign these certificates manually. Their time is better otherwise spent. Furthermore, it would be contrary to the intent of this act, which is to speed up incorporation.

The difficulty with using only the minister's signature is that time is required to make a signature plate when a minister is replaced or changed for any reason. As members will notice on the elevators, only a certain number of elevator certificates as yet bear my signature. It took up to three months for birth certificates to bear my signature. I am thrifty; why not use the old blanks? There are a great many things out there where reproductions are valid that we were able to carry on.

If we are only going to use a mechanical reproduction of my signature, once again there can be interruptions and so forth. Quite frankly, one of the things that concerns me is that a whole host of people are able to use the mechanical reproduction of the minister's signature. Security does become a problem. It is not there in the others, and quite frankly I think it is fair, practical and equitable; I don't think there is a danger. They have to be designated in the regulation. There is no intent to designate more than are there now. What it is really doing is putting it into statute rather than relying upon common law. I trust that will answer the concerns of the member.

Mr. Breithaupt: I was just going to comment on what the minister had said. I always feel rather sorry for the poor chap who has to go around in the elevators and put those stickers over one minister's name as another minister comes forward. Hopefully we can avoid that in this circumstance. The person designated would probably be designated for this one purpose only, so the security is a certain factor.

As the minister has stated, it is done in one form by a regulation now. It will, as a result of this amendment, continue to be done by a regulation. All we are doing is giving a somewhat higher profile to the matter by putting that portion of it in the act, and that seems quite reasonable to me.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Just finally, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the minister if his position is as I understand it, it probably would have been more appropriate to simply list the titles of the officials in the legislation if we were concerned about it being up front by way of statute rather than by way of regulation. Maybe that is something he will consider when he next rewrites the Business Corporations Act.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Any further discussion or comment on section 21, or the proposed amendment thereto?

Those in favour will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

The amendment is lost.

Section 21 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Where is the next question?

The minister has an amendment here. Mr. Minister, do you wish to make that amendment to section 22?

On section 22:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 266a of the act, as set out in section 22 of the bill, be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

Date of articles:

"(2) Articles filed by the minister under the act shall have effect from the date of the certificate endorsed thereon, notwithstanding that any action required to be taken by the minister under this act with respect to the endorsement of certificate and filing by him is taken at a later date."

Would the minister make an explanation of that amendment?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes, Mr. Chairman. If you will recall, when this committee last met on this bill I gave an overview of this particular amendment. It revolves around a recent law case, C.P.W. Valves Instrument Limited versus Scott, 5 Alberta Law Reports (2nd) 1978, 271.

Interpreting the Alberta companies act has caused some concern about the certainty of the date of incorporation of a company under Ontario law. It is necessary in the commercial world that businessmen be able to rely upon the date of incorporation without fear of a court looking behind.

This amendment is intended to ensure that no one will attempt to have the courts find that the date in a certificate of incorporation is not in law the date of incorporation.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I am not particularly opposed to the minister's amendment, but I must admit to some confusion. Perhaps somebody can help me with this.

Section 266(1) and (2) of the act, which is what is being amended by section 21 in the minister's amendment to his amendment, refer to certificates and certificates exclusively. Section 1 of the Business Corporations Act, which is the definition section, contains in section 1(1)(vi) a definition of certificate of incorporation, and in section 1(1)(ii) a definition of articles. I will not bother reading them into the record, but articles and certificates are two different things. Section 266 deals exclusively with certificates. What I am not sure I understand is whether or not the minister's current amendment is in order, amending as it does a section dealing with certificates to make this change which deals with articles. If it is in order, I am perfectly happy with it, but I am somewhat confused.

Hon. Mr. Drea: There is no problem. The articles are filed by me, the certificate is issued. It really deals with the date on the certificate, so there is no confusion.

The amendment is that the articles filed by me shall have effect from the date of the certificate endorsement. It really deals with the certificate, not the date I file the articles. This is to avoid the confusion caused by the courts being asked to select which date. It is dealing with the certificate, it is not dealing with the articles. It merely puts down once and for all that the date on the certificate is the effective date, regardless of when I file the articles later. If I file them on the same day, fine; if I file them at a later date, no matter.

This does occur, and this was the thrust of the Alberta case. The certificate was issued under one date, the articles filed under their act on another. The courts ruled that it was the date the articles were filed and this caused the confusion. This way it is the date on the certificate; it has nothing to do with the content of the articles or anything else.

Mr. M. N. Davison: If it is good enough for the minister it is good enough for me.

Section 22, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 23 and 24 agreed to.

On section 25:

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Hon. Mr. Drea moves that section 271(j) of the act, as set out in section 25 of the bill, be amended by adding at the end thereof: "Permitting punctuation marks and other marks referred to in section 8(3)."

Hon. Mr. Drea further moves that the said section 271 be amended by adding thereto the following clause: "(l) Prescribing the matters that the minister shall take into consideration in determining whether a name is contrary to section 7."

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to permit the extensive regulations required to guide incorporators when deciding upon the acceptability of a proposed corporate name. The matters the minister must take into consideration when determining whether a name is contrary to the act are found in case law. With this regulation it will not be necessary for incorporators to have recourse to case law to ascertain what are the basic considerations for acceptable corporate names. As a result, it should be less time-consuming for incorporators to chose a name under the act.

This is the commitment, quite frankly, that we made to the legal profession when bringing this in. Under the present act it is the minister who is responsible for the final acceptability of the name; under the amendments the onus will be entirely upon the incorporator, and for practical purposes upon his solicitor. As the House now knows, there is the subjective test, as it is known in the profession, by which solicitors determine whether the name is contrary to the act. By contrary, I mean implying falsely a connection with the crown, with the government, using the word co-operative and a number of other restrictions. Case law has determined the grey areas there, it is very well set down.

Now the onus is entirely upon them, we think it only fair that it be spelled out completely in regulations so the solicitor, or indeed if there is an incorporator who chooses to do his own without benefit of a solicitor, both will know very clearly the certain names that are contrary to this particular section.

The first part of the amendment is merely to bring clause (j) into conformity with section 6(3) permitting punctuation marks and other marks as referred to. We just want to make this section consistent with the earlier one.

Motion agreed to.

Section 25, as amended, agreed to.

Section 26 agreed to.

Bill 34, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Drea, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with amendment.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 34, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act.

CONVEYANCING AND LAW OF PROPERTY AMENDMENT ACT, 1979

Hon. Mr. Drea moved second reading of Bill 87, An Act to amend the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, this is a housekeeping bill. The Conveyancing and Law of Property Act was amended in 1975 to clarify the law in relation to rights of owners and mortgagees in situations where the lessee had the freehold title, that is ownership, transferred to him by the lessor.

The amendments at that time merely preserved the existing rights and responsibility of the parties exactly as they were before the lessee purchased the freehold. The problems arose because of the legal doctrine of merger. Normally, where a person holding a lease buys the property, the leasehold interest is said to merge in the freehold interest and the lease disappears.

This has serious implications where there is a mortgage on the leasehold interest, because the security of the mortgagee would disappear if the lease disappeared under the doctrine of merger. No merger of interest takes place under law if the parties do not intend merger. The law presumes there was no intention of merger where non-merger would be consistent with the duty of the owner.

In this case, the owner has the duty to pay off the mortgage and not to try to destroy the security of the mortgagee. There are court decisions which hold that merger does not take place in this situation. That does not settle the question of the rights of the owner and the mortgagee. It is not clear whether the mortgage remains a mortgage enforceable by the usual remedies of foreclosure and power of sale, or whether the mortgage becomes a charge or a lien of a different nature.

As between a first and a second leasehold mortgage, it is also not clear whether they retain their priorities, or whether they both rank equally under the purchase of the freehold.

For those reasons, section 37 was amended in 1975 to cover lessees from Ontario Housing Corporation who subsequently bought the property.

Recently, the Ministry of Housing has decided to transfer the home ownership part of Ontario Housing Corporation's operation to those of the Ontario Land Corporation. Furthermore, the Ministry of Natural Resources has started to sell crown lands where formerly it had been adhering to a policy of giving only a lease. Under the former policy, several thousand leases were granted. Many of these were for cottage lots on which the lessee borrowed to build a cottage by putting a mortgage on the lease. Now that it is possible to buy the property rather than merely leasing it, many lessees of crown land are seeking to buy. It is important, therefore, that section 37 be amended again so that the existing rights and responsibilities of all parties be preserved in situations where the lessor and grantor is the Ontario Land Corporation, or the crown, under the Mining Act or the Public Lands Act.

The section now provides that where a person who leases land from the Ontario Land Corporation buys the land, the mortgages already registered against the land remain unaffected; that is the doctrine of merger does not take effect.

Basically, the section is being amended so mortgages on land purchased by a lessee from the Ontario Land Corporation, or from the Ministry of Natural Resources, also remain unaffected. The amendments have been requested by both the Ministry of Housing and by the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, this is a most interesting and pleasant legal point the minister has reviewed. I would think that he has certainly become learned in the law as far as the details of this particular item are concerned, so that the encumbrances that are registered against a property do, in fact, continue after the technical transfer of title where the property was originally leased.

The point seems to be a reasonable one and I think that the bill will obviously proceed through the House, but apparently not until the member for Lakeshore has reviewed, in even greater detail, the finer points of conveyancing.

Mr. Lawlor: I don't know about that. But having attended at the Gauguin exhibit, conducted by a certain McMurtry I believe, at the American Embassy, very closely resembling the best works of Toulouse-Lautrec in his decadent period, I thought maybe a word or two should be said about the Conveyancing and Law of Property Amendment Act.

No one is concerned, Mr. Speaker, about mortgages of leases or second mortgages of leases if there exists such a strange entity. What I was concerned about when I read the legislation was the transference, "subject to any interest" as the wording goes, of a leasehold interest into a freehold interest—absolute title—and what that just might mean, in legal terms. I phoned the department about it, and as is normal gleaned a certain amount of, I suppose you'd call it wisdom, with respect to the thing. I was told about mortgages I know all about that, but that's not the problem.

With respect to cottage properties and things like that there are numerous easements of various kinds, some which follow leasehold interests as such, but it would seem to me in law—and I'm going to be very ticklish about this—in terms of freehold interest they may not be recognized.

One instance immediately occurred to me. It was well water. In many instances, the well was located on the particular property. In order to gain water for the cottage property in question, it is necessary to trespass, except if you have an easement—"come on and take it," for instance. Is that particular kind of right taken into cognizance in lifting from one form of holding of land which is quite different from fee simple holding of land? Does that follow over of necessity by way of an easement? Is that the kind of easement that is involved?

Then I went further. Suppose that particular kind of thing is encompassed within the legislation; is there a range of kinds of encumbrances—not mortgages or trespass on land in order to obtain water, and not strictly property rights having to do with an immediate attachment to land which is peculiar to leasehold interests, as one can well imagine they might be, but rather a range of rights with respect to lateral easements, the location of television aerials, the right to light—rights of various kinds which, traditionally and within English common law, do not come across in terms of the fee simple?

If there are, the minister is saying they do follow. I think he is saying that. Or does he mean that? Really, what does he mean? Has he defined it? Has he really thought about this transfer of property? He may answer me that on previous occasions a similar act of the Legislature went through with respect to the transfer of leasehold interests to freehold and nobody questioned it. That is neither here nor there.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It has worked for four years.

Mr. Lawlor: Perhaps we have a little more time now. Perhaps the minister has directed our attention to the particular issue in question. In any event, I thought I would tickle his left rib before I sat down.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Why my left?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, it may not have been particularly clear to the minister, but he can indeed interpret the remarks of my colleague from Lakeshore as being nothing short of total support for this bill on second reading. He was, of course, a member of the happy assembly that did bring in the current section 37.

As I read it, the change has simply lifted the words "with the Ontario Housing Corporation" and set in the new set of words which will, in addition, expand it to the Ontario Land Corporation and to the crown under the Mining Act and the Public Lands Act. That is simply a recognition of the second-home situation, by and large.

In that particular sense, the comments made by the member for Lakeshore should be looked at carefully by the minister and his staff, particularly the situation which applies with respect to an Ontario Housing Corporation development. It may well be quite different from the kinds of odd situations one runs into when dealing with cottages, second homes and legalities that are less clear than one might find in some of the urban housing developments.

That said, however, we will be supporting the bill on second reading.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, could I ask one question of the minister? This may avoid us having to go to committee and follows the point raised by the member for Lakeshore.

Am I not correct in saying that any easements such as were referred to, for wells or whatever, that might have developed by prescription over a period of time would be continuing in any event and would not be affected in any way by this particular item?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes. The only reason there is an amendment here is the Ontario Housing Corporation, which is three words, had transferred its leasehold to the Ontario Land Corporation. Therefore, in order to protect the mortgagees, we are changing the words in section 37 of this act.

Secondly, there is the recognition that what was once the Department of Lands and Forests, latterly the Ministry of Natural Resources, under one of two acts is selling cottage lots rather than leasing them as had been done traditionally; all we are doing is putting that in there.

Mr. Lawlor: What about water rights?

Hon. Mr. Drea: All of the encumbrances and so forth are already included. There is provision for them within the existing act. That act has been there for four years.

Bear in mind there was no specific mention in the past of crown lands because four years ago there was not much in the way of sales. But there have been sales over the last little while. There has been no problem. There hasn't been a dispute which couldn't be settled in terms of the normal encumbrances or clearances or easements at the time of purchase. This is a very technical piece of house-keeping. It just recognizes the transfer of a procedure from one part of one ministry to another and the policy of another ministry now selling lots rather than leasing. I would think the ordinary procedures under conveyancing would be quite adequate. What we are specifically after here is the protection of the mortgagee where there has been a leasehold.

Mr. Lawlor: That is a shocking complacency on your part.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I want to say that I was at the great art exhibit too. I was there much earlier than the honourable member because I did my duty and came back here to vote in private members' hour.

Mr. Lawlor: Even before.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Yes; and you started off with this. I can assure you I had a most pleasant evening earlier; I was back in the jail system and nobody eats better than those in the sentenced institutions of this province.

Mr. Lawlor: You are far more at home in the jail system than anywhere else.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I can assure members there is nothing untoward in this amendment.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

AUDIT AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Audit Act.

Mr. Renwick: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister has given consideration to Bill 66 on the Notice Paper, standing in the name of my colleague the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel). Perhaps he would take a moment to look up Bill 66? That is the bill which refers to an Act to Acquire the Assets of Inco Limited.

The minister will note, of course, that it makes provision for the Ontario Nickel Corporation. Assuming as I do, that in the course of this Parliament the government will see the wisdom of the bill standing in my colleague's name and decide to adopt it as a government bill, would the minister please, in the course of his response on second reading to the bill, indicate whether or not it would be affected by the Crown Agency Act? Would he treat it, for example, in the same manner as the Ontario Hydro-electric Power Commission is treated, that is it's not affected by the Crown Agency Act? On the other hand, would he want to have it audited by the auditor under the Audit Act of 1977? That's the first point that I think is of concern to all of the members of the assembly.

The second matter is that I would like the minister, if he would for the record, to delineate or name the particular crown agencies which are not affected by the Crown Agency Act so we'll understand the full import of the amendment which he proposes. I think if the minister could reply to those two comments of mine it may not be necessary to put the bill into committee of the whole House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other honourable member wishing to participate in the debate?

Mr. Breithaupt: Not after that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What amazed me, Mr. Speaker, is the absolute sincerity with which the honourable member was able to deliver those words. I must say his acting ability is greater than mine.

Mr. Lawlor: Oh no, that is not so.

Mr. Breithaupt: He can just keep a straight face.

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, I defer to it completely. I've never been able to keep a straight face, because I'm a straight character; I never had to worry about that problem. The fact is I will give this solemn undertaking to the member. Should Bill 66 pass this House, I will gladly exempt it from the conditions of this and set it up as we have the other exemptions so it would have its own auditors. Is that fair enough?

Mr. Renwick: Yes, I was hoping that would be your position. That is very wise.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That's the kind of reassurance the honourable member wanted from me, so when we nationalize Inco, and I'm sure the member would find our government completely in favour with that bill, we would be able to set up a crown corporation that would be audited by independent auditors. Is that clear enough?

Mr. Renwick: That's the first positive statement I have heard from the Treasurer about the government's intentions. My colleague will be delighted.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The other two agencies which are still not covered by this amendment are the Ontario Transportation Development Corporation under its act, and the Ontario Energy Corporation under its act. In their acts, as with Hydro, specific exemption is given to those two corporations. I understand it was at the request of the provincial auditor that this be so.

Mr. Renwick: If the minister would permit just one question, it would not be necessary to put it into committee. Does the minister know who the auditors are of those two corporations?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker, but I will give the undertaking to put it on the record.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT REPEAL AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. F. S. Miller moved second reading of Bill 3, An Act to amend the Agricultural Development Repeal Act, 1973.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I would say this is a historic occasion. I would think particularly the two lawyers in the front row of the NDP should appreciate the nature of this particular bill. Let me read the title of it to you. Even I, uneducated, unschooled in the law, can recognize something is different about this bill.

Mr. Epp: But you sold a lot of Edsels.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I didn't sell Edsels, I sold things that had resale value.

Mr. Breithaupt: He bought them.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I bought them from those who had bought the lemons.

Let's look at the full title: An Act to Amend the Agricultural Development Repeal Act, 1973. Do you realize that in the history of this Legislature we have never, in so far as we can find, amended a repeal act?

[8:45]

The purpose of this act is simple. There is still a requirement for mortgages that are registered against any loans or advances made under the original Agricultural Development Act to be processed—and about 25 a year ago, even though they have been paid off long ago. But in the spirit of deregulation we simply felt that since no debts are owed to the crown, this was imposing one more hurdle for people trying to clear title, taking a good deal of time and a good deal of cost. Therefore we felt we should clearly, in this amendment, discharge any mortgages that remain under this act so there is no need for lawyers in the future to come to the crown, to the Treasurer specifically, and get the repeal.

I looked into the history of the act and learned that these moneys were given out by the settlers' loan commissioner and the commissioner of agricultural loans. They were loans of cash and kind, seed grain, made to thousands of farmers who were settling in Ontario many years ago. I thought it was kind of fun to look back into the history of the act.

Mr. Lawlor: How long ago?

Hon. F. S. Miller: About the time you got elected.

Mr. Riddell: I am indeed humble that the finance critic for the Liberal Party has asked me to make a few comments on this very far-reaching and important bill. As the minister has implied, Bill 33 is simply introducing a minor housekeeping change, which makes a great deal of sense. We in this party certainly support it.

Under the Agricultural Development Act loans were made to farmers, as the minister has already indicated, to help them make improvements on their land and to help them with their farming operation. These loans were made over 30 years ago and have been completely paid off, but not necessarily discharged from the title of the land. When a loan was made, it was registered against the title, and in the transfer of land the new owner would find the previous owner did not register the discharge of the loan. When they found that a mortgage was registered against the title to the land they were purchasing, the lawyers would of course be involved and they would be writing to the ministry to have the loan discharged. This incurred an added expense to the purchaser, and it involved a lot of paperwork for the ministry to discharge the loan.

Where there are mortgages on titles the main effect of the amendment is to clear all titles of mortgages registered against them. This relieves the ministry of having to sign a release of mortgage which has long been liquidated. All mortgages on title, therefore, would be deemed to be discharged, leaving the land with a clear title in this respect.

I am surprised it has taken the government this long to realize that an unnecessary expense could have been alleviated some years ago. It has only been within relatively recent times that this government has been concerned about curbing its wild spending habits, and this is just another example of its mismanagement. However this is understandable, I suppose, considering the calibre of people directing the affairs of this province.

Earlier this week, I asked one of the ministers, who I thought should be knowledgeable about the act—and I won't mention any names—to explain the amendment to me. He indicated the intent of the amendment was to repeal that section of the bill which permitted urban dwellers during the time of war to use vacant lots to grow victory gardens. I said, "You have got to be kidding." He said, "No, I am not. There is the Treasurer sitting right there. Find out if that isn't the fact." I wasn't too sure I would get much more assistance from the Treasurer, so I just forgot about it and contacted some of the ministry officials to see what it was all about.

I certainly question the minister's understanding of the bill, but when I observed his sincerity and learned later what the bill was all about, it simply confirmed my lack of faith in a couple of the ministers over there in the job they are doing.

Mr. Renwick: I am glad to have the explanation which was given by the critic of the Liberal Party. That has helped me immensely. As a matter of fact, it was a predecessor of this party, if my memory serves me correctly, the farmers' party, which passed this act originally. It was repealed in 1973, and there has been a close connection between this party and the farmers of Ontario ever since.

Mr. Breithaupt: I am stunned.

Mr. Renwick: I hope the honourable members noticed that the Treasurer nodded in agreement that it was passed by the farmers' party in the aftermath of the First World War. I consulted my colleague the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) with respect to the repeal. He indicated it appeared to be consistent with Tory policy to be against agricultural development in this province and therefore there was little if anything we could do about the bill. He suggested that, since it is so consistent with Tory philosophy, we should support the bill at this time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Oh, my goodness.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question or two with respect to some of the items which I have heard so far this evening on this bill. I will not refer back to the United Farmers of Ontario at this point, but the one thing that did strike me was the comments earlier on with respect to the learned legal abilities of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea). I find he is even upstaged by my colleague from Huron-Middlesex, who has given a most illuminating comment with respect to this legislation.

However, I wonder if the Treasurer can advise us how many of these documents are thought to be outstanding. Also, is it the intention to have the various registrars search through their documentation to rule out documents that can now be otherwise ruled out, or is it the intention of the minister, when asked for a discharge in future, simply to cite this act as the authority and not have to provide one? I presume the latter would be the case.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it is always nice to let the opposition have the opportunity to stand up and clobber us, even if it is with a minor amendment like this. I would have felt badly had they not done anything else.

I would like to say the members opposite had a very succinct summary of my act; I wish I had had it for my ministerial statement. But over here we do things from our heads and not from a piece of paper; so we have to just stand up and—

Mr. Breithaupt: No wonder it comes out that way.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is why it comes out slightly like that; it follows the passages of my head.

We have around 25 requests a year for discharge. But we do not have any measure of the number of them existing around the province. I understand citing the act would be all that was required for the discharge.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

FIRES EXTINGUISHMENT REPEAL ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 43, An Act to repeal the Fires Extinguishment Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move second reading of this bill, and of the two following bills, to repeal three bills which in our opinion are obsolete and unnecessary pieces of legislation. The government has consulted the municipal liaison committee on these bills, and the MLC has indicated it has no objection to their repeal.

Mr. Lawlor: This suits the honourable member. He is called the sunset member.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, this is part of a policy of the ministry and the government, as seen by the last bill introduced by the Treasurer to review certain legislation and to repeal those acts we feel are redundant.

I speak specifically to Bill 43, An Act to repeal the Fires Extinguishment Act. This act was first enacted in 1890 to provide means of extinguishing forest fires. It was re-enacted in 1913 under its present title. It enables county councils to authorize fire guardians, fence viewers, overseers of highways or pathmasters appointed by township councils to order the male residents of a township to help fight a forest fire.

Section 376, paragraph 7, of the Municipal Act now authorizes the reeve, the deputy reeve or, in their absence, any member of township council to call out male residents of a township to fight a forest fire. Moreover, in fire regions designated under the Forest Fires Prevention Act, officers appointed by the Minister of Natural Resources "may employ or summon the assistance of any male persons between the ages of 18 and 60 years" for fighting forest fires.

As a result, this other legislation, the Fires Extinguishment Act, is clearly redundant.

Mr. Epp: I am pleased to rise and speak to this bill and in the spirit of accommodation I will indicate that we will obviously support the repeal of this act. The simple reason is that it is adequately covered in the Municipal Act. As the parliamentary assistant has pointed out, the latter pretty well meets all the conditions that are necessary.

The only question I have is why it has taken so long to repeal this particular act.

I would have thought that when the relevant section was entered into the Municipal Act, and perhaps the parliamentary assistant can indicate when that was done—on page 227 of the Municipal Act—it would be interesting to have on the record whether it was 110, 15, 29 years ago, or whatever the length of time was.

Since we support the sunset principle first raised in this House by my leader, Dr. Smith, and the government later set up a committee under the Hon. Doug Wiseman to study the sunset law provision—

Mr. Lawlor: Sunset law has been around since Adam.

Mr. Epp: I'm sorry, I wasn't around when Adam was around to know that he had mentioned it.

Mr. Lawlor: To credit your leader with sunset law is absurd. You've got Rotenberg saying it.

Mr. Epp: I think the honourable member has got sunset mixed up with moonshine.

Nevertheless, it is important that the government repeal a number of acts. I am sure there must be hundreds of other acts in force that need repealing simply because they are no longer necessary—they are redundant.

We support this and look forward to the repeal of many other acts that are no longer necessary.

Mr. Swart: We accept the reasons given by the parliamentary assistant for the repeal of this act. To spend much time discussing the repeal would give some reason for considering some amendments to the rules of this House, because the act is so redundant.

However, my colleague from Riverdale pointed out another reason we strongly support the repeal of this act, and that is because it is a sexist act. It applies only to males. The act as it exists now does not provide for the calling of females to fight forest fires. For that reason, too, we are in favour of repeal of the act.

This act is actually a bit broader than the other legislation we now have, but it is totally out of date in dealing with the situation that exists today.

So of course we will be supporting this bill.

[9:00]

Mr. Bounsall: On close examination of the bill though, repealing the Fires Extinguishment Act does not improve the sexist situation in Ontario. Reading the explanatory note paragraph is that we already have this covered in that a "reeve or a deputy reeve or, in their absence, a member of the township council," under paragraph 7 of section 376 of the Municipal Act, is authorized "to call out male inhabitants of the township to fight forest fires." So what we have in the repeal of the Fires Extinguishment Act which is only reasonable when it is covered in one other form, does not remove the sexist connotations where only males may be allowed under the Municipal Act to be called to fight forest fires.

Under section 7 of the Forest Fires Prevention Act, "officers appointed by the Minister of Natural Resources may summon any male person of 18 years" or over.

My party, with its interest in equality and women's rights, does not suggest that any woman would be any more delighted than males are to be pressed into fighting forest fires against their will—but again, it still allows the summoning out of males only. I would think that the ministry when repealing the Fires Extinguishment Act, which is redundant in the light of the other two sections, would clean up these two sections so that it would simply read that the reeve or deputy reeve under the Municipal Act could call a person out and, under the Forest Fires Prevention Act, the officers of the Ministry of Natural Resources may summon a person of 18 years of age to 60 years of age to assist in fighting forest fires. That would simply be "a person." If they take this opportunity to repeal this act, which is reasonable, they should change those two sections under the other two acts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member is really straying from this particular act which is before us.

Mr. Bounsall: The reason for the withdrawal of this act is that it's covered under two other acts. In my opinion, those two other sections remain sexist.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: But those two other acts are not before us.

Mr. Bounsall: The only reason this bill is before us, Mr. Speaker, is that those sections of those other two acts exist. They're sexist and the government should have taken this opportunity to amend them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other honourable member wishing to participate in this debate? If not, the parliamentary assistant.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I note the question of the member for Waterloo North as to when section 376 was put in the Municipal Act. I'm sorry, I do not have the answer for him but I will get it and send it to him at the appropriate time.

He also asked why it took so long to repeal the act. Speaking personally, I've only been the parliamentary assistant for two months so what went on before that I don't know, but as I indicated earlier, there has been a policy of the government to review legislation that has not been too long a policy and I hope there will be more of these repeals coming forward.

As to the alleged sexist part of this act, Mr. Speaker, that situation isn't changing as between the present legislation and the ones that have been enacted recently to replace it. However, as far as the Municipal Act is concerned, there is an ongoing review of that act and when we get to that section I can assure the member for Windsor-Sandwich that we will review as to whether or not it is sexist and to whether or not we should change "male" to "person." That will be reviewed. What the result of the review will be, I don't know, but as he has raised it, certainly, the ministry will review it.

As far as the other act is concerned, that comes under the Ministry of Natural Resources. I'm sure someone from that ministry will note the debate tonight and, also, in their wisdom and at the proper time, make the review. With those words, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that we pass second reading of Bill 43.

VACANT LAND CULTIVATION REPEAL ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 44, An Act to repeal the Vacant Land Cultivation Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, this act was enacted first in 1918 and authorizes the councils of local municipalities to grant permits "to any persons to enter upon, hold and use any vacant land in a municipality" for cultivation and raising crops. However, before issuing a permit, the council is required to hear the objections of the owner and cannot issue a permit if the owner satisfies council that the land is required during the current year for building or manufacturing or other revenue-producing purposes. If a permit is issued, no compensation can be paid to the owner of the land.

This statute was enacted during the end of the First World War when so many Canadians were returning home from Europe. However, the provisions would appear to be rather excessive in present day circumstances and would seem to constitute undue infringement.

ment on individual property rights. I should mention that the repeal of this bill will in no way interfere with the present ability of municipal councils to continue to lease public lands to urban residents for use as garden plots.

For these reasons I would ask the House to adopt Bill 44.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, there is good reason for this particular act to be repealed and we obviously support what the parliamentary assistant to the minister has said. I think he has articulated quite well why this is being done and it doesn't deserve any further comment. This kind of measure by the government is wholly endorsed.

Mr. Isaacs: I thank the parliamentary assistant for his comments on this bill because the explanatory note contained within the bill is just about as illuminating as it's possible not to be. That sort of explanatory note prompted me to investigate the act being repealed a little more carefully than I might have done otherwise—I guess that's my suspicious nature—and I found a very interesting and potentially useful act.

I recognize, as the member for Waterloo North has already mentioned, that the exact provisions of the act may not be appropriate for our current circumstances. But the idea, the concept, of making the maximum possible use of all available land in this province might be something the government should explore a little bit further. In many suburban areas surrounding our major municipalities, there are vast amounts of vacant land being held, presumably, for future development. In the case of some of these areas, that future development may be many, many years away.

The present municipal tax structure and the present ability municipalities have to order cleanups of that land and to encourage the use of the land for useful purposes really don't seem to be too effective. I think it's a pity that people were not perhaps as aware as they might have been of the Vacant Land Cultivation Act during recent years, because I suspect that if people had been aware of its provisions there might well have been more applications to local councils to take advantage of it.

Be that as it may, as I indicated, my feeling is that the exact provisions of the act, the matter of licensing for $1, the matter of advertising and giving notice to the owner of the land, may not be entirely appropriate for our current circumstances, and therefore, we will not be opposing this Act to repeal the Vacant Land Cultivation Act.

Mr. Swart: I would like to rise and say that I am in full accord with the comments made by my colleague from Wentworth and point out, as he has done but perhaps in a little different way, that the government of 1918 was really even more progressive, more concerned about the utilization of our farm land than the present government some 61 years later. The present government hasn't even taken the necessary steps to preserve our prime agricultural land in this province, let alone assure that it is going to be used for agricultural purposes.

We recognize this bill we are repealing applies to a different age and that largely it was for the purposes of keeping weeds down and the cultivation of land owned by non-resident owners who didn't come to the land during the spring and summer to destroy the weeds. There was poor communication in those days and the best alternative was to allow somebody else to utilize that land. As this communications situation no longer exists, I think we have gone past the need to authorize a public body like a municipality to give permission to one person to use somebody else's land.

I guess we support the repeal of this, partly because at this time it is appropriate so to do. But I am convinced that not too far down the road, in 10 or 20 years, we are going to have the exact same concern for the utilization of every hectare of land in our country for the growing of food that the government had when it enacted this legislation in 1918. We are going to be paying the price in our society for not taking the necessary action to preserve and utilize that food land.

The previous legislation was an ineffective, inappropriate way of seeing that our prime food land is used for producing food, but we recognize there is a need for the kind of legislation which some thoughtful government like the NDP government in British Columbia enacted for preserving food land for this and future generations.

FIRE GUARDIANS REPEAL ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 45, An Act to repeal the Fire Guardians Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: The reason for this bill and the repeal are pretty well set out in the explanatory note and I would just like to put them into the record.

The Fire Guardians Act, which was enacted in 1889, enables township councils to appoint fire guardians whose responsibility it is to regulate the setting of open air fires in the township between April 1 and October 31. However, under section 354(1), paragraphs 25 to 45 of the Municipal Act, the councils of all local municipalities have extensive powers respecting fire matters. These include the authority under paragraph 29 to pass bylaws regulating open-air fires and, under paragraph 41, to employ officers to enforce such bylaws.

These broader powers in the Municipal Act make the provisions of the Fire Guardians Act redundant and therefore I would commend this bill to the House.

[9:15]

Mr. Epp: It would be somewhat repetitious to go over the same points I raised in the other one, so I will indicate we will support this bill in principle and endorse the government's trend toward getting rid of unnecessary legislation.

Mr. Swart: For obvious reasons, we support this bill.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

LINE FENCES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Rotenberg, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Wells, moved second reading of Bill 17, An Act to revise The Line Fences Act.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will receive as quick a passage as the previous three which we just put through the House.

In 1793, the first provincial parliament of Upper Canada, meeting at Niagara, passed an act providing for the appointment of persons to serve as fence viewers in every parish, township, reputed township or place. Acts were subsequently passed in 1834, 1845, 1859, 1868, and 1874, respecting line fences and the resolution of disputes involving them. Finally in 1913, the 1874 act was re-enacted under its present name of the Line Fences Act. This statute has remained more or less the same since then.

For some time, there has been general agreement that the act should be revised to make it better able to deal with present day circumstances. To this end, lengthy discussions have taken place with a number of interested parties over the last few years, including interested citizens, representatives of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, the Rural Ontario Municipal Association; and urban municipalities such as the city of Toronto and the borough of Scarborough. I am pleased to report there is general agreement on most of the issues and agreement by most parties on all of the issues.

There are three main objectives in revising the act. The first is to make the procedure for settling fence disputes between adjoining owners somewhat quicker. This is especially important in agricultural areas in the spring when one of the owners needs a line fence repaired before he can turn out his livestock. The second objective is to make the procedure simpler and more informal for property owners who want a dispute arbitrated. This will be accomplished by making municipalities responsible for administering the arbitration and by keeping disputes, as much as possible, out of the courts. The third objective is to make the legislation more flexible by giving wider discretion to the local fence viewers in making their awards. This will enable them to consider all of the relevant factors involved in a situation whether in a rural or urban area or in an agricultural or non-agricultural setting.

The first draft revising this act, Bill 135, was introduced last year on June 22. It was then widely circulated and a great many comments were received. Bill 201 replaced Bill 135 and was given first reading December 8, 1978. It incorporated a number of the recommendations that were received. In addition, some sections were reworded in an attempt to make their provisions clearer. The sequence of others was rearranged to provide a more logical structure of the bill. With only minor revisions, Bill 201 of last year is incorporated in the present Bill 17.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to very briefly summarize the changes in Bill 17 from the present Line Fences Act. Firstly, a line fence will no longer be mandatory in every case, but only when one adjoining owner wants one, in which case he may construct a fence on the boundary line. I would stress that if one owner wants a fence and the other does not, there shall be a fence.

The distinction between occupied and unoccupied land is being removed.

Although this act generally will not extend to unorganized territory, the Lieutenant Governor in Council is being empowered to make regulations in dealing with disputes in such territories. In addition, provision is being made for disputes where one owner's land is in a municipality and the adjoining owner's land is in unorganized territory.

Municipalities will be required to appoint a sufficient number of fence viewers and to fix their per diem rate. When an owner wishes the fence viewer to arbitrate, he will simply notify the municipal clerk, rather than the present circumstances where he has to arrange the thing himself, contact all the fence viewers and the adjoining owner.

The options of the fence viewers in making their awards under this new act are being clarified and broadened. The appeal of either owner from the fence viewer's award will now be to the small claims court rather than to the county or district court, in which case we hope the procedure will be much quicker.

An owner in the process of constructing a fence, pursuant to an award, will be able to enter on to the adjoining land to the extent necessary to do the work. If one owner fails to obey the award and the other owner does the work and wants to recover the value of the work, he will have the fence viewers reconvene to certify the amount owed him by the defaulting owner rather than having to take his action to the small claims court.

In addition to the methods in the existing act for collecting the amount owed him by the defaulting owner, the other owner will be able, if the municipal council so decides by bylaw, to collect the amount immediately from the municipal treasurer, and the municipality will then collect the amounts from the defaulting owner as taxes, with interest.

These are the main features of the new legislation, as distinguished from the present Line Fences Act. Of course, we will be dealing with details of the various clauses as the points are raised, if points are raised by other members of the Legislature, when we deal with the bill clause by clause in the committee of the whole House.

I would indicate that I will be placing two amendments to the bill when we are in committee of the whole House, and I have given copies of both of these amendments to the opposition members.

I would ask the Legislature to support this bill.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, as the parliamentary assistant has indicated, the Line Fences Act has had a considerable amount of discussion over the past year and a half or two. It was introduced on June 22, 1978, and prior to that there was a lot of discussion.

We commend the government, obviously, for the discussions they have had, both with the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and with the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, and specifically with Mr. Donald Rodgers, the association's secretary-treasurer, who has been a tower of strength in trying to suggest a number of very important amendments to this bill, some of which the government has obviously adopted and others which it has, discreetly or indiscreetly, rejected.

In particular, I want to draw attention to a gentleman from Lindsay, Reeve Don McCumber of Emily township, in Victoria county, who spearheaded a special evening at Sir Sandford Fleming College in Lindsay, to discuss the pros and cons of Bill 17. Mr. McCumber, at his great inconvenience, arranged a meeting which about 100 people attended, and the ministry officials tell me that this was one of the best attended and most productive meetings that they had on this particular subject.

I knew you would be glad to hear that, Mr. Speaker, because it is important that our citizens be recognized when they make important contributions to bills. It is important that we single out people like Reeve McCumber. There was no need for him to do this, there was no great pressure on him to do it; nevertheless, at his great inconvenience, he arranged this meeting and, as a result, important amendments were made which the ministry personnel were appreciative of receiving.

In the future I hope that other people will come forward and take active roles of this nature so that the Legislature can benefit by their contributions.

There is an interesting account, I think in Municipal World, given by the editor, Mr. Michael Smithers. He first gave it in 1971, and then at the request of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture he repeated it in a later issue. It is a history of line fences. He has indicated that the story of line fences goes back to the Dark Ages when they had ordinary fences, dividing walls, stockades, hedges, stone fences, wooden fences, wire fences, stumps, concrete, turf and what he calls "ridiculous looking but economical and efficient electric fences today."

So even in the olden days, as we sometimes call them—sometimes the good old days—people had a lot of quarrels and disputes and arguments and disagreements. Something had to be done to try to reduce them, so I suppose they built fences in order to contain their own vigorous energies from boiling over and getting carried away over disputes with their neighbours.

We note that at one time—before 1834—the fence viewers were elected at town meetings, so the whole populace had an opportunity to share in electing the fence viewers. That came up in 1834 when new legislation was passed. Their criterion for choosing these fence viewers at public meetings, to quote Mr. Smithers, was that they had to be "fit and discreet persons to serve the office of fence viewers." I am not sure in which way they had to be fit, whether they had to be physically fit, mentally fit or in some other way. Nevertheless, that is the way they describe them, without having defined the terms.

Mrs. Campbell will appreciate this; I do not recall they said they had to be male.

Mrs. Campbell: That was a foregone conclusion. It still is.

Mr. Epp: Maybe they have more foresight than hindsight, I am not sure.

Anyway, an account of a decision that a Mr. Justice J. McEvoy made at that time is as follows: "The need for fence viewers arose from the fact that disputes were constantly arising about line fences, i.e., fences which separated one man's land from the farm lying adjacent to it. When one settler had fenced his farm on four sides, the next settler came, and by fencing his farm on three sides and adjoining his fence to that of his neighbour, he was quite as well off as the first settler although he had done only three quarters of the amount of work. It became the province of the fence viewers to say what amount the new man should pay for being allowed to use his neighbour's fence."

After a while they felt it was very difficult to assess the amount of money that the original settler had paid for that one side that was now benefiting his new neighbour, so this particular statute was amended by saying that the new farmer did not have to bother paying the original cost but only had to pay his share of the upkeep of the joint fence.

One of the questions that always arises when discussing lands is whether crown lands should be included, or whether they in fact are included. The Interpretation Act tells us that if the crown lands are not expressly stated as being included in the act, then they are excluded. So later on I will be introducing a few amendments, specifically a new section 24 which will exclude some of the crown lands but will include others in sections 22 and 23.

We are told that fence viewers will have to consider what constitutes a lawful fence and in doing so they must take into consideration statutory provisions, municipal by-laws, type and location of the fence in question, and all kinds of precedents and other things. Obviously, we will need very able and knowledgeable people in this field who have important tasks to perform.

In reviewing some early decisions we find that the judges have made a number of decisions regarding the fence viewers' earlier interpretations and decisions. In Caledon township a Squire McLaughlin back in the 1800s ruled that a brush fence—that is a fence made of brush, logs and rocks and so on—to be legal must be "40 feet wide and damned high." Of course, Mr. Speaker, I wouldn't use that word unless it was written here as used by the squire 100 years ago.

Someone else defined a suitable fence as being "horse high, bull strong and skunk tight." Obviously in those times they required things other than we do.

The important aspects of this legislation must be to define the problem and try to resolve it through a process which is relatively simple and fair to all parties concerned. If the problem persists, as it often does, there has to be some kind of appeal process, and this bill permits that process.

I believe this legislation does just that. It is fair, and it provides for a course that persons appointed as fence viewers can follow. If they exercise the wisdom of Solomon, the concern and the humanity of Albert Schweitzer, and the determination of Abraham Lincoln, I am sure we are going to have very good decisions in the future.

Mr. Swart: I am pleased to rise in support of the bill that is before us, although we have some reservations. Certainly the bill itself is a major move forward in the matter of establishing and dividing the cost of line fences among the owners of the land. But it falls really far short of solving all the problems.

I think we all recognize in this House that to farmers this is a major bill. It may be that a large part of the population of this province is not particularly concerned about this bill, but to the farmers it is a very important matter. Therefore, I think it deserves some very close consideration.

In spite of that, it is rather a simple bill and I quite frankly wonder why it took the government so long to get to this point of having the bill before us. Secondly, I wonder why they didn't go a bit further and meet some of the other requests of the farmers and rural municipalities.

For instance, the improvements which have been made in this bill were made only after repeated pressure from the farm organizations and the rural municipalities. The government just seemed reluctant to make any changes in the old act, as much as those changes were needed. This, as we all know, is the third of the bills brought in to revise the Line Fences Act. In fact, it does a bit more than revise the Line Fences Act, it actually replaces it. It is a whole new act.

Even though the government says that the consultations had gone on for months, and even years, the first bill which was brought in, Bill 135, met very few of the requests of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and the Rural Ontario Municipal Association.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture presented a brief to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in November 1978, after the second bill came in. In it, they pointed out that long process that took place. They said: "After many years of discussion and negotiation between the federation, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, ROMA and the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, the position was reached during 1978 whereby it was agreed that most of the recommendations of the federation would be implemented in the new act, save for highway and road fences which would be reserved for treatment under the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act. Subsequent to these discussions and agreement, Bill 135 was produced and presented for implementation in the Legislature."

It goes on to say they were "requested by the previous Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, the Honourable Darcy McKeough, to provide comments regarding the current Bill 135 and the following are detailed comments framed in light of longstanding basic principles regarding line fences and legislation pertaining to them. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture recommends as follows . . ."

Then it goes on to all the principles which they had put forward with regard to the Line Fences Act and which had not been adopted by the government in Bill 135. As a result of that, Bill 201 was brought in, which incorporated some of those changes. Then the present Bill 17, which we have before us, incorporated a few more of those requests but, as the parliamentary assistant well recognizes, it still hasn't met the requests of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture.

I recognize there is some difference in viewpoint, perhaps slight, between the rural municipalities and the federation of agriculture, but where there has been that difference, they have come down on the side of the Rural Ontario Municipal Association rather than the side of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture pointed out that the basic principles underlining the federation's recommendations were first that line fences should only be constructed where there is a demonstrated need. The first bill brought in, Bill 135, made line fences mandatory, but that, of course, has now been changed.

They went on to say: "Another basic principle is that all lands, regardless of the category of the owner, should be subject to the provision of revised Line Fences Act, and this would include the crown and the crown agencies." That was one of their basic principles. That is excluded from even the act we have before us.

They also stated: "Another basic principle is that the Line Fences Act should apply in each and every municipality in the province without reservation." The present act does not apply. The bill we have before us does not apply to every municipality in this province, so municipalities which have passed the bylaw under the Municipal Act can pull themselves out from under even though that municipality may have a great number of farmers within the municipality.

They stated one further principle: "The government should have the same responsibilities for land as any other landowner and should demonstrate good citizenship by subscribing to Ontario's Line Fences Act as it affects their own landholdings." That refers not only to crown land but land owned by municipalities as well. Yet this act before us now does not meet the requests of the federation of agriculture.

I want to deal just briefly with the positive aspects of this act, and there are a substantial number of positive sections in it. It certainly makes a more sensible base for determining where fences shall be constructed; as has already been stated, it does away with the distinction between occupied and unoccupied lands. This was always a sore point: what is occupied land and what is unoccupied land? The only way that could be determined was by the courts. Now it applies to all lands.

Under the former act, line fences must be built between occupied properties, as the parliamentary assistant has pointed out. Now they must be built only if one owner requests them—one of the two owners or perhaps, in some cases, more than two owners. I would point out that the bill as it is before us is very poorly written in that regard, because it is quite ambiguous.

If the parliamentary assistant will look at section 4 of the bill, it speaks of the procedure whereby one landowner may initiate the necessary procedures for getting a fence. He notifies the clerk of the municipality. Then it goes on to state in section 4(2) that the clerk of the municipality shall notify the other owner in the prescribed form and he shall cause "three fence viewers of the locality to arbitrate in the premises." Then, if we go on to section 7, we read that the fence viewers "shall"—note the word "shall"—"make an award in the prescribed form, signed by any two of them, respecting the matters in dispute and the award shall state that a fence shall be constructed and maintained," et cetera.

Then, if we go on to section 14, we find out that it is almost totally contradictory to section 7 because it states, in section 14(1): "Where the fence viewers have attended at premises pursuant to a notice given under section 4(2),"—that's where the clerk notifies them to attend—or certain other sections, ". . . and have decided that no award, certificate, or determination with directions as the case may be, shall be made, they shall prepare their decision in the prescribed form . . ."

The bill says on one hand in section 7 that they must make an award; however, in section 14, the bill clearly states that they have the right to decide that no award shall be made. As I said, those two sections are extremely contradictory. That should be clarified by amendments before this bill is given third reading and becomes an act of this Legislature.

It was a big battle for the Ontario Federation of Agriculture to get the government to decide that it should be the municipalities that give out these notices. They say good fences make good neighbours. I say it perhaps requires a bit more than that. Good fences make good neighbours, and legislation which provides for fairness in paying for and erecting those fences also makes good neighbours. Under the former act of this Legislature where one farmer had to give notice to the other farmer, it really didn't make for good neighbours. It should be done through the municipality.

The present bill recognizes that and does that. But with Bill 135, after all the discussions with the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and with the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, the government brought in a bill that didn't accomplish that—in fact, it left it optional so that a municipality may have opted out if it wished not to give such notices. That has been corrected. That is one of the positive things about this new bill.

The new bill also incorporates to a substantial degree the request of the federation of agriculture that the principle be established in the act that there be an equal division of responsibility, both financially and for construction of line fences. However, once again, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture is not entirely happy with the act as it is written at present because the federation feels it doesn't make that as clear as it could. As a result, we will be bringing in an amendment to that section.

The final positive thing in this act is that it does provide, as the parliamentary assistant has stated, for reasonable and speedy appeal procedures—and that is important—so that the fence can be erected.

As I have already stated, there are some shortcomings in this act; I mentioned two or three of them: the contradiction between sections 7 and 14, and the principle of the 50-50 split of responsibility not being firm enough. In addition, there is the section which provides for the payment by one owner to the other owner of his share of the construction of the fence. The bill we have before us provides that the clerk shall levy that against the taxes of the property if the owner refuses to pay it. The owner may go to court to collect it, but he may also ask the municipality to assess those costs and levy them in taxes. Those of us who know the Municipal Act will realize that it could be five years before he gets the money out of it. It might even come to a tax sale before he recovers his money.

It is somewhat significant in this bill that when it comes to payment of the judge who sits to hear the appeal, he shall be paid by the municipality. He does not collect from either side. The bill makes sure that the judge gets his money, but the farmer who may have invested several hundreds of dollars in a line fence could wait for six months, a year, two years or five years to get his money.

There has been such a substantial shift of responsibility to the municipalities—the government has gone so far in other fields in providing that it is a municipal clerk who will give the notices; it is the municipality that will pay the judge—in fact, in all fields the responsibility rests on the municipality, except in this one.

The bill does provide, of course, that a municipality may pass a bylaw whereby it may pay this money immediately over to the fence bureau, but I suggest that is opting out. The minister did that too in the original bill with regard to the notices; the municipality could pass a bylaw stating they did not have to give out the notices. I suggest the minister should have gone all the way on this too and made it reasonable and sensible that, once that levy is put against the property, the municipality should pay that money over to the farmer who has spent it on behalf of the other property owner—half of it as been spent on behalf of the other property owner.

Another shortcoming of this bill, as already mentioned, is that the Line Fences Act does not apply to lands where a municipality has passed a bylaw under section 354(1) (21) of the Municipal Act. I am sure the parliamentary assistant, who was in municipal government for quite a number of years, will realize that section of the act was passed primarily for urban municipalities. That section of the act permits municipalities to pass bylaws "for prescribing the height and description of lawful fences; for prescribing the height and description of and the manner of maintaining, keeping up and laying down, fences along highways or parts thereof, and for making compensation for the increased expenses, if any, to persons required so to maintain, keep up or lay down any such fence; [and] for determining how the cost of division fences shall be apportioned, and for providing that any amount so apportioned shall be recoverable under the Summary Convictions Act, provided that "until a bylaw is passed, the Line Fences Act applies."

I repeat that this is intended primarily for urban municipalities. That is the purpose of this section of the Municipal Act.

We know that across this province, particularly with regional governments being formed in the last 10 years, there are great numbers of regional municipalities which have an urban core but where the majority of the area within such municipalities is still rural. I could give you the example of St. Catharines where there is a population of 120,000. Of that 120,000, 119,000 are urban and yet there's a large rural area. The same thing is true of Niagara Falls. The same thing is true of Welland. The same thing is true of Thorold and when we get down to the Ottawa region, or wherever there are regions, this is the situation.

It seems to me if the primary intent of the Line Fences Act is to apply to line fences between agricultural lands, then it should apply to all agricultural lands in the province. We will be moving such an amendment.

Although there is a vague reference in this act under section 26, and my colleague from Algoma (Mr. Wildman) will be speaking further on this, which provides that the minister may make regulations which apply to unorganized territories, it just leaves it wide open. It doesn't provide any procedures at all. It seems to me where farm land exists in the unorganized territories, the principle of this act should apply. In our amendments we will endeavour to bring that about.

The changes I have spoken of, I submit to this Legislature, are desirable, and we intend to see these changes are brought about when this goes to committee. I want to say we put out our amendments some three weeks ago, when we expected this bill would be up rather shortly, and gave them to the two other parties in this House. I'm glad to see the Liberal Party, although they may have changed the wording slightly, have submitted amendments of their own which conform with ours. They agree with at least some of our amendments. Therefore, we can hope for some change.

In the future, on bills for which I have some responsibility, I just want to assure the members on the right, I'm going to do this more often. Perhaps if it gives them time to study them and to look at them closely, they will be supporting more of the policy of the NDP. If they do, that will be very much to their credit.

As I say, we will be supporting this bill in principle and ask that it go to committee of the House where we will be presenting these amendments to make rather a dramatic improvement in the bill, which in itself is an improvement over the old act.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, my purpose is clarification on Bill 17 from the parliamentary assistant, and the member for Welland-Thorold has raised it in regard to urban dwellers. One of the problems a member is often called about is in regard to fences between neighbours in an urban centre or in an urban community. That is a dispute about what type of fence they are going to put up. One may want wire mesh fence, another may want a privacy fence. Is there any procedure that will give the fence viewers a right to make a decision?

The other one could apply either to urban or rural. That is where a surveyor has gone in to a property that has been established for many years by a fence and found the fence is in the wrong place according to the original survey. There is such a thing as possessory rights. I'm wondering, rather than through the courts, is there any route for the fence viewers? Could a board be established to correct this rather than have to go to long civil litigation?

Many times, it happens that a person bought a property years ago without a proper survey. This was quite common. Now it's more common to have it surveyed before you purchase it. They find the fences anywhere—one foot, two feet, three feet out of the original boundaries. It's my understanding that if it has been like that for 10 years, through possessory rights you have the ownership. I would just like clarification of those two issues.

Mr. Wildman: I rise in support of this bill, and in agreement with my colleague from Welland-Thorold, who has indicated a number of proposed amendments which we will be putting forward when the bill reaches committee stage.

It has been said that farmers know that good fences make good neighbours. I think, unfortunately, this motto has been ignored by many people who have been moving into rural areas over the last few years, especially as many of them are no longer actively farming and these non-farming residents don't understand the need for good fencing.

There have been problems in my riding where horses have been getting out of their pastures into adjoining properties where farmers have sown crops, and they have ruined the crops and so on. I have come across other situations where non-resident owners of property have let their fences go into disrepair and the adjoining property owner has had a very difficult time in determining who is responsible for maintaining those fences and ensuring that, in such a situation, it isn't his responsibility if his own livestock are found wandering on the road. Perhaps he could be liable for the expenses that might be incurred if an accident were to happen because his livestock had got out when someone else's fence had not been repaired.

This bill is very important to the rural area of Algoma and, as a result, during the period of review by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, I have had some contact, over the last few years, with the officials involved with the preparation of the legislation. I especially welcome the fact that the ambiguity over occupied and unoccupied land is dealt with in this bill. That was one of the major problems in determining whether land which was owned privately, but which was not used or not farmed, constituted occupied or unoccupied land, and I think the changes in this bill will deal with that problem.

I hope the ambiguity will no longer be in existence and we will have a situation where people who do not actively use their land will still have some responsibility, or can be shown to have some responsibility for maintaining their fences. So I welcome the change that removes that distinction.

I do question the exemptions that have been proposed for municipalities, school boards and for the provincial government, although I know they could make separate agreements. I welcome the fact that Ontario Hydro will be required to come under the provisions of the act, but if this change could be made in Bill 17 from the previous Bill 135, I wonder why other public institutions could not also have been brought under the regulations of this bill.

There are a couple of other things I was worried about in the previous bill as introduced into the House. For instance, under that bill the financial considerations of the parties involved could be taken into account by the fence viewers in determining the responsibility for the maintenance of the fence or repair of the fence. I know a lot of objections were raised and that has now been removed.

Apparently, however, fence viewers will now be able to take into account other factors. I wonder what that means—"other factors." Is that just a euphemism for the pecuniary considerations that were in the previous bill? I wonder what that means, and I hope that can be clarified because that is a pretty wide statement if one can take other factors into account. What happens if it is found under ordinary circumstances that a particular fence is the responsibility of a particular landowner, but because of some other factor it is decided that he should not have to pay for the maintenance or the repair of that fence? That is a very wide thing and I would like that clarified.

My colleague from Welland-Thorold mentioned one of my main concerns in relation to this legislation, because as a northern member I have a large area of my riding which is unorganized municipality. A lot of members, even those from northern Ontario, who come from urban centres do not understand the problems of unorganized territory. Certainly I find that a lot of members in southern Ontario do not understand them. As a matter of fact, many of them do not even know what is meant by the term "unorganized territory."

A few years ago I wrote to the then minister, the Honourable Darcy McKeough, and pointed out to him that right now under the present law the line-fences regulations cannot be enforced at all in unorganized areas. There just is no provision under the present law for this kind of treatment of a problem on fences. Why there should be a difference I fail to see. If we have active farmers in unorganized areas they should have the same protections as their friends and neighbours in municipally organized areas.

I pointed that out to him some years ago. At the time, Mr. McKeough wrote back to me and said he was thankful I had pointed out this deficiency in the present law. His officials who were reviewing the legislation and preparing changes would take that into account, this 'deficiency'—that was the word he used—would be considered as part of that review and it would be dealt with in the new law.

When Bill 135 was introduced into the Legislature it did not have anything about unorganized areas in it. I could not understand that, considering what Mr. McKeough had said previously, so I wrote back and said, "Look, you told me you were going to deal with this and you didn't." Subsequently I had conversations with the individuals in the ministry who are preparing the legislation. They said it had been an inadvertent oversight, they certainly were interested in having this legislation apply to unorganized areas and when they introduced the new legislation it would deal with that matter.

They asked me, as a matter of fact, if I could suggest any methods that could be used to have this legislation apply to unorganized areas. In order to get some information on that I wrote to the agricultural committee—it is called the development committee in Algoma, because after all these years we are still developing agriculture in Algoma. I asked them for some advice. Most of their members are from municipally organized areas but they certainly understood the problems of the unorganized areas. Many of their neighbours are living in unorganized areas. They wrote back and indicated that perhaps the local roads boards could be involved and administer the act in their areas.

I understood why they said that. They wanted to have local people who knew the situation in the area dealing with the problem. However, I doubt that the local roads boards would like to take on that area of responsibility. They are set up specifically to deal with problems of municipal roads in unorganized areas and, really, they have a full-time job at that, as volunteers. So I doubt that they could do it.

I looked at some other examples. I looked at other provincial programs that are administered by municipalities in organized areas and said, "Okay, how do these apply to unorganized areas?" I looked at the Ontario Home Renewal Program and found that Ministry of Northern Affairs officers throughout northern Ontario administer that program much as a municipal clerk would administer it in a municipality. So I suggested to the ministry that they might set up a situation where the Northern Affairs officers would go to the local community in the unorganized area to get names for fence viewers and have them appointed. The Northern Affairs officer would carry out the functions of the clerk, and the local people would be able to carry out the functions of the fence viewers.

I suggested that to the ministry. I also suggested that perhaps they could look at the regional school boards, although I anticipated the school boards wouldn't be too interested in doing this. But one never knows—they carry out the functions of recreation committees and so on that would normally be under municipalities in unorganized areas.

But when we get this bill back, all it says is, under section 2, "The Lieutenant Governor in Council may make regulations to provide for determining how the cost of line fences marking the boundary between the land situate in territory without municipal organization shall be apportioned and for providing for the manner in which any amount so apportioned shall be recoverable."

All that tells me is that they couldn't figure out how to do it and they were getting a lot of criticism about how long it has taken to have this review. I realize they wanted to get the opinions of the farmers' organizations and the municipalities, et cetera, before they brought in the final legislation, and that has taken a long time. But they didn't want to hold it up any more until they could figure out how this bill applied to unorganized areas.

They haven't figured it out, so they put in this vague comment that the Lieutenant Governor in Council will decide how it is going to be done under regulations. I don't think that is good enough. I think the farmers of the unorganized areas have a right, when this legislation is proposed, to see how it is going to operate in their area, and not to have it left simply to regulations. How are they going to know whether they agree with what is being proposed if they don't know what is being proposed?

Obviously the ministry doesn't know what is being proposed. If they did, they would have put it in the act. Maybe my suggestions weren't adequate; that is quite possible. Maybe they wouldn't be workable. Frankly, I don't see why the Ministry of Northern Affairs can't get involved. They like to say they are a co-ordinating ministry. Maybe my suggestions are not workable, but why on earth couldn't the minister come up with something better than this?

As I said, I am supporting this bill. But when it comes to committee, we are going to be suggesting amendments as to how it will operate in unorganized areas. We don't want it left to regulations. If government can't figure out how to do it, we can. We are going to be presenting those amendments and we hope the government will accept them. Obviously, it hasn't been able to figure out how to do it.

Mr. Riddell: I am pleased to participate in this debate on an act to revise the Line Fences Act and to support the bill in principle.

I listened very carefully to the comments made by both the member for Welland-Thorold and the member for Algoma. I really think they are living in the past if they suggest that good fences make good neighbours in this day and age. There are many specialized farmers who are going to be very displeased that they are going to put up half a fence to keep in their neighbours' livestock. I will have more to say about that a little later on. But today good fences will not make good neighbours.

There has been a genuine concern on the part of many farmers, farm organizations and municipal organizations such as ROMA, the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, about the existing line-fences legislation. There is no question that revisions to the present act were necessary in order to deal with present-day circumstances. The farming industry has become one of specialization, and in those areas where there is concentrated cash-crop farming and livestock farming where the animals are reared in confinement, it can be argued that line fences should only be constructed where there is a demonstrated need.

The current act makes line fences mandatory, whereas the revised act recognizes that line fences are not always needed but provides the means to settle disputes where there is a demonstrated need.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the member, but there are a number of other private conversations going on and they are making the member for Huron-Middlesex shout.

Mr. Riddell: That's right.

Mr. Conway: I thought he was talking to the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt).

Mr. Riddell: If you can't get some order in here I'll break into a chant and I can assure you then that—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Don't do it, we give up.

Mr. Riddell: A simple and quicker method for settling fencing disputes in both rural and urban areas, and in agricultural and non-agricultural areas was needed, and one that ensures that the interests of each of the adjoining owners are dealt with equitably.

Where adjoining owners cannot reach agreement, one owner may simply notify the clerk of the local municipality that he wants the fence viewers to arbitrate the dispute. The fence viewers will have been appointed by the municipal council by bylaw and, when notified by the clerk, they will examine the premises and if required by either adjoining owner they shall hear evidence and may examine the owners and their witnesses on oath. The fence viewers will make an award respecting the matters in dispute, and the award shall specify what portion of the fence each adjoining owner shall construct, reconstruct or repair as the case may be.

It is my understanding that the minister has amended the clause which states that the award shall specify that the adjoining owner named shall construct, reconstruct or repair, as the case may be, and maintain and keep up the whole fence. This has been a very contentious issue with the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, and I must agree that the clause is somewhat redundant as the two previous clauses permit the fence viewers to designate whatever portion of the fence each adjoining owner shall construct, reconstruct or repair and maintain as the fence viewers consider just.

There is also a question in my mind whether an owner should be relieved of all responsibility to build or repair or maintain a fence where it was deemed that one was necessary, yet this section of the bill would have given the fence viewers authority to place the entire onus on one of the adjoining landowners.

I'm sure that this section of the act was included as the minister has no doubt received correspondence from farmers throughout Ontario who have specialized farming operations and feel that the need for fencing is greatly reduced. Cash-crop farmers will argue that they do not require fences and there is no question that today most dairy and beef farmers run their operation without the need of fencing as either feedlots are used for beef or confinement to a small five or 10-acre parcel for dairy herds.

The argument that is put forward is that the farmer operating the feedlot or confinement dairy operation has to pay the total cost for housing and equipment necessary to operate his farm. Therefore, if another farmer decides that it is to his benefit to run his cattle over the land, it should be his responsibility to pay the total cost of retaining his animals on his own property by fencing or any other suitable means, and he should not expect to have a portion of his production costs subsidized by his neighbour.

This brings me back to the comment that was made by the two earlier speakers who suggest that good fences are going to make good neighbours. That is simply not the case; I could show them letters that I've received from cash-crop farmers who are very much dissatisfied with the bill and the fact that they are going to have to pay towards keeping up a portion of a fence.

The question that arises, of course, is what responsibility does the neighbour assume if he decides to go into cattle after the adjoining landowner built the new fence? This, of course, could be easily resolved by calling in the fence viewers to arbitrate the dispute if necessary so that the neighbour would pay one half of the construction costs. The owner building the original fence could be required to produce the invoices showing the cost of materials, with an added allowance for labour and any equipment utilized, and then a depreciation allowance could be deducted.

Ontario Hydro utilizes a similar formula if a customer has a three-phase hydro line built for his own needs and at some future date a neighbour requires service from the line or Ontario Hydro needs the line extended.

I believe the bill, in its amended form, should allay the fears of those farmers who have specialized and do not need a fence. The fence viewers, I am sure, will take all matters into consideration and apportion the costs to each owner accordingly.

There is an appeal procedure whereby an owner dissatisfied with the award may appeal to a judge of the small claims court for the territory division in which the land is located. The judge shall hear and determine the appeal and may set aside, alter or affirm the award, or correct any error. He may examine the parties and their witnesses on oath and he may inspect the premises and he may order payment of costs by the other party and fix the amount of the costs. The decision of the judge is final and the award as altered or affirmed shall be dealt with in all respect as it would have been if it had not been appealed.

[10:15]

The difficulty may be the appointment of fence viewers, as they will be given a great deal more responsibility when this act is passed than with the original act. Previously the fence viewers could only recommend after surveying the situation, and the municipal council could choose to ignore the recommendation or simply not follow through on the recommendations, which did nothing but frustrate the fence viewers and prolong the dispute between the adjoining land owners. This bill has far more teeth in it and all the necessary ingredients to settle a dispute or at least to ensure that a fence will be built or repaired, even though the landowners may continue to disagree.

Under the proposed new act, the fence viewers will be able to divide responsibilities on a legal basis, which is the tradition in many municipalities. The viewers will also have the option of making one owner responsible for a greater portion of the fence than the other, but the amended section will not permit the viewers to make one owner responsible for the entire fence. Such decisions by the fence viewers will be dependent on the particular circumstances of the two owners involved in the dispute.

The purpose of clearly spelling out the viewers' options is to make the act more flexible in dealing with the wide variety of modern-day circumstances in both rural and urban areas.

Another concern on the part of landowners and farm organizations is the exemption of land owned by the corporation of a municipality or a local board within the meaning of the Municipal Affairs Act, and crown land or land owned by a crown agency. We intend to amend this section of the act binding on the crown in right of Ontario and on a crown agency within the meaning of the Crown Agency Act.

I understand from the member for Wellingborough (Mr. Swart) that he has a number of amendments he is going to be introducing. He suggested that he has sent these amendments to us—which he did; we had a look at the amendments and I'm going to tell him that many of the amendments we are not going to support. I'm also going to tell him that we had our amendments set down long before he ever thought of making any amendments.

Mr. Swart: Three weeks after.

Mr. Riddell: So he can't give us that nonsense that by sending amendments over to us he has in any way influenced our decision.

Mr. Roy: He thinks he's the only one who has an original idea.

Mr. Riddell: I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that our amendments will no doubt be supported in whole by the New Democratic Party, but some of their amendments are redundant or are about matters adequately covered in the bill, and I am just going to tell them right now that there are many of their amendments we are not going to support, so they may just as well be prepared for that.

Mr. Swart: The federation of agriculture is in support of them.

Mr. Roy: If your amendments were as good as ours, we'd support all of them.

Mr. Swart: You'll do a flip-flop.

Mr. Riddell: We also intend to amend the act to make it apply to lands other than lands that constitute a public highway owned by a municipality and apply to lands owned by a local board within the meaning of the Municipal Affairs Act. We feel that what is fair for one is fair for the other, and if the crown or a municipality is going to compete with the private landowners in purchasing land, then they should be responsible for their fair portion of the fence. We feel we have an excellent amendment which will cover this, making the crown responsible for no more than 50 per cent of the fence. This, of course, applies to crown land that is patented; as far as unpatented land is concerned we left that alone for the time being.

Mr. Roy: A very sensible amendment.

Mr. Riddell: I know the minister has been made aware of the concern of many farmers about the fencing responsibilities of government and government agencies, and I know the government is reluctant to include lands of provincial and municipal governments as it believes that the potential cost burden to the taxpayers of making all such land subject to the act would be too heavy. I don't believe this to be the case, considering that lands that constitute a public highway will be exempt.

We are all aware, of course, that provincial legislation cannot be binding on the federal government and the land of the government of Canada and its agencies is therefore exempt. In addition, the fencing responsibilities of the national railway companies are set out in the Canada Railway Act.

All things considered, I think it is a good bill and I commend the minister for bringing it forward. In developing the legislation, I know the minister has not been able to incorporate every recommendation that was submitted by individuals and organizations. However, the bill does reflect the many agreements and compromises reached during the discussion and I believe it will receive very considerable support from interested residents, municipalities and associations.

I do hope the bill will be passed without further delay, as this is the time of year when farmers endeavour to construct or repair fences in order to retain the livestock which will be let out to pasture, and this will likely take place within the next week or two. It is a bill which is long overdue and I am pleased to see that it has just about reached fruition.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me this opportunity to express some comments on this great bill.

Mr. Isaacs: Of course I wholeheartedly support the comments made by my colleagues, the members for Welland-Thorold and Algoma. I am always amazed by the convoluted manner in which the members on my right seem to find a way of avoiding supporting some amendments which are incredibly sensible and incredibly straightforward proposed by the member for Welland-Thorold.

On the principle of the bill I am concerned first of all about the very simple matter of the title. It seems to me, through reading a number of other acts that relate to fences, and the identification of boundaries between property, that even in this act we generally refer to "fences"; in the Municipal Act we talk about "fences" or "division fences" or "boundary fences," and there are very few places, even in the act before us now, where we talk about a "line fence." I wonder how many members of the public, those who are going to be affected by legislation of this kind, realize what a line fence is.

Mr. Roy: He knows.

Mr. Ruston: What is it? Do you know?

Mr. Isaacs: I would have suggested to the parliamentary assistant and to the minister that while they were bringing this ancient and very well-intentioned act up to date, they might have considered very seriously bringing the title up to date so that the general public, the users of this legislation, would find it in simple language and find that it reflected their needs as well as much other legislation in the province.

On the matter of urban areas, I am very pleased that the parliamentary assistant mentioned he had consulted with representatives of urban municipalities. It is a pity, however, that consultation has led to the insertion into this act of the ability for a municipality to avoid completely its responsibility to provide the provisions of the act both to agricultural users and to occupants of residential land.

The problem the member for Welland-Thorold outlined, that of very large municipalities that contain both urban and rural portions, is one that has become increasingly common in this province with the introduction of regional government. In almost every one of those municipalities the urban portion is the controlling portion in terms of votes on the municipal council. It is a great pity the government, in introducing this bill, didn't recognize that fact and recognize that provisions must be made both for urban residents and for rural residents in terms of the provision of fences, instead of allowing the municipality to annul completely the provisions of this act.

The intent of this act is an excellent one in that arbitration shall be applied in order to keep disputes out of the court. Without going on at great length, I think it a pity the government doesn't recognize that principle in many other acts, so that we have not only fence viewers—and that is another archaic term—but also arbitrators who are able to arbitrate disputes between neighbours whenever those arise and about whatever circumstances those arise.

Our court system, particularly our bylaw court system, is incredibly overloaded with neighbourhood disputes. I think that more acts of this kind would be a very great step forward in terms of solving these disputes in a mutually amicable way.

One last comment, Mr. Speaker. There is a provision in this act that the municipality shall have the right to fix the per diem payments made to the fence viewers. It is an excellent provision, one that is not being recognized by this government in many other areas and I would specifically draw to their attention the matter of fixing fees for applications to committees of adjustment, where the government has consistently not taken action that is being requested by municipalities.

I think we're in a situation where we need what almost amounts to a bill of rights for municipalities, so that instead of being bound by the incredibly complex provisions of the Municipal Act—and much other legislation where reference is always having to be made to an act to find out what rights a municipality has—if we could have a very clear and succinct statement from this government as to the powers of municipal government in Ontario, then we would be making a big step forward and be putting municipal government in the position many municipally elected officials would like to see when they talk about enshrining municipal government in the constitution.

That, to my mind, is not the way to go but I think the principle which underlies that is similar to the one which underlies this bill, as I've already mentioned, and one that the government would do very well to take to heart.

I will certainly be supporting the amendments that the member for Welland-Thorold proposes and I hope those members to my right will look at them very seriously and recognize that the act will be a better act if they are approved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member for Grey. Does the honourable member have some lengthy remarks to make regarding this bill or can he complete them in two minutes?

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, I have been used to revising line fences in a hurry before, so I guess I'll try to finish in the two minutes that are left.

There are just a couple of points I want to make here. I am glad to see this bill coming in because in the past, if a neighbour wouldn't fix his fence, there was no way that one could really force him to and recover the costs. This legislation is going to allow you to fix the fence and put the costs on the municipality to collect on its taxes. I think this is good but I also think the bill would be better if the municipality paid the owner who constructed the fence immediately, rather than wait until it is collected on his taxes. This bill will allow a municipality to do that if they want to which would mean that as it stands right now, parts of Ontario would be giving the money directly to the farmer who built the fence, and in other areas he'd have to wait until the municipality collected it. I think it would be better if the bill were changed to allow them to collect it from the municipality right at the start.

I have received several complaints in my area where we have a lot of government-owned land, by Natural Resources, the Niagara Escarpment Commission, conservation authorities, et cetera. In this bill, they are going to be exempt. I certainly do not agree with this. A resolution has been sent to the provincial Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) from Nottawasaga township to this effect. I have had a constituent from Euphrasia township who had problems with the Ministry of Natural Resources for not keeping up its half of the fence. I felt it was very bad to leave them out of the bill because, if government is going to compete with a private landowner, or a private farmer to buy land and become landowners, then it must accept the responsibility of being a landowner just as anyone else and there's no way that it should be exempt from the act. So, as has been stated, we will be making an amendment to the bill to bring in crown land and municipalities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. It is now 10:30 o'clock; perhaps the honourable member should adjourn the debate.

Mr. McKessock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to say, as has been stated before, good fences do make good neighbours, and good neighbours make good fences. If that is adhered to, we really don't have to consult this act at all.

[10:30]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is 10:30; does the House wish to continue further to complete second reading or not?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, I would like second reading to be completed tonight, especially in view of the fact that Reeve Darby of Tiny township, who is representing the Rural Ontario Municipal Association, is here to watch this debate; I am sure he wants the second reading to be done.

A number of questions have been raised to which I would like to reply. If the members who raised them are satisfied, I will ask that second reading now be given. I will reply to all those questions when we reach committee of the whole, if that is acceptable to the House. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the motion for second reading be now put.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

The House adjourned at 10:31 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MAY 25, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, last night I had the privilege of meeting the council of the township of Field and outlining our offer of support to re-establish community life in the flood-devastated area. As many members know, the village of Field is a settlement of more than 300 residents approximately 22 kilometres northwest of Sturgeon Falls. It was almost completely inundated when the Sturgeon River overflowed early this month and all 94 homes in the community had to be evacuated.

Following the Premier's (Mr. Davis) visit there at the height of the flood—

Mr. T. P. Reid: The water receded.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —it was declared a disaster area and the province agreed to provide $4 for each $1 raised through public subscription. We've all been very gratified by the sympathetic response to the Field tragedy from across Canada, and particularly from communities like Cobalt which came through similar ordeals in the past.

In considering re-establishment of the community, the council of the township of Field took into account the vulnerable position of homes located on the flood plain of the Sturgeon River and decided it was preferable to relocate the townsite on higher ground rather than to develop extraordinary flood control works. They asked the government to help with the cost of flood-related services over the past month and for assistance with the relocation program. Last night on behalf of the government, I was able to reassure them of both.

On the first question my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry), has undertaken to provide up to $190,000 to the municipalities of Field, Springer and Caldwell townships and the town of Sturgeon Falls toward extra costs they face as a result of the flood. My colleague, the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), is acquiring a number of mobile homes which will be located on government-owned land at Sturgeon Falls for use as temporary housing for the displaced families which have not found accommodation elsewhere.

At the same time, my colleagues, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) and the Minister of Housing, will help the township to acquire and develop a new townsite that it has selected above the flood plain and to provide enough serviced half-acre lots to handle the relocations.

Each home owner of residential property on the flood plain, which includes those in the village of Field as well as Crystal Falls and River Valley, will be given a new serviced lot in return for title to his present property, that is a lot-for-lot exchange. Where it is feasible or practical, they will be able to move their existing houses to their new lots at our expense. Where homes are damaged or unsuitable for relocation, we will purchase them at a fair market value, established before the flood, and the owners can rebuild on their lots in the new townsite or elsewhere.

In order to ensure that the victims of this misfortune are not further crippled in finding alternative housing, we plan special assistance for those with homes of lower-than-normal value. To do this, we will provide up to $5,000 in special funding on top of the price of any house whose fair market value, determined by independent appraisers, is less than $20,000. For example, the owner of a house valued at $12,000 would receive the full amount to bring the price to $17,000, while the owner of a house valued at $18,000 would receive $2,000 to reach the $20,000 ceiling.

In order to facilitate this program and to minimize hardship and delay, the government has designated Herb Aiken, my assistant deputy minister for northeastern Ontario, as disaster relief co-ordinator to ensure that all the government's resources are readily accessible to the council and residents of Field.

As I said, I have already outlined our response to the council. Mr. Aiken will attend a meeting of residents on Saturday morning to respond to their concerns. At the same time, along with a number of my cabinet colleagues, I will meet here Tuesday with the owners of the Field lumber company, Field Lumber (1956) Limited, to see how we can assist them to overcome the ravages of the floods on their operation, which is such an essential part of that community.

Finally, I would like to say a brief word about our admiration for the municipal officials in west Nipissing and the people of Field who have suffered this appalling misfortune with great fortitude, courage and foresight. What we are seeing from them is a marvellous demonstration of the human spirit. I think we in this House are honoured to be able to help them to face the future with confidence.

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT BILL

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, because of the importance of one of the amendments that I propose to introduce later today to the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act, I would like to outline it in some detail. This amendment will change the definition of "public transportation" to allow my ministry to provide subsidies for municipalities to provide transportation facilities for the physically handicapped.

As I mentioned last March, this program is slated to get under way on July 1. The necessary background material has been completed and is being distributed to all municipalities. As this is a new and innovative program, we expect it will take up to three years to mature. During that period, we expect between 60 and 80 municipalities to take advantage of the subsidy and start their own program.

The very real need for this type of service was recognized some time ago and, as a result, over the past two or three years we have been carrying out experimental services in Metro Toronto, Ottawa-Carleton, Sault Ste. Marie, Peterborough and Chatham. They have proven both the viability of the program and our choice of specialized mini-buses and vans as well as cars, which provide more immediate mobility than would be possible by modifying existing transit vehicles.

Because we want to enable municipalities to provide a service that is comparable to regular transit service, in spite of the substantially higher unit costs, we will be subsidizing them for 50 per cent of these costs, up to a limit rated on a per capita basis. To make this program as practical as possible, we are giving the municipalities the option of operating the service themselves or contracting it out. In addition, neither special donations to the service nor the value of volunteer services provided to the municipality will be used to diminish the province's contribution. To ensure that all municipalities can avail themselves of this subsidy, financial assistance will also be available to municipalities which do not operate conventional transit services.

I believe this subsidy program will go a long way toward meeting the needs of the physically handicapped who are restricted in their choice of transportation and, consequently, their lifestyle. It will increase their opportunity for employment, while providing access to recreational and social activities that so many of us take for granted. We have received a number of very complimentary letters from organizations dealing with the physically disabled in appreciation of this move to improve the mobility of this segment of our population.

There is one other amendment in this act that I would also like to mention briefly. It gives the minister or the appropriate road authority more flexibility in using a variety of suitable reflectorized or illuminated signs where detours are in effect on construction and maintenance projects. This amendment will eliminate the requirement for closed road signs at simple detours, which confuse motorists and contribute to traffic congestion in construction zones.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would like to review, for the benefit of the honourable members, a number of issues which have been raised over the past few weeks concerning the defective boilers built by Babcock and Wilcox Canada Limited for the Pickering B nuclear generating station.

The issues raised appear to fall into the following categories:

First: What are the defects? How were they discovered? What measures are being taken to correct them and ensure they do not occur again?

Second: Why was Babcock and Wilcox chosen for this contract and how?

Third: Who is responsible for the cost of repairing the defects?

In order to put my subsequent comments in context, I should explain there are 12 boilers for each of Pickering B's four reactor units and 2,600 half-inch diameter, thin-walled tubes in each boiler. The length of the tubing in each boiler totals 26 miles, while the boilers are nearly 47 feet high and weigh 91½ tons.

In late 1978, Ontario Hydro began using a new technique for testing the tube bundles in the boilers of its nuclear reactors for micro defects. While using this new technique to test the recently installed boilers of reactor unit five at Pickering B, Ontario Hydro personnel discovered a partial blockage of some of the tubes. Following this discovery, work was stopped in mid-December 1978 pending investigation of the cause of the blockage. At that time, 32 boilers had been delivered to Pickering B.

In order for Ontario Hydro and Babcock and Wilcox to thoroughly investigate the cause of the blockage, the boiler shell and half shroud were removed from boiler number 33 to expose the tube bundle. A number of boiler tubes were found to be damaged through distortion of some of the baffle plates. I should emphasize this damage occurred after the boilers were fully assembled. Careful inspection during assembly ensured no damage had taken place up to that point.

The final step in the manufacturing process is to remove, by heat treatment, the residual stresses in the heavy metal shell of the boiler resulting from welding.

Intensive study of boiler 33 which had undergone heat treatment and boiler 34 which had not, indicated the damage had occurred during this heat treatment and all of the 32 boilers already delivered to Pickering B were probably damaged in the same way. As a result of investigations it has conducted, Ontario Hydro is satisfied the tube defects were not present in the boilers at Pickering A and Bruce A.

Ontario Hydro advised Babcock and Wilcox on April 17 that under the terms of the contract the 32 boilers supplied for Pickering B were unacceptable, and agreed with the manufacturer's recommendation that they be returned to be rebuilt under shop conditions to meet the specifications. These specifications, of course, will have to be met on the remaining 16 boilers. Ontario Hydro has advised the Atomic Energy Control Board of the discovery of the defects and of the arrangements it has made with Babcock and Wilcox to correct the defects.

Ontario Hydro has set up a project team to work with Babcock and Wilcox to ensure the completion of all the boilers as quickly as possible. This team, among other responsibilities, will perform manufacturing surveillance activities at Babcock and Wilcox's plant, will ensure priorities are established for all work being performed by Babcock and Wilcox for Ontario Hydro and will provide progress reports at regular intervals.

Let me now turn to the second category of issues, namely: Why was Babcock and Wilcox chosen for this contract, and how?

Babcock and Wilcox originally won the contracts to build the boilers for Pickering A and Bruce A in competitive tenders, in 1965 and 1970 respectively. For reasons of economy, efficiency and operating standardization, the boilers for Pickering B, which are virtually duplicates of those for Pickering A, were ordered from Babcock and Wilcox without competitive tenders in 1974.

[10:15]

The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) asked yesterday whether Montreal Locomotive Works of Quebec, for instance, was also capable of making the Pickering B boilers. In reply I am informed that at the time that orders for these boilers were being placed in 1973 and 1974, Babcock and Wilcox was the only company in Canada which had the necessary manufacturing facilities in place to construct and manufacture this type of boiler. Other companies were, of course, interested but would have had to significantly upgrade their facilities.

Mr. Speaker, with respect to whether a performance bond should have been required, I am advised that it is not the normal practice in the industry to require a performance bond from companies which build this type of sophisticated equipment, unlike the normal practice in the construction industry where a performance bond is required from the contractor. Ontario Hydro has a prequalification system to review the companies it deals with to ensure that they have resources and capability to meet Ontario Hydro's requirements satisfactorily.

Babcock and Wilcox is a reputable boiler supplier and has been supplying this type of equipment to Ontario Hydro, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and others for many years.

I would now like to turn to the third category of issues, namely, who is responsible for the cost of repairs?

Ontario Hydro's position is that the boilers supplied by Babcock and Wilcox to date are unacceptable and that the cost of repairing the defects in the boilers is the responsibility of Babcock and Wilcox. As I understand it, Babcock and Wilcox's position is that the responsibility for the defects in the boilers does not lie solely with them and that, as a result, they should not be solely responsible for the cost of repairing the defects. Clearly, this is a complex and difficult legal question which will require considerable discussion before it is ultimately resolved.

Discussions are currently under way between senior officials from Ontario Hydro and Babcock and Wilcox to determine the extent of the damage to the boilers and the liabilities and responsibilities of the parties. In view of the complexity of the questions involved, it would be inappropriate for me to comment further. I will, of course, inform the House when negotiations are complete.

The Leader of the Opposition has requested that Ontario Hydro's contract with Babcock and Wilcox be tabled in this Legislature. In general, I am in full agreement with tabling any documents other than those relating to cabinet and personnel matters. In fact, Ontario Hydro's commercial contracts have been tabled in the past, including the Denison, Preston and Gulf Minerals uranium contracts.

However, as a matter of general practice one has to balance off the public's right to know with the commercial confidential nature of such contracts and the potential adverse effects which could result for Hydro and the electrical consumers of this province if the details of commercial contracts are available to its other suppliers on an indiscriminate basis.

It would seem to me that there is a larger issue which must be addressed first. Namely, should commercial contracts entered into by Ontario Hydro be freely available to any individual? That kind of question, in so far as it relates to a public corporation, is best addressed within the context of the terms of reference of the Royal Commission on the Freedom of Information and Individual Privacy. I trust that the honourable member will agree with me that it is important for this basic principle to be established first so that the interests of the electrical consumers of this province are not inadvertently jeopardized.

In the meantime, I have asked Ontario Hydro to make the contract available to the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs on the same basis as it is making available information on nuclear reactor safety. The contract will be delivered to the counsel to the select committee early next week.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy on the statement that he has just made. There are really three areas that I wish to take up with him; other members may wish to take up other matters, of course. The three areas are the failure to call tenders; the question of who will pay now that the boilers are defective; and, whether the contracts should be tabled in the House.

Perhaps I could start by asking about the failure to call tenders. The minister suggests that Babcock and Wilcox was the only company in Canada which had the necessary facilities in 1973 and 1974 and that's why the arrangements were made without any tender being offered. How, in fact, does that seem justified in the minister's mind? Surely if there were other companies that had a willingness to bid they would have bid and then built the facilities and presumably that would have been reflected in the costs they would have demanded in their bid. How does such a practice end up justified in the minister's mind? Why did the matter not go to tender so that MLW, Foster-Wheeler or anybody else who wished to bid would at least have an opportunity to do so?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think there were perhaps three reasons Hydro decided to pursue the route it did. One was the desire for standardization. As I mentioned in the statement, the design is the same as the design of the boilers in the other reactors at both Pickering and Bruce. Standardization was necessary for the maintenance and convenience of spare parts and that sort of thing. There was an advantage to Hydro in having the same unit.

Second, as I indicated in the statement, I am informed that the other companies were not in a position to manufacture immediately. It might have taken them some time to tool up to meet the specifications.

Mr. S. Smith: Then they would not have bid.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Not necessarily.

Third, Hydro was very satisfied with the performance of these boilers. They had been in touch with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—

Mr. J. Reed: In the United States they only operated at 88 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Auld:—who had purchased some further boilers a short time before and were able to negotiate a price based on the price that Atomic Energy of Canada had paid, as I understand it, for some similar boilers. They had taken a look at the consumer price index so that they were satisfied they were getting a good price.

Mr. S. Smith: Just by way of supplementary to finish off with this one: If the other companies were in no position to manufacture it, they would not have bid, also, if their price was too high, it could have been rejected and if their standards were not good enough, it could have been rejected. It is still no excuse for not putting the matter out to tender.

But I want to ask who will pay, now that there turns out to be a very serious defect? I gather no bond was required of the company. But will the minister address himself to the comments of Mr. Morison of Hydro and the article by Mr. Makin in the Globe and Mail? Would he also comment on reports I have heard from within Hydro that Hydro has decided that if it had to make Babcock and Wilcox pay, that might bankrupt the company and therefore Hydro is not going to go after Babcock and Wilcox for the full cost of this defective boiler matter?

Under these circumstances, why was there not a bond? What good is a guarantee if chasing them for the money is likely to bankrupt them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The bonding company was going bankrupt at that time. Ask some of your legal friends.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I addressed the question of who is going to pay in the statement. As far as Hydro is concerned, its position is that the boilers must meet the specifications and I don't think I should comment any further. This matter will be discussed at some length. I think what I have said really is all I can say at this point.

As far as a performance bond is concerned, that is exactly what it is. I am informed it is most unusual for this kind of equipment to be covered by a performance bond. As the Leader of the Opposition I am sure is aware, a performance bond is just that. If the contractor is not able to carry out his contract, the bonding company then hires somebody else to do it. When one is using proprietary equipment such as this boiler, nobody else could complete it except Babcock and Wilcox, so the point of having a performance bond really wouldn't apply.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary: The minister states that Babcock and Wilcox was, in Hydro's view, the only company that was in the position to build these particular boilers. How does the minister reconcile that contention with the fact that the orders were placed in 1973-74 and the boilers weren't built until, I think, the calendar year of 1978, perhaps beginning in 1977? This would leave a three-year period in which any other competitor could have tooled up and dealt with it. What's the minister's comment on the apparent anomaly there?

Hon. Mr. Auld: It is simply what I said in the statement. The information I have from Hydro is that that was the position. But, as I said, there were two other considerations. I think the consideration of standardization was a very important one as far as Hydro was concerned.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Can the minister confirm to the House that the Atomic Energy Control Board had a capability study done, referring especially, to the Babcock and Wilcox company in Canada? Can he tell us what that capability study informed the control board and Ontario Hydro about this situation, and will he table the study so that the members of the Legislature can see what the control board knew about this matter?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am not aware that the Atomic Energy Control Board did a study of Babcock and Wilcox. I will inquire about that.

Mr. Nixon: You were going to do that three weeks ago.

Mr. S. Smith: That is right. You were asked the same question three weeks ago.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have lost it along with all the other questions. I will get to the bottom of it.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary: On page seven of the minister's statement, it indicates that the Babcock and Wilcox position is that the responsibility for defects in the boilers does not lie solely with them. The minister will recall that some two or three weeks ago I asked him if he would look into the suggestion that perhaps the reason for change in the method of treatment was as a result of Ontario Hydro or the Atomic Energy Control Board specifying that this change should be made to Babcock and Wilcox. Has he looked into that as yet?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I said, there are discussions going on between the two principals. I really don't feel that I should comment any further. As I am sure the honourable member is aware, it is quite possible that this whole matter might wind up in court. I don't think either side is making any statements other than what I just mentioned in my statement.

Mr. S. Smith: I have a final supplementary which has to do with the tabling of the contract. We are not asking for the indiscriminate tabling of all the commercial contracts of Hydro at the moment. What we are asking for is this particular contract inasmuch as it might appear that the people of Ontario, the consumers of electricity, are possibly going to be on the hook for tens of millions of dollars for manufacturing defects.

Under these circumstances, surely if the minister is willing to send the contract to the select committee, he should be willing to table it here in the House so that we can see whether the American parent company of Babcock and Wilcox is in any way on the hook for this, and is standing behind them and so that we can see whether there were any matters in the contract which Babcock and Wilcox can use in order to get out of its responsibilities and what kind of a business-like job was done by Hydro.

It would appear that we have a situation here in which the public interest has not been properly protected. I would ask the minister, therefore, to table the contract in the Legislature as well as in the select committee.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think I indicated fairly clearly the reason for the approach I am suggesting. I have spoken to the chairman of the select committee this morning. He tells me that the committee is meeting next Wednesday and the steering committee will probably be looking at the contract. All parties are represented on that committee. I would think that any questions that the Leader of the Opposition or others have could be conveyed to the members of their party on the committee. But I think it is really quite a dilemma because of commercial confidentiality, particularly when this discussion is going on as to the degree of responsibility of any of the two principals as to the cost of repair, to have Hydro attempting to be negotiating in a fish bowl. There is the possibility of court action.

Mr. S. Smith: The courts will see the documents. Why can't we?

Hon. Mr. Auld: In the event it did get to court, I am sure that would happen.

[10:30]

EMPLOYMENT DEVELOPMENT FUND GRANTS

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. Seeing he seems determined to go ahead and give away millions of dollars of public money to prosperous corporations, and knowing he wishes to reduce the amount of paperwork and difficulty these businesses encounter, and recognizing as well, there are no rules, regulations or legislation for the Employment Development Fund, I have prepared for him and wonder if he would consider using, an application form firms could use. I will read from it; it is very easy. They just have to fill in the blanks and tick it off.

Would he consider using the following application form which says, for instance: "Recently, I sent my wife, secretary, assistant or other; to A, B, C"—Tennessee, Georgia, Florida or wherever—"where, considering labour costs, land prices, taxes and so on, it would be a certain number of dollars cheaper"? There is even a place to include the cigarette box used for the calculations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the honourable member would state the question.

Mr. S. Smith: Would he consider using this as a paperwork saving device for the Employment Development Fund?

Mr. MacDonald: That is an abuse of the question period.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell the Leader of the Opposition that I will, in fact, use this document. I will use this document to show the unemployed people throughout this province just how seriously the Leader of the Opposition takes the unemployment situation in this province.

I will take this document to those firms who spend one day a week meeting very seriously with those who are trying to attract people like Tridon out of this province. I will show them how seriously the Leader of the Opposition in this province takes the matter of keeping those firms here, while the next day they are meeting with senior government officials, governors and all the rest, who are prepared to offer them much more serious and more meaningful incentives than we are prepared to offer.

Happily, in this province we still have a good enough investment climate, notwithstanding this sort of garbage, that we don't have to meet, in most cases, the full differential between investing in places like Tennessee and Ohio versus the cost in Ontario. They still want to invest in Ontario, but in the face of the serious incentives being offered by the United States—not this sort of garbage—we must meet that competition.

I am happy to have this document. The Leader of the Opposition will be hearing a lot about it in places represented by his colleagues behind him.

Mr. S. Smith: Does the minister not understand that a fund set up without rules, without regulations, without criteria, without legislation supporting it, can only lead to every manager in Ontario standing on the steps of Queen's Park with his hand out, requesting money for his prosperous corporation?

Does he not understand that when he starts giving away money of this kind to the large corporations in Ontario, the very next request will be for shares and control in those corporations? Does he not understand the free enterprise system will, in fact, find itself undermined by this particular method?

When he is giving money to his competitor to expand here, how is he going to tell the owner of a plant that is now in Ontario he won't give him money just to stay in Ontario when he threatens to pick up and leave? He will end up having to bribe every prosperous company to stay in Ontario.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Firstly, I must say I find the total inconsistency of the Leader of the Opposition astonishing. It was almost exactly a year ago that the Leader of the Opposition rose in this Legislature and said, "Never mind the federal government, if you have to pay another $17.5 million, keep throwing the money at them because we need that plant for Ontario."

Mr. S. Smith: We accepted Ford. Don't give us Ford again since we accepted that one, because you were playing anti-Quebec politics with that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell the Leader of the Opposition what has happened since last year. Last year, he was convinced he could take that position because we wouldn't get the plant; then after we got that plant and won the competition, he began to get frightened and said, "My Lord, the Tories may succeed in using this money and attracting all those jobs to this province, so I better reverse my position and take the other tack."

Mr. S. Smith: Tell the truth.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what he is doing.

Let me tell the member I have two of the best civil servants in this province dealing with the applications that come to the fund. They don't put out garbage like this; they don't play games with them; and they don't ask about secretaries and the cost of cigarettes in Tennessee as members opposite might ask. They don't pretend that the only way to help firms is by hiding it under loans, as they would have it. They don't pretend that the most effective way to help firms is to do it by guarantees as they would have it.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: You get your money back for the province with a loan.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What they do is to operate—

Mr. S. Smith: You get paid back the loan.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will get every cent of the Ford deal back in two and a half years—every single cent of it. The loans the member is talking about we will get back in five or 10 years.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: From their shareholders?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have to tell the member I am not going to war with an incomplete arsenal. I am not about to say, "I'm sorry, all I'm allowed to do in this province is to guarantee some money for you at a bank." I'm not prepared to do that. If I had been able to do only that in Windsor, the Ford V-6 engine plant would be in the United States. The Leader of the Opposition had better remember that, because one day I will take him into my office and if his colleagues won't show him the letters they have written me, if his colleagues won't tell him the phone calls they have made to me asking for some Employment Development Fund money in their ridings, I will show him the requests they have made.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Before the House becomes overwhelmed with rhetoric from both sides on this particular question, I want to ask, what benefits has Canada achieved which we would not otherwise have had from having this kind of grant, including the need for equity? I would like to ask specifically, in the case of HSA Reactors Limited, what is the commitment to maintain domestic ownership made by that company, and what guarantee does Ontario have that that commitment will in fact be maintained? How has the minister ensured that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have entered into an agreement with HSA whereby the company has agreed that any manufacturing plant that is set up as a result of this support we are giving for Canadian-based research and development will, in fact, be established in this province. I think that is exactly the sort of thing I hear politicians talk about all the time, maintaining research and development, not allowing that to be purchased, bought off, or stolen by other jurisdictions. I should tell you that in this case HSA has received a very substantial offer from Americans to provide them with direct equity, which would mean that not only would the manufacturing plant go to the United States but all the technology which has been developed in this province would go to the United States.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And you people would let it go.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I just don't think it is appropriate to let that happen. Therefore, we have guaranteed money at the bank, we have not laid out a cent. In exchange we have got an explicit and clear guarantee that any manufacturing operation set up will be maintained in this province. Further, we have obtained from them an undertaking that there will not be a transfer or sale of the shares of that company from the Canadian owners to non-Canadians.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary: Recognizing that the need for the Employment Development Fund is because of the failure of programs of the past, and because of the precarious position we are in today, when is the minister going to start addressing the fundamental questions—such as, for example, the promised program for apprenticeship—that were in the budget and promised by various ministers? We have yet to hear anything about them.

We have repeatedly heard about the failures of the government with respect to job training in this province. When are we going to hear something about the fundamental problems? And about research grants to Ontario Research Foundation, for example, et cetera? When is the government going to start working on the fundamentals, rather than just trying to buy off a few people for a short-term gain?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, the member ignores the fact that in this year alone we have increased our grant to the Ontario Research Foundation fairly substantially.

Mr. Peterson: No, you haven't.

Mr. Ruston: More slush funds like the Wintario grants.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, I have. The member wasn't in the House the day I made the statement. There was $400,000 more this year to ORF.

I know the member's leader likes to trot around talking about the amount of support we give to the Ontario Research Foundation. What he neglects, or what his researchers neglect, is the fact that the funding for the Ontario Research Foundation in this province, when compared with that in other provinces, is totally different. There are different funding mechanisms for research foundations throughout this country and therefore any province-by-province comparison is foolish.

Secondly, the member, as the Treasury critic, and succeeding Marvin Shore in his party as the chief economic expert—

Mr. Breithaupt: And in the minister's party as well.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—stood up this morning and is totally unaware of the fact that we've increased our ORF grant this year by some $400,000. So before he talks about anyone else not having comprehensive policies, not understanding where we're going on an economic basis, he should do his homework first.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. In view of the fact that the supplementaries have strayed considerably from the original question—which was: "Would the minister consider using an application form?"—I'll have the first question from the member for Ottawa Centre.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have another question, which arises out of yesterday's announcement, to the Minister of Education. Can the minister say, in the case of Tridon Limited, of TRW Canada Limited, HSA Reactors Limited and Dominion Twist Drill Limited what commitments have been made by those companies for training and upgrading the skills of their existing employees and of the employees that they intend to hire with the Employment Development Fund grants? Will the minister say specifically how many apprenticeship places have these companies agreed to as a result of getting the grants?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that information since I do not know the exact content of the documents which have been signed. It is my understanding that a part of the requirement for such support is, indeed, the establishment of appropriate numbers of apprenticeship places or employer-sponsored or upgrading places within that institution.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary: Since one of the aims of the Employment Development Fund was to foster the development of needed job skills, was the Ministry of Education, and the apprenticeship branch in particular, involved in any way in the negotiations since some of the companies involved had next to no apprenticeships under way right now?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, in the direct negotiations with companies I do not think there was any such involvement, but I think that question should be directed to my colleague, the Minister of Industry and Tourism, who was directly involved in it and who has been listening carefully to what I have said.

Mr. Cassidy: I'll redirect the question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism then and ask him to reply.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to assure the House that there is a constant mechanism developed with the Ministry of Labour—soon to be the Ministry of Labour and Manpower—to co-ordinate these matters. They are brought in for consultation with us whenever we are in any situation which obviously involves the need for more skilled workers. In both the case of Tridon and of TRW they have agreed in writing to employ and train in Ontario the required skill levels as set out in part of our agreement, so in both cases they have undertaken to train the necessary workers for those operations.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister say how many in each case will the companies train, and will he table the agreements that have been made about the development of skills which are involved with each of these grants?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will be happy to give the member all that information, the exact numbers and, if not the agreements, the essence of the agreements.

Mr. Peterson: A supplementary: Did the minister just answer that—I didn't hear it, I'm sorry—he was prepared to table in this House the documents of agreement with all recipients of grants under the Employment Development Fund? If he did say that, I'm sorry for repeating. If he didn't, would he let us scrutinize the documents on all recipients of the fund?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We're just looking at the documents, which have just recently been developed with our solicitors, but I can assure the House that, obviously, there is some concern with regard to the contents of some of them—

[10:45]

Mr. Bolan: Are you leaving to grease somebody else's pockets now?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —in terms of confidential information filed with us, and of the companies. However, I can assure the member we will either table the agreements or table all the essential parts of the agreements; for example, the undertakings we've received from the firms.

ALCOHOLISM TREATMENT

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development, responsible for the ministries of Health and of Community and Social Services. Is the minister aware there are four halfway houses for alcoholics in downtown Ottawa whose future service is in jeopardy because of the policy of the government that services for people suffering from alcoholism are of low priority? Specifically, can the minister explain why permanent funding for these halfway houses is being denied when two of them have had grants in aid from the Ministry of Health—in one case for as long as four years?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Mr. Speaker, I think that question more rightfully should be directed to the Minister of Health. Are these detox centres?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Halfway houses.

Interjections.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I don't have that information on specific programs within the Ministry of Community and Social Services, but I'll make sure the honourable member receives that information on Monday.

Mr. Warner: What a disaster show over there.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Is the minister aware that effective October of last year the Ministry of Community and Social Services decided not to fund any more halfway houses for alcoholics and to give low priority to treatment for alcoholics in its programs? Can the minister say what, in the opinion of the government, whether through the Ministry of Health or the Ministry of Community and Social Services, is to be done for people who are suffering from alcoholism and who are on waiting lists for halfway houses in order to get treatment and are being turned away because of the policies of this government?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I think this government has provided many opportunities for people with those particular problems—

Mr. Cooke: Be specific. Let's hear about it.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: —to get help in the treatment centres that are available across this province. I am not aware of the particular halfway houses the member refers to but, as I suggested, I will have that information for him on Monday.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Would the minister not consider that in her supervisory capacity she should see that the government policy announced a year ago for the removal of advertising pressures, particularly for the consumption of beer, is implemented? Just because the minister in that particular area which controls the policy of the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario and the Liquor Control Board of Ontario has changed, shouldn't her policy direction be paramount so the original announcement for the control, if not the removal, of lifestyle beer advertising be implemented?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I don't think that is a supplementary to the original question that was asked.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: You're darn right it isn't. No relationship.

Interjections.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: The Speaker knows it. He's very well aware that is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Nixon: The Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) didn't refer to it yesterday when he said he was cracking down on drinking drivers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

Mr. Nixon: He's not doing anything about the advertising.

Mr. Bolan: He doesn't get any headlines out of it, that's why

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I think that question should be directed to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea).

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the minister says she thinks services for alcoholics in the province are at an adequate level right now, is she aware there are only 25 beds for female alcoholics in halfway houses across the province? Is she also aware that in the case of Ottawa, the Amethyst women's treatment centre has been told it can have a grant in aid but not have permanent funding? Does she believe only 25 places across the province is an adequate response to the growing problem—a difficult problem—of alcoholism among women?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Again, I don't think I indicated I thought we had an adequate number of beds available for treatment of alcoholics. I think we are very much aware that it is a tremendous, growing concern and we're attempting to meet the need.

Mr. Swart: By cutting back?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I'm not aware of the specific problems the member refers to in the Ottawa area. Again, I indicated I will have that information brought up to date on Monday.

PHYSICIANS OPTING OUT OF OHIP

Mr. Bradley: I have a question for the Minister of Health: In view of the fact the Minister of Health indicated to the House there would be co-operation with those who wanted to know which doctors were opted in and opted out of OHIP, would the minister indicate to the House whether it is the policy of OHIP to provide to such groups as labour unions, lists of doctors within a specific area in the province who have opted out of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan in order that they in turn may inform their membership so that people within the membership may choose doctors based on the fees they are going to charge?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, what I indicated in my statement on March 29 was that the Ontario Medical Association, through its head office and affiliate offices around the province, would provide assistance to members of the public if they wanted to find a new physician or an opted-in physician. At the time, they publicized their Zenith line, and all the reports I have had are that that is being used and is being of help to the people. We do not publish lists as such, no.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary: In view of the fact that, in the April edition of the Local 199 UAW News, one of the officials of the union indicated that a phone call to the Ontario Medical Association yielded similar results to a phone call to the Hamilton district office of OHIP—and he said that the OHIP office in Hamilton had been instructed not to assist—would the minister not agree, since this information does not seem to be readily available to people such as those in the labour union movement who are concerned about it, that OHIP should co-operate in providing this list so that the public of Ontario can be aware of which doctors are opted in and opted out and can make a sensible choice?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think it is best looked after on an individual basis. Where an individual moves into an area and wants to find a new physician or an opted-in physician, when he calls the medical association he is given names of doctors in that area who are available and who are opted in. That seems to work well, and I think it is best left that way.

Mr. Cassidy: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Since the minister has now admitted that there is no legal opinion to justify his refusal to give that information, would he not now be prepared to allow public-spirited groups like the UAW, local municipalities or citizens groups to get information from the plan itself about the doctors opted in and opted out of OHIP so that they in turn can assist citizens to find out how to get an opted-in doctor?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, the answer I gave the honourable member to the Notice Paper question was that at the time I did not have a written legal opinion. So I would ask him please not to try to distort that, purposely or not. I just want the record to be clear.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I said specifically that the minister had had no legal opinion to justify his refusal. He should not seek to twist words, as he has just done in this House.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: After watching the honourable member for eight years, he is a past master when it comes to twisting words.

The answer to him would be the same as that which I gave the member for St. Catharines. The strength of our health-care system is the relationship between patient and doctor, and it works well in the interest of the public. As regards this particular question, it is best worked out on an individual basis, rather than by some kind of pillorying, which the honourable member would prefer.

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. Can the minister indicate whether his ministry and the cabinet have yet been able to assess the situation in White River, and can he give any indication whether the government is prepared to make a statement that it will extend the same kind of assistance to White River as it has to other areas that have experienced flooding in the north-east?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, the cabinet has looked at, but has not made any determination on, that matter; I expect it will at next week's cabinet meeting. I see no reason why White River cannot be included.

PROVINCIAL PARKS

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Natural Resources, I will direct my question to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development. Is the minister aware that in the past long weekend, Algonquin Provincial Park experienced yet another sharp, serious decline in visitorship? And is the minister aware this sharp, serious decline comes upon a series of sharp declines over the past three years?

An hon. member: He is now.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: On the decline in business in the past weekend in Algonquin Park, I don't know what the weather was like in the member's area, but in my area it was lousy. There was a decline in the tourist business all over northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What are you going to do about the weather?

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the members allow the member for Renfrew North to ask a short supplementary?

Mr. Conway: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given the fact that the weather in the Algonquin Park area was excellent; and given the fact that the local population is increasingly concerned that it is not the weather but rather the import of much of the Algonquin Park master plan which is threatening to render such communities as Whitney in the words of a local press account a ghost town, can the minister assure this House his government will undertake a very serious review, as proposed by the Algonquin Park master plan review, of those serious economic implications which those new planning guidelines are having on such otherwise depressed communities as Whitney? Can he assure this House that review will be undertaken as quickly as possible and that any changes or corrections that are required will be introduced at the earliest opportunity so that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question has been asked.

Mr. Conway:—so that such communities as Whitney will not be facing the kind of bleak and serious economic future which seems to be theirs as the result of, in some cases, unwise planning by that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The question has been asked several times.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, we would be pleased to consider any constructive suggestion to improve the economic climate.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister be willing to reconsider the government's increase in park fees which led to an overall decline of 11 per cent last year and seems to be continuing this year as well?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: There's no thought at this time to make any changes in the prices.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. Young: The question is for the Minister of Transportation and Communications. Following up the minister's statement of last week and the Solicitor General's (Mr. McMurtry) statement of yesterday, in view of the increasing number of smaller cars of a high vulnerability in big-car/small-car crashes, will the minister seriously recommend to the new and perhaps more friendly Minister of Transport in Ottawa that we follow the United States plan and have front-seat passive restraints phased into our cars over the three years beginning in 1981? And will he, in cooperation with the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and perhaps the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, move to ban and counteract the flood of lifestyle ads designed to increase consumption of alcohol among the 16- to 24-year-olds among whom about 40 per cent of the road accidents and deaths occur?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I certainly will be prepared to discuss—and I'm looking forward very much to discussing—many matters relating to automobile safety with the new Minister of Transport in Ottawa, whoever he or she may be, within the next few days.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe before the election.

Mr. Breithaupt: Whoever she may be.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It may be an it.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I would have to say that I am looking forward to a great deal more co-operation from that office than we've had in the last four years.

Mr. Conway: How do you like Otto Jelinek now?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I sure like him a lot better than Otto Lang anyway; that's for sure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Order.

[11:00]

Hon. Mr. Snow: I am looking forward, Mr. Speaker, to a new federal Minister of Transport who will be in favour of transportation instead of doing everything possible, as the previous one did in the last four years, to be against it.

Mr. Philip: Now that he's out, answer the question.

Mr. Warner: Answer the question. You have nobody left to blame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It appears that the members don't want to hear the answer. If the honourable minister has anything further, he may add it. If not, I will call for a new question.

Mr. Nixon: Let's have a couple of supplementaries.

Hon. Mr. Davis: A lot of leading questions over there.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I certainly will be discussing those items with the federal minister.

With regard to the other part of the comments relating to advertising, I believe the honourable member should put those questions to the ministers responsible for those areas.

Mr. Young: Supplementary: In view of the fact that at least a third, and perhaps more, of our people are not using seat belts at the present time—and I compliment the Solicitor General on his better enforcement in the future, we hope—and the fact that the smaller cars become increasingly dangerous in collision situations, is it not his opinion that passive restraints, such as we are going to have in the United States but which are not here yet, become very vital as a lifesaving feature in our whole safety program?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I presume the honourable member is referring to a passive restraint as being either automatic seat belts or the air bag, and I think we have—

Hon. Mr. Davis: You people know all about air bags over there.

Mr. T. P. Reid: One of the biggest is speaking right now.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly very much in favour of further research and development of passive seat belts. I have some concerns personally regarding the automatic air bags, but possibly that's because of my experience in this House with some automatic air bags.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue as a supplementary the minister's comment about lifestyle advertising. Does he not recall the statement made as a matter of cabinet policy that lifestyle advertising was going to be controlled and reduced so that young people particularly were not going to be subjected to the kind of advertising pressure that would lead them to the use of alcohol before or during the time when they are driving cars?

Is he not further aware that his colleague, the Attorney General, in his statement yesterday indicated there was going to be a crack-down on drinking drivers and that one of the obvious ways that this can be made effective, instead of hiring more "eyes in the sky," would be to control the advertising that has become such an important part in moving our young people to excessive drinking?

Hon. Mr. Snow: Mr. Speaker, I don't recall ever making such—

Mr. Nixon: Your policy has flipped right over.

Hon. Mr. Snow: I was just going to say, Mr. Speaker, if I can try to remember if there was a question in there. No, I do not recall ever making that statement.

Mr. Eakins: Let's hear you make it now. Let's hear your opinion.

Hon. Mr. Snow: Personally, I may agree very much with the statement that the honourable member just made, but I never made that statement.

AMBULANCE SERVICES

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. In the light of his response of April 9 to a question on ambulance services in which he invited specific documentation of any incidents which caused concern, will the minister investigate the allegations contained in this brief, which does, in fact, list many specifics?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, during my most recent visit to London I had occasion to speak on the telephone from one of the radio stations with a representative of the local ambulance attendants association and indicated to him that if they would be specific any complaint would be investigated to ensure that we do maintain the highest possible standards in our ambulance system.

As recently as this morning, I spoke with the chairman of a subcommittee of the Thames Valley health council, which is looking at ambulance services in the area, to see if there are any recommendations they want to make, to ensure maintenance of a high quality. So, of course, I will look at what has been sent to me.

Mr. Van Horne: The minister made reference to the program on which he spoke, and also, I made reference to the April 9 reply. He indicated in that reply that a full investigation and detailed response would be forthcoming soon. Could he tell me when that "soon" will be?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As soon as possible.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. di Santo: To the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs: Is the minister aware that the last property tax increase for the owner of an average-sized house in North York in 1979 is $90 and that taxes for an average house are now more than $1,100 a year? If the minister is aware, can he tell us if, 13 years after the Smith report and repeated promises, the government is finally determined to introduce tax reform based on equity and fairness?

Hon. Mr. Wells: This government has always been committed to ongoing tax reform at the local level and I would have to say I have indicated some of the things that are going to happen. My colleague, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), is going to introduce the new equalization factors in July, which will bring equity to the unconditional grant system in this province.

Some municipalities have had section 86 reassessments, which have caused some problems, but which, when all is said and done, have created certain equities in the assessments in those particular areas. We are reviewing and working now with the municipal liaison committee on a method of fiscal transfers between the province and the municipalities, which will take effect next year, I hope. We are always looking at ways to reform the system and to assist municipalities and the taxpayers in them. That doesn't mean there hasn't been some increase in taxes this year, but I think the municipalities can justify that.

Mr. di Santo: Not some increase; in the last three years the property taxes in Metropolitan Toronto have doubled.

I would like to ask the minister, since the property tax increases are caused primarily by the decreased provincial grants—the educational grants went down from 61 to 52 per cent in the last five years—and in view of the fact that since 1976 there has been no improvement in the tax credit for senior citizens, how can the government say that they are continually reviewing the tax system? Doesn't the minister think that he is betraying the expectations of low-income and senior citizens and the commitment made before the last election in the so-called charter for Ontario, to eliminate completely municipal taxes for senior citizens? Doesn't he think he should do as the government of Alberta did and fulfil the promise to cut municipal taxes?

Hon. Mr. Wells: First, let me say that it is my recollection that probably about 60 per cent—maybe just a little under 60 per cent—of the senior citizens of this province do not pay any education tax because of the property tax credit. When they pay their income tax and the property tax credit is computed, the amount they receive is either equivalent to or more than the amount of education taxes they pay. So, in reality, nearly 60 per cent of the senior citizens of this province do not pay education tax.

In terms of actual increase in taxes, I don't know exactly what it is in North York, but the education tax in Scarborough, where I live, went up $30 this year. I must say I do not consider that an inordinate increase in education taxes this year, considering the kind of education I am receiving from the schools of this province for the three children of mine who attend the public school system.

Mr. Grande: The province pays less.

Mr. Epp: Supplementary: I wonder whether the minister would indicate to this House to what extent he plans to expand the unconditional grants, which was recommended by a committee chaired by the deputy minister and to which he alluded just a few minutes ago, thereby providing more autonomy for local municipalities.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The whole matter of unconditional grants and the grants reform committee is still under study. I think my friend knows some of the problems encountered there. That committee recommended massive deconditionalizing of grants. But, as we discussed in my estimates last year, if one starts talking about highway grants, my friend, the Minister of Transportation and Communications, will give 25 reasons why highways grants should not be deconditionalized. He is backed up by all the municipal road engineers who work for the same councils that support the recommendations of the grant reform committee. Then there are library grants and so forth.

The whole matter of deconditionalizing grants and unconditional grants is one that is still under study. I cannot give any answer yet as to what will happen with that report.

USE OF COURIER SERVICE

Mr. Mancini: I would like to place my question to the Minister of Health. Is he aware that the ambulance services branch has used the services of a very expensive courier to send out mail to the ambulance operators of Ontario instead of using Canada Post? Could the Minister of Health inform the House at what cost this courier was used and if this is ministry policy? Is this an example of the restraint program that has been initiated by this government where it uses courier services and at the same time closes down hospital beds?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I told the member in the chamber last Friday, that matter was investigated. It was found that a relatively new employee had done that, thinking she was doing the right thing. In fact, it was not. Steps have been taken to make sure that in future any use of couriers would be with approval of her supervisors, since there will be cases where one wants to get out information of an emergent nature.

That is not standard procedure, as I told the member before. Steps have been taken to correct the matter.

Mr. Mancini: What did it cost?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will have to get that for the member. I do not have those figures with me any more; I had them with me last week when we discussed it.

Mr. Mancini: Supplementary: Could the minister please table in the House the cost of the courier services used in the past year by the Ministry of Health so that the members of the Legislature can know to what extent he is using these courier services instead of the post office?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will take that into consideration. It certainly shows in the public accounts.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister going to permit the Northumberland and Newcastle Board of Education to use 2,4-D for spraying school yards, in view of the fact that some children were reported to have suffered adverse effects from last year's spraying and in view of mounting evidence that this substance is a health hazard and possibly a carcinogen?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I have had a chance to have some consideration on this matter prior to this question. If I understand the figures correctly, 12 parents in that area are concerned. I think it is a great opportunity for those parents in that community, along with their school board, to put into a very balanced perspective the advantages of mechanical versus chemical destruction of weeds—or, indeed, a much broader issue, the use of chemicals in our society.

[11:15]

At this time they can choose whatever method they wish to control the weeds in the school yard. It is their problem and they should use it as a great educational experience.

Mr. Conway: Local autonomy in weed control!

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Once in a while the members opposite will learn that the people of this province have to make some choices and decisions on their own; it is not always this government. The members opposite would take away all of the people's thought process and put it in government, then pretend that they are the people's protectors.

Mr. Martel: Go drill a tooth.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I would love to drill the honourable member's—and there would be no local anaesthetic!

Mr. Martel: I'd die of suffering first.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That's good news for me too. How was I diverted from my original answer, Mr. Speaker? I think it was an interjection from the member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thought you were finished with the answer.

An hon. member: Blame it on the feds.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, no. They would not be that foolish these days.

Let me get back to the question: I think it is a great opportunity for an educational experience in that particular community. I know that many of those parents are using vast quantities of 2,4-D on the farms they now work. I do not think one can put this question in such simple terms. Those students should be brought face to face with the value of 2,4-D in our farm communities. The only way they will do that is if they stop spraying in their school yards and then take their hoes and start hoeing a 50-acre field of corn. That might have some significance to them, because 90 per cent of 2,4-D is used in the farm community and, I think, doing an excellent job.

The very small drop of material used in the school yards relative to the total use in society should be put in perspective. It is a good opportunity for an educational experience, and I will not interfere.

Ms. Bryden: I would like to ask the minister whether he is aware that the British Columbia Medical Association stated as recently as May 1978 that 2,4-D has demonstrable carcinogenic and teratogenic effects, and that the National Farmers Union in Saskatchewan is questioning the use of 2,4-D on farms as well? It seems to me that when children's health is involved we should exercise extra caution.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The question has been asked.

Ms. Bryden: Will the minister ban the use of this for school yards until such time as its safety has been established?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: To ban 2,4-D in the school yards of this province is such a silly proposal that it is beyond my comprehension to understand why the honourable member would ask that. It is the smallest possible drop in a very large bucket. It would have no effect on our health whatsoever—none, absolutely zero—and yet the proposal is that we ban it in the school yards. I cannot accept that. I think our advisory committee is continually looking at—

Mr. Ruston: Here comes a note with the answer.

Mr. J. Reed: Read it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Listen, I have the right to answer the question as I wish.

Mr. Breithaupt: Read us the note.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I will be glad to read the note.

An hon. member: It says it's a federal problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The honourable minister will have lots of time to read the note. The time for oral questions has expired.

REPORT

STANDING SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. Gaunt from the standing social development committee presented a report and moved its adoption.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some brief comments in tabling this report. Commencing on April 23, 1979, the standing social development committee met on numerous occasions to consider the annual report of the Ministry of Health and in specific terms to consider the proposed closure of the Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital.

During this period the committee heard testimony from a large number of expert witnesses and studied carefully their expert opinions on the provision of mental health services in Ontario, more particularly at Lakeshore and Queen Street psychiatric hospitals.

After four weeks of intensive public hearings, the committee met on Wednesday, May 16, 1979, at which time it was unable to reach a consensus on recommendations to be made in the committee's report.

Subsequent to that meeting, the committee has again met and has reached agreement on certain points. This consensus is reflected in the committee's report tabled today.

On motion by Mr. Gaunt, the debate was adjourned.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of supply.

On vote 701, ministry administration program; item 1, main office:

Mr. Bolan: First of all, I would like to make reference to the statement the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) made this morning with respect to Field and the program proposed by the government to assist these people who have been displaced from their homes.

I'd like to point out the program he has come up with is reasonable. I think it's fair and I think it will be of great benefit to these people who were displaced through no fault of their own.

One area he does not mention, and perhaps he could enlighten us about it later on, is he refers to the fact he will meet with the officials of Field Lumber Company to see what can be done to assist them. I may have missed it as I read the statement rather quickly but I don't see anything in here about any of the other small businesses in Field which were affected by the flood. I'm thinking of at least two or three small grocery stores and that type of small operation which, if he was there, he may have noticed have been completely wiped out.

I realize that you're dealing with many things in the area and you just can't possibly do it all at once but the other thing that really concerns me is the bridge which crosses the Sturgeon River and which goes into the small community of Crystal Falls. This bridge was completely wiped out. I have been in contact with Ministry of Transportation and Communications officials to ask what they propose to do about it. At the moment they're putting a road through on a circuitous route behind Crystal Falls which detours for about 40 miles. Some of the citizens of the community don't mind this, but it's an extreme hardship on the children. It means they have to leave home at seven o'clock in the morning, and get back around six o'clock at night.

I realize you have a roads program. I realize you do have a construction program for bridges and what have you, and I would urge you to look into this matter as soon as possible, because you can't build a bridge inside two or three months. There is much which can go into it, although information is that a Bailey bridge would more than adequately support, or more than adequately assist the situation. Right now, the kids are going across by boats. The river is about 200 yards wide at this point and, believe me, all you need is for one of those boats to capsize and you've got real problems.

I will leave that in your hands. I would hope Mr. Aiken, who I believe has been appointed the flood co-ordinator in that area, will look into this matter because I really do believe it is of great interest.

There is one other thing I want to mention. I'm glad to see the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) here because I was going to ask him a question on this point, however, I was not able to ask it during the question period. It has to do with the request made to the Minister of Industry and Tourism by the West Nipissing Tourist Area Association.

These people are in four unorganized townships which have been seriously affected by the flood and some two weeks ago they requested, through the Minister of Industry and Tourism, that the four townships in that area be declared a disaster area. These four unorganized townships are the townships of Loudon, Macpherson, Latchford and Bertram. They are not the townships which were referred to in the statement made by the Premier (Mr. Davis) some three weeks ago when he announced certain unorganized townships as being part of the disaster area. They are not the same unorganized townships. They are separate townships altogether.

Two weeks ago, the association, whose president is a Mr. Rick DeSantis, wrote to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism requesting that those townships as well be declared a disaster area so that they might qualify for assistance. Some of these people are in very dire straits. I might say, the government has responded to the tourist operators on the other side of the lake by declaring the township of North Himsforth and the township of Nipissing disaster areas so that they would be able to qualify for the funds. However these unorganized townships not having any government body through which to speak—

Mr. Wildman: What about local road boards?

Mr. Bolan: —have not been able to get any results from the government. I believe there is a cabinet meeting on Wednesday, and I would ask the minister to take this up at that time. The lake is the same level right across. If the tourist operators at one end of the lake, i.e. the townships of Nipissing and North Himsforth, are affected by the rise of the lake, the same thing applies to the other side.

My information is that there are some 150 operators who have virtually been put out of business. Unfortunately the damages cannot be assessed until such time as the water recedes. However, we would hope that would happen within the next 30 days. In the meantime I would urge the minister, through his co-ordinator, Mr. Aiken, to get this going.

There was one matter raised by the minister last Friday. Unfortunately I was not able to be present for the reasons which I outlined a few minutes ago; that is to say, I was meeting with the tourist operators in that area. As I read from Instant Hansard, the minister made reference to the $10 million North Bay received as a DREE grant. I would like to read back what he said because there is a correction to be made. I think when I have explained it he will understand.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm sorry you weren't here.

Mr. Bolan: "I must say that the Industrial Development Commission in North Bay has done one fantastic job in attracting small industry to this community and that has encouraged both levels of government to move in with this particular development. But what happened? The federal government came back here and said, 'Look, we are ready to go for a $10 million package, not a $14 million package. Somewhere down the road we will talk about the other $4 million. We would like to get on with just the development of the industrial park, so we are prepared to sign a $10 million package.'

"Well, we looked at it very carefully and, of course, there was the big talk of cutbacks came to the fore. There was some concern . . ." When we read Instant Hansard, that's when we realize how poor our grammar and sentence structure are.

"There was some concern that we might even lose the $10 million package. I recall very vividly going to North Bay and meeting with the chamber of commerce and being roasted, being literally roasted, for my stand in wanting the whole loaf . . ." and then you went back and you were roasted again, et cetera, et cetera.

I just want to set the record straight. Before the Ministry of Northern Affairs was created there was an agreement prepared to be signed by the federal and the provincial governments. I saw this agreement. This agreement was ready in August 1975. I was on city council at that time and was privy to seeing the agreement which was prepared. [11:30]

The $4 million you speak about comes as a result of the interchange at Marshall Avenue. When the original application was made and the original agreement was prepared, it did not include the Marshall Avenue interchange. In other words, at that time the Marshall Avenue interchange was not even considered part of the deal. The agreement at that time called for something like about $9.5 million, $9.6 million. It was not signed. I am not going to say who was responsible for it not being signed then, although there were some overruns on the DREE projects which were going on in the Thunder Bay area. In any event, we didn't get the dough at that time.

Subsequently, the application was made again or it was looked at again by the parties, and the Ministry of Transportation and Communications could see the day coming when Marshall Avenue would be extended to meet with highway 11, as a result of which an interchange would be required, as well as a level crossing for the railway line which runs through there. They said $4 million would be required for the interchange.

My understanding is the federal government said that interchanges are not part of DREE agreements. They provide assistance for building industrial parks, for putting in hard services, but don't provide assistance for building roads or interchanges, et cetera.

I remember having discussed this with this minister and he brought to my attention the fact the federal government had insisted on an interchange or a part of a highway being built in the northwestern part of the province where some DREE moneys were expended.

I looked into that and I stand to be corrected, but my information is that that was a necessary part of the entire project; that is to say, that particular interchange or highway in the Thunder Bay area was a necessary part of the entire package. However, the Marshall Avenue interchange was never a necessary part of the entire package. In other words, they could very easily develop the industrial part; put in hard services without that particular interchange being required. The proof of that is it is not included in the construction program for 1979-80. Now we ask the question, if it was insisted on back in 1977 when they were hammering out the agreement, and now it is not included, just where do we stand on that today?

I might say that in the sub-agreement which was signed between the parties, based on the clauses in that agreement, the necessary funds for that particular interchange could be squeezed out. In any event I am sure the good officers of your ministry will press your cousins, now in Ottawa, who I am sure will be of great benefit to you.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This is very enjoyable.

Mr. Bolan: It really is. I am enjoying it too. Incidentally, the other thing I want to mention is that while Darcy McKeough was Treasurer there was no way we were going to get any of these funds unless they provided the $4 million for the interchange. When the used car dealer became Treasurer, he saw the light and said, "My goodness, we have a chance to share in $10 million instead of $14 million. Let's take the $10 million."

My federal counterpart, who is no longer the Solicitor General, but is an opposition member now—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am enjoying that too.

Mr. Bolan: Yes—phoned up the Treasurer the very day after he was appointed. They solved the problem immediately. It was merely a question of an immovable force being replaced with someone who could see the real benefits, and of course the minister was in complete agreement with it because he saw the immediate benefits which would result. In any event, I thought I should draw that to the minister's attention in order to straighten out the record.

There's one little area I want to cover before I sit down and we can finally vote on this particular vote, I would imagine. I like this little button that was printed: "On s'amuse dans le nord." This is when Tom Campbell was the deputy minister. I don't know how the minister amuses himself, I don't know whether it is with the deputy minister or what, but in any event, I looked on the back of this little badge and it was printed in southern Ontario. It was made in southern Ontario.

I drew this to the attention of some business people in my area and they wrote to the minister, as a result of which they received offers to put in bids for the printing of these new little badges. They were accepted as bidders and they have felt all along, as I feel, that one of the functions of the ministry is to have many of these things done in northern Ontario.

I want to emphasize that there are facilities in northern Ontario to do many of the things such as promotions, ad agencies and what have you. We do have those in northern Ontario who can do the job as well as in southern Ontario and I do suggest that the government look at them and that they be considered just as well as anyone else. In fact, I am aware of a couple of applications from ad agencies in northern Ontario right now to participate in the many programs which the government has.

That's all I have to say for the moment.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I may respond briefly to the member for Nipissing, I appreciate his remarks with respect to the assistance that the government is prepared to provide to the community of Field and the surrounding area as it relates to their terrible disaster. In fact as I said—

Mr. Wildman: Put the resolution on the record now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, I have it right here. I have the resolution. But I was most impressed in my visit to that community last night with the fortitude and the gutsy attitude of those people who have banded together, and banded together they did, because at the height of that disaster five of those organized municipalities came together and rallied to the cause and provided all those necessary disaster relief programs and facilities in a very co-operative way. I had to say to them last night that they had responded in true northern Ontario spirit.

I have to say they were very pleased with the announcement we made last night to them on the support they are getting. Indeed, the establishment of a co-ordinating role for the Ministry of Northern Affairs, through the assistant deputy minister at Sault Ste. Marie, Herb Aiken, was well received. I think that's the role that we as a ministry can really play, and we played it in a number of other areas and it certainly is following through in this event.

The problem with the Field Lumber Company is one that we're going to discuss, as I said in my statement, on Tuesday next. They have some horrendous problems as it relates to their operation, there's just no question. We think that they are the only employer in Field employing, I think they told me last night, something like 85 or 90 people. We must find a way to get them back into business. It was a sad sight to see lumber strewn up and down the Sturgeon River and logs being pulled out of the bush so to speak. I think the owner was paying individuals $3 per log to pick them up and return them to the mill.

With respect to the retail establishments, this I think would be handled under the Disaster Relief Fund that will be established there. The committee is certainly very concerned with the hotel and the restaurant and the barber shop and a few other things. They will be looked after under that very active committee that has been established. I might say further, in connection with the member's comment with regard to Crystal Falls, we spent some considerable time last night discussing that particular problem. People were there, they expressed some concern, as the member has correctly pointed out, with regard to the students who are being taken across the river system in very small boats. In fact, today they are out looking for a much larger boat to transport those students across, a boat that has all the safety requirements to make sure that there isn't a disaster following the one we just had. That will be looked after.

It was my understanding in my discussions last night with the various officials that a Bailey bridge would be constructed. I hope that will be in place by late August. We are looking for something to look after the problems of transportation out of the Crystal Falls area in the immediate future. They have to travel something like 45 miles around the river system, but if they could cut across, it reduces that mileage to about 14 miles.

I noted your comment with respect to the other areas that are not covered in the original announcement. I am going to ask my assistant deputy minister, Herb Aiken, to give us a report on the extent of damages in those areas because he will be on top of the issue.

We will make a decision after that time, once we have had his report, as it relates to those tourist operators who may be affected and have not been included in the disaster relief package.

As I mentioned in my statement, there will be a meeting tomorrow morning in Field. We have asked the reeve and the council, through a good publicity program, to bring all the people together. The officials from a number of ministries, headed by the flood co-ordinator, will be there to answer any specific questions because there are a lot of questions. I had to make it clear to them last night that while we were coming in with what I think is a good positive program, one that will not see any direct hardship passed on to each individual family or to specific families, they will have to carry some burden.

They accepted that. They said: "This is great. We fully understand that." The upheaval alone is part of the problems that they will suffer. I want to put on the record a resolution that was passed last night by the corporation of the township of Field. It was handed to me just as I was leaving that meeting. It was dated May 24, 1979, and was moved by Bernard Préseault and seconded by Pierre Langevin.

It reads: "The Field council is very appreciative and impressed by the fine cooperation extended tonight by the Honourable Leo Bernier and also the provincial government as a result of the Field disaster." That is signed by the reeve himself. I think that's indicative of the appreciation that they have expressed.

Mr. Nixon: That resolution should be copied and mailed to all the members from the north who are not here.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think it will be. On that point, I wish the members opposite had been there last night to hear the reaction of the community with respect to the concern and the very positive attitude that was taken by this government. The fact that the Premier, took time out and visited that area personally did not go unnoticed.

Mr. Nixon: He flew up in his own plane.

Mr. Bolan: You flew up in a government plane to get there too. I wasn't even asked to go with you. Why didn't you ask me to go up there with you?

Mr. Nixon: Certainly.

Mr. Bolan: Then you stand in this House and say you wish the opposition members would have been there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) was right there. You weren't here yesterday.

Mr. Bolan: Come on now!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You weren't here last Friday.

Mr. Bolan: Be honest.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You were not here.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, the record will show that I was here yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Nixon: That's correct.

Mr. Bolan: And last night. Stop playing games.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not playing any games. I am just pointing out to you the appreciation of this community.

Mr. Bolan: Fine. Then don't say that you wish the opposition members would have been there last night when they weren't given an opportunity to be there. I don't have a government plane at my disposal as you have.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not arguing why you weren't there. I never mentioned it. You mentioned it. You must be oversensitive.

Mr. Nixon: You did. You brought it to public attention when you said you were sorry he wasn't there.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: After he brought it up.

Mr. Bolan: Where is crazy Eddie Havrot today? Why isn't he here listening to what you are saying right now?

Mr. Nixon: Where are your colleagues from the north this morning?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Where is your colleague?

Mr. Nixon: He is getting married?

Hon. Mrs. Birch: Today? No, he is not.

Mr. Nixon: Very soon.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He is getting married. There is only one over here.

Mr. Bolan: Where is crazy Eddie? Is he giving advice to some Indians up in Bear Island?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In this instance, I can look after the problems of northern Ontario. So much for the Field disaster.

[11:45]

Mr. Bolan: How about the Tory disaster over there?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: What about the Liberal disaster last Tuesday over there? Believe it or not, fellows, you are an extinct species, a very extinct species.

Did you hear what Pierre Berton said?

Mr. Bolan: Who?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Pierre Berton.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Gentlemen, we are dealing with vote 701, not last Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am not apt to quote Pierre Berton too many times, except in this instance.

I want to mention the Ontario DREE agreement to which the member made some reference. I just wanted to point out to him again, the $14 million package is the one the former Treasurer and I pulled together. The Ministry of Transportation and Communications did see the necessity of having the Marshall Avenue overpass as part of the whole industrial park complex. There was no doubt in their minds that it is needed. Now, of course, we have set it aside for a period, and the agitation is starting again for the development of that overpass.

I was in agreement with the Treasurer at that time, that we should hang in there for the $14 million. As I said to the people in North Bay, and the honourable member was present for those comments, "We had better take the whole loaf rather than just half the loaf." The honourable member agreed with the chamber of commerce and others at that meeting, saying, "Let's take the $10 million, because God knows what will happen on May 22."

Mr. Bolan: We didn't trust you.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That is right. Now they are back on our doorstep.

I want to make a comment about the necessity for the overpass. You said the federal government didn't think it was a necessity, yet, during those discussions, the Honourable Marcel Lessard made it very clear they were prepared to include the cost of that overpass into another subsidiary agreement, to tie it on or piggyback it on something. They were aware there was a real necessity there. To say it wasn't really necessary in regard to the industrial park development, I don't think is entirely correct.

Nevertheless, I have to say to you things have changed in Ottawa. I suppose the former federal member will have less influence than ever now so we won't be able to lean on him for any support. It may not be necessary. I think there may be more sensitivity in Ottawa today than there has been in the past.

Mr. Wildman: Surely the government in Ottawa will listen to opposition members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Nevertheless, it is a sad situation. It is a sad situation for North Bay not to get the whole package. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. Bolan: Why didn't you include that in the federal works program?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Why should we? It is part of the whole package. It is a package.

Mr. Bolan: Why is it you say it is a sad thing when we didn't have it included in the federal works program?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If the federal government at that time were sincere in doing things for northern Ontario under the DREE agreement, it would be there.

Mr. Bolan: You are the ones being insincere.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No, we are not. We were anxious to have it there, but you backpedalled. You were getting a little nervous about losing everything. We weren't. That's right. I accept that. Nevertheless, we will have to deal with that problem down the road, and again I hope we will have a more sensitive group in Ottawa than we had in the past.

In connection with the member's comments relating to our concern and our purchases of different items, we are very sensitive about that. I think you are aware of that. In fact, the ministry information newsletter is printed in northern Ontario, as are a number of items we use in the course of our administration.

You are quite right in saying ad agencies are located in northern Ontario. We will be selecting one of those which has submitted a proposal. Again, they will be from northern Ontario, because we strongly feel, as it should be, that being a regional ministry related to northern Ontario, we should be using northern Ontario people to get that northern Ontario attitude. We will certainly continue with that attitude in the future.

Mr. Nixon: I just wanted the opportunity to make some comments under vote 701. Before I get into the specific point I want to raise, I just want to respond to the minister's comments about my colleague from Nipissing not being at this meeting. Actually, my colleague from Nipissing has done a magnificent job in his important role as the Liberal Party critic of the Ministry of Northern Affairs. He has a double job, in that he is also our critic for the Ministry of Natural Resources, whose estimates begin as soon as these estimates are finished. So he is going to have a very heavy and onerous responsibility before this package of estimates is completed.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's not correct.

Mr. Nixon: I am just telling the minister that he is the critic.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) is the critic of the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Mr. Nixon: The minister does not read all his press releases.

Mr. Chairman, I had some concern at the time this ministry was established. Not being a formal student of history, but following the events in this province for many years, I note that this has gone in a cycle. There have been other occasions when the government of the day has decided to hive off the responsibility for affairs in the northern part of this province to a special ministry. Allan Lawrence was the previous tsar of the expenditure of northern money and the hand-out of bridges, overpasses and things like that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You call these things handouts? That's a southern Ontario attitude. We are entitled to them.

Mr. Nixon: Then we went back to a more general approach whereby the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, the Ministry of Natural Resources and so on had the same responsibility in northern Ontario as they have in southern and eastern Ontario. Now we have gone to probably a more extreme position.

My colleague from Nipissing probably does not agree with what I am saying but, as a southerner, as a citizen of Canada and a resident of Ontario, I resent the attitude in this House that puts northern Ontario off by itself with its own budget and its own minister, with us more or less saying, "Nothing really happens up there of significance to the people down here." In other words, it is almost like a province set apart.

The minister mentioned the fact that my colleague had not attended a certain meeting. He said, "Wasn't it too bad he wasn't up there to look at the flood at Field?" when the Premier in his executive jet, paid for with taxpayers' money, flew over, settled down somewhere, shook hands all around and came back.

Here we are, considering the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs—and I will tell the minister, I am not proud of the attendance of the Liberal Party here.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You shouldn't be.

Mr. Nixon: I shouldn't be. But on the Conservative side the members absent are as follows: the members for Fort William (Mr. Hennessy), Cochrane South (Mr. Pope), Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot), Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Ramsay), Parry Sound (Mr. Maeck)—and that is northern Ontario, because they get $10 licences—Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane) and Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle). They are not here. The member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe) and the member for Scarborough East (Mrs. Birch) are here; they are always here. It may be a reflection on their other responsibilities, but I do not believe that. I think we are elected to be here in the House, and the absence of northern members concerns me.

I have been making a list. The member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) is here in his capacity as the New Democratic Party critic. But, of his colleagues, the member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa), who was here a moment ago, is not in his seat right now; nor are the members for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes) and Algoma.

Mr. Wildman: Wait a minute! You just said I was here.

Mr. Nixon: I am sorry; the member for Algoma is here. He is on a special list—a list of one.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Is the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk drawing my attention to the fact that there is not a quorum?

Mr. Nixon: I am talking about the policy—

Mr. Wildman: Where is the member for Rainy River?

Mr. Nixon: The member for Rainy River was here a moment ago and may come right back in. He is being married very shortly and is out making some last-minute arrangements.

Here is the member for Sudbury, and I certainly want the record to show that.

The point is this: By setting the affairs of northern Ontario apart in a special ministry, everybody on the Tory side says, "The member for Kenora will look after it," because they love him in the north. He goes around throwing money out the back end of his plane, and everybody cannot wait for him to fly over town, whether it is because of a flood, a bridge or some other blooming thing. We do not mind voting money in this Legislature for the support of northern projects.

In my former capacity as leader of the Liberal Party, I have been in many northern communities. I have said this before, but the first time I ever saw the minister he was standing in the middle of the main street of Hudson; it was not even paved then. We were making a legislative progress through northern Ontario. We were visiting sawmills and going down the mines. We were using government planes—actually using them as members of the Legislature—to see what is up there. We flew over the forest. We went to Trout Lake, Fort Severn, Attawapiskat, Albany, Moosonee and all the places in between.

Mr. Ashe: How was the flying?

Mr. Nixon: All right. So he says we haven't been back since. It's true that many of us have gone up there on little fishing expeditions, to visit relatives, to attend weddings, that sort of thing. Maybe a few of us have even gone to political meetings which is fine, but this minister has not lived up to the traditions of his predecessors. Usually the Minister of Natural Resources has used his colossal budget and organization, his fleet of aircraft, boats and cars and his treasury full of money, to give the members of the Legislature a chance to see these things in the north.

I am not talking about going from town to town, having municipal dinners paid for by the provincial treasury to listen to the mayor and corporation welcome us and to hear the local Tory spokesman talk about what a great job they are doing. They do plenty of that, and to be fair in an unfair situation do it quite successfully. But it is a shame that so many people in the southern part of the province, and in this city, think about northern Ontario as some never-never land. There is as much chance of them going to Tibet as there is to Kapuskasing. I think that is very unfortunate. The actual geographic centre of this province is Kapuskasing, which is why the name of the town came to mind.

As I say, I don't know whether we should even think about one of these great, formal, legislative progresses where we all go through and stuff ourselves with local goodies of all descriptions, solid and liquid. Certainly, we can do that in our own time, but there should be a good opportunity—

Mr. Wildman: You can't get people's beer down here.

Mr. Nixon: Northern lager. There should be a good opportunity, however, for the members of the Legislature, at least, to go in small groups to a lumber camp; to go down in a mine at Elliott Lake and see what they're doing with our $7 billion; to go up to Moosonee once again to see that fine community and to see how government policy has been so inadequate in meeting the needs of that community; and to see some of the far northern places too.

Maybe the minister can't as Kelso Roberts did, undertake to take the whole Legislature to Fort Severn, but he did it and we were well received there. We ate beans and homemade bread and talked to everybody around who would stand still. We slept on the floor of a school in Trout Lake and we ran footraces by the light of the almost midnight sun. That was a great experience for us. We had a chance to fish—and why shouldn't we? After all, we're very much concerned with the tourist industry and that sort of thing.

I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, that the absence of so many members and the presence of so many empty chairs is an indication of the general level of interest.

It's Friday morning, but during question period there were lots of members here from all parties. Now it's Northern Affairs and we're not interested in it. It's sort of like when we do the agriculture estimates. At least the farmers are there, but when we're doing Northern Affairs' estimates even the northern members aren't here. They all leave it up to Leo.

And while I have the greatest regard and personal good feelings for the minister, that is not good enough. I think the minister has to take the responsibility for injecting some interest and concern for northern matters. I'm not sure that he should organize a tour for the whole House, but there ought to be a formal procedure, not where we use our legislative travel allowance to go and walk around Thunder Bay and shake hands with people on the street or something like that, but to actually go and see the things that are northern, that we deal with here in the money that we vote, that we deal with here in the debates, such as they are, on northern matters.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: May I respond briefly to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk? I appreciate his becoming involved in these estimates and am very much aware of his interest in northern Ontario. Certainly when leader of his party he made it a point to go into that part of the province on a regular basis and became very familiar with the geography, with our problems, and I have to admit showed a real personal interest in northern Ontario which is reflected in his comments today. I'm most impressed that he has remembered so well that great trip to Hudson. I think maybe that was one of the highlights of your visit.

[12:00]

Mr. Nixon: They paved the street right after that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, they paved the street and we have the housing we asked for. He will recall the sign across the street.

Mr. Nixon: I remember.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: "We have industry, sir, we need housing."

Mr. Nixon: I think it's the "sir" that did it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We've got housing. We've got paved streets. It's all because of the positive action of the government of Ontario, the Tory government of Ontario, which has responded to those needs and those requests.

Mr. Nixon: But the cynical would say they bought the seat of Kenora.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I get a little nervous when I hear members from southern Ontario speak about "handouts." They spoke about handouts for roads and bridges.

Mr. Bolan: Have you got a better word for it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In northern Ontario they're not handouts. We have every right to expect our roads and our bridges and our schools and other buildings, and the other things that are taken for granted here in southern Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: We vote the money with enthusiasm. We don't think you spend enough on those roads.

Hon. Mr. Barnier: But because it's northern Ontario it's a "handout." We're not poor country cousins in the north. We have every bit as much right to the things you have here and take for granted; we should have them there.

Mr. Wildman: That goes for the hospitals too.

Mr. Nixon: I used to live in northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That's what we're fighting for and that is one of the reasons this government has established a separate ministry to focus attention on those very special and unique needs in northern Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: The government paid me $2,800 to teach school up there.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: You were overpaid.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I make no apology for our parochial attitude, if you want to call it that, to try to get the amenities that are taken for granted here in southern Ontario.

The reference to a colossal budget would not go over well in northern Ontario, I have to say that to the member. As northerners, and I am sure northern members will agree with me, we need much more than we have today. I keep impressing this on the Premier and the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). Our budget is quite healthy and it has been increased much more rapidly than those of other ministries. I hope that continues, so that someday we may have a colossal budget for northern Ontario and we could look after such things as the Marshall Avenue overpass and a few other things the member for Nipissing would like.

Mr. Nixon: What is it, $140 million?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's $141 million. It has been going up quite substantially each year.

We started with $91 million about three years ago.

The trip to northern Ontario is something I've always been supportive of. In fact I had the pleasure of organizing the last trip. As Minister of Natural Resources I sent a questionnaire to every member of the Legislature and I received 80 or 81 responses saying they would join us on a tour. We had all the transportation arranged, the trains, the buses and the airplanes; the accommodation was laid on.

Out of 80 or 81 members who agreed to attend only 30 showed up. The cost to the taxpayers at that time was substantial. I think it was in excess of $130,000 or $160,000 for that tour. I was very disappointed, and I think I speak for members on all sides of the House, with the response at that particular time. I know there were specific reasons. I think there was a federal election called just about that time and there were some other involvements members were concerned about.

I have to agree with the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk that those members who are really interested—maybe the standing resources development committee is the group that should go to northern Ontario; it has a direct and sincere concern and interest in the affairs of northern Ontario.

There is the member for Rainy River. Have you looked after your marriage problems? Somebody said you were having some difficulty, that you were out making final arrangements for some event that is going to occur in a few weeks and that's why you weren't here. He was trying to be helpful.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh yes.

Hon. Mrs. Birch: He's not even married and talking about the problems.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We wish you well anyway.

The honourable member has pointed out that each member does get four trips a year to any place in the province. They do get passes on the Ontario Northland Railway if they wish to go up to Moosonee. In fact if they want an itinerary I'm sure the honourable members from northern Ontario would be glad to assist me in setting up such an itinerary for the southern Ontario members, so that they could see the mining development, the forestry development, the tourism development and the other developments that have occurred and should occur in northern Ontario. I want to thank the member again for his comments. They are always given in a very constructive and positive way. As this ministry moves ahead I'm sure they will be continuing in that vein.

Mr. Wildman: I want to follow up on a couple of comments that were made by the Liberal critic, the former Liberal leader and the minister.

In relation to the numbers of people who aren't here and the lack of interest, I wonder if perhaps one of the reasons for that is the very fact that it is difficult for many members to understand exactly what this ministry is doing. The ministry is a co-ordinating ministry, as the minister says. However, on May 14 my colleague from Port Arthur stated: "What worries me a bit about this discussion we have had today is that it does not seem to me that you, as Minister of Northern Affairs, consider your ministry should be the lead ministry in every single activity that takes place in Northern Ontario. I think it should be. I think if your ministry is really worth its salt the ministry should be the one that is telling the Ministry of Health what should be happening with the small hospitals that my colleague from Algoma referred to.

"This ministry should be telling the Ministry of Natural Resources what it should be doing in developing the single-industry towns in northern Ontario because it is your ministry that is supposed to have the overall view and the capability and should have the will to really develop the north as we all know the north should be developed."

The reply from the minister at that time was that he didn't share those views. In fact, he said: "I don't think we should be the kingpins in northern Ontario. We have a co-ordinating role. We have a role to bring matters to the attention of other ministries that have the programs and policies in place. Our job is to change some of those policies to reflect northern attitudes."

It seems to me that is a rather nebulous role and that is one of the reasons why many of the members, including northern members, may have some difficulty in dealing with what the ministry is doing. Sometimes I think that is a problem the members of the ministry themselves often have. That is not necessarily a criticism, but it is one thing that makes it rather difficult to deal with this ministry.

I have just a couple of short points. In relation to the matter raised by the member for Nipissing with regard to the bridge, the minister replied that they hope to have a Bailey bridge by August. Can the minister explain why it takes from May until August to install a Bailey bridge? During wartime if it took that long for the army to install Bailey bridges across rivers, we would have awfully slow advances and retreats. It seems to me we can put Bailey bridges up in a very short time, if we put our minds to it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You can put them up an awful lot faster if you are retreating.

Mr. Wildman: In my riding there is a road into Dubreuilville. I emphasize that this is the portion of that road which is under the jurisdiction of the improvement district of Dubreuilville, the municipality, rather than the portion of the road which is an industrial road and which is under the jurisdiction of the company. There was a bridge washed out during the recent high water in northern Ontario. They are now in the process of negotiating with MTC to get a Bailey bridge and they certainly don't expect it to take until August to have it installed. What they are mainly concerned about now is how much they are going to have to pay as opposed to MTC. They would like to see MTC give them far more than 80 per cent subsidy on that construction. I really wonder why it takes that long to build a Bailey bridge.

In relation to the role of the ministry in terms of co-ordinating—again that term "co-ordinating"—the response to the flood disaster, this is something the ministry should get involved with, expediting the installation of these bridges and perhaps looking at the possibility of assisting. If MTC is unwilling or unable to give a higher subsidy rate than 80 per cent, perhaps this ministry should help communities such as the one my colleague from Nipissing was referring to.

I'd like to hearken back to a couple of things I asked about in my lead-off, which the minister didn't get a chance to reply to. I asked him about the three-year program for exploration for minerals that the minister announced when we held a debate on the establishment of the ministry. I'd like to know what progress is being made on that, if any. Does it indeed refer simply to the Ministry of Natural Resources study on aggregates in the north? If it does, while that's a good thing I suppose, it's hardly a response to the need for further exploration in mining in northern Ontario.

The other thing I wanted to clarify was some comments made by the minister with regard to freight rates and the letter written by Mr. Korpela to a number of newspapers in northern Ontario. I think he misquoted the Minister for Transportation and Communication (Mr. Snow), where he indicated that he didn't recall meeting with Mr. Korpela and making those comments. In fact, the minister should be aware that at the time of the introduction of the bills concerning deregulation, while opposition was expressed by members of both opposition parties, at the same time both parties made clear to the government and to the minister that they would accept a change in the North Bay restriction. I think the Liberal critic will testify to this. We would accept that change if the government would introduce it alone without the other measures that were part of the ministry's proposals, which the select committee on the highway transportation of goods recommended against.

For some reason the minister didn't take us up on that. He didn't come back with the kind of legislation; he just forgot about it. To say that the NDP and "some misguided Liberal," which I think was the term Mr. Korpela used, were the ones responsible for not bringing in the change on the North Bay restriction is a little bit facetious.

Mr. T. P. Reid: So the Liberals line up with the NDP now?

Mr. Wildman: I don't know, considering the last federal election in Rainy River, where there was an interesting contest up there between the Liberal-Labour and the NDP.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The Liberal-Labour came through again.

Mr. Wildman: With some sweat, yes.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'll tell you I wouldn't be proud of the NDP campaign in that riding.

Mr. Wildman: I certainly was happy to see that we gave the Liberal-Labour candidate a run for his money and perhaps deducted a little of the Labour from that tag.

Seriously though, in terms of the so-called co-ordinating function, I attended a meeting this morning with the minister. He was very hospitable and provided us with nice coffee. Hopefully, we're going to be able to get something for the delegation from Hornepayne that has a problem that affects other ministries. This ministry is going to look into the problem and deal with the other ministries to try to sort out something.

There is a community in my area which I think would be a real test for the ministry, if the ministry decided to take upon itself the job of co-ordinating the further development of that community. I'm talking about Missanabie. I mentioned Missanabie in my lead-off. The minister knows that we've had correspondence about that community over the past year or so. I said in my lead-off that I got one of the most serious replies I've ever received from the minister in a response to a letter I sent about Missanabie.

The minister knows there have been some housing problems and difficulty in obtaining lots for people who want to build in Missanabie on a permanent basis. There has been a real mixup with regard to titles and who owns what land in Missanabie. It is a very old community where land seems to have been exchanged in the past without registry of deeds and so on. Some people are paying provincial land tax for land they don't think they own and some are not paying taxes on land they think they own. It's that kind of situation. The Ministry of Revenue and the Ministry of Natural Resources have been involved, but they don't seem to be able to sort it out. Until they sort it out, it is going to be very difficult to obtain land.

[12:15]

The Ministry of the Environment has been involved with a water problem. Dog Lake has been polluted from time to time. The Austin Lumber Company that operated there at one time was blamed at one point for some pollution. Private septic systems also seem to be at fault, so the Ministry of the Environment has proposed some assistance under their new program of up to 75 per cent for private water systems and sewage systems.

I had some correspondence with the minister to which I would like to refer, in which he said: "A review of the economic prospects of the community indicate there is not at present, nor is there likely to be in the foreseeable future, any significant pressure for additional housing lots for expansion in the community. If this situation were to change substantially, it would be of course appropriate to review their requirements at the time."

What the minister was referring to is the future of the lumber company in that community. Since I received that letter, as the minister knows, the mill changed hands and subsequently burned to the ground. Many of the employees who worked in the mill were employed in Chapleau, but that employment seems to be coming to an end now. The new owners have indicated they are looking at the possibility of rebuilding because they are afraid their limits are too distant from their mills in Chapleau.

I think the people in Missanabie are very concerned about the future of their community and their own individual and collective futures. I think this is a real opportunity. All of the ministries involved—the Ministry of Natural Resources, the Ministry of Revenue, the Ministry of the Environment, I suppose even TEIGA and the Ministry of Northern Affairs itself with its proposal for a local services board—had a meeting up there. All of these ministries are involved.

I think this minister should take hold of this situation and say: "This is an opportunity for us to show what we can do for a community that has a lot of problems but is one that has been there for a long time. It is a vibrant community which obviously is not just dependent on the lumber industry but is also very much involved in the tourist industry and the railroads." He should say: "We will do something for this community." I would like to know if you can give us some idea of what you are intending to do in that situation.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, if I may respond briefly to the honourable member's comments, he referred to our ministry's co-ordinating role. As I pointed out on many occasions, this is a new thrust, for a ministry in the government to co-ordinate other ministries. I have said it before and I will say it again, it's not an easy role. Fixed programs and fixed policies are entrenched, and as northerners we know many of those policies and programs have been designed for southern Ontario. They don't apply in northern Ontario. It's our job in our new role as co-ordinators to see if we can change, adjust, and get a new direction in some of those policies and programs to really fit what we need in northern Ontario.

What you saw this morning in our discussions with the reeve of Hornepayne is the approach we like to take. I think the town of Hornepayne has a very special and unique problem as it relates to a northern Ontario municipality. As you saw, we are most anxious to sit down and see if we can co-ordinate the input; go to the other ministries and say to them in a very positive way that there is a special requirement. We intend to do that wherever that kind of a problem surfaces. From time to time we will be co-ordinating not only before the fact but sometimes after the fact, after the programs and after the jobs have been completed.

The honourable member was inquiring about our exploration program and our assistance to various ministries. I just want to put on the record a number of programs we have which I know will be of interest to him. I will take it right off my notes here because they are quite extensive.

I am particularly pleased that the honourable member for Timiskaming is here to share with us in the examination of these estimates because his area is one of the areas in which we are doing some very extensive mineral exploration.

The programs include the northern Ontario geological surveys program. This is a reconnaissance study of the terrain as to its engineering characteristics and aggregate capability for geological, geophysical and geochemical surveys, mineral deposit studies and the development and introduction of new data-handling techniques. It is a six-year program to supplement the provincial geoscience data base, to enhance the efficiency and effectiveness of, and otherwise stimulate, mineral exploration by the private sector in northern Ontario. This year alone we will be putting about $1,735,000 into that program.

Another program is the Northern Affairs geological surveys program. This is a reconnaissance study of the engineering terrain characteristics, and the aggregate capability of northern Ontario as a basis for planning and development, and to evaluate the deposits of the Thunder Bay area. It is a three-year program of geological and geophysical surveys and mineral deposit studies to evaluate the potential for fossil fuels in the Moose River basin, and to stimulate mineral exploration in the Red Lake, Marsh Lake and Burnt-bush areas. This year $337,000 is being spent on this program.

These programs are being carried out by the Ministry of Natural Resources, and you might want to discuss the further intricate details with that ministry.

Another resource development program is the northern industrial mineral study program. That is a five-year program to supplement the other program I just referred to. It will survey non-metallic mineral deposits and evaluate the potential and encourage development of deposits of industrial minerals and rocks in northern Ontario. This year we are putting $92,000 into that program.

Another one of extreme interest to myself is the electromagnetic survey of the Greenstone belt in the Red Lake area. This is to stimulate exploration activity in that part of northwest Ontario. This is a new project the Ministry of Natural Resources is undertaking and $200,000 is going into that program.

Another one is the airborne geophysical survey of the Lake Superior area, measuring the magnetic and electromagnetic properties of the area around Wawa and Michipicoten. The member for Algoma will be interested in that. This is to provide a uniform data base for mineral potential studies for that area, which is a new project. This year we will be spending about $100,000.

In the James Bay lowlands we will be doing additional lignite deposit surveys, to determine the potential of the Onakawana lignite deposits. We will spend $25,000 this year, and this is a continuation of work—

Mr. Bolan: What do you expect to do with $25,000?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No. We have spent $500,000; this is the windup of that program.

Mr. Bolan: Then is that it?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. This is the windup for that one. There is nothing in it for next year.

Mr. Bolan: What happens then? Nothing?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Oh yes. We have found additional lignite deposits already in the Moose basin, and we are waiting for the energy requirements of the province to change. Hydro is very much involved with the Onakawana and so on. So until those requirements change we won't see too much activity there.

The member for Timiskaming was very instrumental in getting a five-year comprehensive program of geological and geophysical studies going on in his area. That is to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of, and otherwise stimulate, mineral exploration by the private sector in the Kirkland Lake area. That is a very ambitious program. This year we will be spending about $487,000, and next year an additional $400,000 in the Kirkland Lake area.

The member for Rainy River will be interested in the Atikokan geological surveys program for that area. It is a three-year comprehensive program of geological, geophysical and geochemical surveys and mineral deposit studies, to encourage the private sector in mineral exploration in the vicinity of Atikokan. The funds are provided to the Ministry of Natural Resources for this program, which will be going on for the next three years.

Those are some indications of what we are trying to do with our funds to stimulate further activity in the mining industry, providing the geological information to the private sector so that they can pick up the information and move ahead. I am particularly pleased that we have moved in this direction. I think we are all concerned about the lack of mining activity in northern Ontario.

Members will notice in the list I have gone through we have concentrated on those areas that need this type of survey, that need this information: the Atikokans, the Red Lakes, the Kirkland Lakes. Those are the areas where we know there are mineral deposits, and the experts say that is where we should be looking for additional deposits. And that is the route we are going.

The honourable member made some mention of the deregulation of the trucking industry. It is something I personally have supported and will continue to support. The Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) was very strong in putting his case forward, although the opposition parties felt at that time they could not go along with him.

Mr. Wildman: Neither did the select committee.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: There are reasons behind that and they are all political; the member knows that as well as I do. There was a lack of concern for northern Ontario in that report. It is obvious we cannot go that route. I can say the issue is not a dead one. The North Bay restriction issue is not a dead issue. Members will be hearing more about that.

Mr. Mackenzie: There may be some sense to it.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think that as the members look at these changes, if they are really sincere about northern Ontario and doing something about the problems that exist up there, then I hope they will take this into consideration in their deliberations, because I think they are things we need to create more competition and lower the cost of freight rates, because as I have said many times it is freight rates that really affect the developing economy of northern Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Chairman, I want to talk to the minister this morning about one problem specifically. I won't repeat my speech about the lack of overall planning and direction for northern Ontario and one-industry communities at this time, but I am concerned about a program that was put to the Minister of Northern Affairs and the Minister of Agriculture and Food almost three years ago now by the Rainy River branch of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. It has to do with drainage problems and land clearing in the Rainy River district.

As a Toronto member, Mr. Chairman, you may not be aware, but we have a substantial farming area in the Rainy River district. The minister himself has farm communities around Dryden particularly, and of course there are some outside Thunder Bay. But the people in the area of Rainy River, through their organization of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, presented a brief to the minister just before the last election, or even substantially before that, in which they gave a detailed proposal of land clearing and a drainage project that would provide a great number of jobs and improve the farming area and the ability to produce in the Rainy River area west of the town of Fort Frances.

Since that time the minister, for some reason unbeknownst to me, has been dragging his feet on coming up with any kind of answers. All right, the minister indicates it is a matter of money. But we have had how many studies on this kind of thing? The minister indicates it is a lack of money, but surely this is a program that will provide immediate and concrete results by way of employment and by way of a lasting benefit to the Rainy River district?

If I could give you just a little background and history, Mr. Chairman, the Rainy River district was settled just before the turn of the century when people came up by way of river boat along the Rainy River. They were homesteaders and they cleared the land which involved a lot of muskeg and a lot of very wet area. Their problems have not been particularly solved since that time.

The minister has a report, or two or three—I do not know how many—by a fellow named John Kuntze, who was on a contract, if I am not mistaken, to do a study of the proposal put forward by the Rainy River Federation of Agriculture.

I have seen, on occasion, copies of these reports. The reports give the history of what has happened in regard to drainage and land clearing in the Rainy River district. It's almost the same as the problem that we have with the forest industry: The government has had for years and years, going back as far as 1910, reports from the northern affairs branch of the former Department of Lands and Forests, the former Department of Highways or, in some cases, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food—or whoever had the responsibility—but the problems have been the same; they have been outlined, and yet we still do not have a solution.

In 1944, a report was made to the Minister of Agriculture and Food in this regard. It listed four problems, and outlined them specifically, in regard to land clearing and drainage:

“(a) financial inability of the sparsely settled municipalities to undertake any scheme of sufficient scope to provide drainage outlets to carry waters off the farms;

“(b) lack of adequate machinery for drainage on individual farms and for providing outlets;

“(c) failure of the Highways Department to carry their road ditches to proper outlets and, thereby, running water off the roads on to the farms and flooding large areas of arable land every spring; and

“(d) need for opening up natural water-courses and clearing them of dead trees and debris in order to allow a natural flow of drainage water off the land.”

The minister is supposed to be co-ordinating. Along with my colleague who last spoke, I am a little concerned about his response to a question about what the minister's role is, but we will not go into that. If the minister is supposed to be co-ordinating, it seems to me that he should be getting together the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, the Ministry of Natural Resources and conservation authorities to try to resolve this problem.

I appreciate that money is a problem but, by the time we have studied it to death, we could probably have at least started on the problem of responding to the OFA brief and providing some employment in clearing the land. The minister had responses from the CES, the Community Employment Strategy group, supporting the scheme. I gather, although I have not seen it, that there has been a final report. Perhaps the minister could indicate whether he has a final report from Mr. Kuntze, or whoever is doing it in his ministry, on the problem. But the problem is not being solved. Every spring, for instance, we have a problem with La Vallee River, but the municipality is too small to handle it on its own.

A few years ago I attempted to get some of the small communities in the Rainy River district to get together to form conservation authorities but, even in concert, they still had to come up with 25 per cent of the cost, which they could not do; they are very small, and their tax base is relatively small. Perhaps if the minister would go ahead with a comprehensive program for the Rainy River district, that would increase the value of the farms and the production, and we could afford to expand the tax base to contribute to these programs.

The minister's colleague, now the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson), who, if I recall correctly, headed up the land drainage committee, was in my area during the time of those sittings. The municipality of La Vallee made a representation to that committee. The select committee, although it was not dealing particularly with that, made a recommendation that assistance be given to clear that waterway to prevent the drainage problem spilling over on to farmers' land.

Another problem mentioned in this report from 1944 which continues to this day is the fact that the Ministry of Transportation and Communications does not maintain the ditches and has not provided a system that will take the water right off the land and right down into the watercourse. The ditches end somewhere—nowhere actually, but they wind up sometimes overflowing onto somebody else's land. There is no comprehensive scheme, no comprehensive package, to deal with this.

The Ontario Federation of Agriculture's brief—and the minister probably knows it as well as I—asked for a lot of money. I think they were talking about $17 million. I agree that's a lot of money in days of budget restraint, but it is a program that would put money back into the government's pocket by way of the employment opportunities it would provide, and the increased assessment and taxes and the increased ability, in fact, for those farms to produce.

We had a diatribe from the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) last week about the DREE agreement. I would hope—and this is a question, as well, for the minister—that in the package the province is preparing to take to the federal government this would be one of the items. The minister isn't nodding or shaking his head, but I'm sure he will respond in the affirmative. I would hope so.

This is a problem that has gone on. It's affecting the district very badly and if the program of the OFA or some modification of same was implemented it would be of great benefit to the local people and to the economy in the Rainy River district. It has been dragging on for three years. It can't all be a matter of money. I wonder if the minister can respond in some way, indicating if this is a matter coming up for DREE, whether he has a final report on the figure, whether he has a dollar figure on the cost, if there is any possibility that we can get on with this program?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, the member for Rainy River has had correspondence from me on this particular subject. I know it's near and dear to his heart. He is quite right in pointing out that it is a substantial amount of money. We're concerned about it from a northern development point of view. I think the best way I could answer the honourable member would be to read into the record—because I know he will want to send copies of this debate to people in the Rainy River area—two letters I sent to him that clearly outline all the various points to which he made reference this morning.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'm not satisfied with those answers.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The first letter is dated April 4, 1979:

“Dear Mr. Reid,

“I refer to your recent request for information regarding the agricultural drainage study in northwestern Ontario. The field work for this study, which covered the three major agricultural areas in northwestern Ontario, was completed in October 1977. Since that time, I am happy to say that because of the attention focused on the problem by Mr. John Kuntze and the discussions he had with farmers a number of positive initiatives have taken place.

“In the summer of 1977, 10-acre tile demonstration plots were installed on two farms in the Thunder Bay area with the assistance of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food and the Ministry of Northern Affairs. Early in 1978, a course for tiling contractors was held by the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food in Dryden, and farmers from three agricultural areas attended.

“One tile machine is now in use in the Dryden area and a trenching machine has been purchased, converted and is now in use by a consortium of farmers in the Rainy River area. With assistance from the northern Ontario agricultural incentive program, one scraper was purchased by a Rainy River farmer for field levelling. I understand four more farmers are also preparing to purchase scrapers.

“The Rainy River Association of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture is now heading the drive to improve drainage. In response to their initiatives, the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food and, where appropriate, the Ministry of Northern Affairs are providing further assistance.

“In 1978, the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food supplied a surveyor for the topographic surveying of farm land for surface drainage. This program will continue this year. Another drainage contractor school will be held in Rainy River in April with four local farmers in attendance. Two representatives from the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food will be in the area this spring verifying the condition of drains and ditches during the spring runoff.” You may remember I made mention of this.

“As you are aware, there are two acts, the Drainage Act and the Tile Drainage Act, under which farmers through their municipalities can seek financial and legal assistance and redress. These acts have been well tried and proven over many years. Two of the problems associated with them in the northwest are that they require the municipality to act on behalf of those farmers requesting assistance and, when part of a drainage basin is involved, all landowners who benefit from drainage improvement must contribute to the cost.

"An information meeting was held with all Rainy River municipal clerks to explain these acts and this, plus the growing awareness of the provisions of the acts by the farmers, is leading to greatly increased use of these provisions by your constituents.

"The study on drainage in the Rainy River farming area, commissioned by the local community employment strategy group and partly funded by my ministry, is expected by June. We are looking forward to using its results, combined with Mr. John Kuntze's work, the inputs of the local federation of agriculture and others, to formulate programs that will further assist the farmers to increase productivity through the improved drainage. We intend for future reference to combine the results of the Kuntze and the community employment strategy studies in the form of a consolidated report as soon as possible. To accomplish this, we will in all probability secure outside assistance in the form of a consultant hired for that purpose."

That was the letter directed to the member for Rainy River on April 4. On May 24 of this year we sent a further letter in response to an earlier one received. It reads as follows: "Thank you for your letter of April 19 which re-emphasizes your concern about agriculture clearing and drainage in the Rainy River district. As I pointed out in my letter of April 4, 1979, there have already been considerable benefits in the area. As a result of the work carried on by Mr. John Kuntze, many farmers and the Ministry of Agriculture and Food personnel in the area are now familiar with the drainage problems that have been identified. I have implemented projects to rectify some of these problems.

"The reference to an additional consultant is simply contracting with an expert on agricultural drainage to edit Kuntze's work and present it in a form that could receive wider distribution. Therefore, this is not another study in the sense you may have suspected. In the case of work contracted to the University of Manitoba, this study investigates the engineering and economic aspects of agricultural land clearing and drainage in the Rainy River district and a final report is expected very shortly.

"Throughout the conduct of the study, there have been regular meetings with the consultant by the members of the study committee representing the local Federation of Agriculture and various concerned provincial and federal departments. The federation representatives worked with the consultant on virtually a daily basis as he evaluated the problems of the area.

"In short, all parties have been in continual contact over the past several months. I am confident the study will give the Federation of Agriculture and the farmers in the area generally an excellent basis upon which to plan for drainage and clearing in the area and to request further senior government assistance where applicable.

"Because the bulk of the cost in instituting agriculture drainage relates to on-farm ditches and tiling drainage, it is proper, I feel, for local farmers to take the initiative in proposing which major outlet drains identified in the study should be improved via senior government assistance. When the consultant's report is received, the Ministry of Northern Affairs will undertake to ensure that a forum will be established that will enable the federation and the local farmers to make decisions on the drainage improvement to be undertaken." And that is the co-ordinating role, to which the member referred, that we are doing.

"If the local decision is to proceed with drainage works, existing government assistance programs would be available where applicable. If there are special circumstances for which existing projects are either insufficient or not applicable, the Ministry of Northern Affairs is prepared to consider special assistance, depending on the nature and the merits of the request. I am confident that this study will be a good first step in ensuring that the Rainy River district will be able to develop to its full agricultural potential."

[12:45]

Those two letters certainly spell out in a very clear way the interests and the concerns and the desires we have in this ministry to get on with that particular project, considering the tremendous costs. Of course, we are very cognizant of the benefits that would accrue. There's no question about that, but I think we have the issue in hand. We are playing that co-ordinating role to which the honourable member referred, and as we go down the road, I think with his co-operation and the understanding for which he's noted we will succeed and we will obtain certain successes.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the minister would respond to my question about DREE. Are you planning in your submission to the federal government or has anything been made available to the Minister of Agriculture and Food or the Minister of Natural Resources or through the Treasurer, to put in a sum of money for this program in the Rainy River district? That's something that could be funded under DREE. Has that step been taken?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As the honourable member is aware, we had prior to May 22 a $17 million northern Ontario package we were negotiating with the DREE people, which included, if I recall correctly, $5 million or $6 million for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. I am not aware of how their figure was arrived at, or whether it was a specific program or dealt with needs in a very general way, but I do know there was reference to drainage in northern Ontario.

It's not a large figure, I'll agree. I think in the first run we wanted much more than that, but we were pared down, brought down to $17 million and then denied, which came as a bit of a setback to us. I think it's fair to say we'll be going back to the federal government with this proposal because this does replace ARDA in northern Ontario. We've got to have something in place for that program; which was well accepted, there's no question about it. I will make a commitment to the honourable member to make sure if we're successful in getting something in the nature of an Ontario DREE package—there is consideration for the Rainy River area.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I appreciate what the minister has said. I take it therefore what we can do, as usual, is just wait until June until his study is completed to see where we're going to go with it. It seems to me with money being as tight as it is the DREE program should be looked at. Hopefully, as the minister might say, with a new ball game now more will be made available, but we have been waiting for over three years. I hope we'll get to the end of studying the problem and get on with it, because we all know what the problems are. What we're looking for are solutions. Actually we know the solutions; it's a matter of how we go about funding them.

Mr. Germa: I'd like to take advantage of this opportunity to speak to the Minister of Northern Affairs concerning the phenomenon he's familiar with in northern Ontario, which is one industry towns which go through these boom and bust cycles. That has been detrimental in the past to every community in northern Ontario, be it an economy based on lumber, mining or whatever. It's a one industry, one-horse town and the life and blood of that community is dependent on the one industry. Very often you have an imbalance where one community will be rising very rapidly and the other community is going down just as rapidly. There is no way to inter-relate these two actions so they could be of mutual benefit to both the communities and stimulate the one on the down trend and assist the one in the boom situation. We have that extreme contrast right now in the two cities of Sudbury and Elliot Lake. You have on the one hand Elliot Lake which is in a horrible expansion period. All the attendant difficulties attached to too rapid expansion are evident in Elliot Lake. There's lack of accommodation, lack of services; prices are high. There is no accommodation for the number of workers necessary in Elliot Lake today. At the same time, barely 100 miles away, the city of Sudbury is in a severe decline with its mining industry. Both of these communities have mining industries. Elliot Lake happens to be uranium; Sudbury is nickel, copper and some other elements. The demand for uranium is high and we consequently have that predicament. Sudbury, of course, is on the other end of the scale. It's like a teeter-totter; one is up and one is down.

Sudbury at the present time, has a vacancy rate in housing running in excess of 13 per cent. Housing values are down by 20 to 25 per cent. The exact opposite is evident in Elliot Lake. If we could connect those two communities with a transportation system we could take advantage of the unused facilities in the city of Sudbury to augment the lack of facilities in the community of Elliot Lake.

I know that the city of Sudbury has presented a brief to the government of Ontario pointing out the problems that Sudbury faces and also those faced by Elliot Lake. The council of Elliot Lake is in agreement with the city of Sudbury that they could work together, to be of mutual benefit if they could get together on a high-speed commuter system to move workers back and forth. People could take advantage of Sudbury's already existing unused services—housing, governmental, et cetera—by living in the city of Sudbury and commuting to Elliot Lake.

I have some friends who are presently doing that; construction people whom I know personally have put together a package using a 42 passenger bus. So 42 of those construction men, including electricians, carpenters, plumbers and fitters, leave the new Sudbury shopping centre at six o'clock in the morning to travel to Elliot Lake. It's a non-stop bus exclusive to their use.

It is costing them quite a bit of money, of course, approximately $10 per day, to commute to Elliot Lake but it gets them there within two hours—which might seem a long time in southern Ontario where people just can't tolerate more than a 15-minute delay, but these guys have been doing it for six or eight months on a daily basis. They leave Sudbury at six in the morning and they are back in Sudbury by 6:30 to 6:45 in the evening, having done their eight hours work. They are living in the city; they are residents of Sudbury. The cost is what I am talking about.

I know we have various subsidized transportation systems in the southern part of the province. We have GO Transit, for instance, which is subsidized to the tune of 50 per cent to move people from 60 miles to 70 miles outside of the city of Toronto into the community, back and forth; and we think nothing of that. But to ask the government of Ontario to implement a similar system in the northern part of the province is just unheard of. We don't have the political clout. There are only so many seats up north and we can't clout the government hard enough to force that sort of activity. Yet, not only do we have the need and the precedent of subsidy, we also have the vehicle.

We have the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission which is an experienced transportation entity, familiar with buses. They have the equipment, so why can't the government of Ontario put in such a system which would alleviate a lot of problems? It would alleviate the high cost for those people who are commuting now because there is just no construction work in the city of Sudbury other than the gift the government gave us on the new provincial building. That's going ahead, sure. That's supplying jobs for a couple of hundred; but we have a large construction force in Sudbury and that construction force is needed in Elliot Lake. Yet there are not even bunk-houses available so they have to commute.

Why doesn't the minister, in his role as co-ordinator of services in northern Ontario, take a look, respond to the brief of the city of Sudbury whereby they made certain recommendations, one of them being a transit service to be put together; and not by 42 individual construction workers. Sure they put that together for their own needs, but think how an experienced transportation company could put a service together and increase it. Maybe they could have six buses per day, taking not 42 construction workers but several hundred, maybe several thousand, from Sudbury to Elliot Lake on a daily basis.

Also recommended to alleviate the problem and to speed up the transportation corridor between Sudbury and Elliot Lake is the idea of upgrading the road allowance between Sudbury, Elliot Lake and all those towns in between and along the North Shore.

I know the minister has a program of four-laning highway 17 going west of Sudbury as far as Whitefish, but how quickly and how seriously is he looking at four-laning from Whitefish to the turnoff at highway 108 going to into Elliot Lake? Passing lanes have also served a good use in northern Ontario; because of the hills and the curves, the passing lane is very essential.

He could also relieve some of the congestion which is developing, because not only are these buses put together but there are van pools. There are several small vans running and there are a lot of people driving private cars at horrible expense. It costs as much as $7,000 a year to keep a car on the road. In one year that car will have travelled, just to take the man to his job, 50,000 miles a year. That is the kind of mileages the man is doing. You know yourself that any car that puts 50,000 highway miles on a year is pretty well shot at the end of the year. I know that from my commuting from Toronto to Sudbury. It is a minimum of $7,000 a year, and some of the people are forced to do that.

Here is a wonderful opportunity for the minister to earn his keep. It is only a small problem in the expansive problems of northern Ontario and I know it is very concentrated, but it would resolve an economic problem in the city of Sudbury and an accommodation problem in the city of Elliot Lake. It also would allow the construction and expansion to go forward at a more rapid rate because expansion is being curtailed due to lack of accommodation in the city of Elliot Lake.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Mr. Minister, can you make a brief reply?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to spend more time in replying to the member for Sudbury than the hour would allow and I would hold my reply until the next sitting of this committee. I understand that that will be Monday afternoon.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported progress and asked for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, could I request unanimous consent that we revert to introduction of bills? The Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) had indicated he would introduce a bill today. He has left me a copy of that bill and asked if I could introduce it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree?

Agreed.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION AND HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Bernier, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Snow, moved first reading of Bill 99, An Act to amend the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I have a short statement the minister left with me and I would like to read it into the record for the benefit of members. It reads as follows:

“Because of the importance of one of the amendments I propose to introduce later today to the Public Transportation and Highway Improvement Act—”

Mr. Nixon: We had that. It is a good statement though.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Fine, I will just table it.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER AND RESPONSES TO PETITIONS

(See appendix, page 2232)

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Also, Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answer to question 180 standing on the Notice Paper; and the responses to petitions presented to the House, sessional papers 58 and 60.

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.

ANSWER TO QUESTION
ON NOTICE PAPER

PRIVATE HEALTH INSURANCE

180. Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister please table an opinion on the legality of allowing private insurance companies to cover the insured services of chronic care, including the current $9.80 a day co-payment fee? Would the minister pay particular regard to section 19 of the Health Insurance Act, 1972, when obtaining this legal opinion. [Tabled May 11, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Section 19 (1) of the Health Insurance Act, 1972, does not prohibit private insurance covering "any part of the cost of hospital . . . and nursing home services that is not paid by the plan." Accordingly, since the daily chronic care charge is not paid by the plan, private insurance covering such charge is not prohibited by section 19 (1).

RESPONSES TO PETITIONS

CABLE TV SERVICE IN OHC PROJECTS

Mr. Swart: To the Speaker and members of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

We the undersigned, being residents of the OHC senior citizens in Welland, object to the termination of the block purchase of cable TV which enables us to obtain greatly reduced rates. We petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to instruct the Minister of Housing to reconsider and authorize officials of OHC to negotiate continuation of the agreements with the cable TV company. [Tabled May 11, 1979. List of signatures followed.]

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Ontario Housing Corporation has recently adopted a policy revision which allows individual tenants to deal with cable television companies rather than Ontario Housing Corporation adding cable television charges to rents under bulk rate contracts between the corporation and the cable TV companies.

Ontario Housing Corporation introduced the bulk rate cable television service to tenants in 1971, a major reason being that because of the large numbers involved Ontario Housing Corporation could negotiate preferred rates for its tenants at rates comparable at that time to providing service through a master antenna system. However, under this arrangement there was no freedom of choice as all tenants were required to pay for the service.

Cable companies were thus not involved in any administrative problems and costs, as Ontario Housing Corporation collected the monthly charges and made advance payment directly to the companies.

However, when cable television companies gained a much deeper penetration of the general market, they began pressing for rate increases to the point where the differential between rates to be paid under the bulk contract and the individual subscriber rate did not warrant the heavy administrative costs incurred by Ontario Housing Corporation and which were not passed on to its tenants. In view of these changed circumstances, Ontario Housing Corporation board of directors decided that the bulk contracts should be phased out.

The corporation believes that providing a cable television service is not part of a landlord's responsibility and is perhaps analogous to the provision of a telephone.

Under the individual rights agreements with cable companies, Ontario Housing Corporation tenants can now make a choice of whether they want the cable service and may deal directly with the company, rather than being charged for the service whether or not they have a television set.

The revised policy is consistent with the general practice in the private sector whereby tenants pay the normal cable subscription rates for cable television. Similarly, with few exceptions, geared-to-income tenants in privately-owned developments under Ontario's rent supplement program also pay the same general rates. These rates are authorized by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission.

Ontario Housing Corporation's current policy has the support of the Association of Ontario Housing Authorities. Last year, the association passed a resolution stating that cable television service and monthly fee should be the responsibility of the tenant, with neither the housing authorities nor Ontario Housing Corporation being involved in providing this service to residents.

WINDSOR CHILDREN'S CENTRE

Mr. Cooke: To the Speaker and members of the Legislature of Ontario: We the undersigned protest the closing of the 12-bed residence for emotionally disturbed children at the regional children's centre at Windsor Western Hospital. This centre is the only one of its kind in this area and many children are on the waiting list. Why shut the doors on children? They are the adults of tomorrow, and this is the Year of the Child.

This petition was circulated, when it was thought the 12-bed unit was going to be closed, by Linda Bryce of 1541 Albert Road in my riding. She collected 1,000 signatures. I think it demonstrates the very strong feelings of the people in Windsor about this centre and the strong support for it. While the situation has been resolved on the short-term basis, the long-term problem still exists.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Officials of the Ministry of Community and Social Services are continuing negotiations with the administrative staff from the regional children's centre at Windsor Western Hospital, regarding the phase-out of inpatient services and the development of alternative programming. This is consistent with the established priorities for service to children with special needs. This ministry is funding three other children's mental health programs in Windsor, it should be noted.

There has been no final decision made about service reductions or the closing of the 12-bed unit. In our continuing discussions with local officials, we will give every consideration possible to the special needs of the children of Essex county and surrounding areas who are being served by these programs in Windsor.
